over the Falkland Islands bears great similarity to the dispute over Gibraltar and the arguments put forward by both parties have run along the same lines. However, it must be noted that the United Kingdom did not object to the competence of the Committees of the General Assembly as it did in the case of Gibraltar. The reason for this different approach is perhaps to be found in the more moderate attitude taken by the claimant state and by the General Assembly itself. The Committee of 24 and the Fourth Committee have adopted several consensus on the Falkland Islands 54 and the General Assembly passed a resolution on this question in 1965. 55 All are identical in the sense of declaring that resolution 1514 applies to the territory in question, they note that a dispute exists concerning sovereignty over the Falkland Islands and they finally invite the parties to negotiate.

It is a common feature of the cases reviewed above that the respective Administering Powers at first opposed any claim contesting their sovereignty over a Non-Self-Governing Territory, and argued on the basis of the validity of the title they had to the territory in dispute. Afterwards, since the claimant states argued their cases on the basis of self-determination, the Administering Powers counter-attacked on the same grounds, and in the several years in which the disputes have been on the General Assembly's agenda the arguments used by both parties have relied more and more on different interpretations of what self-determination means for the contested territory. This development has diminished the emphasis placed by the colonial Powers on the incompetence of the General Assembly to deal with territorial claims, and there has been a marked unwillingness to separate the question of the territorial dispute from the question of self-determination. As a consequence of these developments in practice it can be concluded that the General Assembly has competence to determine that a state which lays claim to a non-self-determined territory on the basis of the right of self-determination has a locus standi to carry out negotiations on it.

^{53.} See resolutions 2353(XXII) and 2429(XXIII). 54. See U.N.Y.B. (1964) p.432, (1966) p.659, and U.N. Monthly Chronicle (January 1970) p.124. 55. Resolution 2065(XX).

5. The competence of the U.N. organs to decide on the status of a state for the purposes of Article 4 of the Charter and claims to self-determination: the case of Mauritania.

Article 4 of the Charter names the Security Council and the General Assembly as the competent organs to recommend and decide respectively on whether or not an applicant state fulfils the conditions to become a member of the U.N. These organs, in exercising such powers, can actually be placed in the position of deciding between contending claims to self-determination; this was the case when Mauritania became independent and therefore a potential member of the U.N. Before this happened Morocco took the problem of Mauritania to the General Assembly and claimed that this country -within the borders assigned to it by Francehad always been an integral part of Moroccan national teritory. 57 The General Assembly took no action 58 and ^{56.} As it was suggested by some states. See statements by Cambodia and Venezuela mentioned above, and in the case of the Falkland Islands, Turkey expressed a similar opinion. See G.A.O.R. 20th sess. 4th Cttee. 1558th mtg. para.67. 57. A/4445. August 20, 1960. 58. The item was discussed during the sixteenth se-on November 28, 1960 Mauritania was granted independence by France and it applied for U.N. membership. ⁵⁹ Eventually Mauritania was admitted to the U.N.60 after some delaying tactics by the Soviet Union in the Security Council. These tactics are best interpreted as manoeuvres in the context of the cold war and not as evidence of doubts on the competence of the U.N. to pass a judgment on the Moroccan claims. Indeed, Morocco itself argued its case before the Security Council as if this organ were a court of law competent to give a final decision on its claims. The Moroccan delegate said that Morocco appeared before the U.N. as "a plaintiff seeking to gain its rights, which the French Government continues to disregard. We have called upon all the peoples of the world to witness the injustice of which we are victims and which France has sought to perpetuate by its efforts to persuade an international organisation to ratify its act of force. "61

He had earlier stated that

"with the proposal that you should advocate the admission of Mauritania to this world organisation you are being asked to take a decision which... would injure my country by amputating a part of its national territory. "62

It is clear that admission of the disputed territory to the U.N. as a member state renders claims, such as those put forward by Morocco, pointless; since if the claimant state thereafter has to settle the dispute in a manner consistent with the dispositions of the Charter, that is to say, peacefully and without recourse to ssion. See especially G.A.O.R. 16th sess. 1st Cttee. 1109th, 1111th, 1113th and 1118th mtgs.

59. S/4563 and Corr.1.
60. On October 27, 1961.

^{61.} S.C.O.R. 16th yr. 971st mtg. para.140.

force, there is little hope of its being successful. For it is highly improbable that any new state will ever be willing to negotiate on a claim to the whole of its own territory. Thus, the decision of the General Assembly admitting a state to membership is final as regards the status of such a country, especilly with respect to claims put forward by other member states. 63

6. The case of Southern Rhodesia.

Southern Rhodesia, though a Non-Self-Governing Territory, is dealt with here and not together with other territories falling within this category, because it is the only Non-Self-Governing Territory the situation of which the Security Council has found to be a threat to international peace. This finding of the Security Coun-

^{62.} Ibid. para.95.
63. The admission of Israel to the U.N. is another 63. The admission of Israel to the U.N. is another case in point. Further evidence is provided by the attitude taken by the Philippines and Indonesia towards the creation of Malaysia. It was then contended by these two states that Malaysia was a new state and needed to be admitted to the U.N., therefore it could not automatically take the place of Malaya. The Philippines and Indonesia did not gather much support, but this episode can be viewed as a proof of the significance that these two countries attached to admission to the U.N. with respect to their territorial claims to Sabah and Sara-wak. See G.A.O.R. 18th sess. plen. mtg. 1283rd pp.2 and ^{64.} For the consideration of the Rhodesian question at the U.N. see R. Higgins, "International law, Rhodesia and the United Nations" World Today (March 1967) pp. 94-106; J.W. Halderman, "Some legal aspects of sanctions in the Rhodesian case" 17 I.C.L.Q. (1968) pp.672-705; T. Venkatavoradan, The question of Southern Rhodesia" Indian Yearbook of International Affairs (1964) pp.112-150; G. Fisher, "Le probleme rhodesien" A.F.D.I. (1965) pp.41-70; M.S. McDougal and W.M. Reisman, "Rhodesia and the United Nations: the lawfulness of international concern" 62 A.J.I.L. (1968) pp.1-19; and J.E.S. Fawcett, "Security Council Resolutions on Rhodesia" B.Y.I.L. (1965-66) pp.103-121. The terms Southern Rhodesia and Rhodesia are used interchangeably. sia and Rhodesia are used interchangeably.

REFERENCE TO CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO IN ANNUAL STATEMENTS MADE BY MAURITIUS TO THE UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY

1974 Statement by Sir Abdul Razack Mohamed at the 29th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (27 September)

Declared a zone of peace by the Assembly three years ago the Indian Ocean is at present the scene of dangerous rivalries. Any decision of the United Kingdom and the United States to extend communications and military facilities on the island of Diego Garcia would constitute a flagrant violation of the United Nations resolution on the subject. May we appeal to those directly concerned, especially the United States of America, to reconsider their present policy which, certainly, far from being conducive to the creation of a zone of peace is rather conducive to the creation of one of tension. Mauritius, therefore, with other countries bordering the Indian Ocean, views with grave concern the activities of the great Powers, which could create an explosive situation. The peoples of the countries of the Indian Ocean must be allowed to live in peace and security. Mauritius will therefore continue to explore with others every possibility of maintaining peace in the area.

1980 Statement by Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, Prime Minister, at the 35th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (9 October)

Here it is necessary for me to emphasize that Mauritius, being in the middle of the Indian Ocean, has already - at the seventeenth ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity [OAU], held at Freetown from 1 to 4 July this year - reaffirmed its claim to Diego Garcia and the Prime Minister of Great Britain in a parliamentary statement has made it known that the island will revert to Mauritius when it is no longer required for the global defence of the West. Our sovereignty having thus been accepted, we should go further than that, and disband the British Indian Ocean Territory and allow Mauritius to come into its natural heritage as before its independence. The United States should make arrangements directly with Mauritius for the continued use of the island for defence purposes. And then, there are the inhabitants of Diego Garcia who are domiciled in Mauritius and for whom better arrangements should be made. It must be the duty of both the United States and Great Britain to discuss with the Mauritius Government how best to give satisfaction to all concerned and at the same time provide better prospects for the islanders.

1982 Statement by Hon. Anerood Jugnauth, Prime Minister, at the 37th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (15 October)

At this juncture I should like to dwell on an issue which affects the vital interests of Mauritius; I mean the Mauritian claim of sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, which was excised by the then colonial Power from the territory of Mauritius in contravention of General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) and 2066 (XX). This dismemberment of Mauritian territory, the violation of our territorial integrity, has been made all the more unacceptable by the fact that one of the islands of that very Archipelago, Diego Garcia, is now a full-fledged nuclear base, which poses a constant threat to the security of Mauritius and to that of all the littoral and hinterland States of the Indian Ocean, the very Ocean declared to be a zone of peace by this Assembly in 1971.

I solemnly appeal to the peace-loving Members of the Organization to extend all their support to the legitimate Mauritian claim of sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago. In helping Mauritius to regain its national heritage, the United Nations will be living up to its own principles and proclaiming loud and clear that it expects its resolutions to be implemented by its Members. As the Diego Garcia issue involves two fundamental principles of the United Nations, namely respect by the administering Power for the territorial integrity of its colony, and the right of peoples to live in peace and security, I venture to say that the return of the archipelago to Mauritius will bring the Organization the respect that is so indispensable to its continued existence.

1983 Statement by Hon. Anerood Jugnauth, Prime Minister, at the 38th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (27 September)

I would like at this juncture to impress upon the Assembly the just and legitimate claim of my country over the Chagos Archipelago, which was excised from our national territory in contravention of General Assembly resolutions. I hope that in our endeavours to recover this part of our national territory by diplomatic and political means we shall continue to enjoy the unstinted support of all peace-loving countries.

1986 Statement by Sir Satcam Boolell QC, Minister of External Affairs and Emigration, at the 41st Session of the United Nations General Assembly (8 October)

In the same context of the objectives of the Declaration we note with satisfaction the renewed unanimous support of the non-aligned Member States as well as the backing of other members of the Assembly for our claim to sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia. The decolonization of Mauritius will not be complete and its territorial integrity restored until the Chagos Archipelago is returned to Mauritius. Moreover, the continuous expansion of the military base on Diego Garcia has led to increased rival military activity in the Indian Ocean region, thus seriously compromising the objectives of the Declaration of the General Assembly.

1987 Statement by Sir Satcam Boolell QC, Minister of External Affairs and Emigration, at the 42nd Session of the United Nations General Assembly (9 October)

I should like to remind this Assembly in this connection that the Chagos Archipelago, which belonged to Mauritius, was excised from our territory before we obtained independence, in clear violation of the principles of the United Nations. Its inhabitants were coerced into permanent exile to clear the way for a military base in Diego Garcia. The key strategic role now assumed by Diego Garcia has brought the nuclear peril right into the heart of the Indian Ocean region. The loss of Chagos has also meant the denial to the Mauritian people of access to the significant ocean resources around the archipelago. We renew our demand for the rightful restitution of the Chagos Archipelago to the national heritage of Mauritius. We are grateful to the States members of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, as well as to other friendly countries, for their strong and consistent support of our just claim.

1988 Statement by Sir Anerood Jugnauth, Prime Minister, at the 43rd Session of the United Nations General Assembly (12 October)

In clear violation of the principles of the United Nations the island of Diego Garcia, along with the Chagos Archipelago, was detached from Mauritius by Britain prior to our independence in 1968. The island of Diego Garcia was ceded by Britain to the United States of America, which transformed it into a military base. The inhabitants of the island were summarily relocated to Mauritius. The key strategic role now assumed by Diego Garcia has brought the nuclear peril right into the heart of the Indian Ocean. We are determined never to give up our claim over Diego Garcia. With the support of other Indian Ocean States, we shall continue to mobilize international opinion for the restitution of the island to Mauritius. We are thankful to the States members of the Organization of African Unity and the Non-Aligned Movement, as well as other friendly countries, for their continued support of our just claim.

1989 Statement by Sir Satcam Boolell QC, Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of External Affairs and Emigration, at the 44th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (27 September)

As the Assembly is aware, the Government and people of Mauritius have not accepted the fact that an important part and parcel of their territory has been excised by the former colonial Power in contravention of United Nations General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) and 2066 (XX). The dismemberment of Mauritian territory constitutes an unacceptable affront to our sovereignty. Mauritius cannot and will not remain silent until Diego Garcia and the Chagos Archipelago, as well as the Tromelin Islands, are returned to us. Our claim is just and legitimate. We have the total support of the Organization of African Unity and the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

We appeal to the international community and to all peace-loving countries to assist us in the restoration of our territories. Our islands should not serve as a nuclear base and should not constitute a threat to our own security and to that of all the littoral and hinterland States of the region.

1990 Statement by Hon. Jean-Claude de L'Estrac, Minister of External Affairs, at the 45th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (9 October)

While we are addressing the issue of the Indian Ocean, we wish to reiterate our just and rightful claim to the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, and express our deep appreciation of the whole-hearted support of the members of the Non-Aligned Movement and the Organization of African Unity, as well as that of other friendly countries.

1991 Statement by Hon. Paul Bérenger, Minister of External Affairs, at the 46th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (10 October)

The issue of sovereignty brings me to the fact that Mauritius is itself still struggling to regain its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, a cause which I believe should be supported by the Assembly in its entirety, considering the stand taken by the world community in the recent Gulf Crisis on, precisely, an issue of sovereignty. With the advent of the new era to which I have already referred, it should be possible for the past colonial Power to come to terms with the present situation and acknowledge the sovereignty of Mauritius over the Chagos Archipelago. It is also the fervent wish of my Government that nothing should be done by any party concerned to aggravate this issue any further, especially as concerns the extension of territorial waters.

1992 Statement by Hon. Paul Bérenger, Minister of External Affairs, at the 47th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (1 October)

Another issue that is of great importance to us in Mauritius is the need to respect the territorial integrity of nations. I should here like to place once more on record the appreciation of my country to all countries that have consistently expressed their support of our sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia. We should like to like to inform the Assembly that we have resumed exchanges with the United Kingdom on this issue.

1993 Statement by Dr the Hon. A.S. Kasenally, Minister of External Affairs, at the 48th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (30 September)

In our Indian Ocean region, on an issue of direct concern to us, I am happy to say that meaningful dialogue on the Chagos Archipelago is taking place with the United Kingdom authorities.

1994 Statement by Sir Anerood Jugnauth, Prime Minister, at the 49th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (5 October)

It is also my distinct pleasure to associate myself with all those who have extended a hearty welcome to non-racial democratic South Africa within the fold of the Assembly. The end of apartheid in South Africa also underscores the end of colonialism on the African continent. However, there still remain a few areas where the process is not complete, but I firmly believe that it will not be long before we can boast of a totally free world. In this regard, I should like to say that with respect to the question of the return of the Chagos Archipelago to the sovereignty of Mauritius, we have continued to pursue a positive dialogue with the United Kingdom and that some progress has been registered.

1996 Statement by Dr. the Hon. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, Prime Minister, at the 51st Session of the United Nations General Assembly (10 October)

After this overview of the world situation, allow me to speak of a matter of national interest to us. One of the fundamental principles to which we all subscribe is that of respect for the sovereignty of Member States. Interference in the internal affairs of States and disregard for their national sovereignty has often been a source of tension and conflict. Now that the cold war is behind us and we move towards ever greater economic, commercial and cultural integration, we should be able to find amicable answers to questions of sovereignty. Mauritius has sovereignty disputes regarding the Chagos Archipelago and Tromelin Island with two countries with which we have historically close and friendly ties. These differences were referred to as friendly disputes by Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, architect of our independence and father of our nation. We hope to resolve these differences through quiet diplomacy and dialogue.

1997 Statement by Hon. R. Purryag, Deputy Prime Minister, Minister of Foreign Affairs and International Trade, at the 52nd Session of the United Nations General Assembly (30 September)

This Assembly is by now well aware of the just and legitimate claim of Mauritius for the restoration of its territorial integrity through the return of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, to its national heritage. This Assembly should also note that this issue also hides a tragic human dimension. Before Mauritius acceded to its independence, all of the inhabitants of the Chagos were coerced to leave the land of their birth where they had lived for several generations. The plight of these inhabitants must now be comprehensively addressed.

Likewise, we are still awaiting the return of the island of Tromelin to Mauritius. As we pursue our efforts to recover these territories, we call upon the former colonial powers to expedite this process through dialogue in the spirit of the friendship that characterises our relationships. My government looks forward to an early resolution of these disputes.

1998 Statement by Dr the Hon. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, Prime Minister, at the 53rd Session of the United Nations General Assembly (23 September)

Finally, as on past occasions, we would like to bring up once more before this Assembly our lasting claim on the sovereignty of two territories which were taken from our patrimony: the island of Tromelin and the Chagos Archipelago. We reiterate our call to the former colonial Powers to enter into constructive bilateral dialogue with my Government for the early restoration of those territories to the sovereignty of Mauritius.

Regarding the Chagos Archipelago, this Assembly should also be reminded that some 1,500 inhabitants – the so-called "Illois" – were coerced to leave their homeland to clear the way for a military base. Most of the families, who had lived for generations on these islands, were moved to the main island of Mauritius, victims of the then prevailing cold war. Today, after more than 30 years, they still experience tremendous difficulties adapting to their present conditions. Many yearn to be resettled on these islands. As we are about to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of this century's seminal document on human rights, we consider that we owe it to these Illois to fully re-establish their rights, including the right of return.

1999 Statement by Hon. R. Purryag, Deputy Prime Minister, Minister of Foreign Affairs and International Trade, at the 54th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (30 September)

For the majority of small States, the United Nations continues to be the main bulwark against infringements on their sovereignty and territorial integrity. We have consistently drawn the attention of the Assembly to the issue of the Chagos Archipelago, which was detached from Mauritius by the former colonial Power prior to our independence in 1968, and also to the plight of over 2000 people who were forced to leave the land of their birth, where they had lived for generations, for resettlement in Mauritius. This was done in total disregard of the United Nations declaration embodied in resolution 1514 (XV), of 14 December 1960 and resolution 2066 (XX), of 16 December 1965, which prohibit the dismemberment of colonial Territories prior to independence.

Mauritius has repeatedly asked for the return of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, on which a United States military base has been built, and thereby the restoration of its territorial integrity. The over 2,000 displaced llois people have been facing tremendous difficulties in adapting in mainland Mauritius, in spite of all the efforts that Mauritius has made to assist them in this process.

So far the issue has been discussed within the framework of our friendly relations with the United Kingdom, with a view to arriving at an acceptable solution. Unfortunately, there has not been significant progress. The United Kingdom has been maintaining that the Chagos Archipelago will be returned to Mauritius only when it is no longer required for defence purposes by the West. While we continue the dialogue for an early resolution of the issue on a bilateral basis, we urge the United Kingdom in the meantime to allow the displaced inhabitants to return to the Chagos Archipelago. At the dawn of the new millennium, when we so strongly uphold universal recognition of and respect for fundamental human rights, the inhabitants of Chagos should not continue to be denied the right to return to the Chagos Archipelago.

2000 Statement by Hon. A.K. Gayan, Minister of Foreign Affairs and Regional Cooperation, at the 55th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (22 September)

I wish to say a few words now about the Chagos Archipelago and the island of Tromelin. Respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity is, under the United Nations system, an acquired and inalienable right of every State, however big or small. We are conscious that the United Nations favours the completion of the process of decolonization.

For a number of years now, we have continuously brought before the General Assembly the question of the Chagos Archipelago, which has always formed part of the State of Mauritius. This Assembly will recall that the Chagos Archipelago, including the island of Diego Garcia, was detached by the colonial Power just before our independence, in violation of General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) of December 1960 - the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples - and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, which prohibits the dismemberment of colonial territories prior to the accession of independence. We have all along sought to resolve this issue bilaterally with the United Kingdom through dialogue, but there has been no tangible progress so far. The issue has now reached a critical stage and we are extremely anxious to have meaningful negotiations with the United Kingdom with a view to resolving this matter within the shortest possible time. We also reiterate our demand that, pending a resolution of this issue, the former residents of the Chagos Archipelago and their families, who were forcibly evicted and sent to Mauritius by the colonial Power, be allowed to return to their homeland.

We launch a fresh appeal to the former colonial Power, the United Kingdom, to come forward and engage in serious and purposeful discussions with us towards the early settlement of the Chagos Archipelago question. We wish to stress that Mauritius will never abandon its intention to reunite its territory and to assert its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago.

2001 Statement by the Rt. Hon. Sir Anerood Jugnauth, KCMG, PC, QC, Prime Minister, at the 56th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (11 November)

We continue to claim our sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago which was excised by the United Kingdom from the then Colony of Mauritius in violation of international law and UN General Assembly Resolution 1514. We are convinced that the time for the United Kingdom to engage in talks for the early retrocession of the Archipelago to Mauritian sovereignty is long overdue inasmuch as problems left over from colonial days cannot remain unresolved.

We are also concerned by the plight of all those Mauritians, commonly known as the Ilois, who were forcibly and in outright violation of their fundamental rights, removed from the islands forming the Archipelago by the then colonial power. We support their legitimate claim for all appropriate remedies.

2002 Statement by the Rt. Hon. Sir Anerood Jugnauth, KCMG, PC, QC, Prime Minister, at the 57th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (13 September)

Mauritius reaffirms its legitimate sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including the island of Diego Garcia, which was detached from the territory of Mauritius by the United Kingdom prior to our independence. We renew our call to the former colonial Power, the United Kingdom, to accelerate discussions with us for an early settlement of this issue.

The persons of Mauritian origin who were displaced from the Chagos Archipelago continue to claim redress for the serious human rights violations that they endured. We support their efforts to seek redress.

2003 Statement by the Rt. Hon. Sir Anerood Jugnauth, KCMG, PC, QC, Prime Minister, at the 58th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (24 September)

Before I conclude, however, Mr President, I renew my appeal to the United Kingdom to take all measures to complete the process of decolonization of Mauritius. For years, Mauritius has consistently reaffirmed its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, here and in all international fora. I sincerely regret that this issue has not been resolved. I therefore reiterate our appeal to the United Kingdom, as a country known for its fair play and for championing human rights, and to our friends in the US to engage in a serious dialogue with Mauritius over the issue of the Chagos Archipelago so that an early solution to this issue may be found.

The removal of the Chagossians under false pretences resulted in gross violations of human rights. Hopefully this aspect of the matter will be resolved through the British Courts shortly.

2004 Statement by Hon. Jaya Krishna Cuttaree, Minister of Foreign Affairs, International Trade and Regional Cooperation, at the 59th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (28 September)

As this august Assembly is aware, Mauritius has always favoured a bilateral approach in our resolve to restore our exercise of sovereignty over the Chagos

Archipelago which, prior to independence from the United Kingdom, was unlawfully detached from our territory, in violation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV), and Assembly resolutions 2066 (XX), 2232 (XXI) and 2357 (XXII). Such bilateral approaches have unfortunately not yielded any result so far and certain recent regrettable unilateral actions by the United Kingdom have not been helpful.

Mr. President,

While we shall continue to favour a settlement of this matter through dialogue, we shall use all avenues open to us in order to exercise our full sovereign rights over the Chagos Archipelago. The Assembly should also note that this issue has a tragic human dimension. Before Mauritius acceded to its independence, all of the inhabitants of the Chagos were forced to leave the land of their birth, where they had lived for several generations. The plight of those inhabitants must now be comprehensively addressed.

2005 Statement by Dr. the Hon. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, Prime Minister, at the 60th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (19 September)

Allow me to reiterate before this Assembly our legitimate sovereignty claim over the Chagos Archipelago, including the Island of Diego Garcia which was detached by the United Kingdom from the territory of Mauritius prior to our independence in violation of United Nations General Assembly Resolution 1514 of 1960 and Resolution 2066 of 1965. The people of the Chagos Archipelago, who were evicted from the islands, are still struggling for their right to return to their birth place. We reiterate our call to the United Kingdom to pursue discussions with us for an early settlement of this issue.

2006 Statement by Dr. the Hon. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, Prime Minister, at the 61st Session of the United Nations General Assembly (22 September)

My delegation wishes to draw the attention of this Assembly that, thirty-eight years after its independence, Mauritius has still not been able to exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia. The Archipelago was excised from the territory of Mauritius by the former colonial power to be subsequently used for military purposes behind our back, in total disregard of United Nations General Assembly Resolutions 1514 and 2066. This exercise also involved the shameful displacement of the inhabitants of the Chagos from their homeland, denying them of their fundamental human rights.

International law must prevail, as must respect for the sovereignty of all countries. We therefore call once again on the United Kingdom to pursue constructive dialogue in earnest with my Government with a view to enabling Mauritius to exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago.

We view positively the visit jointly organised by the Governments of Mauritius and of the United Kingdom, in April this year, to enable the former inhabitants of the Chagos to visit the Archipelago for the first time since their displacement to pay respects at their relatives' graves on the Archipelago.

2007 Statement by Dr. the Hon. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, Prime Minister, at the 62nd Session of the United Nations General Assembly (28 September)

In 1965 when the Constitutional Conference for the granting of independence to Mauritius was convened, the Chagos Archipelago, amongst many other islands, formed an integral part of the territory of Mauritius and should have remained as such in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolutions 1514 of 1960 and 2066 of 1965. Resolution 1514 (1960) states inter alia:

"Any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations."

The excision of the Chagos Archipelago by the colonial power at the time of our independence constitutes a dismemberment of our territory in total disregard of resolutions 1514 of 1960 and 2066 of 1965. Furthermore, it is also a violation of the Charter of the United Nations itself.

We therefore, once again, reiterate our request to the United Kingdom to engage in bilateral dialogue with us as soon as possible with a view to enabling us exercise our sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago.

Equally, on the question of our sovereignty over Tromelin, we note the progress registered at the recent Mauritius-French joint Commission.

The United Kingdom and France, two permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, are two major and important economic and trade and development partners of Mauritius. We fully appreciate their continued support in the development of our country. We have been striving to reach an amicable agreement on these issues but we cannot – and will not – compromise on our territorial integrity and our sovereignty over those islands.

2008 Statement by H.E. Mr. S. Soborun, Permanent Representative of Mauritius to the UN, at the 63rd Session of the United Nations General Assembly (29 September)

The principles and objectives enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations should continue to guide us in our actions. I would like to bring up once again before the august Assembly our legitimate sovereignty claim regarding the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia. This archipelago was excised from the territory of Mauritius, by the United Kingdom, prior to our independence in disregard of UN General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) of 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 1965. We have always favoured a settlement of the issue through constructive bilateral dialogue. In that regard, I wish to inform the Assembly that high-level talks are underway.

Government is very sensitive to the aspirations of citizens of Mauritius to return to the islands of their birth in the Chagos Archipelago. I wish to recall here that they were forcibly removed from the Archipelago prior to its excision from Mauritius. Likewise, we urge France to pursue dialogue with Mauritius on the issue of Tromelin. It is our firm conviction that such bilateral dialogue will further consolidate our historical and friendly relations with both the United Kingdom and France.

2009 Statement by Dr. the Hon. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, GCSK, FRCP, Prime Minister, at the 64th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (25 September)

I take this opportunity to reaffirm the sovereignty of Mauritius over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was detached by the United Kingdom from the territory of Mauritius prior to our independence. The dismemberment of the territory of Mauritius was in total disregard of UN General Assembly Resolutions 1514 of 14 December 1960 and 2066 of 16 December 1965.

As President Obama said two days ago from this very rostrum, we must demonstrate that international law is not an empty promise.

We must all abide by it.

We have consistently urged the United Kingdom to engage in a meaningful dialogue with Mauritius for the early return of the Chagos Archipelago. We are pleased to inform the Assembly that two rounds of talks have been held with the United Kingdom this year.

We look forward to these discussions coming to fruition and hope that Mauritius will be able to exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, in the near future.

2010 Statement by Dr. the Hon. Arvin Boolell, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade, at the 65th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (28 September)

We have in no uncertain terms drawn the attention of this august body every year to the fact that Mauritius has sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia. The Chagos Archipelago was illegally excised by the United Kingdom from the territory of Mauritius prior to our independence. This dismemberment was done in blatant violation of the UN General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965.

We have raised the issue of the sovereignty of Mauritius over the Chagos Archipelago with successive British Governments and initially pursued the matter as a friendly dispute. In view of the lack of progress, we suggested that the issue be addressed in bilateral talks. Although the process of bilateral talks was initiated in January 2009, the issue of our sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago has yet to be addressed.

We are deeply concerned that the British Government decided on 1 April 2010 to unilaterally declare a marine protected area around the Chagos Archipelago allegedly to protect the marine environment. The unilateral establishment of this marine protected area infringes the sovereignty of Mauritius over the Chagos Archipelago and constitutes a serious impediment to the eventual resettlement in the Archipelago of its former inhabitants and other Mauritians as any economic activity in the protected zone would be precluded. The Government of Mauritius has decided not to recognize the existence of the marine protected area.

The illegal excision of the Chagos Archipelago from the territory of Mauritius has indeed a tragic human dimension. All the inhabitants of the Archipelago at that time were forced by the British authorities to leave their homes in the Archipelago abruptly in total disregard of their human rights. Most of them were moved to the main island of Mauritius. The Government of Mauritius is sensitive to and fully supportive of the plight of the displaced inhabitants of the Chagos Archipelago and to their desire to resettle in their birthplace in the Chagos Archipelago.

Mauritius greatly appreciates the unflinching and unanimous support it has consistently received from the African Union and the Non-Aligned Movement for assertion of its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago. The last AU Summit held in Kampala last July and the last NAM Summit held in July 2008 in Sharmel-Sheik reaffirmed that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Mauritius. They also called upon the United Kingdom to expeditiously put an end to its unlawful occupation of the Chagos Archipelago with a view to enabling Mauritius to effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Archipelago.

We urge the United Kingdom once again to take the necessary steps for the unconditional return of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, to Mauritius without further delay.

2011 Statement by Dr. the Hon. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, GCSK, FRCP, Prime Minister, at the 66th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (24 September)

Allow me, Mr. President, to give as an example, the difficulties which my own country has experienced in resolving a dispute relating to decolonization with the former colonial power, the United Kingdom.

The Chagos Archipelago which is part of Mauritian territory, was excised from Mauritius prior to independence, in disregard of United Nations Resolutions 1514 and 2066 and the principles of international law, and declared as the so-called British Indian Ocean Territory. The United Kingdom has failed to engage in any meaningful discussions, with us on this matter.

When the Government of Mauritius consequently announced, in 2004, that it would refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice, the United Kingdom immediately amended its declaration, under Article 36 of the ICJ Statute, to oust the jurisdiction of the Court with respect to certain disputes with a member or former member of the Commonwealth.

This illustrates the kind of difficulties which a State may have in settling a claim under international law. The States involved in the dispute may refuse to negotiate in good faith and seek to ensure that no international tribunal can determine the law applicable to the dispute.

We call on the United Nations to keep under review the whole issue of settlement of disputes, including by judicial means, and to set standards of conduct for all States with respect to negotiation, conciliation, mediation or other forms of non-judicial and peaceful settlement of disputes or alternatively submission of the dispute to adjudication.

. . .

Mr President,

The continued unlawful occupation of the Chagos Archipelago by the United Kingdom is a matter of concern for the region. Mauritius welcomes the support of the African Union and of the Non-Aligned Movement for the territorial integrity of our country. The purported declaration of a Marine Protected Area around the Chagos Archipelago by the United Kingdom in breach of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea is another cause for concern. This is why in December 2010 Mauritius commenced arbitration proceedings against the UK under the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea.

2012 Statement by Dr. the Hon. Arvin Boolell, GOSK, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade, at the 67th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (1 October)

Mr. President,

Mauritius very much welcomes the high level meeting on Rule of Law. Development and greater economic prosperity go hand in hand with enhanced rule of law at both national and international levels. There will be no meaningful Rule of law at international level until and unless all nations and specially the small ones can have avenues for resolving their disputes with other States.

The United Kingdom excised part of Mauritian territory prior to independence and has refused to enter into talks in good faith over this dispute and has ensured that the dispute cannot be determined by the International Court of Justice.

Thus, the decolonization of Africa has not been completed.

At a time when the United Nations debates Rule of law at both national and international levels we urge the international community to work on machinery that enables States, whatever their size or economic power, to have judicial or other peaceful means of resolving disputes.

Rule of law at international level cannot only be normative. There must also be adequate enforcement mechanisms without which there is no meaningful rule of law.

2013 Statement by Dr. the Hon. Navinchandra Ramgoolam, GCSK, FRCP, Prime Minister, at the 68th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (28 September)

Mr President,

Mauritius reiterates its firm conviction that Rule of Law should prevail in the resolution of disputes, in accordance with the UN Charter.

We believe that the international community has an obligation to ensure that, in line with the principles of the Rule of Law, nations should submit their disputes to conciliation, mediation, adjudication or other peaceful means, both non-judicial and judicial.

The dismemberment of part of our territory, the Chagos Archipelago - prior to independence - by the then colonial power, the United Kingdom, in clear breach of international law, leaves the process of decolonisation not only of Mauritius but of Africa, incomplete.

Yet, the United Kingdom has shown no inclination to engage in any process that would lead to a settlement of this shameful part of its colonial past.

I am confident that the UK and the US would want to be on the right side of history.

States which look to the law and to the rules of the comity of nations for the resolution of disputes should not be frustrated by the lack of avenues under international law for settlement of these disputes.

2014 Statement by H.E. Dr. Milan J.N. Meetarbhan, Permanent Representative of Mauritius to the UN, at the 69th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (30 September)

Mr President,

In the mid 60's, when a wave of decolonisation was sweeping across the world the United Kingdom purported to create a new colony, the so-called BIOT, by carving out part of the territory of Mauritius.

Thus, part of Mauritian territory remains under colonial rule.

As long as part of Mauritian territory remains under colonial rule, decolonisation of Africa will still remain incomplete.

The dismemberment by the United Kingdom of part of the territory of Mauritius prior to independence was and continues to be a blatant breach of international law and total disregard of United Nations resolutions.

Speaking before this Assembly last week President Obama said, there is one vision of the world in which might makes right, but that "America stands for something different. We believe that right makes might – that bigger nations should not be able to bully smaller ones..."

This is why, last year at this very forum, Mauritius urged the United States to be on the right side of history and not to condone illegal acts by maintaining its presence on Diego Garcia under an unlawful arrangement with the UK which does not have a valid title to the island and instead to ensure that in the future, such presence is on the right side of the law.

Both the United States and the United Kingdom should recognise the sovereignty of Mauritius over the Chagos and engage, in good faith, in meaningful discussions with Mauritius over arrangements to be made in this regard.

Following the statements we have heard over the last year in connection with sovereignty and territorial integrity, there should not be a set of standards for one part of the world and a different one for another part of the world. Those who show no respect for fundamental principles across the board lose all moral authority to preach to the rest of the world.

2015 Statement by the Rt. Hon. Sir Anerood Jugnauth, GCSK, KCMG, QC, Prime Minister, at the 70th Session of the United Nations General Assembly (2 October)

Mr President,

Mauritius has always firmly supported the resolution of disputes by peaceful means as inscribed in the Charter of the United Nations.

We believe that, in accordance with resolutions of this Assembly, it is high time to complete the process of decolonisation in Africa.

Mr President,

It is also high time to resolve the situation that prevents Mauritius from effectively exercising its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago and the Island of Tromelin that form an integral part of the territory of Mauritius.

The Chagos Archipelago was illegally excised by the United Kingdom from the territory of Mauritius prior to its accession to independence, in breach of international law and resolutions of this Assembly.

In the wake of this illegal excision, the Mauritians who were residing at the time in the Chagos Archipelago were forcibly evicted by the British authorities from the Archipelago in total disregard of human rights. Most of them were moved to the main island of Mauritius.

The Government of Mauritius is fully sensitive to their plight and to their legitimate aspiration, as Mauritian citizens, to resettle in the Archipelago.

Mr President.

Mauritius welcomes the Award of the Arbitral Tribunal delivered on 18 March 2015 against the United Kingdom under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea.

We welcome the Tribunal's decision that the 'marine protected area' purportedly declared by the United Kingdom around the Chagos Archipelago was established in violation of international law.

We also welcome the Tribunal's unanimous recognition that Mauritius has an interest in significant decisions bearing upon the uses of the Archipelago pending its return to the effective control of Mauritius.

This arbitral proceeding was the first occasion on which any international judge or arbitrator has considered the facts and history lying behind Mauritius' entitlement to sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago.

Mauritius appreciates the fact that two arbitrators have confirmed the opinion that the United Kingdom is not the 'coastal State' in relation to the Chagos Archipelago. This view has not been contradicted by any other judge or arbitrator.

This, no doubt, confirms our stand that the Chagos Archipelago is, and has always been, an integral part of the territory of Mauritius.

Mr President,

The Tribunal underscores United Kingdom's legally binding obligations to Mauritius. These establish, beyond doubt that in international law Mauritius has real, firm and binding rights over the Chagos Archipelago and that the United Kingdom must respect those rights.

The Tribunal recognised that Mauritius has a legal interest in the Chagos Archipelago such that decisions affecting its future use cannot be taken without the involvement of Mauritius.

Mr President,

Despite this clear ruling of the Tribunal, we regret that the United Kingdom appears to be adopting a different approach to the rights of Mauritius. It has recently launched a so-called consultation exercise on purported resettlement of Mauritians of Chagossian origin in the Chagos Archipelago under conditions amounting, again, to a gross violation of their most basic human rights.

Mauritius rejects unreservedly this purported consultation exercise.

We wish to assure the international community that once Mauritius is able to effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, our brothers and sisters of Chagossian origin who resettle in the Archipelago will be able to live in dignity and enjoy their basic human rights as they currently do in Mauritius.

Mr President, considering the Award of the Tribunal, we urge the United States of America which is currently using Diego Garcia for defence purposes to engage in discussions with Mauritius regarding the long term interest of Mauritius in respect of Chagos Archipelago. The more so, after the affirmation by the President of the United States of America when he so convincingly stated in his speech to this Assembly on Monday: I quote – "We cannot stand by when the sovereignty and territorial integrity of a nation is flagrantly violated". Unquote.

Mr President,

The Government of Mauritius is resolutely committed to pursue all efforts in accordance with international law for the effective exercise by Mauritius of its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including the possibility of further recourse to judicial or arbitral bodies.

And we urge this Assembly and the international community at large to support Mauritius in its legitimate endeavours.

In this regard, this Assembly has a direct institutional interest in the resolution of this matter.

The Assembly, of course, has historically played a central role in addressing decolonisation, through the exercise of its powers and functions especially in relation to Chapters XI through XIII of the UN Charter.

Under its Resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 on the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples, this Assembly declared that any attempt aimed at the disruption of the territorial integrity of such a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the UN Charter.

In Resolution 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, a resolution dealing specifically with Mauritius, the Assembly drew attention to the duty of the administering power not to dismember the territory and not to violate the territorial integrity of the then colony.

Therefore, this Assembly has the responsibility in helping to complete the historic process of decolonisation which it was so successful in instigating and overseeing in the second half of the last century.

This is why, Mr. President, we are convinced that this Assembly should now establish a mechanism to allow and monitor the full implementation of the UNGA resolutions.

Mr President,

I take this opportunity to express the deep appreciation of Mauritius for the unflinching support it has consistently received from members of the African Union, the Non-Aligned Movement and the Group of 77 and China, and other friendly countries for its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago.

2016 Statement by the Rt. Hon. Sir Anerood Jugnauth, GCSK, KCMG, QC, Prime Minister, at the 71st Session of the United Nations General Assembly (23 September)

Mr. President,

The firm belief of Mauritius in the UN Charter and the legitimacy of a fair and just multilateral system is unshakable.

Every nation has a right to peace, justice, rule of law and democracy and every human being to the basic human rights. This is the basis on which the Mauritius Constitution is built. These are also the principles enshrined in the UN Charter.

The full realisation of these principles will not be possible unless decolonisation is completed.

Mr. President,

Forty eight years ago, my country became a free and sovereign nation, an independent country in the eyes of the world. Yet even today, it is unable to exercise its sovereignty over parts of its territory, namely the Chagos Archipelago and Tromelin.

Prior to granting Mauritius its independence on 12 March 1968, the United Kingdom illegally excised on 8 November 1965 the Chagos Archipelago from the territory of Mauritius to purportedly create the so-called 'British Indian Ocean Territory'.

This excision was carried out in violation of international law and United Nations General Assembly Resolutions 1514 of 14 December 1960, 2066 of 16 December 1965, 2232 of 20 December 1966 and 2357 of 19 December 1967.

Mr. President,

UN General Assembly Resolution 1514 stipulates that "any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations". It clearly prohibits the dismemberment of any colonial territory prior to independence.

In addition to excising this integral part of our territory, the Mauritians living in the Chagos Archipelago were forcibly evicted from their home and moved to the main island of Mauritius in total disregard of their human rights.

The Government of Mauritius is fully sensitive to their plight and their rightful aspiration to resettle in the Chagos Archipelago as per their legitimate right as a citizen of Mauritius. We are determined to resettle those who were forcibly evicted from the Archipelago upon its return to the effective control of Mauritius in full respect of all their rights and dignity.

Mr. President,

My delegation comprises the spokesperson of Mauritians of Chagossian origin. He is the symbol of a whole community whose human rights have been baffled. His presence also testifies that the issue of sovereignty and the right of return of Mauritian Chagossians to their native lands cannot be dissociated.

Mr. President,

Mauritius has consistently protested against the illegal excision of the Chagos Archipelago and has unequivocally maintained that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, forms an integral part of its territory, under both Mauritian law and international law.

Mauritius has also constantly pressed for the completion of its decolonisation process.

Mr. President,

For decades, Mauritius has called on the former colonial power to engage with us in order to find a fair and just solution, but our efforts have remained in vain so far.

Despite the blatant violation of UN Resolution 1514, the United Kingdom maintains that its continued presence in the Chagos Archipelago is lawful. Yet the United Kingdom also tacitly admits the impropriety of its action in dismembering the territory of Mauritius, as evidenced by the undertaking which it has given on various occasions that the Chagos Archipelago will be returned to Mauritius when no longer required for defence purposes.

This undertaking has been held to be legally binding by the Arbitral Tribunal established in the case brought by Mauritius against the United Kingdom under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea to challenge the legality of the 'marine protected area' purportedly established by the United Kingdom around the Chagos Archipelago.

However, the United Kingdom has so far not honoured its undertaking as the criteria on which it relies to contend that the Chagos Archipelago is still required for defence purposes keep changing.

Mr. President.

The Arbitral Tribunal ruled that the creation of the purported 'marine protected area' around the Chagos Archipelago by the United Kingdom was in violation of international law.

Two of the arbitrators found that the excision of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965 showed "a complete disregard for the territorial integrity of Mauritius by the United Kingdom", in violation of the right to self-determination and that the United Kingdom is not the 'coastal State' in relation to the Chagos Archipelago. This finding has not been contradicted by the other members of the Arbitral Tribunal.

Mr. President,

The General Assembly has a direct institutional interest in this matter given the historic and central role it has played in the process of decolonisation throughout the world. The General Assembly has a continued responsibility to complete the process of decolonisation, including that of Mauritius.

This is why at the request of the Government of Mauritius, the General Assembly has included in the agenda of its 71st Session an item entitled "Request for an Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965".

Mr. President,

An Advisory Opinion would assist the General Assembly in its work on decolonisation in general and the decolonisation of Mauritius in particular, pursuant to the requirements of the UN Charter and international law.

Mr. President,

I would like to impress on the fact that the decision to have recourse to this action has not been taken in an adversarial mindset. This is not the first time that the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice is being sought on such a subject. In our view, this is a legitimate recourse and it abides by the provisions of the UN Charter and past practice of the United Nations.

Mr. President,

We have noted that the United Kingdom has now expressed the wish to engage in dialogue with Mauritius in order to sort out the matter by June 2017.

Mauritius has always believed in true dialogue. We are acting in good faith and we expect same from our interlocutors.

Mr. President,

We believe that this Assembly has the duty to assist in the completion of the decolonisation process.

Mauritius shares the view that an Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice in respect of the Chagos Archipelago will undoubtedly assist the General Assembly in the discharge of this responsibility.

I wish to heartily thank Member States of the African Union, the ACP, the Non-Aligned Group and the Group of 77 countries plus China, amongst others that have openly expressed their support to my country.

I know that when it comes to justice, human dignity and territorial integrity, this Assembly will live up to its mission.

Mr. President, we concur with the UK position of a rule based international system. However, we have to be coherent, not only in what we say but also in what we do.

. . .

Monsieur le Président,

L'intégrité territoriale est un principe de droit international. Les Nations Unies la reconnaissent ainsi et il est de notre devoir de la faire respecter.

Mr. President,

In concluding, I would like to call on the whole Membership of the United Nations to stand by the right to justice, to show that a better and safer world is only possible if this is compatible with Rule of law and to show commitment to the principles of the Charter.

Thank you for your kind attention.

2017 Statement by Hon. Pravind Kumar Jugnauth, Prime Minister, at the 72nd Session of the United Nations General Assembly (21 September)

Mr. President,

Adherence to international law, safeguard of fundamental human rights and respect for the territorial integrity of countries underpin relations between countries.

In relation to Mauritius, all these principles were flouted when an integral part of its territory, namely the Chagos Archipelago, was excised prior to our independence, in violation of international law, including obligations reflected in UN Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, and all the inhabitants of the Chagos Archipelago were forcibly evicted.

Our decolonization still remains to be completed, five decades after the adoption of the Declaration on the granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples.

Mr. President,

A crucial role of the International Court of Justice is to provide guidance, through its advisory opinions, to the organs and agencies of our Organization for the fulfilment of their responsibilities.

It is in this spirit that Member States of the Group of African States tabled last June a resolution seeking an Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965.

We are very pleased that the resolution was adopted, and indeed by such a resounding majority. That vote demonstrated the great importance that the Member States from across the globe - not just Africa, but also Europe, Asia and the Americas - attach to the need to complete the process of decolonization, as well as the concern they have for the injustices caused to the evicted inhabitants of the Chagos Archipelago. As a matter of fact, this overwhelming vote has renewed their hope that they might finally return to their place of birth.

The UN membership has indeed made it clear that it wishes to see the decolonization process of Mauritius completed, and to that end has turned to the International Court of Justice for guidance. We are hopeful that the Court's Advisory opinion will not only guide the important work of the General Assembly but will also allow Mauritius to move forward, including with an appropriate program in favour of the inhabitants who had been displaced from that part of the Mauritian territory. Many of you had an opportunity, last June, to see an exhibition on the tragedy surrounding that eviction and to interact with those who were forced to leave in such inhumane conditions.

Mr. President,

We thank the Member States for their support and look forward to their continued support in the completion of our decolonization.

In this regard, we express the hope that as many Member States as possible will contribute to the proceedings which the Court has invited them to participate in.

Mr. President,

Let me take this opportunity to reaffirm that Mauritius does not have any intention of seeking the disruption of the security arrangements currently in place in Diego Garcia, the biggest island of the Chagos Archipelago.

Let me reiterate what successive Mauritian governments have clearly stated: "Mauritius is willing to enter into a long-term renewable lease with the United States to allow these security arrangements to remain in place". In this regard, completing the process of decolonization will enhance security by providing legality and certainty.

261

dans la loi pour aller se cacher derrière un writ of certiorari, un writ qu'on n'est même pas sûr d'obtenir, qui est très difficile à obtenir. C'est le juriste qui devrait faire attention au droit administratif.

Mr. Y. Mohamed: How many times have I seen him condemning past administrators at the Municipality without giving them a chance to defend themselves?

M. Ollivry: Il ne s'agit pas de condamner les agissements des Municipalités. Il s'agit d'une question de principe. Nous vous donnons le droit de faire appel et vous en tant que juriste, vous dites: « Allez lire

M. Duval: En tant que juriste, je déclare que les deux partis ont tort.

L'amendement que propose le premier député de Rodrigues (M. Ollivry) pourrait sauver ce projet de loi. C'est pourquoi le troisième député de Quartier Militaire et Moka (M. Y. Mohamed) devrait au contraire être pour le projet de loi, pour l'amendement et le premier député de Rodrigues (M. Ollivry) contre. Quant à moi, je resterai sur mes positions.

Sir Harold Walter: Sir, there are three points which have been completely overlooked by the last speaker. The first one is the right of appeal. The right of appeal is inherent to it. At any moment if anybody feels that there has been an omission or a commission which makes an inroad in the provision of the law, he can go to Court by way of writ. What is the difficulty in this? I cannot see the difficulty.

The second thing which no one has dared mention: we are trying to repair a big mistake of the last administration of the Municipality of Port Louis. They forgot to pass the law and collect the rates for 1972/1973. We have done it now.

The third thing: how are those Commissions going to get the loans from Government? You have to mortgage everything or go on your knees to the bank to ask for overdrafts.

Mr. Ollivry: Sir, is the hon. Minister speaking on the amendment which is to give a right of appeal to the Municipality which has been suspended?

Sir Harold Walter: You are right on a point of order because the other one is a point of disorder which...

Clause 2 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 3 (Appointment of commissions).

Motion made and question proposed « that the clause stand part of the Bill ».

Mr. Ollivry: Sir, I move the amendment as circulated.

Question put on the amendment of the hon. First Member for Rodrigues (Mr. Ollivry).

The Chairman: The Noes have it.

Mr. Ollivry: I move for a division, Sir.

The Chairman: I have put the question on the amendment which has been circulated to hon. Members and I have said that the Noes have it. Will those who support my decision rise in their places

(Members rose in their places)

Thank you. Now will those who challenge my decision rise in their places.

EXTRACT

263

Public Bill

9 APRIL 1974

Motion

264

(Members rose in their places)

Thank you. The Noes have it.

Amendment defeated.

Clause 3 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 4 and 5 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 6 (Rates and taxes).

Motion made and question proposed: «that the clause stand part of the Bill».

Mr. Ah Chuen: Sir, I move according to the amendment which has been circulated.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 6, as amended, ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 7 (Charges of administration).

Motion made and question proposed: «that the clause stand part of the Bill.»

Mr. Duval: This morning, the reply of the Minister to a Question which reads thus:

«Whether he will say if the Chairman and Members of the Administrative Commissions of the Municipalities of Port Louis, Beau Bassin-Rose Hill, Quatre Bornes, Curepipe and Vacoas-Phœnix are remunerated. If so, will he give details thereof.»

was: «No». I want again to ask the Minister, specially as regards the Municipality of Vacoas-Phenix, whether he still maintains that the Chairman is not being remunerated.

Mr. Ah Chuen: Not for the time being. The former President of the Municipality of Vacoas-Phænix declined.

Clause 7 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 8 and 9 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

The title and the enacting clause were agreed to.

The Bill, as amended, was agreed to.

On the Assembly resuming with Mr. Speaker in the Chair, the Deputy Speaker reported accordingly.

Third Reading

On motion made and seconded the Local Government (Special Provisions) Bill (No. VI of 1974) was read the third time and passed.

MOTION

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE — ADDRESS IN REPLY

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on the following motion of the hon. Deputy Chairman of Committees (Mr. S. Bhayat):—

«That an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General in the following terms:—

«We, the Members of the Mauritius Legislative Assembly here assembled, beg leave to offer our thanks to Your Excellency for the Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to us on the occasion of the Opening of the Eighth Session of the Third Legislative Assembly '.»

Question again proposed.

M. G. Ollivry (First Member for Rodrigues): M. le président, les premiers mots de ce discours du trône en matière de politique étrangère couvrent de ridicule ce Gouvernement qui agit comme la Motion grenouille de la fable qui voulait se faire aussi grosse que le bœuf :

« In pursuance of its policy of detente and peaceful co-existence... » « Its » policy of détente! Ainsi donc le Gouvernement se croit être devenu le gouvernement des Etats Unis ou de la Russie Soviétique! C'est le gouvernement de Maurice qui parle de sa politique de détente, comme si l'île Maurice était engagée dans la guerre froide! A moins, M. le président, que le

Premier ministre savait qu'il allait alimenter la guerre froide en vendant Diégo Garcia pour rien et pour des raisons électorales, à moins que le Premier ministre sachant celà, veut maintenant faire une politique de détente puisqu'il a lui-même vendu Diégo Garcia pour en faire une base, alors que la majorité de la population du pays s'est opposée. La politique de détente du Gouvernement! Il aurait fallu y avoir songé en 1965 quand on a, pour des raisons de stratégie et de tactique électorales, donné Diégo Garcia pour Rs. 40m., alors que la population s'y opposait. Aujourd'hui le Gouvernement, voyant que Diégo Garcia est utilisé comme une base, peut-être nucléaire, ne fait que des protestations très faibles ou pas de protestations tout simplement; parceque le Gouvernement sait que c'est le Premier ministre lui-même qui a été complice de la vente de Diégo Garcia. Il a donc crée, dans l'océan indien, un foyer de guerre froide. Et aujourd'hui il veut parler de détente, de sa politique de détente! Depuis quand est-il devenu le Président des Etats Unis ou le Premier ministre de la Russie Soviétique ? Mais à ce sujet il faut rappeler que si l'océan indien est transformé en une zone de confrontation entre les superpuissances, la responsabilité, la plus grande part de cette responsabilité, revient au Premier ministre et à son Gouvernement travailliste.

Sir Harold Walter: Revient à VOUS M. Ollivry: Revient à moi? Com

Sir Harold Walter: Pour avoir opposé l'indépendance !

M. Ollivry: Quel aveu! Nous appre nons maintenant du ministre de la sant que, parceque le Parti Mauricien s'était à l'époque opposé à l'indépendance, le Parti Travailliste, avec le ministre de le santé comme membre, a vendu, a donné une partie du territoire mauricien ! Voil de quoi ils sont coupables! Vendre le territoire mauricien tout simplement pour gagner des élections, pour gagner l'inda pendance! Mais quand on a affaire à genre de Gouvernement, à ce genre de mentalité, vraiment, M. le président, faudrait que cela soit su aux Nationi Unies où le ministre de la santé se rend de temps en temps : que, pour de bas raisons électorales, vous avez vendu l'Ile Maurice ! Sir Harold Walter: Ce n'était ni vous, ni à moi : c'était à l'Angleterra Elle avait le droit d'extirper ! M. Ollivry: Si c'était à l'Angletern et que l'Angleterre avait le droit d'extirpt comme vous dites, il ne fallait pas è complice de M. Greenwood! Il fallait die aux Anglais : « Extirpez ! » Non seuleme vous n'avez pas fait cela, vous avez pris fric des Anglais...

(Interruption)

Mr. Speaker: I must tell Hon. Membe that it is not a shouting match which taking place.

M. Ollivry: Je vous remercie, M. président. Je reprends mon discours mon calme pour répondre.

267

Ainsi nous apprenons du ministre de la santé que c'était aux Anglais et qu'ils avaient le droit de prendre une partie du territoire; mais alors, pourquoi avoir été complice des Anglais en leur disant : « Prenez » alors qu'il y avait une protestation au Conseil des Ministres à Maurice, alors qu'il y avait des protestations dans la population à Maurice ? Pourquoi avoir accepté l'argent des Britanniques ? Tout simplement parceque le Premier ministre et le Parti Travailliste d'alors savaient que la situation était telle dans le pays qu'il fallait à tout prix céder au chantage, faire plaisir à M. Greenwood! Voilà la vérité!

Sir Harold Walter: Vous jouissez de l'indépendance, hein? Et vous aviez voulu l'intégration de l'Île Maurice avec la France!

M. Ollivry: L'indépendance est un fait et personne ne songerait à le contester mais seulement quand on compare, M. le président, la situation qui prévalait sur le plan des institutions avant l'indépendance, et ce que ces gens là ont fait de l'indépendance, on peut se demander si on n'avait pas un peu raison d'avoir peur et de craindre la dictature qu'ils allaient imposer dans ce pays.

Sir Harold Walter: Et de dire que votre temps de service comme ministre n'a servi à rien!

M. Ollivry: Oui, vous direz ce que vous voudrez! Mais vous n'avez qu'à venir, vous n'avez qu'à faire les élections! Venez poser contre nous, quand vous voulez, là où vous voulez!

Sir Harold Walter: A time will come!

M. Ollivry: Non seulement le Gouvernement...

(Interruptions)

Mr. Speaker: If this sort of thing continues my patience will wear very thin.

M. Ollivry: Non seulement du Gouvernement, du propre aveu du ministre, pour gagner l'indépendance, pour faciliter la tâche du Parti Travailliste, a permis à une partie du territoire de s'en aller et a créé un foyer de la guerre froide dans l'océan indien, non seulement celà, il l'a fait avec la plus grande indécence sans protéger les intérêts de ceux qui s'y trouvaient : les malheureux Ilois. Le Premier ministre lui-même a dit que cette excision de Diégo Garcia du territoire mauricien a été faite sans aucun document pour tenir compte de la réalité, de la nationalité de ces malheureux, de leur sort, de leur reclassement; et ces gens là sont venus, vers les années 1968, essayer de végéter dans les faubourgs de Port Louis. Et rien n'a été fait par le Gouvernement mauricien pour eux. Sans doute le Gouvernement britannique, sous la pression de certains et qui n'étaient pas membres du Gouvernement d'alors - sous la pression de certains du Parti Mauricien avant la coalition, et de nous-mêmes et des autres après la coalition, a accordé une certaine aide. Et qu'est devenue cette aide ? Qu'a-ton fait pour ces malheureux ? Est-ce-qu'ils ont été reclassés ? Absolument rien n'a été fait pour ces malheureux qui n'ont absolument rien obtenu de la sécurité sociale et de l'assistance publique. Il n'y a aucun document concernant leur reclassement, aucun document concernant leur nationalité; on leur permet de végéter dans les faubourgs de Port Louis, et c'est tout. Pourquoi? On peut se poser la question. Un Gouvernement qui agit ainsi avec la plus grande désinvolture en permettant la création d'un foyer de tension dans notre océan indien et en permettant à ce que des mauriciens, des Ilois - mais qui ne votent pas nécessairement travailliste - soient traités de la façon dont ils ont été traités, ce Gouvernement est indigne de rester un jour de plus au pouvoir ! Mais on peut se demander pourquoi ils sont ainsi traités. Ils sont ainsi traités, M. le président, parcequ'ils ne comptent pas! Parceque pour ceux qui sont au pouvoir, ils ne comptent pas. Ils sont des Ilois. Les Ilois ne comptent pas! Les Rodriguais ne comptent pas ! Et peut-être même beaucoup de Mauriciens ne comptent pas puisque on a entendu le Premier ministre dire qu'il ne savait pas au juste ce que c'était que le mauricianisme, et le ministre du plan qui dit : « Qui sa bébête qui appelle Mauricien là ?» Et voilà ! Le Premier ministre qui aurait du inspirer confiance à la nation mauricienne, qui aurait dû être le promoteur de la nation mauricienne, que le troisième député de Vieux Grand Port et Rose Belle (M. Bissoondoyal) a appelé le père de la nation, celui-là vient vous dire qu'il ne croit pas dans le mauricianisme ! Et son ministre du plan : « Qui ça bébête qui appelle Mauricien là ? » C'est sans doute parceque les Ilois, les Rodriguais et beaucoup d'autres sont considérés par le Gouvernement comme des «bébêtes», qu'ils ne comptent pas pour le Gouvernement actuel, qu'ils n'ont absolument aucune espèce d'importance, qu'ils ne comptent pas dans le petit jeu électoral pour des élections qu'ils ne veulent pas faire. C'est pour cela qu'ils ne comptent pas dans le petit jeu électoral de ce Gouvernement, dans le jeu politique de ce Gouvernement. Ainsi donc, le Gouvernement a crée un foyer de tension et vous avez maintenant à rendre compte aux Nations Unies et à vos amis du Tiers Monde, vous qui parlez si souvent sur les tréteaux de l'Organisation de l'Unité Africaine! Comment rendrez-vous compte à ces gens là de ce que vous avez fait ? Si l'océan Indien n'est pas une zone de paix, que Madame Gandhi aille demander des comptes au Premier ministre! Que Madame Gandhi qui s'émeut de ce problème là et, à juste titre, aille demander des comptes au Premier ministre! Et quant à nous, nous disons que la politique étrangère de l'île Maurice doit tenir compte du fait que nous sommes un petit pays avec une économie vulnérable et que nous avons à tenir compte en politique étrangère de la nécessité de bonnes relations avec tous, sans doute. mais de nos intérêts d'abord et de notre sécurité intérieure. Voilà les considérations qui doivent présider à l'élaboration de notre politique étrangère, - de bonnes relations avec d'autres pays, nos intérêts, notre développement économique et notre sécurité intérieure. Et il n'y a rien dans ce discours du Trône en matière de politique étrangère pour pouvoir inspirer confiance à qui que ce soit, ni aux Mauriciens, ni à ceux qui à l'étranger ont suivi l'évolution de ce parti travailliste, les actes de trahison vis à vis du peuple, de la nation mauricienne dont nous avons eu la confirmation aujourd'hui du ministre de la santé qui nous a dit que c'est parceque on était opposé à l'indépendance qu'ils ont été obligés d'accepter Rs. 40m. et de devenir complices de l'excision d'une partie du territoire mauricien.

269

M. le président, je voudrais avant de poursuivre mon exposé parler de Rodrigues. Est-ce parceque certains considèrent que les Mauriciens sont des bébêtes que les Rodriguais n'ont eu droit à absolument aucun traitement depuis toujours? On aurait pu penser qu'avec la représentation parlementaire de Rodrigues au Parlement, avec les nombreuses interventions des députés de Rodrigues et d'autres députés pour Rodrigues, que ce Gouvernement allait enfin s'occuper de Rodrigues. Six ans, presque sept ans ont passé et qu'a-t-on fait pour Rodrigues? Sans doute des missions s'y rendent de temps en temps. Il faut bien y aller, il faut bien aller faire un tour et voir comment c'est Mation Rodrigues. C'est assez intéressant. On sort de Londres, d'Europe et on sort même de Maurice, on en a souvent entendu parler, on voudrait voir comment c'est et on y va, on va faire un tour à Rodrigues, on revient, les rapports sont déposés et il n'y a aucune suite, aucun follow-up. Les années passent, le problème de l'eau est resté sans solution, aucune recherche n'a été faite pour trouver les sources d'eau potable à Rodrigues et les ressources de Rodrigues en eau. Rien. Un filtre avait été donné par l'aide britannique à un certain moment pour filtrer l'eau d'une certaine partie de Rodrigues. Ce filtre a été donné à Plaisance au lieu d'être acheminé sur Rodrigues parceque les avions avaient besoin d'eau potable et jusqu'aujourd'hui rien n'a été fait pour donner à Rodrigues de l'eau filtrée. C'est ainsi que la mortalité infantile est très grande à Rodrigues et ce n'est que si l'enfant dépasse l'âge de quatre ou cinq ans qu'il a une chance de survivre. Mais la mortalité infantile est très grande grâce à la gastroentérite, grâce à de nombreuses maladies qui proviennent de l'eau polluée. On l'a dit, on l'a repété à plusieurs reprises, le Gouvernement n'a rien fait, le Gouvernement ne fera rien parceque le Gouvernement ne compte pas Rodrigues dans son petit jeu électoral.

Mr. Ringadoo: That is not true.

M. Ollivry: Je sais que le ministre des finances est animé de bonnes intentions vis à vis de Rodrigues mais la route de l'enfer est pavée de bonnes intentions.

Sir Harold Walter: Government also.

M. Ollivry: Quant à lui, il est animé de bonnes intentions vis à vis de Rodrigues mais ainsi que je l'ai dit la route de l'enfer est pavée de bonnes intentions.

Le coût de la vie est très élevé, beaucoup plus élevé qu'à Maurice. Cela a été reconnu par ceux qui y sont allés. Cela a été reconnu par le commissaire Sedgwick. Qu'a-t-on fait ? Les fonctionnaires rodriguais se sont battus pour avoir un COLA suivant le barême établi par Sedgwick. Ils n'ont obtenu absolument rien sauf un 25% du COLA mauricien qui quand on l'analyse de près équivant à prouver qu'en fait la situation est restée intacte. Je vais vous l'expliquer. La disturbance allowance qui est donnée aux fonctionnaires mauriciens comprend environ 15% de COLA. Lorsque vous donnez aux fonctionnaires rodriguais 25% du COLA mauricien, vous ne rétablissez pas la situation. Ce qu'il faut faire c'est donner aux Rodriguais et aux Mauriciens qui se trouvent à Rodrigues un COLA différent basé sur la hausse du coût de la vie et ne pas faire de différence en ce qui concerne le coût de la vie entre les Rodriguais et les Mauriciens à Rodrigues, qui y travaillent. Sans doute il faudra réaménager la disturbance allowance qui doit être différente du coût de la vie mais en ce qui concerne le coût de la vie, les Rodriguais et les Mauriciens devraient avoir un COLA qui est supérieur à celui qui est donné à Maurice pour tenir compte de la hausse du coût de la vie qui affecte les Rodriguais et les Mauriciens qui se trouvent à Rodrigues de la même facon.

En vérité, en ce qui concerne Rodrigues il y a un manque d'équipement, il y a un manque de cadres et dès qu'on a un cadre valable qui a un esprit missionnaire et qui veut aider les Rodriguais on le fait partir. Nous avons eu l'exemple de Monsieur Brown qui était en charge de l'agriculture et qui à un moment a voulu mettre de l'ordre dans les services de l'agriculture. Il y a eu un magistrat qui par la suite a disparu dans les circonstances que l'on sait et qui a fait toutes sortes de rapports

EXTRACT

1931

Public Bills

26 JUNE 1974

Public Bills

1933

Mr. Ringadoo rose and seconded.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill read a second time and committed.

COMMITTEE STAGE

(The Deputy Speaker in the Chair)

The Road Traffic (Amendment) Bill (No. XXXV of 1974) was considered and agreed to.

On the Assembly resuming with the Deputy Speaker in the Chair, the Deputy Speaker reported accordingly.

Third Reading

On motion made and seconded, the Road Traffic (Amendment) Bill (No. XXXV of 1974) was read the third time and passed.

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

(The Deputy Speaker in the Chair)

Consideration of the Appropriation (1974-75) Bill (No. XIX of 1974) was resumed.

Vote 13-1. Ministry of External Affairs, Tourism and Emigration was called.

Mr. Ringadoo: Sir, there is an amendment which has been circulated, and I move accordingly.

M. Ollivry: M. le président, je parle à l'item du ministre des affaires étrangères, du tourisme et de l'émigration pour déplorer, une fois encore, que le Gouvernement mauricien n'ait jamais défini quelle était la politique étrangère du pays, et pour déplorer aussi que les affaires étrangères soient un secret pour le Parlement — ce domaine est entouré de mystère! Ainsi, les tractations qui se passent entre le Gouvernement du Royaune Uni...

The Prime Minister: I am very sorry,

I don't want to be difficult but I rise on a point of order. This is the general policy. We have discussed external afffairs on the debates on the Speech from the Throne, on the second reading of the Appropriation Bill. Everything was discussed and everything was explained beyond limit. That is one. But if the hon. Member were to say under what item he wishes to speak, what is the specific matter he has in mind, I shall be helpful to him. It must be a specific thing; it cannot be a general debate. It must be a specific matter on which we will try and help our Friends. It is no good trying to come with general things which are vague and chaotic in their approach. I have risen on a point of order. The hon. Member says that external affairs are not known. It has been known in the newspapers, in the House and everywhere. I am rising on a point of order and I am explaining why there should be a restraint to a specified aspect of the subject, so that I may be able to be specific and reply to the point of the hon. First Member for Rodrigues.

M. Ollivry: M. le président, je propose que les salaires du ministre des affaires étrangères soient réduits de Rs. 25 ou de Rs. 100. Moi, j'aurais voulu l'enlever. Il n'existe même pas. Le Premier ministre est déjà payé pour cela. Je propose, M. le président...

The Prime Minister: I am always helpful. My Friend can talk on item 1. For the time being it exists. It has not been deleted, has it? He can speak on it, but I would pray and hope at the same time that he will be specific so that I can reply to it.

M. Ollivry: Ainsi, M. le président, des agences de presse étrangères rapportent qu'il y a un accord secret entre le Gouvernement mauricien et le Gouvernement soviétique. Cela est possible. Il est possible que le Gouvernement estime nécessaire d'arriver à un tel accord entre le Gouvernement mauricien et le Gouvernement soviétique. Les agences de presse étrangères rapportent, comme émanant de l'île Maurice, qu'il y a un accord secret entre le Gouvernement mauricien et le Gouvernement mauricien et le Gouvernement soviétique.

The Prime Minister: I can tell my Friend there is no such thing. All agreements that this Government has entered into have been laid on the Table of this Assembly.

(3.10 p.m.)

M. Lesage: M. le président, pour élargir mon champ de tir je vais choisir l'item que vient de choisir celui qui m'a précédé, en y ajoutant 13-1.10, 13-1.16 et 13-1.20. Je crois que cela nous donne une idée de la dimension de notre politique étrangère. Nous sommes membres des Nations Unies, de l'O.U.A., de l'OCAM, et je crois que, ne serait-ce que sous l'item Nations Unies, il est permis de parler sur tous les aspects de cette politique étrangère ou de l'absence de politique étrangère. Je voudrais aviser la Chambre en passant, comme l'a souligné mon Collègue le premier député de Rodrigues (M. Ollivry), que nous avons l'intention de demander la suppression de l'item 13-1.1(1) puisqu'il y a cumul de fonctions. Car ce n'est que suite à la décision du Gou-vernement, qu'on pourra voir — puisqu'il est entendu que la re-négotiation est une formule diplomatique très en vogue — s'il y aura possibilité de renégociation de la Coalition.

Le premier député de Rodrigues a évoqué cette question d'accord russe. Il est évident qu'aujourd'hui l'océan indien entre à nouveau dans l'histoire - il ne s'agit donc pas d'être myope et cela depuis que la Grande Bretagne a décidé de décrocher à l'est de Suez. Il est tout-à-fait normal qu'un océan de 17 millions de milles carrés fasse l'objet de convoitise de la part des différentes puissances étrangères. En effet, il ne s'agit que de considérer la dimension des puissances qui vont s'affronter pour être en mesure de réaliser les sérieuses inquiétudes pour la paix, qui naissent. Tout d'abord, sans sortir du cadre, nous croyons que c'est une question très pertinente que de se demander à quels mobiles profonds la construction et la mise en service d'une super-flotte soviétique correspondent. Il est un fait troublant, et je résume en substance la déclaration du ministre des affaires étrangères de Tunisie, M. Mohamed Masmoudi, qui, à l'époque de la pénétration soviétique en Méditerranée parlait de myopie européenne. Il s'agit de préciser qu'après avoir franchi les Dardanelles, les Russes ont érodé les prétentions de la sixième flotte à convertir la Médi-, terranée en mare nostrum.

Mais ils se sont aperçus dans le même souffle que pour pouvoir contrôler la Méditérrannée, se souvenant sans doute de l'époque de la thalassocratie britannique de Gibraltar à Suez, qu'il fallait avoir un lévier logistique dans l'océan indien.

Il ne faut certes pas faire la politique

Nous ne voudrions pas remonter au déluge, mais qu'il nous soit permis de rappeler, ne serait-ce que le discours qui a été prononcé à l'ONU par notre Premier ministre contre l'Ouganda. On aimerait savoir puisqu'il a eu l'occasion d'aller au sommet de Mogadiscio, s'il a réglé son compte au président Amine.

L'heure est arrivée pour nous de dénoncer ces gens et c'est le seul forum où nous puissions le faire sans acrimonie même si on hausse le ton par fois. Il est bon en effet de rappeler certaines choses. Nous n'avons rien à nous reprocher là-dessus.

Maintenant nous voudrions demander au Premier ministre comment il justifie notre contribution au SARTOC. Membership fee to South African Regional Tourism Council. Est-il conséquent avec luimême ? Par ailleurs, lorsque le Premier ministre va à l'étranger, il fait aussi des déclarations mielleuses. Je me rappelle que cela se passait un peu après l'indépendance. Pendant une visite à l'étranger il avait déclaré que pour les Sud Africains, l'île Maurice était le paradis. Ces derniers y venaient pour regarder la télévision. Il doit se souvenir de tout cela. Et il n'avait peut être pas tort. Aussi nous conseillons une diplomatie prudente, pour ne pas mettre en danger l'approvisionnement de toute une population qui compte 850,000 âmes aujourd'hui, plus même. Nous avions déjà prédit il y a quelque temps que notre pays allait devenir un trottoir pour les querelles idéologiques. Nous aimerions que le Premier ministre fasse une déclaration supplémentaire à celle déjà faite par le ministre des finances en décembre où en septembre 1973 sur cette question qui suscite tant d'inquiétude, je veux parler de l'aéroport du nord.

Mr. Virah Sawmy: Sir, I choose item 13-1.10 - Contribution to United Nations Organisation. I understand that, if my information is correct of course, that some twenty years ago, a resolution was passed in the United Nations which prevented any colonial country to deprive a colony on the verge of independence of any part of its territory. In other words no country could, prior to independence, remove from Mauritius any part of it. If this is true, is not the passing over of Diego to the famous British Indian Ocean Territory in contravention with this resolution and if it is so, does the Minister of External Affairs intend to take the case to the International Court of the Hague and if not I would like to know why.

Secondly, I would like to speak on item 13-1.16 and here I would like to know what contribution this Government gives to the liberation movement of Africa. The Prime Minister, in many speeches we know, has expressed his solidarity for all oppressed people of the world, but I would like to know whether when he makes these statements, he isnot only paying lip service to the liberation movement, because we may make beautiful speeches expressing our solidarity when in fact what the freedom fighters in Africa need is help, medicine, guns, etc. I would like to know how much this Government gives to the liberation movement in Africa. The time when people would just listen to good speeches is over. We must know what is done in practice, what concrete help is being offered to our black brothers in Africa. There were quite a lot of accusations of racialism here. But one Minister once accused me of stupidity, because I expressed my solidarity for the black people of Africa. So I think the Prime Minister should look around him before he accuses other people of racialism because there are racialists in his Government.

My third point. Sir, I would like to speak on item 13-1.33 (1) General Manager, Mauritius Government Tourist Office. There is an alarming situation which exists in this country. I am not going to make a detailed speech on tourism to show its good side and its bad side, but there is one ascpet which worries me a bit. There was a nice beach in Trou-aux-Biches, now the public can no longer go there. Pointe aux Cannonniers was a nice place, now there is Club Mediterranée. We hear of hotels in Belle Mare, hotels all over the place. I would like to hear from the Prime Minister what is the policy of Government concerning the protection of Mauritians and the protection of the rights of Mauritians to go to the beaches whenever they want and to prevent hotels from depriving Mauritians from this inherited privilege. And while I am on this topic, I would like also to draw the attention of Government on another point. There are places in Mauritius where owners of campements have the habit of putting barbed wires to prevent people from walking along the beach. Hotel keepers may adopt this practice so that we Mauritians are prevented from enjoying things which are ours.

A last point which I would like to make is on the item concerning membership to South African Regional Tourism Council. Now there has been quite a lot of statements against South Africa and I agree that we should take a very firm stand against South Africa, but there is a contradiction here. We say that we must fight for total political and economic independence and we encourage tourism and the majority of tourists come from South Africa, so that the tourist and we are at the same time member of the South African Regional Tourism Council. The country of Kamuzu Hastings Banda too is a member of this Association. I think the Prime Minister knows that not only the white despots are the enemies of the black people, but there are also some black stooges of the white despots, and if we want to be honest with ourselves, I think this country should withdraw from SARTOC which is a South African controlled organisation. We cannot go on paying again lip service to the liberation of our black brothers in South Africa and at the same cooperating economically. We cannot do something valid on the political level if we are collaborating with South Africa on the economic level.

Thank you, Sir.

(3.45 p.m.)

The Prime Minister: First of all, Sir, with regard to the ceiding of Diego by this Government, I will say actually it is not what my hon. Friends opposite are saying. I will refer them to the Colonial Boundaries Act of 1895 which confers on Her Majesty the Queen, then Queen Victoria, the power to alter the boundaries of colonies by order in Council, or letters patent, with the proviso that the consent of the self governing Colony, shall be required for the alteration of the boundaries thereof.

It is by this that Seychelles and Mauritius were separated. It is by this that Diego was separated from Mauritius. By an Order in Council in 1965, dated the 8th November, Her Majesty the Queen ordered that the British Indian Ocean Territory be constituted consisting of certain islands hitherto included in the dependencies of Mauritius and of other territories. The Government of Mauritius was nevertheless informed, after we had discussed in England, that this had taken place, and we gave our consent to it.

It was done like this, but the day it is not required it will revert to Mauritius.

But, Mauritius has reserved its mineral rights, fishing rights and landing rights, and certain other things that go to complete, in other words, some of the sovereignty which obtained before on that island. That is the position. Even if we did not want to detach it, I think, from the legal point of view, Great Britain was entitled to make arrangements as she thought fit and proper. This, in principle, was agreed even by the P.M.S.D. who was in the Opposition at the time; and we had consultations, and this was done in the interest of the Common-

With regard to the liberation movement, it is not lip service. We are contributing, in every way possible, to the liberation movement. Sometimes, there are papers which come here, to make good the amount that we pay.

With regard to tourism and beaches, all I can say about Diego.

Government, as far as possible, tries to strike a balance between our own requirements and the use to which we should put some of our beaches so that we can derive not only revenue, but also facilities which give a lot of employment to our own people, and at the same time earn foreign exchange for Mauritius. It is possible that sometimes we may not have discerned properly. That is another matter, but every request is examined very carefully, not by my Ministry. To begin with, it is examined and Government decides to follow this or that policy. With regard to people trying to put fences in front of their bungalows at the seaside, if this is reported to the Government, we might look into it. I do not think people can do it. I say, on the spur of the moment, it should not be done.

mix up politics with tourism in international organisation of this nature. We have not mixed up tourism with politics, and SARTOC is a tourism organisation.

It is not mainly composed of South

With regard to SARTOC, we don't Africa or its representatives. It is not an organisation to include South Africa as such, as I can know, and we form part of it. But, I would like to point out to my Friend that it is not working as he thinks it is working. It is not wealth, not of Mauritius only. This is giving satisfaction to the members themselves. They very rarely do. And as to tourism, we have no grievance against South African concerns. The South Africans who come to Mauritius are well behaved. There have been no incidents with them, and they accept the policies and the rules of conduct in our country. This is a free country: people come, they leave, they take what they want, what they require, and they go. I don't think there has been any complaint against South Africans as such. we complain of is apartheid and the abuse of the black races which a minority of white Africa is trying to impose. That is what we are aginst! We are against the enslavement of the black man. This is not something that is new. My hon. Friend just now spoke about my insincere views. I moved even before we were independent a resolution in this country to sympathise with the black

Africans who were shot at Sharpeville!

And it was passed by this Legislature, even before independence. This is something that we cannot mix up. South African people themselves do not like many of the things their Government does. But, we cannot mix up the South African tourists or the South African people with the policy of the South African Government.

(Interruption)

Well, I don't know. My friend may think so. I don't know who supports and who does not support. South Africans are good tourists. They are well behaved gentlemen and ladies, and I take my hat off to them. They have always behaved well in Mauritius, and I don't think Mauritius has anything against them.

Commerce is international. I don't think it is based on colour or creed or anything of the sort. So, this is the stand on which this Government acts and we are contributing to the liberation movement in many forms, in education as well as by funds and we are satisfied that our Colleagues in O.A.U. are doing their utmost also to do the same thing. And there are no bones about all this.

But, as I said, as regards the Indian Ocean I have given part of it, but there is the other part and we are already trying to see what the Indian Ocean can produce for Mauritius itself. There is a great wealth down the bottom of the sea, wherever our territories are, and I have signed an agreement to the effect that Mauritius has 53,000 square miles of territory beyond the others, to which we have acquired rights, and in which we have the right to explore and exploit the resources that are available. So, we have tried to protect the rights of Mauritius wherever we have been able to do it. But, if my hon. Colleagues on the other side say that we should oppose the great powers in the Indian Ocean, I would say that even great powers cannot oppose each other. They try to talk, they try to cajole one another, they talk at international forums to be able to come to some arrangement. Just now, they are talking in an impasse, but all the same they talk. I personally think, all the sea should be free to every nation. We, in our own life-time, have seen two world wars. The first world war was for the freedom of people and the freedom of nations. The second war also involved the same theme. So, I do not know why we should not say. Russia should not come this way, or the United States or any other nation should not come this way. I would like to know how can Russia traverse from one side of the world to the other without going through the Indian Ocean? Or, how can America go from this side the other? Or how England or Holland or Iran can go from this side to the other unless they go through the Indian Ocean? I think, this is not a pragmatic approach to the problems with which we are faced; and peace and war - although small or big nations may have their say up to a point, this is decided by big powers, and this is the grievance of smaller nations who seem to be now and again acting as pawns to big powers. We can say in the United Nations what we feel, we certainly say at the O.A.U. what we think, we can say it at O.C.A.M., we can say it at non-aligned meetings, at other international meetings, the W.H.O. the F.A.O. the UNESCO all these are forums where we can vent the views of a country for peace and happiness, but still war is taking place. There is war in North and South Vietnam. fait? Quand espère-t-on terminer ces travaux?

M. le président, à l'item de Rodrigues je vois housing for civil servants. Il est certain que ce Gouvernement se doit de construire des résidences pour les fonctionnaires à Rodrigues mais la plupart des fonctionnaires habitent dans la région de Port Mathurin. Il n'y a vraiment pas beaucoup d'espace. Estce-que la solution ne serait pas, au lieu de construire un très grand nombre de petites maisons avec une cour, etc., comme cela se fait d'habitude, est-ceque ce ne serait pas mieux de construire un ou deux immeubles avec un grand nombre d'appartements où les fonctionnaires pourraient occuper ces appartements? Ce serait une meilleure utilisation des terrains.

Dans Port Mathurin presque toutes les maisons sont des maisons de fonctionnaires. Est-ce que dans le cadre du planning et de l'urbanisme on ne devrait pas songer à créer des blocs d'appartements pour les fonctionnaires à Rodrigues et qui feraient une meilleure utilisation de l'espace?

Je vois qu'on prévoit une somme à l'item 31.4.70. pour l'aéroport. On aurait dû plûtot parler du air strip que du airport. On a annoncé qu'un avion de vingt places irait à Rodrigues. Est-ce-que l'aéroport actuel peut recevoir cet avion? Quelles sont les améliorations qu'il faudra faire? Combien de temps faudra-t-il attendre pour que cet avion puisse y aller? Est-ce-que cette somme suffirait pour l'agrandissement éventuel de l'aéroport de Rodrigues?

(6.35 p.m.)

M. Lesage: M. le président, je choisis

Pitem 31.7.7 New Airport (phase 1). Je vois que la somme globale pour ce projet est de Rs 41 millions alors que les crédits qu'on nous demande de voter cette année-ci ne sont que de l'ordre de Rs 2,26 millions. Il est toutes sortes de bruits qui circulent à ce sujet. Nous dirons même qu'il y a un mystère qui entoure la construction de ce nouvel aéroport. En effet, à chaque fois qu'un membre de cette Chambre essaye d'avoir de plus amples détails, le gouvernement répond évasivement. On a l'impression que le projet a été modifié radicalement.

(Interruption)

En effet les avions font beaucoup de bruit!

Nous aimerions avoir quelques renseignements complémentaires sur cet aéroport. Nous voulons bien entendu parler de l'aéroport du Nord. Est-ce que de nouveaux développements se seraient produits suite à la déclaration faite par le ministre des finances en novembre ou en décembre 1973? C'est en tout cas notre sentiment intérieur.

Le ministre doit dire s'il y a de nouvelles conditions qui y ont été attachées. Nous avions du reste prédit - on dira que nous avons une bouche de cabri que nous finirions par payer notre aéroport. Nous avons vu les répercussions suite au réajustement des taux. On dit toujours que l'économie socialiste ne connaît pas l'inflation. Cela est possible. Mais ce qui est également vrai c'est qu'elle est injecteuse d'inflation chez les autres. Si on prend une liste des prix ,- c'est le conseil que je donne au ministre du commerce et de l'industrie - des marchandises importées de la Chine continentale on verra dans quelle proportion certains produits venant du pays donateur ont augmenté en l'espace de deux ans. On a commencé à ressentir les effets presque immédiatement, après la signature de l'accord. Il est certaines gens qui savent bien faire les choses.

J'arrive maintenant à l'item 15.3. -Quatre Bornes, qui avait été tenu hors du circuit de développement car le gouvernement n'y permettait pas l'implantation de nouvelles usines, jusqu'à tout récamment a pourtant ses lettres de noblesse dans l'industrialisation de Maurice. Je veux parler de la sacherie qui se trouve dans ma circonscription. Il y a eu un nouveau projet à partir de la sacherie. D'autres industries vont être mises sur pied grâce à des investissements étrangers. Aussi, pressentant cet accord éventuel entre le Gouvernement et des entrepreneurs libres, nous avions par voie d'interpellations demandé au ministre du commerce et de l'industrie d'alors si les droits des travailleurs seraient sauvegardés. Et avions même fait ressortir que ce serait une occasion unique pour lancer la participation, pas seulement entre les investisseurs et le gouvernement, mais également la possibilité participation des travailleurs aux responsabilités, aux décisions et au capital de l'entreprise. C'était l'occasion rêvée.

On nous a répondu que les intérêts des travailleurs ne seraient pas lésés. Or, nos renseignements sont que tel n'est pas le cas. Il y a eu tout un chambardement dans les structures sans que les travailleurs ne soient consultés. Une fois encore le Gouvernement n'a pas permis aux travailleurs de s'exprimer sur une question qui va effecter leur avenir.

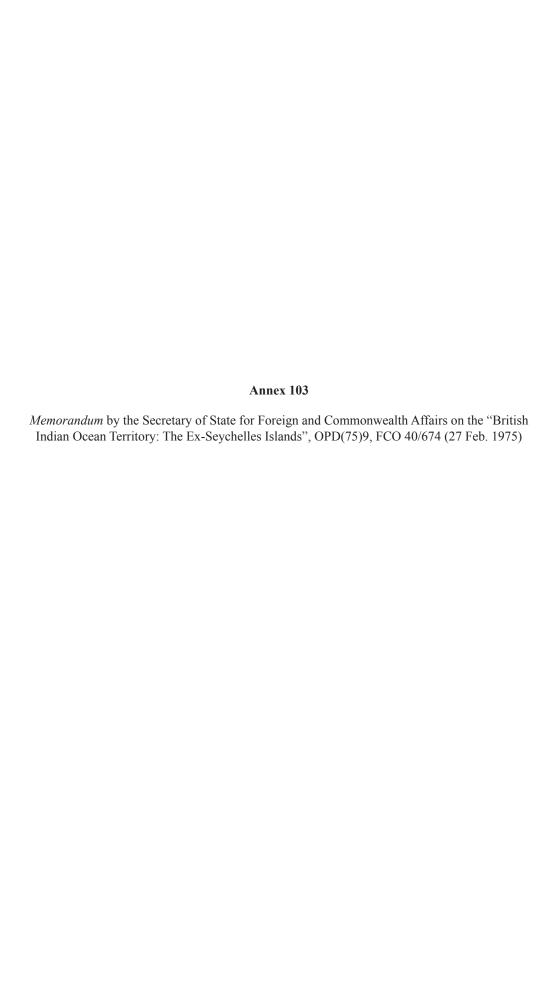

Mr. Ringadoo: Sir, the hon. First Member for Rodrigues (Mr. Ollivry) raised the question of the amount provided for the resettlement of the llois. I would like to inform the House that Government intends to have two housing estates, one at Pointe aux Sables and another at Roche Bois and that the llois will be given all the facilities for pig breeding and mixed farming. The amount of Rs 725,000 we are providing would be for the relief of the llois.

He raised also the question of housing for civil servants in Rodrigues and suggested that we may perhaps build on a large scale in order to provide a lot of housing facilities for civil servants. As pointed out by the Minister of Economic Planning, Rodrigues will need a lot of infra-structure work before we can have houses which will not be just on the ground floor. I think there is a problem of water and roads will have to be looked into and certain works completed before we can embark on what he has suggested.

He has also raised the question of the air strip. I think the air strip is now being redone. I think it will be tarred and we are sending equipment in order to do extensive work to the air strip in order that the strip may be able to receive a plane larger than the one which is being used at present and that would increase the number of people who can travel to and from Rodrigues.

The hon. First Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes (Mr. Lesage) raised again the question of the new airport. In my reply I informed the House that there were some technical problems which were discussed by technicians on both sides and that was why there has been some delay on account of the nature of the ground and facilities to be provided and the size of the air strip.

Astron					Model.
					CHICATE INC.
	Hil		1.4
	لسا	1 1	لسا	- 57
		. 7		79,47
				HKIOS	อ์/ประ
	S	ECRET	TO	NTEL EY :
IS DOCUMENT IS THE	PROPERTY	OF HER E	RITANDIE M	AJESTY'S	GOVERNMENT
D(75)9		1.7	KI Grand A Me
			177	PY NO.	Mr. Wegah
February 1975					Mr. Weban
		CABINET	METIL		7
DEFER	ICE AND OVE	RSEA POL	ICY COMMIT	TEE	34
	6 4 4 7				4 - 1 - 1

BIOT was set up in 1965 for the defence purposes of the United Kingdom and United States Governments. It consists of the ex-Mauritius Chagos group (including Diego Garcia) and, about 1,500 miles away, the three ex-Seychelles islands of Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches. This paper concerns the last three only. Although joint defence-use surveys were carried out between 1965 and 1966, the islands remain empty except for a Royal Society scientific station on Aldabra and temporary coconut plantations on Farquhar and Desroches. There are now no plans for specific defence uses either by Her Majesty's Government or, as far as we know, by the United States Government.

Money

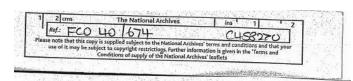

2. We paid for the islands by building the Seychelles airport out of the £10 million BIOT fund (half of which was secretly provided by the Americans). They now cost us about £50,000 a year net. There is no prospect of an economic return. The sea-bed might be valuable; but Mr Greenwood promised Mauritius at their independence conference that they would have the benefit of any mineral or oil discoveries in or near Chagos. We should probably have to make a similar promise to Seychelles.

Seychelles Considerations

A Seycheles Constitutional Conference will be held from 14-27 March. This is likely to result in independence in 1976. The BIOT islands will be an issue. The present leaders of the Seychelles parties agreed to the arrangement in 1965; but the opposition Seychelles Peoples United Party have since consistently demanded their return, partly out of conviction, and partly to gain support from the Liberation Committee of the OAU. The governing Seychelles Democratic Party are less concerned, but do not want to be outflanked. If the SPUP do not get what they want from the Conference, they may use BIOT as a pretext for a walk-out.

A Policy for Her Majesty's Government

It is important to secure denial to the Russians of bases in the whole area, including islands still controlled by Seychelles. But it might be possible to secure this by agreement with the Seychelles Government. Otherwise we do not at present have any direct interest in Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches. Politically they are an embarrassment to us in the United Nations and the Organisation for African Unity.

SECRET

Provided that we can get American agreement without undue difficulty, and subject to a guarantee of denial to third countries, the best solution for us might be to return the islands to Seychelles as a major concession in the independence negotiations. An intermediace solution might be some form of lease to Seychelles under which we retained some of the rights we have at present. But although this would preserve our right, at least in theory, to resume the islands if we needed them, it would meanwhile leave us with responsibility without power.

The Attitude of the Americans

The Attitude of the Americans

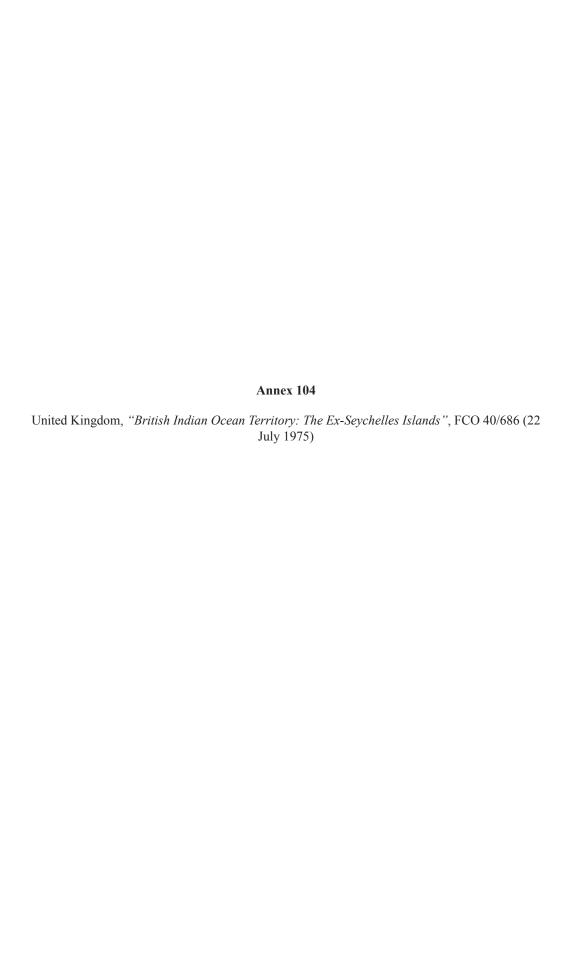

5. Our 1965 agreement with the Americans set aside BIOT "to meet the possible defence needs of the two Governments for an indefinitely long period" (initially 50 years). Their first reaction to any proposal for return is almost certain to be adverse. The Indian Ocean is of particular sensitial to them. They are not happy about our Defence Review reductions that the result has they would regard as a further weakening of BMG's interest in the area. They may argue that, having jointly paid for the islands, we should retain them for contingency use. They will also be worried about any implications for our title to Diego massion there if our security of tenure appeared doubtful. To ask them to make up their minds before Congressional action on Diego Garcia is completed in the spring could be counter-productive. On the other hand, we can put it to them that the retention of such unused and underland as an have political and military dangers. Moreover, they are going to have to bargain with an independent Seychelies for the retention of their satellite tracking station in Crychelles. United States agreement to the return of the BIOT islands would be a valuable card in these negotiations.

Conclusions

1.

- 6. I invite my colleagues to agree that:
 - (a) Provided United States agreement can be secured without serious repercussions in United States/United Kingdom relations and that we can be assured they will be denied to a hostile power, it would be in our interest to return the islands to Seychelles, outright or possibly by lease, as a major concession at an appropriate moment, subject to suitable arrangements for the Royal Society on Aldabra.
 - (b) We should explore the problem with the Americans at official level now, stressing the relevance to their negotiations on the Tracking Station, in which we would do our best to assist.
 - (c) If, as is likely, the Americans need more time, we should tell them that we will say no more at the Constitutional Conference than that, because of our agreement with the United States Government, we must consult them about any proposal for return, and will do so.
 - (d) Thereafter we should, with the Americans, examine the question further and in depth. Our final decision should only be taken jointly with the Americans and we should make this clear to them in our discussions.

7. Unless I hear to the contrary by mid-day on 4 March, I shall assume my colleagues' agreement with these conclusions.

SECRET TO ENTER BY 31. 6Mg 08 (75) 6th Meeting hold all fully 197 SECHET Extract from 3. BRITISH INDIAN OCRAN TERRITORY: THE EX-SEYCHELLES ISLANDS The Committee considered a memorandum by the Foreign and Commentative IN Secretary (OPD(75) 23). REGISTR's No. 51 23 JUL 1975 THE FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH SECRETARY said that when the Sey Constitutional Conference resumed in January 1976 the Seychel leaders were certain to raise the future of the three ex-Seych islands, Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches, which now formed part of the British Indian Ocean Territory. A decision was needed on what our policy on the islands should be. There were two courses open, apart from leasing the islands back to Seychelles, which he did not recommend: either Terms and to return the islands in exchange for certain undertakings by the Seychelles, about continued free American use of the satellite tracking station, denial of the islands to hostile powers, and British and American access to them; or to retain the islands while making certain Ins undertakings ourselves about returning the islands when no longer needed, reserving oil, mineral and fishing rights to the Seychelles, and various forms of assistance. His strong preference was for the first course. Returning the islands would help the negotiations on independence, whereas their retention could be exploited to our disadvantage by the The National Archives Opposition party in the Seychelles and would be a potential continuing embarrassment, However the preference of the United States might well 686 be that we should retain the islands. Although he proposed to show the return of the islands as our preferred option in the papers to be discussed at the next Anglo/United States Consultations on the Indian Ocean, he would report back to the Committee if the Americans did not agree. In discussion it was argued that the consent of the United States 600 Government to the return of the islands was improbable. They were already greatly concerned by the threat of Soviet penetration in the Indian Ocean. They might also fear that, if the islands were returned to the Seychelles, Mauritius might be encouraged to press for the Chagos Archipelago to be handed back to her and that our hold on Diego Garcia would be made less secure. Furthermore it was by no means certain that the Seychelles would press strongly during the independence should not be placed on the options at a and b. in paragraph 7 of DFD(75) 23 during discussion with the Americans. On the other hand it was pointed out that our interests would be best served if the Seychelles could be persuaded to adopt a posture of non-alignment. Return of the islands, with suitable assurances given by the Seychelles, would be consistent with that objective; and our extensive programme of aid to the Seychelles might be a useful lever in helping us to obtain the assurances we needed. If the islands were retained, we would expect the costs of any consequential commitments undertaken by us to be met by the United States.

SECRET

THE PRIME MINISTER, summing up the discussion, said that the Committee agreed that in the paper to be given to the Americans as a basis for further discussion at official level the options should be expressed in the order of preference shown in paragraph 7 of OPD(75) 23. The Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary should report further when we had the United States' reaction, so that the Committee could decide finally what line to fallow during the resumed Constitutional Conference.

The Committee -

Took note, with approval, of the Prime Minister's summing up of their discussion and invited the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary to proceed accordingly.

Section Control

SECRET

11	2 cms	The National Archives	ins 1
11	Ref.: FCO	40 1686	459517
	use of it may be s	ubject to copyright restrictions. Further in Conditions of supply of the National Ar	rchives' leaflets

		41	RECTA	(20)
	SECRET		16 OC1 197	5
Foreig London	n and Commonwo	ealth Office Telephone 01-
J P Millingto British Embas WAEHINGTON	n Esq sy	Your refere Our referer Date	1	975	[2
		A DING [(90)	_		459517 conditions and that you
1. May I re	SEYCHELLES ISLANI fer to your lette sence in Hong Kor	er 4/15 of 22 A		ence	Ins	459 es' terms and condition mation is given in the ex-Seychelles consultations approved by M fully in resp here is that themselves.	e four copies of BIOT islands for on the Indian Oc inisters. It doe ect of the optior this is a matter I understand that recognise the de e to be taken joù back to Seychelle	cean. The papers not seek to no mentioned. best left for the Americans	or angle/os or has been argue the cas The feeling the consultat are, however	ions, well	The National Archives	40 / 686 Is supplied subject to the National Archivitet to copyright festifications. Further Infor Conditions of supply of the National Archiv reference tha preparing the you can to pe to have a pro consultations. November. At position where and are waiti that you shou they are read exchange. As Americans abo	concerned by the t the Americans a circ own option pay resude them to present look at it be, which now look the same time, we we have turned ng for theirs in the control of the control o	appear to have per. You will reduce their py efore the next like taking p we do not want our paper over return. We wour paper to irs - you can therefore, could saying, if necessions.	done little in no doubt do waper in time in round of lace on 6-7 to get into a round prefer the Americans thus effect as	n /hat /or us icans nerefore until	. 1 2 das Ti	Please note that this copy is supplied they be supplied they be subject to copy use of it may be subject to conditions the US paper again. But I exchange, and	does not look as until just befor should be grate consult us befor mediate quid pro	e the talks we ful if you wou re passing our	may have to t	think for an
		A)		+ 75,5	100000
0 8 11 0	i LAL	D F MILT	ON.
a Ar Brenchley, Comack,	Defence Roph.		g & Indian Oc	ean

SECRET

BIOT: THE EX-SETCHELLES ISLANDS

As the United States Government know, a decision on the future of the islands of Aldabra, Desroches and Farquhar will be needed before the resumed Seychelles Constitutional Conference which is due to begin on 19 January 1976. As a contribution to the discussion of this subject during the next round of Angle/US Consultations on the Indian Ocean, the British Government wish to identify the options which at present appear available. These fall into two broad categories: handing back the islands in exchange for Seychelles undertakings on access for Angle/US forces should we require it, benefits for the United States and denial to the Seviet Union; and retaining the islands in return for concessions making the decision more platable to Seychelles opinion.

Given the determination of some elements in Seychelles political life and in the OAU and in the United Nations to make an issue of the matter, a solution within the first range, in the British Government's view, is more likely to be negotiable with Seychelles and permit the peaceful transition to independence by June 1976. It might also create less international complications over the maintenance of the rest of BIOT, particularly Diego Garcia. Whatever can be obtained in return, particularly denial of the three islands to hostile powers and, if pessible, denial of Seychelles proper to such powers, would be in the general Western interest. We know the Russians are interested in footbelds in the area: she has already installed mooring buoys in international waters surrounding the Chagos Archipelago.

- 3. As a basis for further discussion, therefore, the British Government wish to identify the options in the following order of preference:
 - (a) Return of the islands to Seychelles in exchange for agreement on continued free American use of the satellite tracking station; denial of the three islands to hostile powers; denial of Seychelles proper to such powers; and British/ American access to the three islands by British and American forces should we require it.

/(b) ...

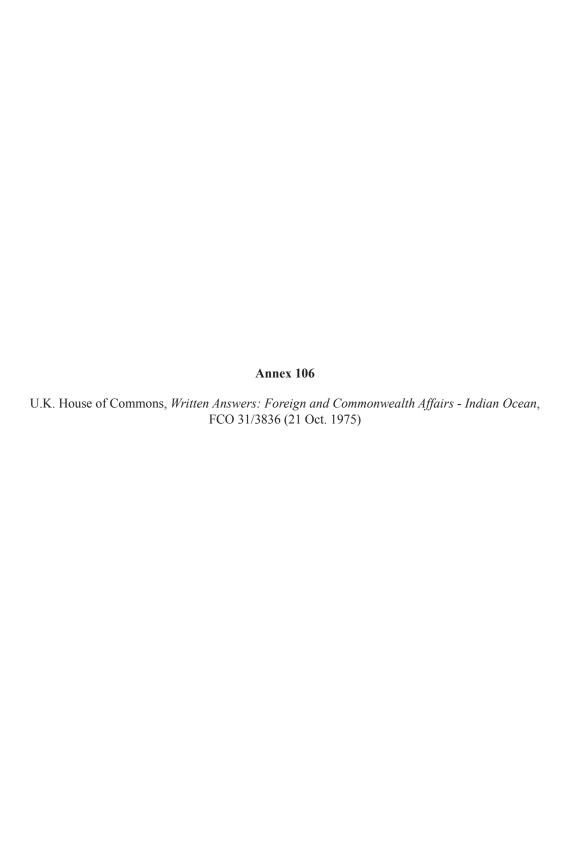

SECRET

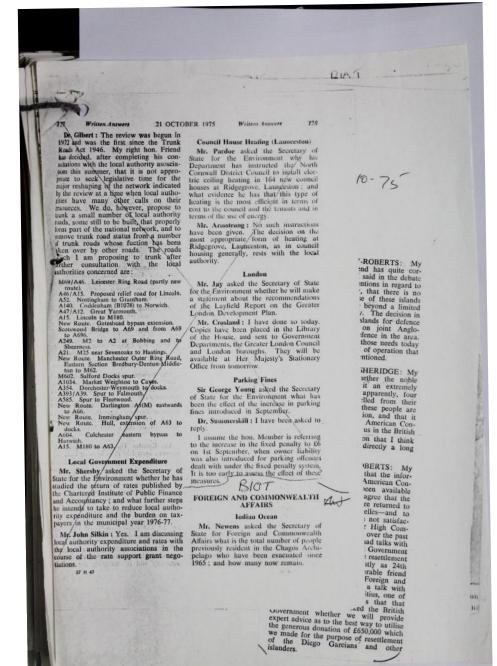

The National Archives

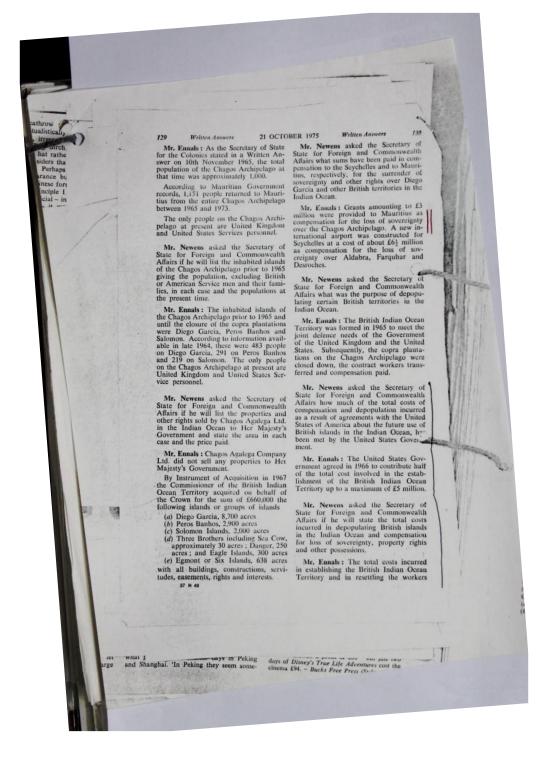

FC0

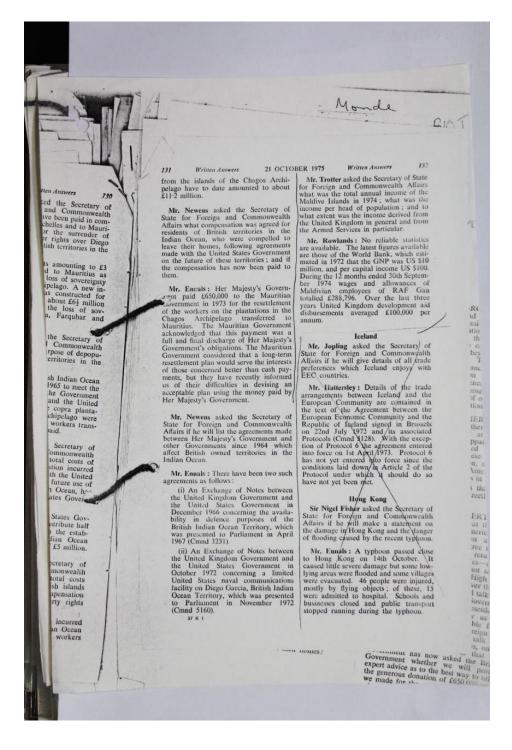

Ref .:

Balling To The Condense of the	(b) Return of the islands in exchange for most of the above concessions. (c) Retention of the islands in exchange for: (i) undertakings similar to those given to Mauritius (i.e. right of reversion if and when the islands are no longer required for defence reasons, reservation of benefits of mineral exploration); (ii) generous payment for continued use of the satellite tracking station. (d) Leasing the islands back to Seychelles. It may be that payment for the satellite tracking (c)(ii) above) might be desirable even if options (a)	ins 1 2	459517
greater secu is that the power. 5. programme ef	e are successfully negotiated simply in order to provide unity for the facility. A major objection to (d) above British Government would be retaining sovereignty without. The British Government is committed to an extensive aid to Seychelles which might be a useful lever in btain the assurances necessary under options (a) and (b)	The National Archives	40 / 686
SA ASSESSMENT OF TAXABLE DESCRIPTIONS	Indian Ocean Department Commonwealth Office 975	1 2 cms	Ref.: FCO

0/US CONSULTATIONS ON THE INDIAN OCEAN: NOVEMBER 1975 AGENDA ITEM III BRIEF NO 4: Future of Aldabra, Marquar and Desroches 1. UK Ministers have considered this issue since we last met and our options paper, which you will have seen, sets out our agreed order of preferences. Line 64. Case for returning the islands As we see it, the arguments in favour of the return of the islands, which is our first preference, are as follows (some of these arguments will be familiar to you from our discussions in May):-(a) It would virtually assure the peaceful and orderly transition of Seychelles to independence by next June, a matter to which our Ministers attach much importance. Whatever Mancham may say privately on the issue, he cannot afford to risk being outflanked in public by René and the chances are that the two of them will present a united front in pressing for "territorial ins integrity" at the resumed Constitutional Conference in January. In that event, a refusal to return the islands would give rise to a very awkward situation and a real risk that René, at least, might use it as a pretext to walk out of the Conference. (b) It would remove what would otherwise be a constant source of embarrassment in our relations with an independent Ceychelles. (c) It might actually be counter-productive to keep the islands against the expressed wishes of the Seychelles government who 687 might threaten to offer facilities to a hostile power in the Seychelles proper as a means of bringing pressure to bear on HO (d) It would be difficult to defend the retention of the islands on the off chance that we might need to use them for defence purposes at some stage. The fact that the islands FCO are populated means that there will be no possibility of using them in the near future. After the outcry over the workers removed from the Chagos Archipelago, it would be extremely difficult politically to do the same thing in the ex-Seychelles islands. (e) It might be presented as a reassurance to Mauritius that, if and when there was no further defence use for the Chagos

BECRET

/Archipelego

- 2 -

Archipelago, it too would be handed back.

(f) It might avert the danger of Seychelles and Mauritius making common cause on the BIOT generally in the OAU (whose summit meeting in July 1976 will be held in Mauritius) and in the UN, which have already voiced support for the return of the islands. (Fresident Amin called for the return of the current session of the UN General Assembly and the question may come up again during the Fourth Committee's debate on small dependent territories).

3. The return of the islands might be traded for worthwhile concessions. An undertaking by an independent Seychelles to deny the islands, and even Seychelles proper, to hostile powers would not be a foolproof arrangement but it could afford more hope of denial of Seychelles to the Russians than if there were no such arrangement. Defined access to the islands, if required, by American and British forces would also be a useful concession. As for the tracking station, we think, as stated in our options paper, it might be desirable to pay for it in order to provide greater security for the facility and also to avoid giving Seychelles a pretext for a grievance which could be exploited in other ways. But we see that as a matter for you to negotiate direct with the Seychelles Government.

Case against returning the islands

4. We fully recognise that there are important arguments in favour of retention of the islands. These seems to us to be as follows:

(a) The islands already serve a passive defence purpose since they are denied to hostile powers.

(b) The amputation of parts of the BIOT might encourage Mauritius, supported by the OAU and the Afro-Asian majority in the UN, to press for the return of the Chaqos Archipelago. So far, while the Mauritius Government has objected publicly from time to time to the expansion of the facilities on Diego Garcia, their private reaction has been remarkably subdued. Ramgoolam had every opportunity to raise the question of the defence facilities on Diego Garcia and the return of the Chagos Archipelago during his visit to London in September. He said nothing on either matter. However, our High Commissioner

/in Port Louis

SECRET

SECRET In Port Louis has recently advised that if the ex-Seychelles islands were returned and the Mauritian opposition parties mounted a strong campaign for the return of the Chagos Archipelago, Remgoolam would be in a very awkward position. If there were to be an election in 1976 and if he were to conclude that not to press for the return of the Chagos Archipelago would lose him the election, he would undoubtedly do so. It seems certain, however, that there will be trouble anyway from Mauritius and the OAU generally whether we retain the islands or return them. With the OAU summit meeting taking place in Port Louis in 1976, it seems inevitable that Mauritius will be in the fore front in pressing Indian Ocean issues. (c) By retaining the islands while keeping open the possibility of returning them at some later date, we have a useful instrument for restraining Serchelles from offering facilities on Seychelles and conditions and that given in the Terms and proper to a hostile power. (d) Although we might have to make concessions for retaining the islands - right of reversion if and when the islands are no longer required for defence purposes and reservation of the behefit of mineral exploration - these would not be onerous. The future ins of the tracking situation is, as we have said, a separate matter. (e) It is arguable that there is a continuing obligation on Seychelles to respect the agreement setting up the BIOT and they received generous compensation for loss of sovereignty. The trouble is that it is all too easy to win sympathy for the claim that we took advantage of the "colonial" status of Seychelles in the 1960's. 687 Other possible solutions 5. We do not regard leasing the islands back to Seychelles as a We would end up retaining sovereignty without power and it would be a constant source of friction. Another possibility, which has recently been put forward by the SPUP Minister for Education, Sinon, is that we should return sovereignty over the islands to Seychelles which would then lease them or make them available to us thereafter. We have not fully considered the possibility but we are not sure that it is a starter. It would depend on the terms on which the islands would be leased back to us, though some sort of lease, even if we never used the islands, might at least ensure denial to others. 17. Subject

CLCRET

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

LEGAL CONSEQUENCES OF THE SEPARATION OF THE CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO FROM MAURITIUS IN 1965 (REQUEST FOR ADVISORY OPINION)

Written Statement of the Republic of Mauritius

VOLUME IV

(Annexes 108–149)

1 March 2018

VOLUME IV

ANNEXES

Annex 108	United Kingdom, Minutes of Anglo-U.S. Talks on the Indian Ocean Held on 7 November 1975 at the State Department, Washington DC, FCO 40/687 (7 Nov. 1975)
Annex 109	T. Franck & P. Hoffman, "The Right to Self-Determination in Very Small Places", N.Y.U. J. Int'l L. & Pol. , Vol. 8 (1976)
Annex 110	United Kingdom, "Heads of Agreement Between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Administration of the British Indian Ocean Territory and the Government of Seychelles Concerning the Return of Aldabra, Desroches and Farquhar to Seychelles to be Executed on Independence Day", FCO 40/732 (18 Mar. 1976)
Annex 111	Mauritius Legislative Assembly, Speech from the Throne – Address in Reply: Statement by Hon. M. A. Peeroo (15 Mar. 1977)
Annex 112	U.K. House of Commons, "Written Answers: British Indian Ocean Territory" (23 June 1977)
Annex 113	Mauritius Legislative Assembly, Diego Garcia - Anglo-American Treaty , No. B/539 (8 Nov. 1977)
Annex 114	Eduardo Jiménez de Aréchaga, "International Law in the Past Third of a Century", Recueil des Cours , Vol. 159 (1978)
Annex 115	Mauritius Legislative Assembly, Speech from the Throne – Address in Reply: Statement by the Prime Minister of Mauritius (11 Apr. 1979)
Annex 116	Mauritius Legislative Assembly, Reply to PQ No. B/967 (20 Nov. 1979)

Annex 117	Mauritius Legislative Assembly, The Interpretation and General Clauses (Amendment) Bill (No. XIX of 1980), Committee Stage (26 June 1980)

Annex 118 Organization of African Unity, Assembly of Heads of State and Government, 17th Ordinary Session, Resolution on Diego Garcia, AHG/Res.99(XVII) (1-4 July 1980)

Annex 119

Note from M. Walawalkar of the African Section Research Department to Mr Hewitt, FCO 31/2759 (8 July 1980)

Annex 120

U.K. House of Commons, Written Answers: Diego Garcia,

FCO 31/3836 (11 July 1980)

1980)

Annex 122

Annex 125

Annex 121 U.K. House of Lords, Parliamentary Question for Oral Answer:
Notes for Supplementaries, FCO 31/2759 (23 July 1980)

Letter from M. C. Wood to Mr Hewitt, FCO 31/2759 (22 Sept.

Letter from J. N. Allan of the British High Commission in Port Louis to P. Hunt of the East African Department, FCO 31/3622

Annex 123 Mauritius Legislative Assembly, Reply to PQ No. B/1141 (25 Nov. 1980)

Annex 124

Note from M. Walawalkar of the African Research Department to Mr Campbell of the East African Department - Diego Garcia: Research on Mauritian Government's Claim to Sovereignty, FCO 31/3437 (8 Oct. 1982)

(11 Nov. 1982)

Annex 126

Letter from J. N. Allan of the British High Commission in Port Louis to P. Hunt of the East African Department, FCO 31/3834 (4 Mar. 1983)

Annex 127

Letter from M. Walawalkar of the African Section Research Department to P. Hunt of the East African Department on the Mauritian Agreement to Detachment of Chagos, FCO 31/3834
(9 Mar. 1983)

Annex 128	Letter from W. N. Wenban-Smith of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to M. J. Williams, with draft, FCO 31/3835 (25 Mar. 1983)
Annex 129	Mauritius Legislative Assembly, Report of the Select Comm

Annex 129 Mauritius Legislative Assembly, Report of the Select Committee on the Excision of the Chagos Archipelago, No. 2 of 1983 (June 1983)

Annex 130 Letter from J. N. Allan of the British High Commission in Port

Louis to P. Hunt of the East African Department, FCO 31/3834 (17 June 1983)

Annex 131

Letter from P. Hunt of the East African Department to J. N. Allan of the British High Commission in Port Louis, FCO

Annex 132 African Section Research Department, Detachment of the Chagos Archipelago: Negotiations with the Mauritians (1965)

(15 July 1983)

East African Department, FCO 58/3286 (15 July 1983)

Annex 134

Note from A. Watts to Mr Campbell, FCO 31/3836 (received 23 Aug. 1983)

Annex 133

Annex 135

Annex 136

Annex 137

Malcolm Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa: International Legal Issues (13 Mar. 1986)

Letter from D. A. Gore-Booth to W. N. Wenban-Smith of the (1993)

J. Addison & K. Hazareesingh, A New History of Mauritius

Richard Edis, Peak of Limuria: The Story of Diego Garcia

(1993)

Annex 138 Antonio Cassese, Self-determination of peoples: A legal

Annex 139 Note Verbale from the High Commission of India in Port Louis to the Mauritius Ministry of Foreign Affairs, POR/162/1/97 (9 May 1997)

reappraisal (1995)

Annex 140	Organization of African Unity, Assembly of Heads of State and Government, 36th Ordinary Session, Decision on Chagos Archipelago, AHG/Dec.159(XXXVI) (10-12 July 2000)

Annex 141

Letter from the Minister of Foreign Affairs and Regional Cooperation, Republic of Mauritius, to the Secretary of State for Foreign & Commonwealth Affairs, United Kingdom (21 Dec. 2000)

Annex 142 Notes Verbales from the Embassy of the Republic of Mauritius in Brussels to the Commission of the European Communities and Council of the European Union, No. MBX/ACP/5005 (13 Feb. 2001 & 5 Mar. 2001)

Annex 143 Catriona Drew, "The East Timor Story: International Law on Trial", Eur. J. Int'l L., Vol. 12 (2001)

Organization of African Unity, Council of Ministers, 74th Ordinary Session, Decision on the Chagos Archipelago Including Diego Garcia, CM/Dec.26(LXXIV) (5-8 July 2001)

Annex 145 David Raic, Statehood and the Law of Self-Determination (2002)

Annex 144

Annex 146

(Constitution) Order 2004" (10 June 2004)

Annex 147

Letter from the Prime Minister of Mauritius to the Prime

United Kingdom, "British Indian Ocean Territory and Regional Co-operation of the Republic of Mauritius to the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of

Annex 147

Letter from the Prime Minister of Mauritius to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom (22 July 2004)

Annex 148

Letter from the Minister of Foreign Affairs, International Trade

the United Kingdom (22 Oct. 2004)

Annex 149 Notes Verbales from the Mauritius Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the General Secretariat of the Council of the European Union, Nos. 1197/28/8 & 1197/28 (21 July 2005 & 19 Apr. 2010)

		سرد پستونس در استان این ا	Management of the state of the
	3 ,	SECRET US9	75)	(173)
- 2	ANGLO-US TALKS ON STATE DEPARTMENT,	THE INDIAN OCEAN HELD OF WASHINGTON DC	N 7 NOVEMBER 1975	AT THE	Section of the least			*
	Present		÷ .
	United States						,	•
	Africa Mr G T Churchill,	tor, Politico-Military A Assistant Secretary of an and South Asian Affair Director, Office of Inte	Defense for Near E rs, Dept of Defense ernational Security	dastern,	-	115
	Mr J Crowley, Dire	Operations, State Dept ber, Policy Planning Sta ctor, Office of Northern	aff, State Dept European Affairs,		l
	Stat	e Dept	1			2	_
	Captain M F Paszta Commander N Smith, Lieutenant Command	USN, Far East/South Asia Dept of Defense lanies USN, PM/ISO, Sta USN, INR/PMT, Dept of D er J L Combemale, ACDA, , USN S/P, Dept of Defen State Department , State Dept	te Dept Defense Dept of Defense				1	ms and
	Mr W Coote, AF/E, Mr S Barbour, AF/E	State Department , State Dept				F	7513	n the Ter
	United Kingdom					ins	45	and co given i
	Air Vice Marshall Mr K B A Scott, HM Mr P L O'Keefe, He Mr R L L Facer, He Mr M E Pike, HM Em Mr R L B Cormack.	sistant Under-Secretary, J Gingell, ACDS (Pol), M Embassy, Washington ad of Hong Kong and Indi ad of DS 11, MOD bassy, Washington Assistant Head of Defenc HM Embassy, Washington	OD an Ocean Dept, FCO	n se in a se		Archives		plied subject to the National Arctives' terms and conditions and that your copyright restrictions. Further information is given in the Terms and lons of supply of the National Arctives' leaflets.
	Agenda Item 1 - So	viet Presence in the Ind	ian Ocean			onal/	00	t to the on Soviet activities ix months. Current be levelling off, this was not certain	er-Smith of the US Navy es in the Indian Ocean a nt indications were that or even falling, if pres in. [A tabulated list o Commander Smith, is atta	rea over the previous Soviet ship days of trends persisted Soviet Indian Ocean	ous might ed. But		The National Archives	40	ls sup ect to Condit vessels (a Krivak a Island and had subbeen the first time Indian Ocean (apar Ocean via the Cape naval visit to Chiefurther Sāviet nave	e time of the Comoro Isl. and a Petya II) had rema sequently replenished at e t from transmitting to, of Good Hope). It was e simaio since 1971. More al units had called at U The largest ship in the	ined close to Coet: Chisimaio. This led so far south it or out of, the Indialso the first Sover, in August the hisimaio, staying:	ivy had n the ian iet ree for		1 2 cms	Ref.: FCO	please note that this copy use of it may be subj
	Kanin DDG.				THE STATE OF			4
					Speries.	1	*
			/
		SECRET	in the second se

SECRET

- 13 -

extension of CSCE principles to other areas. The American side said that they had not noticed this expansion of Russian propaganda efforts, but took note of the recent Izvestia commentary on 3 October by Mr Kudriaysev. Mr Vest agreed that the British side could speak to the Australians, saying that they had raised the subject with the Americans. Mr Thomson mentioned that the Australian mission in New York had told us, on instructions from Canberra, that they wished to put it to us and the Americans that a less offhand attitude on our part would make the position of moderates in the Ad-Noc Committee rather easier to sustain. The US side agreed that while neither the British nor the Americans need alter their attitude to the Committee, we-might-try-to-help-the-Australians-in-some-way.

Agenda Item 5: Future of Aldabra, Farquhar, and Des Roches

48. Mr O'Keeffe said that each side had now had a chance to look at the option paper provided by the other. There were various options listed in the Ditish paper, but several of them seemed now to be ruled out. One option was that we should keep the islands but make them available to the Seychelles tourist industry. But the American paper made it clear that this course would make the islands defacto unavailable for defence purposes. Mr O'Keeffe hoped that the American side could agree that it was not a worthwhile option tokeep the islands and lease them back to the Seychelles. The opposite possibility posed by Sinon, the Seychelles Minister of Education, of handing them back to the Seychelles and then leasing them, was also ruled out since in fact ngither Britain nor the United States had any use for the islands. The options were therefore reduced to two:

- a) we could either give them back to the Seychelles in return for maximum advantages for ourselves; or
- b) we could keep the islands in return for concessions to the Seychelles.

The British preference was for Option (a). Handing back the islands to the Seychelles had a major advantage to the UK in removing one of the obstacles to Seychelles independence. But there was sufficient common ground in the UK and US positions to make this the more desirable Option in any case. Recent Parliamentary and Congressional pressures in the matter of the former contract workers pointed to the undesirability of giving hostages to fortune. We were agreed that there was no real defence need to keep the three islands. Certainly they had a passive defence value in that they were at present denied to any hostile power; but of fer more value would be the denial of Seychelles proper if we could obtain this. In any case we should try to get as much has possible if we were jointly agreed that Option (a) was preferable. Unfortunately, the Seychelles Government had already been led to believe that the US Government was prepared to offer a rent for the tracking station and it now looked improbable that they would accept continuing free use of this /facility

Reg.: FCO HO / 687 History to supplied subject to the National Archiver terms and conditions and that your use note that this copy is supplied subject to the National Archiver terms and conditions and that Terms and use of it may be subject to copyright restrictions. Actives; leafints

Please

1895H

The National Archives

SECRET

SECRET

- 14 -

facility. He understood, however, that there was some pressure for a reduction, or indeed abolition, of the duty free privileges connected with the tracking station and retention of these privileges might be something we could ask for as a quid pro quo for the return of the three islands.

or the three islands.

50. He recognised that the crux of the argument against Option (a) was the likely Mauritian attitude. Giving back the islands might well give rise to pressures within Mauritius for the return of the Chagos Archipelago, particularly in 1976 when Mauritius was host to the annual conference of the CAU and when there was also the possibility of elections there. As against this, it seemed clear that the retention of Chagos was not an issue for Sir S Ramgoolam, the Mauritian Frime Minister: during his talks on 24 September with MT Ennals, the Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, he had been given every chance to raise the Diego Garcia issue but had not done so. Moreover, at his press conference later the same day, he had said that the British had paid for sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago and now could do what they liked with it. Mr O'Keeffe added that the British High Commissioner in Port Louis had advised that some agitation in Mauritius was probable over the next year but was containable. This seemed reasonable: essentially Mauritius had no leverage over Chagos whereas Seychelles did in the matter of the three islands, in that they were an obstacle in the present negotiations for indecendence.

In the present negotiations for indecendence.

51. Essentially, however, the question was whether returning the three islands to Seychelles improved our international posture over Diego Garcia or not. The British Government believed that handing back the three islands would be evidence of our commitment to return the BIOT islands when we had no further defence use for them. This had been publicly announced and any decision to retain the three islands when no evident defence need existed for them might legitimately cast doubts on the value of our commitments in this regard. Certainly, it was far better to meet pressures from Mauritius and elsewhere for the return of chagos with the argument that we were proposing to hand back islands for which there was no defence purpose; and far better to deal with any Mauritian protests in isolation rather than to give Mauritius and Seychelles an opportunity to make common cause.

52. Mr Noves on the American side said he found the arguments for Option (a) compelling. But did the British side not consider that there was a danger of "unravelling" the BIOT by handing the three x-Seychelles islands back? If we did so, the BIOT would consist only of ex-Mauritian islands.

53. Mr O'Keeffe said that in his opinion we should play on the fact that we were giving up something for which we had already paid. Unfortinately as far as the satellite station was concerned, the pass had already been sold.

/54.

SECRET

54. The US side said that in talks with Mr Mancham he always talked in terms of the United States doing everything to make it possible for him to sell the idea of the tracking station in the Seychelles. We could use the giving back of the islands to cut down the rental Mancham would probably demand for the tracking station.

55. Mr Thomson said that the possibility of "unravelling" the territory would be erucial if it was likely. However, if domestic opinion in both washington and London were satisfied on the question of pieco Garcia, there was little Mauritius could dophysically to get back the islands. But the case of the Seychelles was different. We would be giving up something for which we had no use and we could probably get a good deal in exchange. This would tip the balance. Mr Churchill asked how the British side thought Option (a) might be presented to the Congress. Mr Thomson said that he saw little difficulty. If we were to give the islands back we could say that we no longer needed then for defence purposes, since we were getting certain defence advantages from the eychelles.

This would arts be a defensible position for the Seychelles in the OAU, since it was already their policy that there should be no foreign bases on their territory.

bases on their territory.

56. The US side asked what we proposed to say about the rest of the Chagos Archipelago apart from Diego Garcia, if we were to hand back the Seychelles islands on the grounds that we had no defence use for them. Mr O'Keeffe said that we could retain the idea that they were a cordon sanitaire for Diego Garcia. Mr Thomson pointed out that once the offer to return the three islands to the Seychelles had been made it would be difficult to withdraw it even if what the Seychelles offered in return was not satisfactory. The US side said that there was one advantage in offering the islands back to the Seychelles.

The US could not say a high rental for the tracking station in the Seychelles:

- a) because funds were limited and
- b) because a high rental would form a precedent which would destroy negotiations being completed with other countries around the world.
- 57. Mr Thomson listed the various advantages which we would wish to get from the Seychelles in return for the three islands. They were:
- a) denial of the three islands to any hostile power;
- b) emergency access for US and UK forces to the three islands;
- c) denial of the Seychelles proper to hostile forces;
- d) duty-free privileges for the US tracking station;
- e) a middle to low rental for the tracking station.

O'Keeffe said the question of returning the three islands to the richelles should be raised by the Seychelles. We should not make 6 HG / GBT HS Assigned Actives terms and conditions and that; copy is supplied subject to the National Actives terms and conditions and that; a subject to copyright restrictions. Further information is given in the "ferms and conditions of supject of the National Actives" leastest.

/the

HS6513

ins

National Archives

1 SECRET

 $|_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, HO \ \, GGA \\ |_{Pof:} \ \, FCO \ \, HO \ \, HO$

SECRET

- 16 -

the offer first. As for the attitude of Sir S Ramgoolam, the US Ambassador and the British High Commissioner at Port Louis and our own East African Department in London were agreed that he would acquiesce.

58. Wr O'Keeffe pointed out that there was a med to consider this question fairly quickly. He was going to the Seychelles on 8 becember to discuss arrangements for the next constitutional conference Mr Thomson said that it would be difficult for Ministers to defend a situation where they were forced to say there was no further British defence need to retain the telands if the Seychelles Constitutional Conference was breaking down because Britain would not return the islands. He asked if the US side thought we should inform Sir S Rimgoolam fir we decided to return the islands. Mr Vest agreed that it was best that we should do so.

59. Mr Vest asked Mr O'Keeffe if the subject was likely to come up during his talks in the Seychelles on 8 december. Mr O'Keeffe said it undoubtedly would come up. It would be possible to put off the Seychellois. But it would be better to discuss the question in December than to allow it to be reised in the full glare of publicity during the Constitutional Conference. The Constitutional Conference was ito take place on 19 January 1976. We would have to reach a decision on the three islands before then at the latest.

60. Mr Vest thanked the British side for this analysis of the problem and undertook to let the British side have a final American view on the question within three weeks.

Agenda Item 6: Tour d'Horizon (Singapore facilities, British Plans for Masirah and Gan, etc)

for Masirah and Gan etc)

61. Mr Pacer said that on the Singapore facilities, there was nothing to add to the British note of 22 October handed to the US Embassy in London. On Gan, there were no developments further to the Only of the British note of 22 October handed to the US Embassy in London. On Gan, there were no developments further to the Only october. Progress was being made in Oman but the rebel forces were not yet broken. The rebels were still supported by the PDRY. Only October there had been an air strike against gun emplacements and other military targets at Hauf in the PDRY across the Oman border. According to Oman Government statements this had been in retalistion for heavy stillery fire in recent weeks. Here was evidence that first time in the Dhofar war. In addition, there had been a number of I-main casualties, mainly due to the inexperience of I-main officers serving with the Sultan's forces. On Masirah, Mr Facor said there was little to add. No conclusions had yet been reached about future plans. We would speak again with the US side when these were-decided. In the meantime our public position on Masirah would not change.

62. The US side said that talks on Singapore facilities were still going on. So far, the position wassatisfactory. The Americans understood that the British side did not think that agreement on Nuclear Powered Warships (NFWS) should be included in the agreement

/on

SECRET

3: | | | | |

	SECRET
3
	- 1/ -
that better arm were negotiated political. If negotiations m	Mr Thomson explained that the British side thought rengements could be obtained if separate agreements d. One issue was technical (the NPWs), the other we included the NPWs in the facilities agreement, ight drag out indefinitely. Mr Vest agreed that on was probably better to separate the two issues.
us us of Masin forthcoming. I been closed, we deconomies. But Mauritius, with British forces 54. Mr Vest sai the US intentia more training if for additional	id that the Americans had no comments to offer on the ar as it had been explained to them. The question of resh was still being considered and an answer would be a released to the still being considered and an answer would be a released to the still being to the still being the scale for this scenario. As for a released to the scale for this scenario. As for a released to the scale for this scenario. As for a released to the scale for the scenario and would be out by March 1976. It that on P3 (maritime reconnaissance) flights, it was not to spread the area of operation and to complete for US pilots. The Americans were at present looking alternative places to land and for different possible at this study was taking place at the moment. It was the to the scale of	Inst 1 1 2 2 1 1 2 2 1 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2
	The same war and the sa	s and the sand seed of the see 트를 es't chives' t nformat vrchives' al Archives' t her informat nal Archives' ves tional Archives' t Further informat ational Archives' ritish Embassy	And a first transfer of the second of the se	rchives National Archives' terms a nr. Further information is given be justional Archives' tenden.
ashington	And the control of th	al Archives the National Archives' to the National Archives' to the National Archives' to the National Archives of the National Archives
ashington		ional Archives 7
ashington		Vational Archives G G A Albipet to the National Archives' tr plact to the National Archives' tr supply of the National Archives' tr
ashington		he National Archives GST ad subject to the National Archives to pyright restrictions. Further informations of supply of the National Archives.
ashington		The National Archives 1 G S 7 plied subject to the National Archives' to a copyright neutrinous. Buther informations of supply of the National Archives' flores of supply of the National Archives' to supply of the National Archives' the ashington		The National Archives (1) GET The Service of the National Archives to supplied subject to the National Archives to supplied subject to the National Archives to supplied subject to the National Archives to supply of the National Archives and supply of the National Archives.
ashington ovember 1975		The National Arctives ins 1 18 19 19 19 19 19 19
ashington ovember 1975
ashington ovember 1975
ashington ovember 1975		FCO Hat this copy It may be subj
ashington ovember 1975		FCO Hart this copy it may be subj
ashington ovember 1975		FCO Hart this copy it may be subj
ashington ovember 1975
ashington ovember 1975		FCO Hat this copy It may be subj
sahington ovember 1975		FCO FCO that this copy it may be subj
sahington ovember 1975		FCO FCO that this copy it may be subj
sahington ovember 1975		FCO Hat this copy It may be subj
sahington ovember 1975		FCO Hat this copy It may be subj
ashington ovember 1975		FCO Hat this copy It may be subj
sahington ovember 1975		FCO Hat this copy It may be subj
ovember 1975		FC0 that this copy it may be subj

Annex 109

T. Franck & P. Hoffman, "The Right to Self-Determination in Very Small Places", N.Y.U.~J.~Int'l L.~&~Pol.,~Vol.~8~(1976)

THE RIGHT OF SELF-DETERMINATION IN VERY SMALL PLACES

By Thomas M. Franck* Paul Hoffman

I. Introduction

The days of Western colonial dominance have drawn to a close. In the space of a mere twenty years, a billion people have undergone the transition from subjects of a foreign imperium to citizens of independent states.

For the most part, this transition has been smooth enough, considering the extraordinary depth of the legal, ideological and psychological changes occurring in its wake. To be sure, there were exceptions. France and Portugal were too sentimentally tenacious in Algeria, Mozambique and Angola, seeking to hold on to what they regarded as "overseas provinces" tied by long histories of association to the metropole and settled by substantial European populations. They waged hopeless, protracted battles in those territories not only against national liberation forces, but also against an irresistible tide of historical inevitability. The Belgian Congo, now Zaire, became a shambles for the opposite reason. Once the colonial power realized it could not hold on forever it opted for immediate abandonment, and the speed of the transition caught the indigenous population tragically unprepared. In the cases of Vietnam and Indonesia, France and the Netherlands tried, by force of arms, to reassert their colonial control over countries that had seen the myth of Western invincibility destroyed by the Japanese and which, released from foreign occupation by the collapse of Japan, refused to don again the old colonial harness. Under similar circumstances, the United States had the prescience to grant independence to the newly-liberated

^{*}Thomas M. Franck, LL.B. [British Colombia], LL.M., S.J.D., Professor of Law, New York University School of Law; Director, Center for International Studies, New York University School of Law; Director, International Law Program, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

^{} Paul Hoffman, J.D., New York University School of Law; Research Assistant, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

The views expressed here are those of the authors in their personal capacities.

Philippines rather than attempt to restore the status quo ante.\(^1\) In virtually all other instances, the Western European colonial powers chose the path of peaceful decolonization.\(^2\)

That the devolution of empire, with a few exceptions, has been a relatively painless experience is due to a number of factors. One is the post-war ascendance in Western Europe of Labor, Radical and Social Democratic movements ideologically committed to social equality and therefore to decolonization. While men like Attlee and Mendes-France did not govern their countries for particularly long periods, the steadfastness of their vision permanently transformed political attitudes in their respective countries, particularly on the colonial issue. Thus conservatives, like Harold Macmillan, Ian Macleod and Charles de Gaulle, carried forward what the radicals had begun. In this, they also responded to the growing economic burden of policing and pacifying regions and peoples caught up in the new wave of nationalism. A second contributing factor is the emergence of Western European unity as a serviceable substitute for the national dream of empire. Finally, there is the role of the United Nations.

The United Nations has significantly accelerated the momentum for peaceful decolonization and has done so both instrumentally and conceptually. Instrumentally, the organization has provided a forum in which the non-colonialist states—a large majority of the members even in 1945—could badger and encourage the imperial states to grant independence. The U.N. Charter created a trusteeship system and a Trusteeship Council which imposed on the powers administering trust territories an obligation to report annually and to permit periodic international inspection. Colonies and protectorates which did not fall under the trusteeship system were still covered by the Charter's article 73 obligations.

The conceptual force behind the U.N. role is rooted in much earlier European and Western hemispheric intellectual developments—in the vision of Simon Bolivar, the Monroe Doctrine,³ J.S. Mill and J.-J. Rousseau. The "right of self-determination"

^{1.} President Truman proclaimed independence for the Philippines, 60 Stat. 2695 (1946), pursuant to authority granted by Congress in the Philippines Independence Act, 48 Stat. 456 (1934).

^{2.} Among other, lesser, exceptions are Goa and Guinea-Bissau. It can also be argued that Kenya was a partial exception and that Southern Rhodesia is another another.

3. E. Weisband, The Ideology of American Foreign Policy: A Paradigm of Lochian Liberalism (1973).

In Resolution 1514,6 the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the United Nations further refined the concept of self-determination, enumerating for non-self governing territorities which were not covered by trusteeship agreements a set of obligations very similar to those imposed by the trusteeship system. It stated that "all peoples have the right to self-determination;" that "repressive measures of all kinds directed against dependent peoples shall cease in order to enable them to exercise peacefully and freely their right to complete independence;" and that "[i]mmediate steps shall be taken . . . to transfer all powers to the peoples of those territories, without any conditions or reservations, in accordance with their freely expressed will and desire, without any distinction as to race, creed or color, in order to enable them to enjoy complete independence and freedom."

These concepts were operationalized by the creation of a watchdog committee—the Special Committee8—which began to assume the same function towards non-self governing territories as was exercised by the Trusteeship Committee in respect of trust territories. In pursuit of the obligations set out in the Charter and Resolution 1514, the Special Committee has regularly investigated

^{4.} For a discussion of the historic U.S. relation to self-determination see Pomerance, The United States and Self-Determination: Perspectives on the Wilsonian Conception, 70 Am. J. Int'l. L. 1 (1976).

^{5.} U.N. Charter, art. 73(b).

^{6.} G.A. Res. 1514, 15 U.N. GAOR Supp. 16, at 66-67, U.N. Doc. A/4684 (1960).

^{7.} Id

^{8.} The Special Committee on the Situation with Regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, established by G.A. Res. 1654, 16 U.N. GAOR Supp. 17, at 65, U.N. Doc. A/5100 (1961). [hereinafter "Special Committee"] colonial territories and made reports to the General Assembly on compliance and non-compliance. The Assembly, in turn, has passed resolutions commending or demanding progress in individual colonies and, in the unusual circumstance of a threat to peace and security, has recommended action by the Security Council.⁹

Thus, due to various factors, the "right of self-determination" has played a key role in reshaping the post-war world. By 1976, the job was virtually completed—almost, but not quite. The unfinished business of Rhodesia and the Namibian ex-mandate was still on the decolonization agenda. Moreover, in the process of liberating Africa, the Caribbean and Asia, the momentum for decolonization had bypassed some of the smallest colonies, the flotsam and jetsam of empire. That these bits and pieces should be the last to be decolonized is due primarily to two factors. First, some small territories either do not want to be on their own or have not reached a stage of development sufficient to make the choice. Second, some small, weak territories are actively coveted by stronger, more powerful neighbors which assert claims based on geography, history and/or ethnic affinity.

It may be paradoxical that these small territories should generate particularly stubborn and knotty problems, even creating threats to the peace and security of the international system, at the very end of a largely peaceful transition from colonialism to self-government. Nevertheless, this is precisely the case. The disposition of tiny territories like Djibouti¹⁰ and Belize has brought neighboring states to the brink of war, as has the conflict over the Spanish Sahara, a larger territory with an almost negligible population.

Some of these territories have assumed disproportionate importance in world affairs because of their strategic location—Djibouti and Gibraltar, for example, command important international straits. Some, like the Falkland (Malvinas) Islands, have importance because they may possess petroleum or other mineral resources. All of them have coastlines which will entitle them,

^{9.} A recent example is G.A. Res. 3485, para. 6, U.N. Doc. GA/5438, at 262 (1975) (Press Release), in which the attention of the Security Council is drawn "to the critical situation" in Timor and which "recommends that it take urgent action to protect the territorial integrity of Portuguese Timor and the inalienable right of its people to self-determination...."

of its people to self-determination"

10. "Djibouti" and "French Somaliland" are used interchangeably except where the context indicates a reference to the port city of Djibouti.

under the emerging terms of the new Law of the Seas, to broad economic zones of up to 200 miles width. To the international lawyer, however, the real importance of these seemingly unimportant imperial shavings lies not merely in their capacity for generating passionate and dangerous international disputes, not in the territories' very considerable strategic and economic value, but in the legal precedents being established in the troubled process of their decolonization. Quite possibly this last chapter in selfdetermination will again prove that hard cases make bad law. As a result of the politics being played with these "special cases," the legal principles of self-determination carefully outlined in the Charter and U.N. resolutions have suddenly come under fierce attack-not from the colonial powers, but from neighboring states, themselves beneficiaries of self-determination, with designs on the mini-territories. For example, now-at the very end of the colonial era-it is being asserted that all colonial peoples do not necessarily have the right to self-determination; that the right does not apply, for example, to a transplanted "settler" population—even one that has been "settled" for hundreds of years. Nor, it is alleged, does the right apply to a colony which, before the colonial era, was part of a neighboring state. As shall be seen, the new assertions may have broad implications that extend well beyond questions of decolonization and go to the essence of the legitimacy both of states and of their boundaries.

II. THE SPANISH SAHARA AND PORTUGUESE TIMOR AS PRECEDENT

A. The Decolonization of the Spanish Sahara

Although the Spanish—or Western—Sahara is a territory of 266,000 square kilometers (the size of Colorado), its indigenous population is a mere 75,000.11 The Sahrawi population is comprised for the most part of persons of Moorish or Bedouin race who speak Hassania, a form of Arabic, and live an essentially rural, nomadic life. The majority of Sahrawis identify closely with a tribe, some of which are also found in the neighboring countries of Mauritania, Morocco and Algeria.¹² What had hitherto seemed a valueless and inclement stretch of desert has more recently been actively coveted by these neighboring states, not least because of the discovery of vast phosphate deposits and the likely existence of other minerals, including oil and iron.¹³

^{11.} Report of the United Nations Visiting Mission to Spanish Sahara, in the Report of the Special Committee, U.N. Doc. A/10023/Add.5, Annex, at 26-27 (1975) [hereinafter: "Visiting Mission"].

Until 1974, the story of the decolonization of the Spanish Sahara was governed by the same norms as other decolonizations. Although both Morocco and Mauritania had indicated an interest based on historic claims, these were not strongly pressed. The U.N. General Assembly and Special Committee treated the colony as it would any other which the international community was nudging towards independence. Historic claims, after all, are nothing unusual in Africa, and in every other instance they had been rejected in favor of self-determination and the immutability of boundaries established by the colonial powers. Thus, Resolution 1514 had not only proclaimed that "all peoples have the right to self-determination" but also that "any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations." ¹⁴ The Organization of African Unity buttressed that position by asserting that territories must exercise their right to self-determination within established colonial boundaries.15

If a colony, in the process of independence, wished to alter its boundaries by joining a neighboring state or by splitting into several states, it could do so only by the free vote of its inhabitants—never in response to the pressures or claims of others. If Indeed, where in the process of becoming independent there was an open question as to whether the territorial integrity of the colony should be altered in favor of a union or secession, it had become virtually mandatory for the U.N. to be present during the elections or plebiscite in which that issue was to be determined. Thus, the U.N. supervised plebiscites that led to the merger of British

^{12.} Id. at 28

^{13.} Le Monde, November 28, 1975, at cols. 1-3.

^{14.} G.A. Res. 1514, para. 6, supra note 6.

^{15.} O.A.U. Assembly Resolution AHG/Res. 17(I), 17-21 July 1964. See also the Charter of the Organization of African Unity, Article 3(3), which pledges "respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State and for its inalienable right to independent existence."

^{16.} G.A. Res. 1541, 15 U.N. GAOR Supp. 16, at 29-30, U.N. Doc. A/4684 (1960).

Togoland with newly-independent Ghana in 1956, the merger of the British-administered Northern Cameroons with Nigeria in 1959 and 1961, the Southern Cameroons joining the Cameroon Republic in 1961, the division into two states of the Belgian territory of Ruanda-Urundi in 1961, and the free association between Western Samoa and New Zealand in 1962.17 The U.N. also participated in the April, 1965 election of a legislature whose mandate was to write a new constitution for the Cook Islands as a first step leading to free association with New Zealand.18 In 1969 the U.N. participated in the "act of free choice" by which the former Netherlands territory of Western New Guinea (West Irian) opted to become part of Indonesia.19 In 1974 the U.N.'s Special Committee sent observers to the referendum in the British colony of the Ellice Islands in which the voters decided to separate from the Gilbert Islands, with which they had been jointly administered, and to become the separate territory of Tuvalu.20

Given this history of U.N. resolutions and practice, together with the fact that it was an open question whether the Sahrawis preferred independence for the Spanish Sahara or union with one or both of their principal neighbors, it was to be expected that the United Nations would recommend that a plebiscite be held under its auspices. This is precisely the recommendation made

^{17.} Fifteen Years of the United Nations Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 2 Decolonization, No. 6, at 19-22 (1975). [hereinafter "Fifteen Years"]

^{18.} G.A. Res. 2005, 19 U.N. GAOR Supp. 15, at 7, U.N. Doc. A/5815 (1965).

^{19. 23} Yearbook of the United Nations 175-179 (1969); Report of the Secretary-General Regarding the Act of Self-Determination in West Irian, 24 U.N. GAOR, Annexes, Agenda Item No. 98, at 2, U.N. Doc. No. A/7723 (1969).

U.N. GAOR, Annexes, Agenda Item No. 98, at 2, U.N. Doc. No. M7723 (1969).

United Nations participation in the "act of free choice" is West Irian is at best an ambiguous precedent. The U.N. involvement led to the ratification of Indonesian consultative procedures which did not provide for "one man-one vote" and were obviously designed to achieve the result obtained, with the Indonesians exercising "at all times a tight political control over the population." Id. at 20. The U.N. failed to refine further the international due process requirements for acts of self-determination when an amendment submitted by Chana, which would have given the people of West Irian a further opportunity to express their will, was defeated by a vote of 60 (including the United States) to 15, with 39 abstentions. 24 U.N. GAOR, Annexes, Agenda Item No. 98, at 40, U.N. Doc. ALL576 (1969). The vote appears at 24 U.N. GAOR 1813, at 16 (1969).

20. Fifteen Years, supra note 17, at 21; Report of the United Nations Visit-

Fifteen Years, supra note 17, at 21; Report of the United Nations Visiting Mission to the Gilbert and Ellice Islands, U.N. Doc. A/9623/Add.5 (Part IV). Annex I (1974).

consistently between 1964 and 1973 by the U.N. Special Committee and the General Assembly. Almost every year, resolutions called on Spain to implement the Sahrawis' right to self-determination. Beginning in 1966, the General Assembly consistently asked Spain "[t]o create a favourable climate for the referendum to be conducted on an entirely free, democratic and impartial basis . . ." and to provide all the necessary facilities to a United Nations mission so that it could participate actively in the organization and holding of the referendum. 22

Spain resisted these entreaties for a decade.²³ Then, in July, 1974, after informing Morocco, Mauritania and Algeria,²⁴ Spain proclaimed a new law giving the Sahara internal self-government²⁵ and, six weeks later, announced that a self-determination plebiscite would be held under U.N. auspices during the first half of 1975.²⁶ When the foreign ministers of Algeria, Morocco and Mauritania met in Nouakchott on May 10, 1974, and again in Agadir on July 24, they still "reaffirmed their adherence to the principle of self-determination for the Spanish ^{21.} The Special Committee first considered Spanish Sahara in 1963 and passed its first resolution on the territory in 1964. 19 U.N. GAOR, Annexes, Annex No. 8 (Part I), at 290-291, U.N. Doc. A/5800/Rev. 1 (1964). The General Assembly resolutions are: G.A. Res. 2072, 20 U.N. GAOR Supp. 14, at 59-60, U.N. Doc. A/6014 (1965); G.A. Res. 2229, 21 U.N. GAOR Supp. 16, at 72-73, U.N. Doc. A/6316 (1966); G.A. Res. 2354, 22 U.N. GAOR Supp. 16, at 53-54, U.N. Doc. A/6716 (1967); G.A. Res. 2428, 23 U.N. GAOR Supp. 18, at 63-64, U.N. Doc. A/7630 (1969); G.A. Res. 2591, 24 U.N. GAOR Supp. 30, at 73-74, U.N. Doc. A/7630 (1969); G.A. Res. 2711, 25 U.N. GAOR Supp. 28, at 100-01, U.N. Doc. A/8028 (1970); G.A. Res. 2983, 27 U.N. GAOR Supp. 30, at 84-85, U.N. Doc. A/8730 (1972); G.A. Res. 3162, 28 U.N. GAOR Supp. 30, at 110-11, U.N. Doc. A/9030 (1972); G.A. Res. 3162, 28 U.N. GAOR Supp. 30, at 110-11, U.N. Doc. A/9030 (1973).

^{22.} G.A. Res. 2229, 21 U.N. GAOR Supp. 16, at 73, U.N. Doc. A/6316 (1966). The last resolution to contain these requests was G.A. Res. 3162, 28 U.N. GAOR Supp. 30, at 111, U.N. Doc. A/9030 (1973).

^{23.} The 1969 resolution, G.A. Res. 2591, 24 U.N. GAOR Supp. 30, at 73-74, U.N. Doc. A/7630 (1969) "[r]egrets that it has not yet been possible for the consultations to take place which the administering Power was to conduct in connexion with the holding of a referendum. . . . See also G.A. Res. 2711, 25 U.N. GAOR Supp. 28, at 100-01, U.N. Doc. A/8028 (1970). By 1973, G.A. Res. 3162, 28 U.N. GAOR Supp. 30, at 110-11, U.N. Doc. A/9030 (1973) deplored "the fact that the Special Mission provided for in earlier resolutions . . . has not yet been able to visit the Territory in order to carry out the task entrusted to it."

^{24.} Letter from the Permanent Representative of Spain to the United Nations to the Secretary-General, Aug. 20, 1974, U.N. Doc. A/9655 at 2 (1974).

^{25.} Id.

^{26.} Letter from the Permanent Representative of Spain to the United Nations to the Secretary-General, Aug. 20, 1974, U.N. Doc. A/9714 (1974).

Sahara,"²⁷ but King Hassan II of Morocco, in a Youth Day speech on July 8th, began to sound a different note. With surprising vehemence he resurrected Morocco's claim to historic title and threatened to use the military, if necessary, to recover his "usurped" territories.²⁸

The Moroccan and Mauritanian governments, faced with the popular Spanish decision to conduct a U.N.-supervised plebiscite in the Sahara, found themselves in an anomalous position. For the most part, they publicly continued to proclaim their support for self-determination, adding that a majority of Sahrawis clearly favored union with one or both neighbors. Privately, however, they knew that a popular vote could go against them and therefore decided to delay the plebiscite by taking the matter to the International Court of Justice. In December, 1974, a majority of the General Assembly, cleverly led by Morocco, inexplicably voted to solicit an advisory opinion of the Court asking whether, before its colonization by Spain, the Western Sahara had belonged to the Moroccan empire or the Mauritanian "entity."29 The Resolution also called on Spain to postpone, pending the I.C.J.'s decision, the referendum that had been so ardently sought for nearly a decade.30

Ten months later the Court, after hearing extensive argument, found the questions posed relevant only in the context of the right of the Sahrawi population to self-determination, and then only as to "the forms and procedures by which that right is to be realized."³¹ During the past fifty years, self-determination had become the rule.³² The exercise of this right could, of course, result in a decision for something other than independence: free association or even integration with another state. But the choice between these legitimate forms of decolonization must always be the "result of the freely expressed wishes of the territory's peo-

^{27.} Report of the Special Committee, U.N. Doc. A/9623 (Part 11), at 23 (1974).

^{28.} Letter from the Permanent Representative of Spain, supra note 24, at

^{29.} G.A. Res. 3292, 29 U.N. GAOR Supp. 31, at 103-04, U.N. Doc. A/9631 (1974).

^{30.} Id.

^{31.} Advisory Opinion on Western Sahara, [1975] I.C.J. 12, 36. [hereinafter: "Advisory Opinion"]

^{32.} Id. at 32, citing The Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (South West Africa) Notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 276 (1970) in [1971] 1.C.J. 31.

ples acting with full knowledge of the change in their status, their wishes having been expressed through informed and democratic processes, impartially conducted and based on universal adult suffrage."33

The Court went on, almost incidentally, to find that the evidence before it indicated no ties of territorial sovereignty between the territory of Western Sahara and the Kingdom of Morocco or the Mauritanian entity "as might effect the application of Resolution 1514 (XV) in the decolonization of Western Sahara and, in particular, of the principle of self-determination through the free and genuine expression of the will of the peoples of the Territory." ³⁴ The current, freely expressed will of the population, not the vicissitudes of history, must determine their future status.

While the International Court was deliberating, a U.N. visiting mission, another by-product of Resolution 3292 (XXIX), went to the Western Sahara with the task of "securing firsthand information on the situation prevailing in the Territory, including in formation on political, economic, social, cultural and educational conditions, as well as on the wishes and aspirations of the people." From extensive travel in the Sahara and in the neighboring countries, as well as from public and private meetings, "it became evident to the Mission that there was an overwhelming consensus among Sahrawis within the Territory in favour of independence and opposing integration with any neighbouring country." ³⁶

Faced simultaneously with the adverse decisions of the International Court and of the Visiting Mission, Morocco decided to use force to compel Spain to turn over the Sahara, although, from subsequent events, it seems clear that contingency preparations for the "Green March," as the Moroccan invasion came to be known, had been months in the making. The day after the I.C.J. opinion, Rabat announced a massive march of $50,000 "unarmed civilians" that would enter the Sahara "to gain recognition of its [Morocco's] right to national unity and territorial integrity."³⁷ When the U.N. Security Council failed to act decisively against

^{33.} G.A. Res. 1541, 15 U.N. GAOR Supp. 16, at 29-30, U.N. Doc. A/4684 (1960), cited by the I.C.J. with approval in Advisory Opinion, supra note 31, at 39-33

^{34.} Id. at 68.

^{35.} Visiting Mission, supra note 11, at 4 (1975).

^{36.} Id. at 48.

^{37.} Letter from the Permanent Representative of Morocco to the United Nations to the President of the Security Council, Oct. 18, 1975, U.N. Doc. S/11852 (1975).

this flagrant violation of the self-determination rule, ³⁸ Spain, weakened by the prolonged dying of the incapacitated Generalissimo Franco, decided to accede to the claims of Morocco and Mauritania. On November 14, 1975, a joint Moroccan, Mauritanian and Spanish communiqué was issued in Madrid which reported that secret negotiations, carried on in a "spirit of the utmost friendship, understanding and respect for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations . . . have led to satisfactory results in keeping with the firm desire for understanding among the parties and their aim of contributing to the maintenance of international peace and security."

The secret Madrid agreement in effect stipulates Spain's agreement to Moroccan and Mauritanian partitioning of the colony. In return, Spain is permitted to keep a 35% interest in Fosbucraa, the 700-million dollar Saharan phosphate company. ⁴⁰ Spain agreed to establish an interim regime in which a Spanish governor, assisted by Moroccan and Mauritanian deputy governors, would function until February 28, 1976, at which time its responsibilities would terminate. Algeria, left out of the Madrid negotiations, declared that it would accord no validity to the agreement ⁴¹ and that it intended to arm POLISARIO, the proindependence movement in the Sahara. By the end of February, 1976, 60,000 Sahrawis—three-quarters of the population—became refugees, primarily in Algeria, as the Moroccans moved to crush all resistance. ⁴²

At the U.N., the General Assembly had passed two totally ineffective—and, indeed, wholly conflicting—resolutions on December 10, 1975. The first of these, Resolution 3458A (NXN), reaffirmed "the inalienable right of the people of the Spanish Sahara to self-determination . . ." and called on the Secretary-General "to make the necessary arrangements for the supervision ^{38.} The initial Security Council resolution, passed on October 22nd, appealed to the parties "to exercise restraint and moderation" so that the Secretary-General could arrange consultations. S.C. Res. 377 (1975). It was not until November 6th that the Council summoned the will to deplore the march and call for Morocco to withdraw. S.C. Res. 380 (1975).

Third Report by the Secretary-General in pursuance of Security Council Resolution 379 (1975) relating to the situation concerning Western Sahara. U.N. Doc. S/11880. Annex I. at 1 (1975).

^{40.} Morocco and Mauritania have published an agreement under which the two countries will divide the proceeds from the Bu Craa mines. The Times [London], April 17, 1976, at 5, cols. 1-2.

[[]London], April 17, 1976, at 5, cols. 1-2. 41. Third Report by the Secretary-General, supra note 39, Annex IV, at 2-3.

^{42.} Interview with Spanish diplomats and UN Secretariat personnel.

of the act of self-determination." The second, Resolution 3458B (XXX), took note of "the tripartite agreement concluded at Madrid on 14 November 1975 by the Governments of Mauritania, Morocco and Spain," recognized the "interim administration" established by the three countries, and called on that administration to permit "free consultation" with the population.

The two resolutions combine a maximum of hypocrisy with a minimum of concern for giving practical effect to the bartered self-determination norm. The U.N., however, was not without those who saw the dangerous implications in the disregard of this fundamental principle. The President-elect of the Thirty-First General Assembly, Sri Lanka's Ambassador Shirley Amerasinghe, condemned Morocco's opportunism and the indifference with which it had been met, warning the Third World that its failure to unite in opposition to the Moroccan and Mauritanian usurpation of the Western Sahara had condoned a trend "to replace the old imperialism by another form of foreign control founded on territorial claims." Ambassador Salim of Tanzania, the Chairman of the Special Committee, further pointed out that "cardinal principles were involved" and that the United Nations was thus establishing an evil precedent which "would have consequences not only in the Territory itself but also beyond its borders and even beyond the African continent."

Perhaps the only saving grace in this sordid affair thus far is the refusal of Special Representative Rydbeck to put the U.N. imprimatur on the "act of free choice" by a "rump" Yema'a⁴⁵ which was hastily organized by the Moroccans at the end of February. Thus, at least formally, the international requirement that Sahrawi people exercise their right to self-determination remains effective.

B. The Seizure of Portuguese Timor

The crisis in the decolonization of Portuguese or East Timor closely resembles—and parallels in time—the Western Sahara scenario. For almost three decades after the founding of the

^{43.} U.N. Doc. A/C.4/SR.2175, Fourth Committee, at 15, November 27, 1975.

^{44.} U.N. Doc. A/C.4/SR.2174, Fourth Committee, at 22, November 24, 1975.

^{45.} The Yema'a was created by Spain in May, 1967 as the highest representative body of local administration in the territory. For further information on the history and functions of the Yema'a, see Visiting Mission, supra note 11, at 29.39.

Annex 110

United Kingdom, "Heads of Agreement Between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Administration of the British Indian Ocean Territory and the Government of Seychelles Concerning the Return of Aldabra, Desroches and Farquhar to Seychelles to be Executed on Independence Day", FCO 40/732 (18 Mar. 1976)

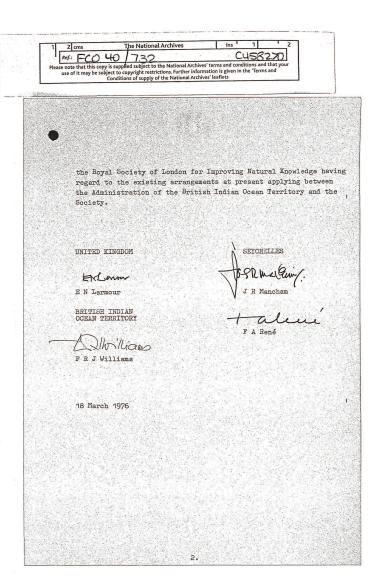

(81)

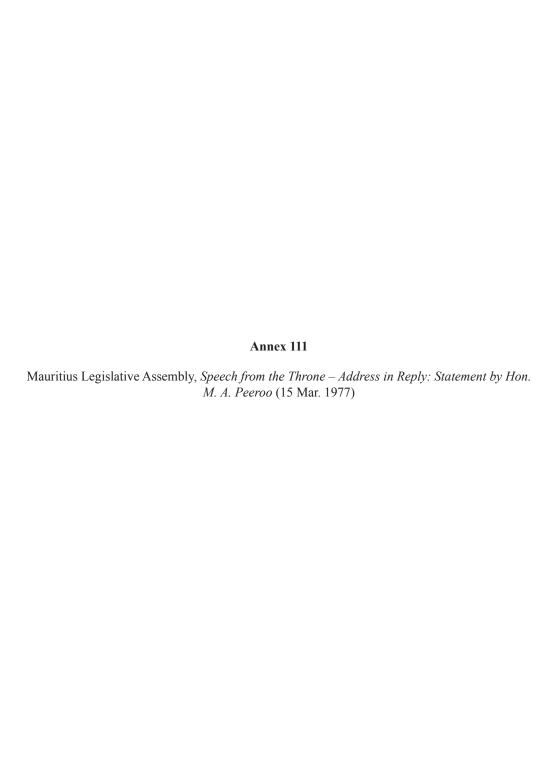

HEADS OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND, THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY AND THE GOVERNMENT OF SEYCHELLES CONCERNING THE RETURN OF ALDARIA, DESPONDES AND FARQUEAR TO SEYCHELLES TO BE EXECUTED ON INDEPENDENCE DAY

The Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Administration of the British Indian Ocean Territory and the Government of Seychelles agree to the return to Seychelles on 29 June 1976 (Independence Day) of Aldabra, Desroches and Farquhar ("the islands") subject to the following conditions:-

- 1. The Government of Seychelles shall not permit the entry into or use of the territory, territorial waters or air space of Seychelles for any purpose by any of the armed forces of any State or the establishment by any State of rights or facilities of a military character Provided that any State immediately before the date of this agreement having rights of entry, use or establishment ("the current users") may continue to have rights of entry, use or establishment in accordance with any agreements or consultations between any such State and Seychelles and that the right of access to the islands shall continue for the current users in the event of emergency defence needs after agreement with Seychelles, which agreement shall not be unreasonably withheld.
- The provisions of sub paragraph 1 shall not apply to courtesy visits by aircraft and by vessels of war in accordance with normal international law and practice.
- Seychelles shall continue its policy of strict nature conservancy in the islands in accordance with its current legislation and in respect of Aldabra will do so in close consultation with 1.

15 MARCH 1977

Oral Questions

146

remedy the situation.

Mr. E. François: Sir, the "Calimaye" as well as the wall stands on the private property of Beau Champ Sugar Estate. Government authority was not necessary for the erection of the wall, because, under the law, an owner can enclose his property without asking for Government permission.

FOREIGNERS - GRANT OF MAURITIAN NATIONALITY

(No. B/74) Mr. B. A. Khodabux (First Member for Port Louis Maritime and Port Louis East) asked the Prime Minister whether he will give the names of all foreigners who, since March 1968, have been granted Mauritian nationality stating in each case the grounds on which naturalisation was granted.

The Prime Minister: Seven hundred and nineteen foreigners, who satisfied the provisions of the Mauritius Citizenship Act, 1968, have been granted Mauritian nationality since 1968. The list of names is being compiled and will be laid in the Library as soon as it is ready.

TRANQUEBAR -CHILDREN'S PLAYGROUND

(No. B/75) Mr. R. T. Servansingh (Third Member for Port Louis South and Port Louis Central) asked the Minister of Local Government whether he will use his good offices with the Administrative Commission of the Municipality of Port Louis to set up forthwith a children playground in the Tranquebar area.

Mr. Espitalier-Noel: Sir, the creation of a recreation complex in the Tranquebar area has already been envisaged and steps are being taken to acquire the necessary land.

If not, will he take immediate steps to VALLEE PITOT - WATER SUPPLY

(No. B/76) Mr. K. Bhayat (First Member for Port Louis South and Port Louis Central) asked the Minister of Power, Fuel & Energy whether, in view of the great inconvenience caused to the inhabitants of the Vallée Pitot area through a deplorable water supply, he will use his good offices with the Central Water Authority to provide an individual water prise to every householder of the locality.

Dr. Busawon: Sir, some inhabitants of Vallée Pitot area have constructed their houses up the hillsides and it is difficult to convey water to these individual households by gravity pressure. The C.W.A. is however making designs for water to be supplied generally to the area by means of pumps. In the meantime, water supply to the area is ensured by tankers.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE -ADDRESS IN REPLY

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on the following motion of the hon. First Member for La Caverne and Phænix (Mr. R. Purryag):

"That an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General in the following terms:-

'We, the Members of the Mauritius Legis-lative Assembly here assembled, beg leave to offer our thanks to Your Excellency for the Speech which Your Excellency has ad-dressed to us on the occasion of the Open-ing of the First Session of the Fourth Le-gislative Assembly'.

Question again proposed.

M. A. Peeroo (Third Member for La Caverne and Phænix): M. le président, on a eu l'honneur à la dernière 147 séance de ce Parlement d'écouter attentivement les discours prononcés jusqu'ici. Alors qu'il est encourageant de constater que des critiques constructives ont été faites en vue d'améliorer le sort du peuple mauricien, il a été cependant décourageant, dirai-je, d'entendre certaines critiques injustifiées de la part de l'Opposition concernant l'état d'urgence, l'existence de la démocratie dans notre société, et surtout concernant le problème de Diégo Garcia.

Sir Satcam Boolell: On a point of order, Sir, last time the adjournment was proposed by the hon. First Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes (Mr. Bérenger).

Mr. Speaker: "I had overlooked that for which I apologize. But now that the Hon. the Third Member for La Caverne—Phænix has started, I will call the Hon. the First Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes immediately afterwards.

M. Peeroo: Je dirai même, M. le président, que les critiques du chef de l'Opposition ont frôlé la surenchère. Je relève de son discours certaines critiques injustifiées concernant, comme je viens de dire, l'état d'urgence, Diégo Garcia, et la démocratie si elle existe à Maurice ou non. Tout d'abord, je m'attaquerai a cette critique particulière du chef de l'Opposition concernant l'incompétence du Gouvernement. Nous devons analyser les faits, les réalisations du Gouvernement dans le passé, surtout l'accomplissement du plan 1971 à 1975 pour savoir si le Gouvernement n'a rien fait, si le Gouvernement est incompétent.

Mr. Speaker: We are not discussing whether the last Government was competent or not, we are discussing whether this Government is competent, so that we might forget all about the past.

M. Peeroo: M. le président, si j'ai fait mention du passé, c'est pour m'en servir comme base, pour revenir sur les questions qui se trouvent dans le discours du Trône. Nous savons que notre société évolue, et toute société qui est vivante, toute société qui évolue est une société qui connait des problèmes. L'île Maurice n'est pas une exception. Donc, nous devons nous attendre à ce que notre société connaisse des problèmes, et notre devoir ici est d'aider le Gouvernement, d'aider le pays à trouver des solutions à ces problèmes. Nous savons aussi qu'après l'indépendance notre pays a hérité d'un système que le qualifierai de colonial, un système qui doit être définitivement réformé afin que les aspirations légitimes du peuple soient satisfaites. Mais, quelle a été la politique du Gouvernement après l'indépendance ? Je dois dire ici que le Gouvernement a poursuivi une politique réaliste mais tout en tenant compte des réalités et des besoins de notre pays. Il n'y a pas lieu pour moi, M. le président, de parler des détails, mais je dirai que dans toutes ses entreprises le Gouvernement a réalisé des réussites. Si je viens de dire que nous avons des problèmes, nous sommes conscient dans le Gouvernement que ces problèmes sont difficiles, mais nous pouvons garantir au peuple de ce pays que le Gouvernement actuel est disposé à travailler avec courage et détermination pour trouver des solutions justes afin que nous puissions créer une société où chaque Mauricien aura une sécurité concernant l'emploi, le logement, l'éducation, et ainsi de suite.

M. le président, le chef de l'opposition a parlé de l'incompétence du Gouvernement. Cette critique, il me semble, est facile. Il est facile de critiquer, il est facile de dire que ce pays connaît des problèmes, mais jusqu'ici l'opposition n'a pas donné des solutions à nos pro-blèmes. Mais, M. le président, nous pouvons en prenant compte, je dirai, des évênements économiques dans le passé, voir si notre pays est dans la bonne direction. On sait très bien que les gens qui demeurent dans l'oisiveté critiquent toujours coux qui vraiment travaillent et connaissent les difficultés dans l'action. Le Gouvernement s'efforce de résoudre les problèmes, mais par contre il y a des gens qui se tiennent sans rien faire et qui critiquent le Gouvernement. Le Gouvernement est disposé à accepter des critiques, comme mon ami, le Premier député de Phœnix et La Caverne a dit. Nous sommes ici au Gouvernement disposé à accepter les critiques, mais les critiques, je le répète, doivent être constructives et non pas destructives.

M. le président, le prendrai un peu de temps peut être pour parler de nos difficultés. Nous avons une population de 850,000 âmes, et une qui augmente par 17,000. En 1960, la population a connu une augmentation de 3%, mais par contre avec une politique réaliste et clairvoyante du Gouvernement, nous constatons qu'aujourd'hui le taux de naissance est de 2%, c'est-à-dire il y a une réduction sensible de naissances à Maurice, c'est-à-dire 1%, ou une réduction de 50% en ce qui concerne les naissances pendant une année. Donc, avec une population de 850,000 âmes, comme je viens de dire, M. le président, et une qui augmente par 17,000 par an, la tâche du Gouvernement n'est pas facile. Nous devons tenir compte des réalités. Je viens de dire que notre tâche ne serait pas si difficile, car nous savons au Gouvernement que le peuple est derrière nous et le peuple est disposé à coopérer afin de mettre fin à la politique de destruction lancée jusqu'ici par l'Opposition.

Le premier objectif de notre Gouvernement est de créer des emplois. On sait quelle était la situation sur le marché du travail avant 1975, mais nous pouvons dire aujourd'hui avec satisfaction que grâce aux efforts de ce même Gouvernment, qualifié d'incompétent par le chef de l'Opposition, 53,000 emplois ont été créés durant la période 1969 à 1975, alors que nous savons que durant les années 1960 seulement 20,000 emplois ont été créés. C'est-à-dire que durant la période de 1969 à 1975 on a créé environ 33,000 nouveaux emplois. Il ne faut pas oublier que dans d'autres secteurs de l'économie, comme l'industrie touristique, le Gouvernement est responsable du progrès accompli. Grâce à cette industrie, encouragée et développée par le Gouvernement, nous avons réalisé en termes de devises étrangères une somme de Rs. 135 m. en 1975, et nous savons aussi que le revenu national a augmenté de 10% alors qu'on s'attendait à 7% comme prévu par le Gouvernement dans le passé. D'autre part, M. le président, il nous faut tenir compte des ressources limitées de notre pays. Nous savons très bien que notre économie est purement agricole, c'est-à-dire que nous dépendons sur le sucre qui represente 90% de nos exportations mais avec de telles limitations économiques nous avons tout de même un travail à faire au niveau national parceque, chaque année, prenant en consideration l'augmentation de la population et aussi le pourcentage des jeunes à Maurice, et le fait que 40% de la population ont moins de 15 ans, le Gouvernement a un programme que je qualifierai de pilote afin que ces jeunes de moins de 15 ans dont le nombre s'élèvent à 40,000 trouveront de l'emploi, de logement. Comme les membres sont au courant ces jeunes-là reçoivent déjà une éducation gratuite. Mais le problème épineux auquel nous avons à faire face, c'est la création 151 d'un nombre maximum d'emplois pour assurer une vie décente à nos jeunes de moins de 15 ans. Il est à noter, M. le président, que le secteur agricole est un domaine où on ne peut pas créer plus de 2% d'emplois. Dans ce secteur un peu plus d'un pour cent d'emplois est créé, par contre je constate avec satisfaction que le Gouvernement a choisi le secteur industriel pour investir afin de créer plus d'emplois et nous savons que dans ce secteur beaucoup d'emplois ont été crées. En 1974, le Gouvernement a aidé à la création de 30,000 emplois. Nous ne prenons pas compte du nombre d'emplois créés dans l'industrie sucrière, je dis seulement 30,000 dans les industries, dans les usines. 9,000 ont été crées dans la zone franche et 12,000 emplois ont été créés dans les petites industries, les petites usines et les "cottage industries." Avec toutes ces réalisations, M. le président, je vois fort drôle comment le chef de l'opposition a pu qualifier ce Gouvernement d'incompétent, comment se fait-il que le chef de l'opposition n'a pas pris en considération les réalisations du Gouvernement, un Gouvernement qui se lance toujours dans la bonne voie de créer d'autres emplois. C'est difficile de digérer cette critique à l'effet que ce Gouvernement est incompétent. S'il l'est, le temps dira, parceque les réalisations du Gouvernement nous permettent d'espérer qu'il en fera mieux dans l'avenir. Je saisirai cette occasion pour dire que notre Gouvernement ne va jamais abdiquer devant ses responsabilités envers le peuple et ses responsabilités envers la nation mauricienne, malgré l'obstruction systématique de l'opposition pour embarrasser le Gouvernement dans plusieurs secteurs. Nous sommes dans une position dificile. Nous reconnaissons que notre tâche n'est pas impossible, mais nous ferons notre mieux pour déjouer les manœuvres immorales de l'opposition.

Notre but c'est de créer une société juste, une société socialiste, mais pas une société qui tolère les réactionnaires; et une société au visage humain.

M. Jugnauth: Soyez moins ridicule.

M. Peeroo: Je repondrai au commentaire du chef de l'opposition seulement par ceci "rira bien qui rira le dernier."

Maintenant passant à l'item de Diégo Garcia, M. le président, c'est un problème qui concerne tous les Mauriciens, je dirai même ce problème a un aspect assez triste et malheureux parceque là aussi on a dit que le Gouvernement n'a rien fait concernant la démilitarisation de l'ocean indien. Tout d'abord je dirai que notre ministre des affaires étrangères lors de la conférence des pays non alignés, a soulevé la question et a exercé des pressions diplomatiques, et aussi lors de la conférence de l'OUA à Maurice, le Gouvernement a tout fait pour soulever l'opinion mondiale sur ce problème. Mais on critique très souvent le Gouvernement. On a voulu faire comprendre à la population que le Gouvernement est responsable de la vente de Diégo. Mais il y a une explication. D'après un principe de droit international, mes collègues de la profession qui sont de l'autre côté sont au courant qu'un article a été publié dans Modern Law Review No. 30 ou 31, un article écrit par le professeur de Smith, qui a pour titre "Constitutionalism in Mauritius". Dans cet article, M. le président, un point de droit international a été mentionné. La première question qu'on doit se poser est celle ci : quand la vente de Diégo a été faite, à cette époque là, est-ce que l'île Maurice était indépendante? La réponse est clairement non. Ce Gouvernement qui vous dites, est responsable de la vente de Diégo Garcia n'était pas le Gouvernement d'un état souverain. On ne peut pas donc blâmer ce Gouvernement. Mais je dois donner l'assurance à mes amis de l'opposition que des efforts sont déployés afin de voir que l'océan indien soit une zone de paix.

Je viens de mentionner l'intervention et l'action mauricienne lors des conférences de pays non-alignés et aussi l'action du Gouvernement mauricien lors de la conférence de l'organisation de l'unité africaine. Les efforts du Gouvernement dans ce sens continuent parceque il y a encodes pressions diplomatiques qui sont, exercées auprès de certaines super-puissances.

M. le président, je passe maintenant à une certaine critique du chef de l'opposition qui a dit que dans ce pays, où l'état d'urgence existe, où semble-t-il il n'y a plus de démocratie. Tout d'abord je dois dire que tout mouvement organisé et enregistré conforme à la loi est libre de publier ce qu'il veut, et tout groupe d'individus, de travailleurs est libre de s'organiser en syndicat. Et ces gens qui disent qu'il n'y a pas de démocratie dans ce pays, savent très bien qu'ils sont libres d'organiser des meetings privés et des meetings publics et même des rassemblements, et je dirai même que cette liberté est tolérée jusqu'à tel point qu'ils sont libres de publier des critiques à l'égard de ceux qui permettent cette liberté. Je dois dire aussi, M. le président, que l'état d'urgance existe sur papier. En pratique les libertés fondamentales du peuple sont là, parcequ'elles ont été expliquées et traduites par des élections municipales à venir aussi bien que par les récentes élections générales. D'ailleurs s'il n'y avait pas de démocratie dans ce pays, comment donc expliquer la présence de cette opposition dans cette assemblée.

M. le président, il y a un problème que les consommateurs sans distinction de classe connaissent dans ce pays - on avait tout dernièrement parlé de l'augmentation concernant le prix du pain. Sur ce point je dirai en toute franchise et sincérité que je suis d'accord avec le premier député de Quatre Bornes (M. Bérenger) quand il a parlé sur le prix du pain. Personnellement je ne suis pas d'accord avec une augmentation de prix sur le pain parceque quand l'augmentation a été recommandée, (une augmentation de deux sous), la première question qu'on devrait se poser est la suivante: quels chiffres avait-on considérés pour recommander une telle augmentation? nous savons très bien que parmi les membres du Gouvernement, il y a un qui fait tout son mieux pour prouver qu'on peut vendre le pain à dix sous et en même temps réaliser un profit. Je suis, M. le président, contre l'augmentation de prix sur le pain.

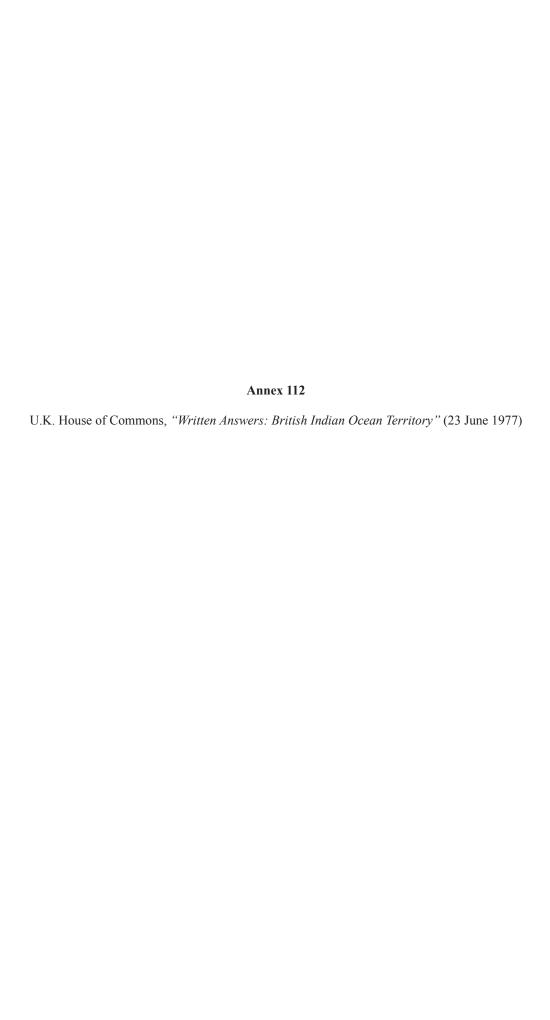

Concernant l'augmentation de prix sur le poisson frigorifié, il a passé de Rs. 2.40 à Rs. 2.90. Cette augmentation est injustifiée. D'autre part, il est nécessaire, étant donné les circonstances, que les prix soient contrôlés strictement. président, hier j'ai été au marché de Rose Hill pour acheter deux livres de poisson. On m'avait demandé Rs. 6 la livre quand nous savons très bien que le prix de poisson est fixé par le Gouvernement à Rs. 4.50. Ce que le marchand m'avait dit: 'Nous pas rente dans zaffaire prix, nous vanne prix qui nous content'. Sur ce problème, j'ai formulé des critiques mais il y a aussi une solution. Je préconise, M. le président, l'amendement des lois dans ce domaine et il faut aussi donner plus de pouvoirs aux officiers du ministère des prix et créer une escouade pour contrôler les marchands qui exploitent le petit peuple. Et je suggererai également la création d'un comité populaire de surveillance pour surveiller à ce que les marchands, qu'ils soient grands ou petits, n'exploitent pas la population, ou les consommateurs. Quand j'ai parlé du comité populaire, M. le président, je n'ai pas voulu dire milice populaire. Ici au Gouvernement, si nous faisons des critiques, nous disons quels sont aussi les solutions parceque je repète, M. le président, nous critiquons pour construire non pas pour détruire. Quand j'ai parlé du comité populaire, M. le président, j'ai voulu dire, un comité composé de membres du public, des volontaires disposés à aider le ministre ou le ministère des pêcheries parceque surveiller à ce que l'exploitation est éliminée dans le pays n'imcombe pas seulement au Gouvernement ou au ministre mais aussi incombe à la population, parceque le ministre ou le Gouvernement ne sont pas seulement responsables de ce que la population subit mais il est le devoir de tout un chacun, de tout Mauricien de coopérer, de collaborer afin que l'exploitation d'où qu'elle vienne soit éliminée.

Il y a un autre problème, M. le Président, qui jusqu'ici a été ignoré et ce problème concerne la planification du pays. Quand nous allons vers Curepipe, passant par St. Jean, nous voyons avec regret aujourd'hui que nos meilleures terres sont vendues à des gens qui veulent construire des maisons. Par contre, il est connu de tous que ce pays est purement agricole, que nous ne pouvons pas sacrifier nos meilleures terres; si nous voulons encourager les gens à construire des maisons, il nous faut les encourager à le faire dans des zones où les terres ne sont pas fertiles, ne sont pas productives. Dans ces sites ou ces endroits là, il nous faut encourager la construction mais non pas à St. Jean ou dans d'autres coins de l'île Maurice qui doivent être réservés pour l'agriculture, parceque comme je viens de dire, notre pays est un pays agricole. L'agriculture, c'est l'épine dorsale de notre économie.

Ce que je préconise, M. le président, c'est la refonte des lois concernant la planification et de créer des zones industrielles, des zones réservées purement à l'agriculture et des zones résidentielles. Par exemple, M. le président, passant par la nouvelle route, on voit des petites collines qui sont vraiment improductives dans ce sens qu'on ne peut pas les cultiver. Quoi faire avec eux? Ce que je suggère, c'est developper ces collines afin d'encourager les gens à aller construire des maisons là-dessus ou au pied de ces collines, afin de préserver nos meilleures terres.

Et concernant le transport, M. le président, je félicite le Gouvernement pour avoir pris la décision d'accorder des permis à tous ceux qui veulent rouler des autobus. Mais je dirai que cette mesure n'est pas une solution. Cette mesure, je vais la qualifier, comme étant un palliatif. Tôt ou tard, dans cinq ou dans dix ans le problème va apparaître de nouveau parceque quand ces gens qui dans l'avenir recevront des permis pour faire rouler des autobus arrivent à trouver qu'ils font des pertes, ces gens là vont se grouper en compagnie et ce sera la même situation que nous avons aujourd'hui. La solution, je la dirai avec franchise, c'est la nationalisation de l'industrie du transport. Mais je dois dire, M. le président, que la nationalisation ne vient pas de l'Opposition, d'abord parceque dans le programme gouvernemental du parti travailliste, dès 1945, nous avons parlé de nationalisation mais nous devons dire que

Search Help

HANSARD 1803–2005 → 1970s → 1977 → June 1977 → 23 June 1977 → Written Answers (Commons) → FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Indian Ocean Territory

HC Deb 23 June 1977 vol 933 cc549-50W

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in the light of the forthcoming constitutional talks on the Gilbert Islands and the Banaban plea for the separation of Ocean Island, on what conditions the Seychelles Government agreed to the separation of the islands of Desroches, Farquhar and Aldabra from the colony of Seychelles in 1965 to form part of the British Indian Ocean Territory.

Mr. Luard The Seychelles Executive Council confirmed their agreement in October 1965 to the detachment of the islands of Aldabra, Desroches and Farquhar in return for Britain's agreement to construct an airfield on Mahé Island, Seychelles, to compensate the landowners and to resettle the inhabitants. The islands reverted to Seychelles on that country's independence in 1976.

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in the light of the forthcoming constitutional talks on the Gilbert Islands and the Banaban plea for the separation of Ocean Island, on what conditions the Government of Mauritius agreed to the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from the Colony of Mauritius in 1965 to form part of the British Indian Ocean Territory.

Mr. Luard The Mauritius Council of Ministers agreed to the detachment of the Chagos Islands after discussions which concerned the negotiation of a defence agreement between Britain and Mauritius—since terminated by agreement—and the grant of £3 million additional to the cost of compensating the landowners and a grant to resettle the islands' inhabitants. Understanding was also reached on rights to mineral, oil and fish resources and there was agreement that, in certain circumstances and as far as was practicable, navigational, meteorological and emergency landing facilities on the islands were to remain available to the Mauritian Government. In the event of the islands no longer being required for defence purposes it was agreed that they should revert to Mauritian jurisdiction.

SALE OF CEMENT - CONTROL

(No. B/535) Mr. S. K. Baligadoo (Second Member for Port Louis North and Montagne Longue) asked the Minister for Prices & Consumer Protection whether he will exercise strict control on the sale of cement with a view to avoiding black marketing; and whether he will make a statement thereon.

Mr. Virah Sawmy: Sir, an enquiry was conducted last week at the Mauritius Portland Cement Co. Ltd. and at the level of the main cement distributors in Port Louis, and checks were also made in different localities of the island concerning the sale of cement.

The enquiry indicates that the supply of cement currently distributed on the local market is sufficient to satisfy the demand for that commodity, without giving rise to any black marketing opportunities.

I would like to invite the hon. Member to refer to my Ministry the case of any member of the public who may be finding difficulties to obtain cement. I can assure the hon. Member that every assistance will be given to him and others in the same situation.

ASSISTANCE TO BUS INDUSTRY

(No. B/536) Mr. A. Asgarally (Fifth Member for Montagne Blanche and G.R.S.E.) asked the Minister of Works whether he will make a statement on the form of assistance, technical or otherwise, he has already given and which he proposes to give to the bus industry.

Mr. Bussier: As from June 1976, no Customs duty is levied on bus chassis, as well as on complete buses, provided the buses are licensed by the Road Traffic Licensing Authority.

Certain buses which were running on uneconomical routes received subsidies during the period February 1976 to June 1977.

Further, duty paid on diesel oil imported by bus companies during period July 1976, to June 1977, was refunded to them. Recently, to enable certain bus companies to meet payment of wage increases, it has been decided to refund to them the duty paid by them on diesel oil imported since 1st July 1977.

Further forms of assistance to bus companies will be considered as and when the need arises.

INCREASE IN BUS FARES

(No. B/537) Mr. A. Asgarally (Fifth Member for Montagne Blanche and G.R.S.E.) asked the Minister of Works whether he will give the assurance to the House that there will be no increase in bus fares until the recommendations of the Lavoipierre Commission have been published, studied and debated in the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Bussier: Sir, Government has no intention to approve any increase in bus fares until the report of the Lavoipierre Commission has been studied.

COMPENSATION TO POLICEMEN WORKING EXTRA TIME

(No. B/538) Dr. J. B. David (Second Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes) asked the Prime Minister whether he will say if Policemen working extra time, in Parliament or in any official function, are duly compensated.

The Minister of Finance: Sir, this matter has been investigated by the Chesworth Committee which has made recommendations for implementation with effect from the 1st July, 1977.

DIEGO GARCIA — ANGLO-AMERICAN TREATY

(No. B/539) Dr. J. B. David (Second Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes) asked the Prime Minister whether he will say if

- (a) Government proposes to question the Anglo-American treaty over Diego Garcia; and
- (b) there are any immediate or far reaching possibilities for Mauritius to get Diego Garcia back.

The Minister of Finance: Sir, taking all factors into consideration, the way of trying to recuperate Diego Garcia is by patient diplomacy at bilateral and international levels, and no opportunity is lost by the Government towards this end.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS WITH SOUTH AFRICA

(No. B/540) Dr. J. B. David (Second Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes) asked the Minister of External Affairs, Tourism & Emigration whether he will say if Government proposes to sever all commercial ties with the Republic of South Africa.

Sir Harold Walter: Such action to be effective, pressure should be exerted by the international community as a whole and, to this end, Government has diligently and consistently been calling for global trade sanctions against South Africa both at the UN and at the OAU.

RESEARCH CENTRE — HISTORY, ART AND CULTURE OF MAURITIUS AND OF THE INDIAN OCEAN

(No. B/541) Dr. J. B. David (Second Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes) asked the Minister of Education & Cultural Affairs whether he will say if he proposes to create a Research Centre to study the History, Art and Culture of Mauritius and of the Indian Ocean.

Mr. Jagatsingh: Sir, this project will be studied in the light of the report of a UNESCO Consultant who is arriving shortly to advise on its elaboration.

APPLICATION BY POLITICAL PARTY TO USSR EMBASSY FOR FINANCIAL OR OTHER ASSISTANCE

(No. B/542) Mr. C. Guimbeau (First Member for Rodrigues) asked the Prime Minister whether he will make a statement on the action he proposes to take following the publication in Le Cernéen of the 21st October, 1977 of a letter addressed by a political party to the USSR Embassy applying for financial or other assistance.

The Minister of Finance: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to P.Q. B/230. In this particular case I am sure the public will draw their own conclusions.

AGENCE FRANCE PRESSE — PUBLICATION OF INFORMATION ABOUT MAURITIUS

(No. B/543) Mr. C. Guimbeau (First Member for Rodrigues) asked the Prime Minister & Minister of Information & Broadcasting whether he will give the name and status of the official correspondent of Agence France Presse in Mauritius and state what measures he has taken with the "Agence" to prohibit the publication of erroneous information concerning Mauritius.

ACADÉMIE DE DROIT INTERNATIONAL

FONDÉE EN 1923 AVEC LE CONCOURS DE LA DOTATION CARNEGIE POUR LA PAIX INTERNATIONALE

RECUEIL DES COURS

COLLECTED COURSES OF THE HAGUE ACADEMY OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

1978

I

Tome 159 de la collection

1979 SIJTHOFF & NOORDHOFF Alphen aan den Rijn – The Netherlands

GENERAL TABLE OF CONTENTS TABLE GÉNÉRALE DES MATIÈRES

International Law in the Past Third of a Century, by E. JIMÉNEZ DE ARÉCHAGA, President of the International Court of Justice .	1-344
La solution des problèmes de statut personnel dans le droit des pays arabes et africains, par Salah El Dine TARAZI, juge à la Cour internationale de Justice	345-463

INTERNATIONAL LAW IN THE PAST THIRD OF A CENTURY

by

EDUARDO JIMÉNEZ DE ARÉCHAGA

President,
International Court of Justice

1 0

of self-determination and provides that the principle applies both to peoples of non-self-governing and trust territories and also to peoples within independent and sovereign States: that this right is one that must survive the historical function it performed in the dismantlement of colonialism.

The Outcome of Self-Determination and the Essence of the Right of Peoples

At first sight Resolution 1514 (XV) gives the impression that the natural outcome of self-determination—the necessary result of the exercise of this right—is the "complete independence" of the people concerned. The word "independence" is repeated four times in the seven paragraphs of the Resolution.

It was soon realized, however, that "complete independence" is not to be considered as constituting the only way of implementing the principle. There are examples of non-self-governing territories whose peoples did not wish to assume the full responsibility of independent statehood and preferred to maintain an association or integration with another country. The principle of self-determination is fully safeguarded when such an outcome is the result of the free choice of the people concerned. A resolution also adopted in 1960 by the General Assembly, Resolution 1541 (XV), indicated that the principle of self-determination could take one of the following forms:

- (a) emergence as a sovereign independent State;
- (b) free association with an independent State; or
- (c) integration with an independent State.

This resolution further provides that "free association should be the result of a free and voluntary choice by the peoples of the territory concerned expressed through informed and democratic processes..." (Principle VII a). And integration:

"should be the result of the freely expressed wishes of the territory's peoples acting with full knowledge of the change in their status, their wishes having been expressed through informed and democratic processes impartially conducted and based on universal adult suffrage. The United Nations could, when it deems it necessary, supervise these processes."

It is obvious that if these requirements are complied with, the free association or the integration with an independent State also become manifestations of independence, in the sense that the peoples concerned "freely determine their political status" (para. 2 of Resolution 1514).

Resolution 2625 codifies the various ways of implementing the right of self-determination but in view of the broadening of the scope of the right beyond colonial issues it had to cover other possibilities as well, in more general terms. The fourth paragraph of this Chapter reads:

"The establishment of a sovereign and independent State, the free association or integration with an independent State or the emergence into any other political status freely determined by a people constitute modes of implementing the right of self-determination by that people."

The expression "any other political status freely determined by a people" is wide enough to encompass solutions which would facilitate the settlement of certain contemporary self-determination conflicts requiring a solution other than independence or association, such as, for instance, autonomous or federal constitutional arrangements.

It is in the light of these successive General Assembly resolutions that Resolution 1514 must be interpreted. In the Western Sahara Advisory Opinion the Court found that its provisions "in particular paragraph 2, thus confirm and emphasize that the application of the right of self-determination requires a free and genuine expression of the will of the peoples concerned 192". The Court added, after quoting Principles VII and IX of Resolution 1541: "certain of its provisions give effect to the essential features of the right of self-determination as established in Resolution 1514 (XV) 193". The Court also found that Resolution 2625 (XXV) "reiterates the same need to take account of the wishes of the people concerned 194".

Consequently, a consultation of the will of the peoples concerned was found to be the essential feature of self-determination. The Court added:

"The validity of the principle of self-determination, defined as the need to pay regard to the freely expressed will of peoples, is not affected by the fact that in certain cases the General Assembly has dispensed with the requirement of consulting the inhabitants of a given territory. Those instances were based either on the consideration that a certain population did not constitute as 'people' entitled to self-determination or on the conviction that a consultation was totally unnecessary, in view of special circumstances 195,"

The first type of exception would exist for instance in the cases of Gibraltar or the Malvinas (Falkland) Islands where the General Assembly has requested the States concerned to negotiate on the question of sovereignty and transfer of the territory and has refused to accept the effects of a referendum or a consultation of the present inhabitants of those territories.

The second type of exception, the special circumstances making a consultation unnecessary, existed in the cases of Goa or of Ifni. These circumstances combine an unchallenged or accepted territorial claim by a former sovereign which ceased to be so as a consequence of colonialism, and the homogeneity of the population of an enclave with that of the former sovereign surrounding it. In those cases the direct retrocession of the territory was considered by the General Assembly as the means of ensuring at the same time the self-determination of the people and the immediate end of a colonial situation. India said in the case of Goa that it would be senseless to ask the Indians in Goa if they wished to remain Indians. This position resembled that of the Allies in 1919 when they held that asking for a plebiscite in Alsace-Lorraine would be "insultingly illegitimate 198".

Self-Determination and Historic Title to Territory

In the Western Sahara case Morocco and Mauritania contended that on the subject of decolonization there are two basic principles: that of self-determination through a consultation of the will of the people, indicated in paragraph 2 of Resolution 1514, and the principle of national unity and territorial integrity of countries, laid down in paragraph 6 of Resolution 1514 and confirmed by Paragraph 7 of Resolution 2625.

According to this argument decolonization may come about through the automatic retrocession or reintegration of a province to the mother country from which that province was artificially detached by a colonial dismemberment. In support of this argument several instances were indicated—such as those of Gibraltar, Ifni and the Malvinas (Falkland) Islands—in which the General Assembly had been induced to give priority to territorial integrity.

For its part Algeria contended that the principle of self-determination and the fundamental rule of decolonization is that the population of a territory should be consulted as to its future political status and should not be dealt with as mere chattels ¹⁹⁷.

This question was not the subject of the request for an opinion, but

11 APRIL 1979

Motion

402

However, after the Commission has reported, nothing prevents any hon. Member to put down a question to inquire about the Government's intentions about laying the report on the Table of the Assembly.

MOTION

Speech from the Throne -Address in Reply

Order read for resuming the adjourned debate on the following motion of the hon. First Member for Curepipe and Midlands (Mr. P. Simonet):

> "That an Address be presented to His Excellency the Acting Governor-General in the following terms:

We, the Members of the Mauritius Legislative Assembly here assembled, beg leave to offer our thanks to Your Excellency for the Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to us on the occasion of the Opening of the Third Session of the Fourth Legislative Assembly.

Question again proposed.

M. P. Bérenger (First Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes): M. le président, on me dira peut-être qu'il est de la nature même des discours du Trône de ne pas coller à la réalité de la situation dans laquelle se trouve l'île Maurice. Cela ne m'empéchera néanmoins pas de dire pour commencer, M. le président, que le discours du Trône prononcé le 27 mars dernier par le Gouverneur-Général n'a véritablement rien à voir, ni avec la situation dans laquelle se trouve actuellement notre pays, ni avec les solutions qui, du point de vue de l'opposition, du point de vue du MMM devraient être apportées d'urgence à ces problèmes. Mon discours, M. le président, va s'axer sur quatre volets : la situation économique d'abord. A l'inverse du Leader de l'opposition, qui avait commencé par les affaires étrangères, je commencerai, moi, par la situation économique, pour passer ensuite à l'éducation, à la politique intérieure, et quatrièmement donc, à la politique étrangère avant, en conclusion, de suggèrer ce qui de notrepoint de vue, pourrait s'avérer être des solutions à la situation actuelle.

Lorsque, je commence par la situation économique, M. le président, ce n'est pars sans raison, c'est parce que véritable ment de mon point de vue, ce devrair être la situation économique actuelle du pays et l'avenir économique du pays qui devrait avant tout retenir notre attention, l'attention de cette Chambre, comme l'attention de la nation tout entière. D'estime, en effet, M. le président, que non seulement la situation économique actuelle est-elle catastrophique, mais j'estime, ce qui est encore plus grave, que l'avenir est terriblement sombre.

Je commencerai, M. le président, par le chômage, Je vous rappelle que dans son dernier discours du budget l'année dernière, le ministre des finances lui-même était venu dire que le chômage était redevenu à l'île Maurice, la priorité des priorités. Dans l'intervalle, depuis ce discours du budget, donc, non seulement l'emploi n'a-t-il pas progressé, mais au contraire l'emploi a régressé. Des li-cenciements ont en lieu dans l'industrie sucrière, dans l'industrie du thé, dans la zone franche, dans le commerce, et même dans l'industrie de construction. De mon point de vue, donc, M. le président, lorsqu'à la page 2 du discours du Trône, le Gouvernement déclare tout simplement dans une situation d'emploi aussi explosive, aussi catastrophique, que government's main objectives remain the continued growth of our economy and the fulfilment of our employment objectives" il passe completement à côté du problème, car le drame est que les "employment objectives" du Plan de Développement 1975-1980 sont absolument dépassés et qu'il ne s'agit plus en fait de " continued growth of our economy", en particulier, " continued growth of employment" mais au contraire d'une situation où le chômage malheureusement progresse. En attendant donc, de venir aux moyens de créer de l'emploi à l'île Maurice, je commencerai mon discours en insistant cette année, M. le président, sur le fait que, comme l'a dit mon collègue, Sylvio Michel, dans une motion déposée en son nom, nous estimons de ce côté de la Chambre, j'estime en particulier qu'il est absolument essentiel et urgent de mettre sur pied dans les plus brefs délais un système d'allocation chômage. Je me permets de rappeler à la Chambre qu'en 1971 la Chambre avait nommé un Select Committee qui avait soumis son rapport intitulé port of the Select Committee on the Setting up of Unemployment Benefit Scheme". Dépose en mai 1971, ce rapport, comme nous le savons tous, est demeuré lettre morte, et je ne prétends nullement que ce rapport devrait aujourd'hui être mis en pratique. Je rappelle cela à la Chambre uniquement afin que nous ne répétions pas cette erreur de nommer un Select Committee qui produirait un rapport, rapport qui disparaîtrait dans un tiroir, dans un ministère quelconque. Nous savons, M. le président, alors qu'il nous avait été dit lorsque le National Pension Fund avait démarré, les officiels du Gouvernement, ceux du ministère de la sécurité sociale, et même ceux du Gouvernement, nous avaient donné l'assurance que des années durant, le National Pension Scheme travaillerait à perte, que durant des années, le Gouvernement aurait à verser des subsides, si je puis dire, au fonds de pension national. Or, il s'est avéré que ces prévisions des experts du Gouvernement, ces prévisions du secteur privé se sont avérées complètement fausses. En quelques mois, le National Pension Scheme a réussi mobiliser des fonds considérables. à développer un surplus qui a permis que dix millions de roupies, par exemple, soient prêtées à la Mauritius Housing Corporation. Ma suggestion c'est qu'à partir de cette base posée par le National Pension Scheme, si nécessaire en augmentant de, disons, 1 ou 2% la contribution des employeurs, à partir de la base posée par le National Pension Scheme, avec, si nécessaire, une legère augmentation des contributions, qu'un vrai système d'allocation-chômage qui se grefferait sur le National Pension Scheme pourrait être développé. Malgré, donc, l'expérience malheureuse du Select Committee de 1971, je suggère au Gouvernement devant la montée du chômage constatée par le ministre des finances lui-même, mais en fait constatée je suis certain, dans nos circonscriptions par tous les députés de cette Chambre, je suggère que le Gouvernement nomme un Select Committee de cette Chambre pour se pencher à nouveau sur "the setting up of an Unemployment Benefit Scheme et qui se penche donc sur le fonds de pension national et propose quelquechose de concret, quelquechose de positif mais en même temps quelquechose de réaliste au Gouvernement et à la Chambre.

Le deuxième point sur lequel je m'étendrai concerne l'inflation. Là encore, M. le président, le discours du Trône passe complètement à côté de la situation réelle. Le discours du Trône dit ceci, en termes d'inflation, "Price control will remain a priority of my Ministers". En fait, nous savons, M. le président, qu'en cette année 1979, l'inflation depuis janvier a réagi sous un nouveau coup de fouet. Dans le seul mois de janvier 1979, le coût de la vie a augmenté de 2.3% pas tomber d'accord, l'Industrial Relations Commission devra se servir d'un secret ballot. Mais ce n'est pas compulsory, et la Commission des relations industrielles a jugé qu'il serait trop politique de faire un tel vote par bulletin secret. C'est pourquoi nous, nous estimons qu'il faudrait imposer cela, il faudrait empêcher quelque manipulation, quelque pression politique que ce soit, permettre aux travailleurs d'exprimer leur choix. Cela vient rejoindre, je le dis surtout à l'intention du ministre des finances cette fois-ci, mais aussi le Premier ministre. Il faut bien réaliser comment fonctionnent les choses. Si un syndicat est reconnu, il est à la table des négociations, il est amené à prendre connaissance des faits, des réalités, on lui soumet des balance sheets, il discute des balance sheets, etc. mais quand un syndicat, comme la Sugar Industry Labourers' Union et la Union of Artisans of the Sugar Industry, est systématiquement boycotté, alors qu'il était reconnu et qu'il est toujours majoritaire, ce syndicat ne peut pas dialoguer avec le patronat, quelle est la tentation? La tentation est naturellement de demander des augmentations de salaires fortes puisqu'on n'est pas devant les faits, on ne discute pas les balance sheets, on n'a pas des réunions régulières avec le patronat. Et dans le cas de la fermeture de Solitude et de Réunion la réaction immédiate des syndicats, qui ne discutent pas avec le patronat, la réaction immédiate est de dire non tout de suite avant même d'avoir pris connaissance des faits. Alors, j'estime donc, que l'Industrial Relations Act doit être amendé, et qu'une clause doit prévoir que dans les cas de recognition un secret ballot tranchera, permettra aux travailleurs de se prononcer.

Je passe au quatrième volet de mon intervention, M. le présiddent, la politique étrangère, sujet sur lequel s'est étendu hier le président du parti travailliste. Là comme l'a dit le leader de l'Opposition, il fait nul doute que les intentions déclarées dans le discours du Trone sont plus que louables. Participer à fond au fonctionnement de l'OUA, la libération du continent africain, participer à fond au mouvement des pays non-alignés, work work closely with its neighbours", faire de l'Océan Indien une zone de paix, participer au dialogue ou plutôt à l'affrontement Nord/Sud au profit du sud sous-développé, participer aux discussions ACP/CEE au profit des pays ACP, tout cela est plus que louable. Ce que nous nous considérons obligés de rappeler, c'est que la réalité contredit cela. Malgré que le Parti travailliste, à travers son président et son secrétaire général, ait demandé à participer à la conférence des partis et organisations progressistes des îles du sud ouest de l'Océan Indien. Malgré le récent voyage du Premier ministre et d'une délégation ministérielle en Libye, malgré la déclaration positive - et je félicite le Premier ministre de l'avoir faite, rapidement hier - en faveur du peuple palestinien, nous sommes obligés d'attirer l'attention sur un certain nombre de contradictions, et sur un certain nombre pour nous de positions qui ne sont pas acceptables. Je pense que certains sont en train d'essayer de changer la politique étrangère du Gouvernement. Très bien, très louable effort qui se traduit par les mots utilisés, donc, dans le discours du Trone. Mais, les mentalités ne changent pas aussi facilement, et certaines réactions que nous avons vues ici même ces derniers jours nous permettent de le constater. En effet, premièrement, au moment même ou le discours du Trone déclare que l'île Maurice va participer pleinement au mouvement des pays non-alignés au moment même ou l'île Maurice établit des relations diplomatiques avec Cuba, au moment donc où mon ami l'ambassadeur posté à Tananarive, Cardozo, viendra visiter l'Île Maurice, c'est précisément à ce moment que le ministre des affaires étrangères a choisi, il y a à peine quelques jours, pour s'attaquer à Cuba, pour poser la question "Cuba non-aligned?" sur un ton agressif qui n'était pas nécessaire dans ce contexte. Nous savons tous que Cuba a les positions que Cuba a. La coincidence veut que le mouvement des pays non-alignés se réunissent au sommet cette année à Cuba. Nous demandons de ce côté de la Chambre que le Premier ministre se rende à Cuba pas parceque c'est Cuba, mais parceque c'est la conférence au sommet des nonalignés. Ils se réuniront ailleurs à un autre moment. Si on s'y rend pour critiquer le non-alignement - ce n'est pas aussi simple que ça - mais l'alignement de Cuba, faites-le, si c'est votre conviction, faites-le, c'est la notre que Cuba n'est pas suffisamment non-aligné, mais ne boycottez pas, et n'attaquez pas sans explication Cuba au moment où vous établissez des relations diplomatiques officielles. Je dois faire remarquer que cela, que quand même l'île Maurice aura fait bien du chemin — je regardais ce matin même, j'ai oublié d'apporter le journal en question, je crois que c'était à la veille de l'élection partielle de Vacoas-Phœnix, une belle photo dans le journal travailliste Nation" une photo de Guy Sinon, ministre des affaires étrangères des Seychelles, de moi-même, et moi je suis entre Guy Sinon et un ami personnel à moi, Cardozo, qui est ambassadeur à Madagascar de Cuba et qui sera donc accrédité auprès de l'île Maurice, et toute une tartine, "Subversion dans l'Océan Indien", et le pauvre Cardozo n'en a pas cru ses yeux lorsque je lui ai porté le journal, "le pauvre Cardozo qui est l'agent numéro 1 de la déstabilisation communiste", tout ça aujourd'hui est réduit à quoi ? Heureusement à rien du tout dans la mesure où ce sera, ce inême déstabilisateur professionnel qui va venir à l'île Maurice représenter officiellement le Gouvernement de Cuba.

Deuxième point où nous constatons un désaccord ou plutot une contradiction...

The Prime Minister: Avec Georges Marchais aussi.

An hon. Member: Marchais a demandé le retour de Tromelin, ne parlez pas de Marchais! Marchais est le stabilisateur!

Mr. Bérenger: I'll come to that.

J'en viens au deuxième point, le Moyen Orient. Oublions les faux pas passés, ce n'était pas des pas dans la bonne direction, plutot dans la mauvaise direction mais oublions cela. Oublions les félicitations, l'appui officiel à Camp David, au voyage de Sadate à Jérusalem etc. Ça c'est le passé. C'est avant le grand voyage en Libye. Oublions aussi les félicitations empressées au pauvre Bhaktiar en Iran. Oublions cela, venons à la situation actuelle où le ministre des affaires étrangères a jugé bon de déclarer - pour une fois il a essayé de ne pas dire beaucoup. il a dit une petite phrase, naturellement pas la bonne - que le traité de paix qui vient d'être signé est un pas dans la bonne direction. Chaque ministre a la dignité qu'il a. La déclaration d'hier du Premier ministre, je laisse le soin au ministre des affaires étrangères de la comparer au pas dans la bonne direction qu'il avait jugé nécessaire de prendre à peine une semaine plus tôt. Mais enfin, dans le Moyen Orient le tir est rectifié. C'est très bien mais j'espère quand même que ce ne sera pas simplement quelque vœu pieux, qu'une déclaration comme ça. Le Gouvernement devrait faire tout ce qu'il peut aux Nations Unies, à l'OUA, ici-même vis-à-vis des Etats Unis pour obtenir d'abord que tous les territoires occupés par Israël après 1967 soient évacués, que Jérusalem en particulier retourne à son statut d'avant 1967, que le peuple palestinien ait un état, ait une terre, ait un pays à lui. l'estime donc qu'il faut que le Gouvernement, quoique l'île Maurice soit un petit pays, fasse pression dans cette direction. Sur l'océan indien, nous considérons choquant de ce côté de la Chambre qu'après les évènements en Iran, le Président René d'un tout petit pays de moins de 100,000 habitants, comparé à notre pays d'un million d'habitants, que le Président René le premier ait réagi et envoyé un message au Président Carter pour protester contre la décision américaine d'intensifier sa présence militaire, pour demander qu'il n'y ait pas une nouvelle flotte de guerre américaine postée dans l'océan indien. Le Président René du petit pays seychellois a le premier réagi. Le Président Ratsiraka a réagi lui aussi et a envoyé lui aussi un message de solidarité au Président René et est intervenu auprès du Président Carter mais l'île Maurice n'a pas réagi à ce jour. Aucune réaction, la servilité habituelle! Là je suis obligé de venir m'étendre quelque peu sur ce que le président du parti travailliste a dit, sur le cours d'histoire absolument faussée que le président du parti travailliste a jugé utile de nous faire hier. Je n'avais pas l'intention de m'étendre là-dessus mais le président du parti travailliste l'ayant fait, je suis obligé de réfuter ce qu'il a dit et de mettre les faits devant la Chambre.

Le président du parti travailliste est venu nous dire, en quelques mots, d'abord en 1965 le Gouvernement mauricien d'alors, le parti travailliste essentiellement, ne pouvait rien faire. Deuxièmement, qu'il avait été entendu dès le départ, que le Premier ministre et le ministre des finances avaient compris dès le départ, qu'il s'agirait d'une base de communications, un point c'est tout et ensuite, à partir de petites coupures de différents journaux il a essayé de prouver que le parti travailliste a pris position comme il fallait le prendre en ce qui concerne l'océan indien. Je regrette, mais cela n'est pas la vérité historique. Revenons donc aux choses sérieuses. 1965. l'archipel des Chagos est détaché de l'île Maurice de même que certaines îles seychelloises pour former le British Indian Ocean Territory. Ce n'est pas sérieux de réagir à partir de coupures de presse. Lisons plutôt ce qui est déclaré à l'Assemblée Legislative le 14 décembre 1975 en réponse à une question de Monsieur J. R. Rey, Monsieur Robert Rey donc, qui n'est pas présent, député de Moka à cette occasion. J'ai pris cela au Secrétariat il y a déjà plus de cinq ans parcequ'entre temps nous nous sommes renseignés, - le Secrétariat de la Chambre nous l'a communiqué Extract from Debates of 14th December, 1965. Mr. Forget on behalf of the Premier and Minister of Finance tabled a reply to a parliamentary question." Done ça c'est sur le premier point que le Gouvernement ne pouvait rien faire, que Diégo et les autres îles ont été détachés et que nous ne pouvons rien faire. Le ministre qui remplace donc Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, pas encore "Sir" en ce temps là, dépose sur la table la réponse à la question et il dit ceci : "In reply to a parliamentary question, the Secretary of State made the following statement in the House of Commons on Wednesday November the 10th, "With the agreement of the Governments of Mauritius and the Seychelles new arrangements for the administration of certain islands were introduced by an Order-in-Council made on the 8th November."

Voità la vérité et d'ailleurs le Premier ministre l'a dit ici, je le citerai tout à l'heure. Je le répète " With the agreement of the Governments of Mauritius and the Seychelles etc." L'accord du Gouvernement mauricien a été obtenu. le Gouvernement d'alors, le Gouvernement du parti travailliste. Premier point donc, cela. Le premier ministre a eu le temps : 1965, 1967, 1968, 1969 on n'entend pas grand'chose sauf en ce qui concerne le PMSD - je viendrai là-dessus tout à l'heure. Mais finalement à l'Assemblée, le 26 juin 1974 en réponse à Dev Virah Sawmy, dans cette Assemblée même, le Premier ministre, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam parlant de Diégo Garcia, dit ceci : The Government of Mauritius was nevertheless informed after we had discussed in England that this had taken place c'est-à-dire le détachement des îles and we gave our consent to it." Les mots prononcés par le Premier ministre dans le Hansard officiel. "It was not done like this. But the day it is not required it will revert to Mauritius. But Mauritius has reserved its mineral rights, fishing rights and landing rights - je viendrai là-dessus tout à l'heure, dans une réponse à une question parlementaire il répond exactement le contraire, il y a peine quelques mois - landing rights and certain other things that go to complete in other words some of the sovereignty which obtained before on that island. That is the position. Even if we did not want to detach it I think - un Premier ministre parlant de l'intégrité territoriale de son pays - even if we did not want to detach it - avant il a dit "we gave our consent to it" catégoriquement - even if we did not want to detach it I think from the legal point of view Great Britain was entitled to make arrangements as she thought fit and proper. This in principle was agreed even by the PMSD who was in the Opposition at the time and we had consultations etc." D'abord, il vient dire catégoriquement que le parti tent le HMS Mauritius et s'en vont.

travailliste donna son consent au détachement de ces îles et en fait de quelle loi parlons-nous ? Vous rirez peut-être mais ca fait des années que i'ai demandé au secrétariat de cette Chambre de me faire avoir copie. C'est à partir de ce petit bout de papier. C'est tout le texte de loi qui a permis au Gouvernement britannique de détacher tous ces territoires de l'île Maurice. C'est tout. Le Colonial Boundaries Act de 1895 et que dit le Colonial Boundaries Act? "Alteration of boundaries of Colony: Where the Boundaries of a Colony have etc etc." on peut changer "provided (2me clause) that the consent of a self-governing Colony shall be required for the alteration of the boundaries thereof". En d'autres mots, non seulement, le Gouvernement, le parti travailliste d'alors avait les moyens même légaux de protester mais ce n'était pas une protestation légale qui s'imposait. C'est en fait une protestation politique et le Premier ministre a au moins eu la décence de dire qu'il donna son consent. D'après mes renseignements c'est uniquement le Premier ministre et le ministre des finances qui furent associés aux discussions avec le Premier ministre d'alors, Sir Harold Wilson. Donc, le pointclé c'est qu'ils donnèrent, le parti travailliste donna, son consent. Mais je vais plus loin. Puisque le Premier...

The Prime Minister: We had no choice.

Mr. Bérenger: You had a choice.

Mais je vais plus loin. Après que le 27 avril 1975, lorsque les Anglais s'en vont, on a honte en relisant tout ça. Sculement le président du parti travailliste choisit les journaux qu'il lit. "Maurice regrette le départ des Britanniques " En Avril 1975, lorsque les Britanniques quitis a tearing away of hearts", a déclaré hier Sir Seewoosagur, Premier ministre en invoquant le retrait du HMS Mauritius. Sir Seewoosagur a déclaré qu'il aurait souhaité qu'une telle décision ne fusse jamais prise". Ce n'est pas Le Militant ou Le Peuple, mais Le Nation, journal travailliste qui rapporte les cérémonies déchirantes " a tearing of hearts". Ça, c'est le 27 avril 1975, quelques mois plus tard — puisque le président du parti travailliste aime collectionner les coupures de journaux, le 26 septembre, 1975 (Conférence de Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam à Londres". Je cite l'Express du 26 septembre 1975. Titre: "La Grande Bretagne a le droit de construire une base à Diégo" Texte: "La Grande Bretagne a le droit souverain de faire construire dans l'ilot de Diégo Garcia une base aéro-navale pour le compte des Etats Unis." Le reste suit. "Mais tous les pays riverains de l'océan indien espèrent qu'il sera possible de transformer cet océan en une zone de paix, a déclaré mercredi le Premier ministre, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam" rapporte l'AFP. En d'autres mots, il reconnait le droit souverain aux Anglais de faire ce qu'ils veulent de Diégo García et ensuite on va venir nous citer je ne sais combien de bouts d'interviews raccolés ci et Voilà les faits. On ne peut pas réfuter, qu'en 1965 ces îles furent détachées de l'île Maurice "in agreement with the Labour Party, with the Government" d'alors, que le Gouvernement avait les moyens non seulement politiques mais légaux de le contester et qu'ils ne l'ont

> Maintenant je passe au deuxième point que il fut toujours clair au dire du parti travailliste, qu'il ne pouvait s'agir que d'une base de communications. Lisons le même texte que l'Acting Prime Minister, l'hon. Forget, déclare à cette Chambre.

Il continue " It is intended that the islands will be available for the construction of defence facilities by the British and U.S. Governments". Dès 1965, dès le 14 décembre 1965. Et plus loin "If the British Government decides that the Chagos Archipelago is no longer required for defence purposes, the islands will be reaejence purposes, the istantas wat be returned to Mauritius." "Communications", cherchez où vous voulez, il n'y a pas, on ne parle pas de "Communications Centre". Le texte officiel lu par l'Acting Prime Minister ici parle lui-même " defence purposes". D'ailleurs, j'ai pris la peine de relire tous les journaux de l'époque. A partir du 9 août, le Mauricien pose des questions" La question d'une base anglo-mauricienne à Diégo serait actuellement la clé de notre avenir constitutionnel". Le 5 octobre, feu Jules Kænig déclare à propos de la base "Je ne sais rien qui puisse être publié. Les conclusions sont au stade confidentiel." Déclaration de feu Jules Kænig au journal Le Mauricien. Il y a plus: le 6 novembre, meeting PMSD du 5 novembre, rapport le 6, à Rose Hill. Je cite tel quel ce que Le Mauricien rapporte : "Un membre du public — 1965 toujours là, toujours en pleine conférence constitutionnelle - Charles Gaëtan Duval parle ,, Un membre du public : Parlez-nous de la base. Quelqu'un qui crie dans la foule. Monsieur Duval dit qu'il ne peut reveler les secrets du Conseil des ministres. "Personnellement, Monsieur Duval n'est ni contre les Américains ni contre les Anglais. Il réclame d'ailleurs une forme d'association, l'installation d'une base n'est pas sans risque mais il se déclare d'accord pour une base si d'abord ils obtiennent un prix de sucre et deuxièmement un contingent d'émigrants. Donc, le PMSD lui-même reconnait que c'est d'une base qu'on parle et que cela présente des dangers pour l'avenir mais on est encore en train de marchander émigration, quota de sucre. Ça continue et, au cours d'une conférence de presse que tient le PMSD immédiatement après la rupture de la coalition d'alors, le 12 novembre, Conférence de Presse du PMSD. "Je tiens à déclarer", Jules Kœnig parle, rapporté par Le Mauricien "Je tiens à déclarer de la façon la plus formelle que le PMSD n'est pas contre le principe de céder les Chagos, ou que cet archipel devienne un centre de communications pour faciliter la défense de l'Occident - et là on joue sur les mots le PMSD en approuve le principe ; il est en désaccord sur les termes et les conditions de cette cession". Duval, comme toujours, les pieds dans le plat ajoute, Duval est lui aussi d'accord en principe et ajoute, "Si l'Angleterre et les USA... n'avaient pas d'argent, l'île Maurice leur aurait donné la base." Qu'on ne vienne pas fausser les faits historiques. Tout cela montre que non seulement le parti travailliste, mais que le PMSD aussi était parfaitement conscient que c'était une base for defence purposes et pas seulement de communications et que, il y a eu en fait un faux pas historique - cela arrive à tout le monde, on peut demander que le manque d'expérience entre en considération mais qu'on n'essaie pas de fausser la vérité jusqu'à la fin de l'histoire finalement. Tout à l'heure j'entendais le ministre des affaires étrangères dire "Correct, Correct" quand je lisais, le Premier Ministre disant à la Chambre ici le 26 juin 1974 que l'île Maurice avait gardé ses landing rights, entre autres, à Diégo Garcia. En réponse à une question parlementaire ici à la Chambre, Question B 635, de l'Hon. Amédée Darga, qui demande "... state if Mauritius has retained its landing rights over the island, state if there has been any breach of agreement etc." Le Premier Ministre lui-même répond " Sir, the reply to parts 1 and 2 c.à.d. landing rights, is generally negative, because it is not our territory although the piea was made during the constitutional conference, that any plane in difficulty should get the right of landing; hence, there is no breach of any agreement." It is not our territory; we don't have landing rights", et puis ici, on nous dit "correct, correct "comme si l'île Maurice avait gardé ses landing rights.

Le député Finlay Salesse, Question B/510 "Will the Prime Minister give a list of all territories which constitute the State of Mauritius". Je me demande si le Premier Ministre, je sais qu'il est débordé de travail, mais avant de mettre des choses pareilles sur papier, est-ce qu'on ne peut pas refléchir? On lui demande une liste " of all territories which constitute the State of Mauritius" et il donne la liste, " Round and Flat Islands, Rodrigues, Agalega, Tromelin, Cargados Carajos Archipelago", et Chagos Archi-pelago pas question. Vous savez que le Cargados Carajos Archipelago c'est St. Brandon etc. Lui, en tant que Premier Ministre il donne une réponse parlementaire, il exclut lui, Diego Garcia alors qu'il dit ailleurs que cela nous sera retourné lorsqu'on n'en aura plus besoin. En d'autres mots, he builds up the case against the return of Diego Garcia to Mauritius, Naturellement Sir Harold Walter n'a pas manqué lui aussi une occasion de mettre les pieds dans le plat. Autre question, cette fois-ci, de James Burty David, président du parti travailliste, Question B/760, asking "the Minister of External Affairs whether he will consider the advisability of arranging for a delegation of members of the Legislative Assembly to visit Diego Garcia. If not, why not? "It is hardly possible to arrange any sort of visit to any territory which is not within this country's jurisdiction". Done ce n'est pas notre territoire, c'est en dehors de notre jurisdiction. Je laisse au président du parti travailliste le soin de se frégion que le président du parti travailliste retrouver. Pour conclure, je rappellerai pour ceux qui nous disent qu'on n'a pas vendu Diégo Garcia, je rappellerai que le Financial Return, c.à.d. le Financial Report -- je crois que tous les membres savent que chaque année il y a les Estimates, et puis après une année d'exercice financier, l'Accountant General dépose son rapport pour l'année écoulée, il certifie que les sommes ont été dépensées; telle somme, telle somme etc. Il certifie, en tant qu'Accountant General. Dans le rapport de l'Accountant General donc, pour l'année 1965-66, Statement (G) Capital Revenue, Head L15 Miscellaneous — Sub-heading 4 — Sale of Chagos Island — 40 millions of rupees. Donc, le Gouvernement lui-même, dans ses propres comptes financiers, a fait inclure 40 millions de roupies, représentant the sale, la vente, pas la cession, mais the sale. Donc je crois, M. le président, qu'il était nécessaire d'être un petit peu long, pour bien préciser les choses, et je crois que l'heure est arrivée pour le parti travailliste, au nom du bien du pays,et de son intégrité pour une fois, de faire son mea culpa et de se joindre aux autres pour obtenir que la base de Diégo Garcia, soit démantelée tout de suite et que l'île de Diégo Garcia soit rendue à l'île Maurice dans les plus brefs délais.

Motion

461

Pendant que je suis sur cette question de l'océan indien, je parlerai aussi donc de Tromelin, et de Saya de Malha rapidement. Dans le cas de Tromelin, nous nous élevons contre la déclaration faite par le Ministre des affaires étrangères. Nous ne pouvons pas accepter sa suggestion d'un tribunal international me demande si le Premier Ministre lui a donné le feu vert pour ça — nous sommes ici au cœur de l'océan indien ; Madagascar est à côté, les Seychelles sont là ; il y a une géopolitique explosive dans notre lui-même souligne le premier. La géopolitique, la décolonisation exige que ces îles soient rendues à Madagascar ou à l'île Maurice. Dans le cas de Tromelin, Madagascar a reconnu officiellement que Tromelin devrait retourner — à moi le Président Ratsiraka a dit "Nous n'allons quand même pas nous hattre entre nous L'important est que la France ne reste pas dans cet océan indien à travers des mini-colonies pareilles ". Le Président Ratsiraka m'a dit à moi donc, " Maurice revendique Tromelin, nous revendiquons Les Glorieuses, Bassas da India, Juan de Nova". Est-ce que nous pouvons accepter que sur la base de pseudo-légalisme, la France transfére Madagascar à partir de tout un chapelet d'îles. Ce n'est passur le terrain légal qu'il faut se battre ; même le terrain légal est solide ; mais ce n'est pas sur le terrain légal qu'il faut se battre, mais sur le terrain géopolitique, sur le terrain diplomatique. Je demande donc au Gouvernement, de faire un pas dans la bonne direction pour de vrai, pour une fois de corriger le tir, de ne pas suivre cette ligne d'un tribunal international, avec un juge international etc. mais plutôt de s'associer aux Seychelles, à Madagascar, au Mozambique, à la Tanzanie, aux pays de la région, pour exiger que Tromelin soit rendu à l'île Maurice et que Juan de Nova, Bassas de India et Les Glorieuses soient rendus à Madagascar. Il est révoltant que tout à l'heure --- encore une fois c'est la nature profonde du réactionnaire qui parle, il est étonnant qu'au moment où Ratsiraka prend position officiellement en faveur du retour de ces îles à Madagascar et à Maurice, au moment où Georges Marchais, Secrétaire-Général du Parti Communiste français, à la Réunion vous savez que Tromelin dépend de la Réunion administrativement, le Préfet de la Réunion administre Tromelin, notre territoire - Georges Marchais vient on mesure la zone de 200 milles ... faire la leçon à Sir Harold Walter, à la Réunion - et lui se permet ici au lieu de se servir de cet argument, au lieu de prévoir l'avenir où il est inévitable que la Gauche arrive au pouvoir en France, à ce moment-là il faudra déterrer cette déclaration du Secrétaire-Général du Parti Communiste et le lui mettre sous le nez pour obtenir que Tromelin nous soit rendu. Au lieu de cela, on se moque de Georges Marchais, on fait de l'ironie aux propos de Georges Marchais. Donc, nous demandons en ce qui concerne Tromelin, que le Gouvernement ...

(Interruption)

Mr. Bérenger: If you don't even know what you say, it's not my fault.

Sir Harold Walter: Je n'ai rien dit.

M. Bérenger: Pour une fois je vous félicite.

Je passe maintenant à Saya de Malha. Sur Saya de Malha, j'ai entendu avec intérêt, lorsque mon collègue Doongoor parlait, j'ai entendu avec intérêt, quoique cela n'a pas été rendu public, le ministre des affaires étrangères dire, "D'après ce que les Soviétiques ont déclaré... Qu'ont déclaré les Soviétiques? Nous avons dénoncé les Soviétiques. Je me souviens d'un grand placard sur neuf colonnes dans Le Militant - Pillage des banc de Saya de Malha et de Nazareth -Les coupables : Coréens, Japonais, Soviétiques" C'était resté dans la gorge des Soviétiques, en passant. Qu'ont dit les Soviétiques ?. Les Soviétiques ont dit "Nous pêchons sur Saya de Malha; en dehors de la zone des 200 milles" Or tout le monde sait, enfin, plutôt dans le Gouvernement, très peu savent mais tout le monde ailleurs sait que quand

- je vais vous prouver comment vous ne savez pas, dans quelques minutes quand on mesure la zone de 200 milles à partir d'Agaléga, dernier territoire mauricien, le territoire mauricien le plus rapproché des bancs de Saya de Malha, lorsqu'on mesure la zone de 200 milles, nous coupons à peu près un dixième des bancs de Saya de Malha, moins d'un dixième. Tout le reste tombe en dehors de la zone des 200 milles. Quand on coupe 200 milles, à partir de Coetivy, la dernière île seychelloise la plus rapprochée des bancs de Saya de Malha, on coupe encore un plus petit bout, presque rien des bancs de Saya de Malha. Ce qui veut dire que la vérité, est que 90 p. 100 des bancs de Saya de Malha tombe en dehors des 200 milles. Qu'estce que nous sommes en train de dire? Nous sommes en train de dire nous, que l'île Maurice et les Seychelles ont des revendications sur les bancs de Saya de Malha, en dehors des 200 milles, non pas en se basant sur le concept des 200 milles mais sur le concept du plateau continental et des eaux historiques, du droit historique sur certaines eaux de cette région, mais malheureusement la vérité nous oblige de reconnaître ces deux autres concepts. La zone de 200 milles est aujourd'hui acceptée par les Nations Unies. La conférence n'a pas encore terminé ses travaux. Mais je pense que le ministre desaffaires étrangères est suffisamment informé pour savoir que le concept des 200 milles est accepté, ça, c'est un acquis, quoique ce ne soit pas encore officiellement dans un texte des Nations Unies, mais tout le monde l'accepte, cette zone. Mais les deux autres concepts du plateau continental et des eaux historiques ne sont pas encore région de l'océan indien, mais en même temps nous disons que ce pays ne sortira pas - et cela le discours du Trône aurait dû l'avoir dit clairement - ce pays ne sortira pas de la situation présente s'il ne prend pas un nouveau départ. Pour cela pour nous, quelles conditions doivent être remplies? D'abord, je le repète, que l'exemple vienne d'en haut, réduire le nombre de ministres, réduire symboli-quement ne serait-ce les salaíres des ministres, abolir les privilèges de duty free, éliminer les scandales, révoquer les nominations scandaleuses dans les ambassades, arrêter les ingérences politiques dans l'administration, le protectionisme, la politique des petits copains. L'exemple doit d'abord venir d'en haut, chaque jour que nous perdons est un drame pour le pays. L'exemple vient d'en haut d'abord. Deuxièmement, il faut un Gouvernement en lequel les travailleurs, les syndicats se reconnaissent, il faut un Gouvernement en lequel d'abord les syndicats se reconnaissent, un Gouvernement qui révoquera l'IRA, qui le remplacera par un texte de loi permettant la démocratie industrielle, qui réformera les entreprises, qui donnera le vrai pouvoir aux salariés, troisièmement, cela vient rejoindre ce que mon Collègue, Rajeev Servansingh avait dit sur le self-reliance, troisièmement il faudra promouvoir un nationalisme sain, mobilisateur, que tout ce peuple mauricien se sente un peuple, une nation, en marche vers un avenir. Quatrièmement, qu'il faut qu'il y ait étape par étape avec les nationalisations, les réformes fiscales, la démocratisation et la décommunalisation de la vie politique en général, il faut qu'il y ait un programme socialiste sur lequel s'appuierait un tel Gouvernement. Ce n'est que dans ces conditions que, de notre point de vue, on pourra parler de relance de la production, de relance de la productivité. Nous constatons malheureusement que le Gouvernement actuel ne peut pas le faire. Je le dis avec beaucoup de chagrin dans le cœur, nous constatons aussi qu'il nous serait impossible nous autres d'entrer au Gouvernement actuel et de résussir à faire cela. Nous entrerions au Gouvernement pour devenir des ministres, nous ferions certainement mieux que la plupart des ministres, certainement, mais le pays ne prendrait pas un nouveau départ, il n'y aurait pas cette relance, ce nouveau départ du pays. C'est pourquoi nous disons nous entrons au Gouvernement, cela ne change en rien fondamentalement au sort du pays, c'est pourquoi nous resterons donc dans l'Opposition. Mais nous demandons au Gouvernement soit de prendre ce chemin, mais nous considérons qu'il ne peut pas prendre ce chemin, nous considérons qu'il est condamné, qu'il est prisonnier de ses différences de classe, qu'il est prisonnier de ses choix politiques passés, qu'il ne peut pas le faire. Donc nous considérons, le cœur lourd, dans le pays la situation va aller s'empirant, chômage, endettement, dévaluation possible, explosion sociale, dans un an, deux ans, trois ans. C'est dramatique, mais nous sommes en train d'évoluer à rebours de la situation 1969/70 ou le chômage était explosif, la situation était catastrophique, le prix du sucre nous a permis d'aller vers une situation d'emploi, de création d'emplois et de camouflé, parceque cela aussi il faut le dire le prix du sucre nous a permis de camoufier le chômage avec des baisses de productivité qui s'ensuivent, aujourd'hui nous sommes dans l'évolution inverse, nous allons vers la catastrophe. C'est pourquoi non pas au nom du parti, mais au nom du pays, nous estimons étant donné que nous sommes persuadés que le Gouvernement ne peut pas sortir le pays de la situation où il est, ne peut pas lui permettre de prendre un nouveau départ, nous considérons que nous ne pouvons pas décemment vis-à-vis de notre moral, vis-à-vis de nos engagements, vis-à-vis du pays, et vis-à-vis de l'avenir de ce pays, que nous ne pouvons pas entrer au Gouvernement parceque nous étoufferions dans un carcan qui mène le pays vers la catastrophe, nous estimons étant donné que le Gouvernement n'a plus véritablement une majorité, étant donné les méthodes abjectes dont nous venons d'être témoins, et qui font qu'à Beau Rassin/Rose Hill ce qui se passe, met en jeu l'avenir du pays lui-même, est extrêmement grave pour tout le pays, et nous considérons troisièmement étant donné la situation dramatique qui se développe du côté de l'économie, du côté de l'éducation, et en termes de politique intérieure aussi, nous estimons qu'à ce stade il serait préférable de permettre à la population mauricienne de se prononcer. Qu'on aille donc à de nouvelles élections générales, que la population se prononce, d'un côté ou de l'autre, son verdict finalement aura force de loi et au moins, le pays, souhaitons-le, pourra respirer après cela.

Voilà donc ce que nous estimons de ce côté de la Chambre ce que j'estime j'ai été très long — de ce côté de la Chambre que ce discours du Trône devrait contenir, mais que malheureusement il ne contient pas.

Merci, M. le président.

Mr. C. Mourba (First Member for Port Louis North and Montagne Longue): Mr. Speaker, Sir, of course, I shall not be as long as my Friend has been. I shall try to be as brief as I can and before I begin my speech, Mr. Speaker, Sir, I would like to congratulate the Third Member for Quartier Militaire and Moka for his last intervention because I consider his intervention to be an able one, a clear one and a courageous one. Sir, in fact too much has been said upon our foreign relationship. The hon. First Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes had spared no effort to speak on Tromelin, Diégo Garcia and so on.

I am aware that my hon. Friend, the First Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes is not a lawyer but he is flanked on all sides by fairly good lawyers. For the hon. First Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes to have said legally, to have insinuated at least, if legally enough Mauritius and the people of Mauritius through its representatives could have protested against the incidence of tearing away Diégo Garcia, Sir, anyone with an inkling of international law, I mean, public international law, not private international law which has to do with conflict of laws, having to do with I am saying, Sir, marriage etc. anyone with an inkling of public international law would ask oneself the question: was Mauritius at that particular moment in our history a sovereign territory? Mauritius was not independent. Mauritius was a dependent land and legally speaking part of the extra territorial basis of U.K. At that moment in our history, we had two courses to follow. We could either have followed the legal procedure that is attended upon by the force of negotiation at diplomatic levels or we could have, as a people, declared war and opened war against Great Britain. We had only two courses open to the island which is a very small one at that, either we follow diplomatic courses at procedural levels or we declare war against Great Britain. And at that time guerilla warfare and all that was not yet imported into our local political parlance. In my opinion the people of the day who had limited powers because powers were being wielded from Westminister, the men of the day did what they could. They had a very narrow space to mancurve. They did not have the opportunity to do otherwise; they were not speaking as representatives of an independent nation.

Sir, even if those men wanted to go before an international forum, we know what the International Court of Justice is, apart from declaratory judgment, apart from the fact of giving legal opinions on certain factual data - we know, going to the International Court of Justice would not have meant much; but it is very good to stand up, to speak up and to say that it could all have been done in a better way. I am only saying at least the hon. Second Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes, in an attempt not to defend certain people, but to situate history in its right perspective, has made certain quotations from certain valuable newspapers, the hon, Second Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes has tried and successfully so, I believe, to situate the problem in its real perspective. No one in Mauritius, no one on this side of the House is happy with the actual predicament in the Indian Ocean. What should be congratulated is the fact that at least in 1964/65, we were not sovereign, we were not independent. Things were forced upon us but to-day we have taken conscience of it all. The Prime Minister again and again has made public statements, both local and abroad about our position in this country. We want the Indian Ocean to remain a lake of peace, not an American lake nor a mare sovieticum.

I am not going to labour the Diégo Garcia problem. Anyone in this country, would have done what these men did at that time, unless it were a revolutionary party which would have taken to guerilla warfare. And there can be no guerilla warfare in this country. All our mountains are naked and bare. A simple helicopter would catch alt the guerilleros of this country. There are no objective conditions for guerilla in this country. So I am speaking to my ex-associates. In 1965 what would they have done if they were in the shoes, in the skin of the actual Prime Minister? No more, no less but I am not going to labour a point, which the hon. Second Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes has already done on the state of the country.

Sir, the hon. First Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes has mentioned the problem of the Middle East. We are all aware that the Palestnian cause is a gemine one, it is a cause to be supported; but as a back bencher of this Government, being free to speak my personal opinion, I am saying in trying to reach a peaceful solution in the Middle East, there must be compromise on either side.

It is not a question where one side is going to invade another side to its last entreachment. I am saying that in the Middle East, there must be a vision based on compromise, on telerance and on mutual understanding. Although we are not 100 per cent in agreement with the Peace Treaty, I repeat, Sir, although we may not be hundred per cent in agreement with the Peace Treaty of Egypt and Israël, yet one must be bold, must be courageous enough to say that Mr. Sadate, at least one man rising against a world of many, has had the courage to take the first step. I am not congratulating him for what he did. Still less am I condemning him. But I am finding out a fact that at least Mr. Sadate of Egypt took the first step. Whether he will be thrown into the dustbin of Middle East history, I do not know, Sir, but I for one, without engaging this Government, speaking as a backbencher, I say that I believe in a moderate attitude towards critical problems. Sir, when you have got a crisis, it is not a man with high fever who will come and solve the critical situation out of it. It is a man with a cold head. It is a man with some moderation. Everywhere in the world where moderate men have come towards crises, they have solved critical problems; but where people with high political temperament based on ideological extremism have tackled such problems they have only grafted upon one problem, a thousand ones more.

I am saying, I for one, I am not condemning Mr. Sadate. I am not congratulating him but I am saying he took the first step and others now may do the rest and finish the arduous jobs. Perhaps better than he did, perhaps he has not been reasonable at all, but follow him at least in that pursuit of peace.

Sir, having listened to the hon. First Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes one would be tempted to think that we are living in a continent, full of mineral wealth, thinly populated, almost in a cold region, one would think that Mauritius is not Mauritius but we are living somewhere in a quiet cool corner with a high standard of living as in Europe. But this country, Sir, is poor, very poor. Apart from sugar, we do not have anything in terms of economic productivity. Our tea is not in economic terms, a productive commodity. Apart from sugar, we have no underground wealth. We have no mineral resources. We are walking on one leg, a monocrop economy based on sugar. We are being visited by cyclones, if not by anti-cyclones year in year out. We are a tiny speck of a country. We are small. We are not larger than Surrey in England. And if you take a few golf courses in England, that would be enough to make Mauritius. We are not living in a big continental mass of land. It is a tiny speck. We are devoid of mineral wealth, underground resources, only sugar and this is battered by cyclonic occurrences year in and year out. And what is worse, Sir, we are living in the midst of a fragile society made up of multi-racial components.

If you have all these problems and then you have a bomb in it called literacy, - we have given free education. Our people are the most literate people in Africa. You are poor, you are overpopulated, you are small, and you are highly literate. Mr. Speaker, Sir, it is no wonder that this country despite its poverty, despite its tininess is considered to be the fourth or the fifth richest country Africa after South Africa, Libya, Gabon, and Nigeria. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this country despite its physical tininess, its poverty of natural resources, its over-population, its multi-racial social texture, is fourth or fifth of the richest country in Africa after South Africa, Libya, Gabon and Nigeria, and to whom does the ciedit go? Mr. Speaker, Sir, just now the hon. First Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes was speaking about the POA. But, Mr. Speaker, Sir, there are lawyers on the other side who have studied the Public Order Act. The Public Order Act does not cut only on one side. If somebody with a legal understanding reads the Public Order Act, even the Chief Justice and the Prime Minister can be arrested under the Public Order Act. I challenge any lawyer in this country to tell me if according to the Public Order Act the Chief Justice cannot be arrested in his slippers, and the Prime Minister in his pyjamas. This is in the Public Order Act. I have studied it many times. So, when

Annex 116 Mauritius Legislative Assembly, Reply to PQ No. B/967 (20 Nov. 1979)

5023 Oral Questions

20 NOVEMBER 1979

Oral Questions

5024

Mr. Jagatsingh: The hon. Member is quoting from the Constitution. As far as I know, I sought legal advice and this is the advice I have got and I have given to the House.

CHA HOUSES — ALLOCATION

(No. B/964) Mr. O. Gendoo (Third Member for Port Louis Maritime and Port Louis East) asked the Minister of Housing, Lands & Town & Country Planning whether, in regard to the allocation of Central Housing Authority houses, he will state:

- (1) his policy; and
- (2) if priority will be given to the eligible persons living in Plaine Verte and Camp Yoloff for houses built there.

Mr. E. François: Sir,

(a) the policy is laid down in a paper which is being circulated.

(Appendix VIII)

(b) This policy will be followed strictly.

CONSUMER COOPERATIVES

(No. B/965) Mr. O. Gendoo (Third Member for Port Louis Maritime and Port Louis East) asked the Minister for Prices and Consumer Protection whether he will say when essential commodities will be delivered direct to consumer co-operatives and give a list of those commodities.

Mr. Virah Sawmy: Sir, delivery will start as soon as the financial and other arrangements are completed. The essential commodities will include to begin with rice, flour, sugar, edible oil, laundry

Mr. Jagatsingh: The hon. Member and toilet soap, split peas and eventually

"NO PARKING" AREAS — PORT LOUIS — TOWING AWAY OF VEHICLES

(No. B/966) Mr. O. Gendoo (Third Member for Port Louis Maritime and Port Louis East) asked the Minister of Works whether, in regard to the proposed towing away of vehicles on "No Parking" areas in the commercial centre of Port Louis, he will say what decision has been taken following the recommendation of the Joint Traffic Committee of the Municipality of Port Louis.

Mr. Bussier: Sir, the matter is being discussed with the Police authorities and the Ministry of Finance, in as much as it involves purchase of new equipment and recruitment of additional personnel.

Mr Gendoo: Does the hon. Minister think that the towing away of vehicles will improve the traffic conditions in the centre of Port Louis?

Mr. Bussier: This is being done in many countries.

DIEGO GARCIA — RETURN TO MAURITIUS

(No. B/967) Dr. B. David (Second Member for Belle Rose and Quatre-Bornes) asked the Prime Minister whe ther, in view of the fact that the militarization of Diégo Garcia is a serious threat to peace in the whole of the Indian Ocean, he will state:

(1) if there are any indications that Diégo Garcia will soon be returned to Mauritius; 5025 Oral Questions

20 NOVEMBER 1979

Oral Questions

5026

- (2) whether he will show greater political will to recuperate Diégo Garcia and whether he will make a statement thereon;
- whether he has already discussed the Diégo Garcia issue with the United States Government;

If so, what has been the outcome of the discussion.

If not, will he initiate immediate negotiations thereon and, if not, why not; and whether he will say when and with whom he last discussed the Diégo Garcia issue and with what result.

The Prime Minister: Yes, Sir. The answer is as follows:

- (a) The islands will be returned to Mauritius if the need for the facilities there disappeared. How soon this will be done, I cannot say.
- (b) The Government believes that the best way of trying to recuperate Diégo Garcia is by patient diplomacy at bilateral and international levels, and no opportunity is lost towards this end.
- (c) The United States Government is aware of our stand on this issue and we shall no doubt press our view point when opportunity arises.
- (d) It is difficult to give precise dates, but whenever opportunity arose, discussions took place with the United Kingdom.

Mr. Bérenger: Sir, the last part of the question was whether he will say when and with whom he last discussed the Diégo Garcia issue. Can the hon. Prime Minister confirm that he discussed that issue this morning with Vice Admiral Foley who has just flown to Mauritius in a military plane?

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend is full of irrelevancies, Sir.

MULTINATIONALS OPERATING IN MAURITIUS

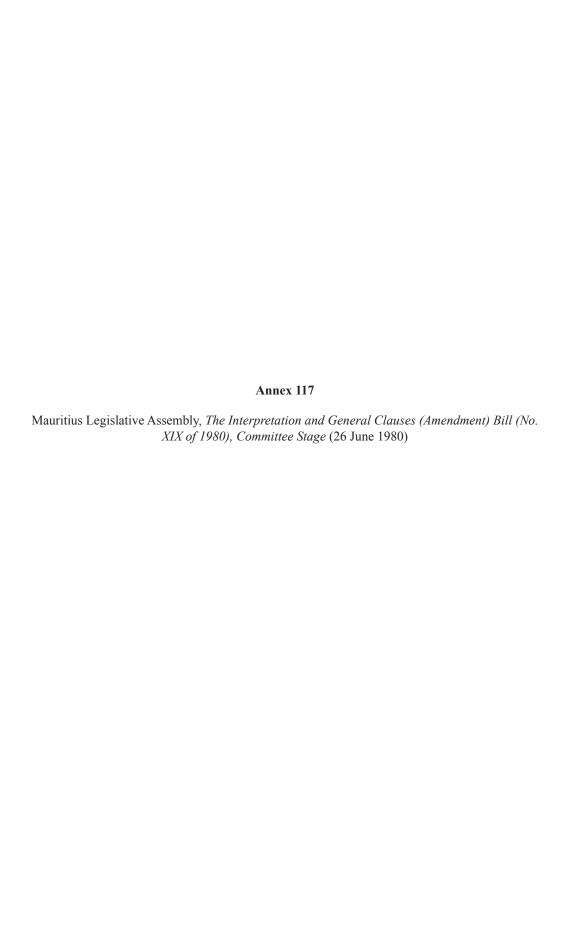

(No. B/968) Dr. B. David (Second Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes) asked the Minister of Finance whether, in regard to the multinationals operating in Mauritius, he will state —

- (1) their names;
- (2) the names of the members of the Board of Directors of each company;
- (3) the goods they produce and the countries where they are sold;
- (4) the nature of the control exercised by Government thereon; and
- (5) the amount of money which they took out of the country for each of the years 1975 to date.

Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo: Sir, the information is being compiled and will be circulated as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER — PUBLIC ENGAGEMENTS 20.11.79

(No. B/969) Mr. G. Fokeer (Third Member for Grand'Baie and Poudre d'Or) asked the Prime Minister whether he will give a list of his public engagements for Tuesday 20th November, 1979.

Motion

3316

(10.26 p.m.)

3315

The Attorney-General and Minister of Justice (Mr. Chong Leung): Mr. Speaker, Sir, I move that the Interpretation and General Clauses (Amendment) Bill (No. XIX of 1980) be now read a second

This Bill seeks to amend the Interpretation and General Clauses Act 1974 by remedying certain defects which have become apparent over the years whilst at the same time making provision for certain essentially technical matters.

In the present state of our law, the definition of "State of Mauritius" or "Mauritius" does not specifically include Tromelin and the amendment proposed in the Bill seeks to remedy this defect.

Moreover questions relating to the service of process on corporations generally and their representation in Court are not free from doubt. Clauses 7 and 8 of the Bill are designed to remedy this defect by making unambiguous provisions on that particular aspect of court procedure.

In the past, the prosecution of persons for offences under several enactments has given rise to avoidable difficulties. The proposed new section 46 of the Act which is embodied in clause 9 of the Bill seeks to put the law on a more rational basis by ensuring that, although a person may be prosecuted under several enactments for the same act or omission, he will nevertheless be punished only once for offences arising out of the same act or transaction.

The Bill further provides that on the issue of any licence, permit or authority, the Government may impose terms and conditions on the licence, permit or authority not only at the time of its issue or renewal but also during its currency,

New provision is made regarding certain corporations and other bodies. These new provisions are of an essentially technical nature. At present, certain bodies cannot operate because when they are just established, all the members thereof have not been or cannot be appointed. This Bill proposes to make provision for such bodies to operate notwithstanding vacancies when first established provided the requirements regarding quorum are satisfied.

Certain bodies may not operate in the absence of the Chairman. Provision is therefore made for these bodies to carry out their activities notwithstanding the absence of the Chairman, unless the Chairman is required to be present for the purpose of a quorum.

At present there are occasionally unavoidable delays in the reappointment of the members sitting on certain bodies. This prevents business from being transacted. This Bill therefore provides for the outgoing body to operate pending the appointment of the incoming body.

With these few remarks, Sir, I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr. Purryag rose and seconded.

(10.28 p.m.)

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. A. Jugnauth): Sir, this Bill again contains many provisions that are welcome by this side of the House and, there is that section 46 of the principal Act, wherein it is provided that:

"Where a person on the same fact may be committing more than one offence under different enactments, he should not be made to be punished twice."

It is very reasonable. As a matter of fact, I myself have experienced a case, where, on the same fact, even under one enactment, under the Public Order Act, someone was found with an offensive weapon in his possession with which he had threatened to strike somebody else. He was prosecuted for two offences:

- (1) for being in possession of an offensive weapon and
- (2) for intimidation with that offensive weapon.

I personally feel that this is not correct, this is not reasonable and in fact, it becomes a persecution, ultimately.

One other thing: it is provided also that, in case of societies and corporate bodies, anybody duly authorised, can represent that body. That is also a very good measure but, Sir, we, on this side of the House, feel that, in section 3 of this Bill which deals with the definition of "State of Mauritius", there is a great omission on the part of those who have drafted this Bill; and, if it is, in fact, done purposely, it is a policy matter, well we believe that those who have done it must take the blame for it. Because we think, on this side of the House, that in the definition of "State of Mauritius" wherein we are now adding the word "Tromelin", we believe that we should have gone further and added "Chagos Archipelago ".

Sir, I do not want to go into the whole history of the Chagos Archipelago, but we know that there have been certain deals between the Government of this country when it was a colony and before independence was granted to this country, and the British Government. There was an Order in Council, by which the Chagos Archipelago was taken away from the territories forming part of Mauritius, and it has since been called the British Indian Ocean territory. There has been a lot of controversy on that, and at the beginning, we know the explanation that has been given by the Rt. Hon. Prime Minister as to what was the real transaction concerning this. We were made to understand, at one time, that we had all our rights preserved over these islands and that, as a matter of fact, only certain facilities had been granted. Well, ultimately, as time went on, we were told finally that, in fact, there has been a sale and what not; but one thing is certain -- this is very clear to everybody in this House and the country at large, this has been mentioned throughout - that in fact, there is nothing in writing, that everything was done verbally. Therefore so far as we are concerned, we understand the position to be that the only thing that there is in writing is that Order in Council, nothing else! And that is why we maintain that, being given that we were still a colony, and being given the United Nations Resolution, that, before a colony is granted its freedom, the power which had colonised that country has no right to extract any part of its territory, therefore we consider that it was something completely unilateral and it has no validity whatsoever; and we, in the Opposition, have made it very clear, we have even written to the British Government, stating what is our position in the MMM, and that if ever we come to power in this country, what stand we are taking as regards the Chagos Archipelago. When Mr. Luce was here recently, I conveyed this very clearly to him and I even insisted that he should see to it that, even now as it is, we be allowed to use all facilities — except for Diego Garcia, where there are certain military installation, at least for the time being — that we be allowed even to make use of the other islands where there is no military installation. I can say that Mr. Luce listened to me with great attention and even promised me that he was going to raise this matter with his Government. I hope that, later on, we will hear from the British Government, we will know what is their stand concerning this matter.

Therefore, Sir, we believe that we will not be doing a good service to our country and to the generations that will be coming, if we ourselves to-day, commit that mistake of omitting, from the description of the "State of Mauritius", the Chagos Archipelago.

For this reason, I want to make it very clear that at the Committee stage, I am going to move that this also be inserted in the description of the Mauritian territory. Thank you Sir.

(10.39 p.m.)

Mr. T. Servansingh: (Third Member for Port Louis South & Port Louis Central) Sir, I shall speak on clause 3 of this Bill, about the amendment which the hon. Leader of the Opposition proposes to introduce at Committee stage. Sir, I am sure that there can be a lot to say about future power politics in the Indian Ocean, about keeping Indian Ocean a zone of peace and so on; but the point I would like to make to-day is that when we are talking of the definition of the national territory, we, on this side, want that the Chagos Archipelago should be included in this definition of ...

Mr. Speaker: It should be better if the point could be taken at the Committee stage, when the motion has been made, then the hon. Member would explain.

(10.40 p.m.)

Mr. Chong Leung: Mr. Speaker, Sir, the Leader of the Opposition has stated that there has been an omission in the definition of the State of Mauritius, because Diego Garcia has not been included in that definition. First of all the definition of the State of Mauritius is wide enough to cover any island which forms part of the State of Mauritius. In section 2 of the Interpretation Act No. 33 of 1974, State of Mauritius includes:

- the islands of Mauritius, Rodrigues, Agalega and any other island comprised in the State of Mauritius;
- (2) the territorial sea and the air space above the territorial sea etc. etc.

But the main reason why it has not been included ...

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Minister. This point will be taken at the Committee Stage, because many Members are going to raise the same point. The Minister will have time to answer.

Mr. Chong Leung: I thought that if I could dispose of it once and for all, it would be better.

Mr. Speaker: All the arguments of the Opposition have not been canvassed.

Mr. Chong Leung: I accept your ruling.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill read a second time and committed.

THE LABOUR (AMENDMENT) BILL (No. XX of 1980)

(10.42 p.m.)

The Minister of Labour and Industrial Relations (Mr. R. Peeroo): Sir, I beg to move that the Labour (Amendment) hill be read a second time.

Sir, in 1965, the Termination of Contracts of Service Ordinance, which was afterwards incorporated in the Labour Act 1975, was amended to allow an employer to deduct from severance allowance payable to a worker the share of contributions made by the employer to any pension scheme or provident fund set up for the benefit of a worker. Since 1978 when contributions started to be made to the National Pensions Scheme, deduction of the employer's share of contributions continued to be made.

Many employees became redundant recently, particularly in the construction industry, and to those who joined just before or any time after contributions started to be made to the National Pensions Fund, practically no severance allowance was paid because the employers' share of contributions exceeded the severance allowance payable in such

The Government is aware that redundant employees may face some difficulties in securing another job and that it is essential that they get a lump sum payment to tide them over their temporary financial problems.

With this aim in view, the Government has decided that an employer's share of contributions to the National Pensions Fund will no longer be deductible from the severance allowance payable to a worker on termination of his employment. Instead, the worker will be assured payment of a severance allowance equivalent to one quarter of a month's pay for workers employed monthly, or eight days' pay for other categories of workers, for every year of continuous service with an employer.

The normal severance allowance rate of half a month or fifteen days' remuneration will continue to be paid for any period during which contributions have not been made to the National Pensions Fund. This normal rate will also be paid in full on that part of the salary of a worker on which contributions are not payable under the National Pensions Act 1976. At present, no contributions are paid on that part of the salary which is in excess of Rs. 1,200 a month.

Under the provisions of the Bill, a worker whose employment is terminated will therefore be entitled to his full severance allowance at the rate of half a month or fifteen days' pay for every year of service before he started contributing to the National Pensions Fund. The same rate of severance allowance will be payable on that part of the salary on which no contributions are made.

With regard to that part of the salary on which contributions are paid to the Fund, the worker will nevertheless be guaranteed a severance pay of a quarter month's salary or eight days' pay wages for every year of service.

There will be no change regarding contributions made to a private Occupational Scheme or Provident Fund or in cases of retirement.

26 JUNE 1980

Motion

Motion Mr. Venkatasamy: In clause 3 (a)

"Any person may appeal to the Minister"

Subsection (b):

"The Minister's decision on hearing the appeal"

but there is no mention about the decision on the appeal itself. There is a decision on hearing the appeal, but what about the decision of the Minister on the appeal make it better English it is being suggested that I should delete the word 'on,' and replace it by 'after'.

Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo: I think, to

Clause 3, as amended, ordered to stand part of the Bill.

The title and enacting clause were agreed

The Bill was agreed to.

The following Bills were considered and agreed to:

- (1) The Intermediate and District Courts (Criminal Jurisdiction) (Amendment) Bill (No. XVI of
- (2) The Courts (Amendment) Bill (No. XVIII of 1980).

(1.20 a.m.)

THE INTERPRETATION AND GENERAL CLAUSES (AMENDMENT) BILL (No. XIX of 1980)

Clauses 1 and 2 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 3 (Section 2 of the Principal Act amended)

Motion made and question proposed " that the clause stand part of the Bill"

Mr. Jugnauth: Sir, I move for the following amendment in clause 3: that the word 'Tromelin'" be deleted and re-placed by the words "'Tromelin' and Chagos Archipelago ' ".

Mr. Doongoor: Sir, I also want to move an amendment to add to what the hon. Leader of the Opposition said; that "Seychelles" also should be included in this. (Laughter)

Mr. Jugnauth: When we have an amendment, Sir, my hon. Friend wants to move another amendment; it will come

The Chairman: May I point out to Hon. Doongoor that Seychelles is an independent country, we cannot have this amendment?

Mr. Chong Leung: On a point of order, Sir, when the hon. Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Power, Fuel & Energy proposed an amendment to include Seychelles, some Members have laughed I do not think that this is a laughing

Mr. Jugnauth: Sir, I am on my feet, I have moved an amendment and I have not finished.

The Chairman: If the hon. Member has not finished, he may continue.

Mr. Jugnauth: Sir, I will explain why I am moving this amendment; we all know that the Chagos Archipelago forms part of the territory of Mauritius; hat, before independence was granted this country, this part of our Mauritian erritory had been excised by the British government unilaterally. I say "uniaterally", because, as I said a moment go, when we were having the second rading of this Bill, those who repreented Mauritius then, were not repreentatives of a sovereign country. We were still a colony and, as we know, the British Government, before it gave independence to this country, had no right whatsoever to dismember the territory hat belonged to Mauritius; for this reason, we maintain that we have all rights on the Chagos Archipelago, specially when we know, it has been said in this House and outside by the Rt. Hon. Prime Minister that, as a matter of fact, only certain rights were granted to the Britishers over these islands. Even at one time a period was mentioned, and we were told that we had reserved all our nghts all round the island, over the islands; all the minerals that would be found, we were even told, could be exploited by Mauritius. The more so, we have been told that there is no written agreement whatsoever between this country and Great Britain. So far as we are aware, Sir, there is but an Order in Council which has created the British Indian Ocean Territory. Some people are speaking of Seychelles, but we know that there are some islands belonging to Seychelles, which were also excised in the same manner, but which Seychelles has recuperated and which have been given back to the State of Seychelles. Therefore, as I have said before, so far as the Opposition is concerned, we have made our position very, very clear, vis-à-vis the British Government and, in fact, I discussed this matter with Mr. Luce. For this reason, we are coming forward with this amendment. We know, on different occasions, there had been statements made by the Members on the other side. There have been even campaigns made on the question of Diego Garcia, outside and for all intents and purposes, we have even been told, in the past, by the Prime Minister: "What do you expect me to do? Take a boat or to take guns and go and take Tromelin and Chagos and whatever it is ?" Therefore what we are saying is that, for whatever it is worth, I think we will be asserting our rights by doing what I am suggesting: adding, to the definition of Mauritian territory the Chagos Archipelago. Because, if we, to night, reject this, I think the whole nation realises that, in so far as the recuperation of these islands in future is concerned, how difficult we are going to make our own position in the international forum and vis-à-vis Great Britain and the United States.

Therefore I strongly appeal to all the Members on the other side. This is not a partisan question: this is something very serious and very important, something which has to do with the sovereignty and the territory of our country. We will appeal to them to take it as seriously as possible; this vote that we will be taking tonight will be of very great importance for this country, and I hope that my Friends on the other side do realise the importance of this matter.

Mr. Bhayat: Sir, it is very sad that in this House, at this very late hour, we are taking such a serious matter so lightly. This is not a laughing matter and I hope Members will listen carefully to what we are saying because, this very week in the Lok Sabha — and the Prime Minister will be glad to hear this — this very week in the Parliament in New Delhi, a Parliamentary Question has been put by a Member of the Assembly as to what stand has Mauritius taken regarding the return of Diego Garcia? And in the Lok Sabha, Mr. Chairman, we do not hear wishy-washy answers, like "As far as I know, I do not know". A very serious answer will, I am sure, be given there.

(Interruption)

By the Indian Government, of course we have to say, from information that they will receive. I do not know where they will get the information but they will give information and Ministers there will come to know about it. If they do not come to know about it, I will communicate the reply of the Minister concerned. I am sure that the reply will make Mauritius the laughing stock of the whole of India and of the whole of this region! This is why I have said this is a very serious matter and we ought not to take it so lightly.

Having said this, Mr. Chairman, we have seen hon. Doongoor coming and saying that he will propose an amendment to include Seychelles in the territory of Mauritius. This is so laughable that I do not want to spend any time on this, except to say that Seychelles is so much so a sovereign country, and was so much so a soveriegn country in 1965 - there was an attempt to excise the islands belonging to it, in 1965, at the same time as the Chagos Archipelago was excised. There were the islands of Farguhar, Aldabra and two other islands - through the efforts of the Government of Seychelles which many Members of Government do not seem to like, through their intervention in international forum, these four islands have been returned to them. There is no question of sovereignty of the British Indian Ocean Territory. There is only one document purporting to create the British Indian Ocean Territory and it is fhe Order in Council published in England on the 8th November, 1965 and reproduced under the signature of the Colonial Secretary, Mr. Tom Vickers, on the 30th of November 1965. It is only reproduced here for general information, and in fact it says so, "for general information, this is the Order in Council that has been passed in Westminster". But, we, in this country, we have never accepted this. We have always challenged this on the ground that, as a country which was on the verge of becoming independent. there is a very clear United Nations resolution that the Colonial power has no right to excise any part of a Colony before granting independence! This has been said, this is being repeated again today, by the Leader of the Opposition; and when we say it, we do not say it in the air Britain knows about it, England knows about it and the United States know about it! If they did not know about it, they would not have sent Mr. Sheridan to Mauritius! Everybody knows what happened! When Mr. Sheridan came to Mauritius last year, sent by the British Government and received by the Prime Minister officially, in his campement, given an official car, given a Police escort, given an interpreter, officially here, sent by the British Government! For what purpose ?

The Prime Minister: To help the people.

1 June

(1.35 a.m.)

Mr. Bhayat: To help the people! To come and do what we called an act of treason! To ask Mauritians to remounce their right to return to their country! This, to me, is an act of treason! Mr. Sheridan, when he came here, he committed an act of treason!

Mr. Sheridan, when he came here, he committed an act of treason! Anybody who helped him, was not helping the people; he was helping Sheridan to commit an act of treason, to induce Mauitians to commit an act of treason, to enounce their sacred right, to renounce heir right recognised internationally, to have their land, to belong to their land, and to own their land, and to be sovereign on their land! If the BIOT was soverign, as some Ministers are trying to say, why did they send Mr. Sheridan? Why did the Prime Minister have to give help to Mr. Sheridan, to get him to get these poor people to sign these papers, to renounce? And they have not renounced! The Prime Minister has not answered to several PQs which were put to him; he played the ignorant, the person who did not know anything, as usual, when he wants to hide things to the House! But today, here, we, the Opposition, we want not only the Members of this House, not only the people of this country, but the world at large, more particularly all the people of this region; India, Pakistan, Australia, Madagascar, Seychelles, Comores, Tanzania, all the people in this area to know that we are laying claim to what is by right ours! We are not going to give it up and we are proposing that, within the State of Mauritius, we should say that Mr. Sheridan has failed! Whoever sent him here has failed, and whoever wanted to help him to renouce our right has failed! So far we still recognise the Chagos Archipelago as still belonging to us and we want this to go on fecord in this Bill here! Thank you, Sir.

Mr. Servansingh: I think after my Friend, Kader Bhayat, has spoken, I must also express my deception at the fact that when this matter has been taken up in this House, some people have found tright to make jokes about this. I think this is a very important matter, and 1 know that all of us here realise how important it is.

Mr. Speaker, the only point I would like to make is that this question of the Chagos Archipelago is a very delicate matter. For we all know, international political reasons, for reasons of the super powers, for reasons which are much beyond our control as our country is isolated in the Indian Ocean. But what I would like to say this morning is that what we have to do in Parliament, while we add the Chagos Archipelago in the definition of our national territory, is to affirm the right of Mauritius to this country, and I would go as far as to say, that I believe the Government which is in power at any time in this country, has the right, is perfectly free, to have a policy, as far as the Indian Ocean is concerned. A Government which is in power, democratically elected, has the right to define a policy which it wants towards the Indian Ocean. Just as we have seen the Government of Australia once, when the Labour Government was in power, taking the position that the Indian Ocean should be a zone of peace. And when a Labour Government succeeded this Government, they changed their position. So I would go as far as to say that I believe a Government, which is in power in Mauritius, has the right to choose its policy towards the Indian Ocean. But I only ask in the name of all Mauritians, I ask in the name of the youth of Mauritius, I ask in the name of generations to come, that we should give that generation which is coming, that we should give the next Government that is coming, a chance to claim its right over what is our territory. a chance to define another policy which might not be the same policy as this one. This is the only claim that we want to make when we say that we should include in the definition of the national territory, the Chagos Archipelago, Mr. Chairman. I know the line that will be taken is that it is understood, by the general definition that we already have, that the Chagos Archipelago forms part of our national territory. But we know that this is a matter of controversy, that tomorrow another Government might have to go to the International Court to fight this matter, to fight this case, and this is why we insist that this be included formally in the definition of the national territory. As I said, in respect for democracy, in respect for the next Government we will choose, in respect for the choice of future generations, I think we cannot fail, whether we are on this side of the House, or whether we are on the other side of the House, to add this archipelago to our definition of the national territory. Mr. Chairman, I have made my point. Thank you very much.

The Minister of Economic Planning and Development (Mr. R. Ghurburrun): Mr. Chairman, years ago, I was the first person to have raised my voice, when I was the High Commissioner of Mauritius in New Delhi, that Mauritius should take this issue to the Hague, and I thought Mauritius had got a right to this land, and if we took the matter to the Hague, we were sure to win it. From that time to this day, I have not changed my mind. There is no doubt that, when the islands were excised, it was done through an undue influence. England was a metropolis, we were a Colony. Even all our leaders who were there, even if they consented to it, their consent was viciated. because of the relationship. The major issue was to gain independence, and therefore the consent was viciated, there was no consent at all. There is no doubt that everyone here would like this country to come back to the State of Mauritius; but there is unfortunately — and now I am appealing to the lawyers to see the legal issue about it — it is, as yet we have a claim one day I am sure we are going to get back this country. But at the moment, it is still with Great Britain. Today we have a very valid claim; unless we would have vindicated that claim, it won't be serving any purpose, if we were merely to add it.

(Interruption)

What we want to add here is what we own, Tromelin, which has never been excised; this is why we are putting it there. But this has been excised. I don't think it would, in the long run, do any good. The point I wanted to make, not only for record here, but for those outside also, is: even if it is not included here in this Act today, let it be known to every. one that it won't cause any prejudice to a claim we may have ! It is not by a tacit acceptance that we are giving it up. Our claim is there and one day, I very much hope and I can join any number of Members when the time comes; I am, prepared to go and fight this case at the Hague when the time comes! But then, we have to have the sanction of Government. We can't go and fight a case in the Court, unless you get the sanction of the Government. But so long as this is not done, I think it would be a bit futile for us to add this.

I would ask the Opposition, which has got very able lawyers there, to consider that very calmly. I have been giving some thought to this matter; because if I was satisfied that this was going to prejudice our case in the long run, I would have voted for this; but I don't want to take any step that is going to prejudice our claim in the future. That is why I am making my point, that if we don't include t today, it should not be constructed as tacit acceptance; because, I very much hope, the time is not very far away when we shall go and claim this. I am confident that we shall claim this land and this land will come back to us. Thank you, Sir.

M. Bizlall: M. le président, je me suis mis debout pour empêcher le secrélaire parlementaire de faire une gaffe au inveau du parlement. Je lui demanderai, bien humblement, de ne pas insulter la République des Seychelles en venant proposer que les Seychelles soient attachés au territoire de l'île Maurice. Il s'est mis debout, j'ai cru un instant qu'il allait venir avec cette motion.

Je voudrais attirer l'attention du ministre du plan en particulier, qui a parlé sur le Chagos Archipelago, en ce qui concerne son inclusion avec Tromelin et Agalega, comme territoires de l'île Maurice. M. le président, faudra-t-il se rappeler que la France a déclaré que Tromelin lui appartient, que la France a des soldats à Tromelin, que la France a fait des développements économiques à Tromelin ? Pour la France, Tromelin n'est pas un territoire mauricien, c'est un territoire fraçais. Mais cela n'a pas empêché le Gouvernement mauricien d'inclure, avec Agalega, Tromelin comme étant partie de notre territoire. Moi je crois que la même politique adoptée par ce Gouvernement en ce qui concerne Tromelin, devrait être étendu en ce qui concerne le Chagos Archipelago. Demain ce sera une loi - est-ce que le Gouvernement va prétendre que la semaine prochaine il pourra mettre le pied à l'île Tromelin et revendiquer ses droits là-bas ? Le Gouvernement est en train de rêver, si le Gouvernement pense qu'il pourra récupérer Tromelin en l'incluant dans le territoire mauricien! Mais le Gouvernement a jugé, quant même, utile de le faire, bien que la France a exigé des droits sur Tromelin et se trouve en opposition directe avec le Gouvernement mauricien. Je vois mal comment le Gouvernement mauricien peut inclure Tromelin, et ne pas inclure l'archipel des Chagos!

(1.50 a.m.)

Mr. Doongoor: I want to remind the House - and you must remember also Mr. Chairman, you formed part of the delegation which left in 1977 for the United Nations - that at the last session of our work at the State Department. there were eleven countries represented. I voiced my opinion there concerning Diego Garcia. I stated that the occupation by the United States, of Diego Garcia, is a threat to peace in the Indian Ocean, and that it was the wish of the people and of the Government of Mauritius to recuperate that part of the territory of Mauritius, which is Diego Garcia. I did not stop there, Mr. Chairman. Recently I attended the conference held in Zambia where were present the President of the Labour Party, the Second Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes, and my Friend, Mr. Fokeer. They both witnessed my stand at the conference, and heard what I said: that the occupation of Diego Garcia by the United States was resented by the Mauritian public. We don't feel, Mr. Speaker, that we are in complete security. What has been the history around the excision of Diego Garcia? What I would like to see, and the public would like to see, is a copy of the agreement between the Mauritian Government, the British Government, and the United Nations, laid on the Table of the Legislative Assembly, so that more light be thrown on this issue. Mr. Chairman, when I mentioned that Seychelles also should be included in our territory, I must go far back to 1956, when I was still a student of Standard VI, when I was studying geography. I was thirteen at that time, Mr. Chairman. And through the study of geography I learnt that the dependencies of Mauritius were the Seychelles, Rodrigues - that both Mauritius and the Seychelles formed part of the territory of Mauritius, as also Diego Garcia. When I said that Seychelles should also be included in this, I did it with the intention of throwing more light on the matter, and informing Members when, how and in what circumstances Seychelles has been excised from the territory of Mauritius. Sir, not all the Members are against the retrocession of Diego Garcia. I myself, when I was in presence of this Bill, Sir, I was astounded to see...

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. Member, but I want to put something on record. I am given to understand that the Reporters of the Assembly have been working since 10.00 this morning. They want to help and they are extremely tired. So I am making an appeal that we should make the speeches as short as possible, to keep to the point, in order to help, so that the Reporters who are really doing a very big effort tonight, who have been put to really hard work since the beginning of this week, can cope with the work. They want to help but they ask for our collaboration. Mr. Speaker has asked me to pass on to you that piece of information. So, I make a special appeal to all Members to go straight to the point and to be short.

Mr. Doongoor: I wish also to remind hon. Members that when I recently went on a CAP Conference in Zambia, I appealed that this issue should be taken up at the Court of The Hague.

Mr. Chairman, we are not against the retrocession of Diego Garcia. We want Diego Garcia to be part and parcel of the territory of Mauritius. But we are given to understand that, after forty to fifty years, Diego Garcia will be given back to Mauritius. So, I mentioned that Seychelles also should be included, just to throw more light on it — how another dependency of Mauritius was excised.

Mr. Boodhoo: Mr. Chairman, we fully agree with the request of the Leader of the Opposition and I believe that this request will give a golden opportunity to Government to cast aside any doubt which has crept into the minds of the public.

Mr. Berenger: Mr. Chairman, Pll try to be as short as possible. Je considère qu'il est extrêmement triste, M. le président, que,le débat, comme l'a dit mon collègue Kader Bhayat, ait demarré, comme il l'a fait avec un front bench le Premier ministre, le ministre des finances le ministre des affaires étrangères - en courageant un membre qui proposait ce qui, en fait, constitue une insulte à la Republique des Seychelles. Il est heureux, que, peu après, le débat soit redevenu ce qu'il doit être, c'est-à-dire, un débat aussi fondamental, aussi important que n'importe quel débat à cette Chambre peut l'être pour le pays. Il ne peut pas y avoir une question de Parti. Nous parlons de notre pays. Je suis d'accord avec ce que mon collègue...

Sir Harold Walter: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Section 51(1) of our Standing Orders reads thus:

"Mr. Speaker, or the person presiding shall be responsible for the observance of the rules of order in the Assembly or in any Committee thereof and his decision upon any point of cert shall not be open to appeal and shall not be reviewed except upon a substantive motion made in the Assembly after notice".

Motion

26 JUNE 1980

Motion

3406

The Chairman: In point of fact ...

Sir Harold Walter: Wait a minute, Mr. Chairman. You ruled...

The Chairman: Please! I have the Chair. I have the responsibility of order in this House! Don't shout me down, please!

Sir Harold Walter: I did not shout.

The Chairman: Please! Now, I have over-ruled the question of Seychelles. It has been shelved. The Member just alluded to it.

Sir Harold Walter: That is not the point.

The Chairman: He has not asked me to reopen the question. He has not appealed against my decision. He has simply said that it was, according to him, an insult to a sovereign country. But that is en passant. He is coming to the gist of the case. But I don't think the hon. Member is doing anything against the Standing Orders.

Sir Harold Walter: Mr. Chairman, if you will allow me to finish. Your ruling was based on the fact that Seychelles, being a sovereign country, and we having no sovereignty over it, the question cannot be debated. I want the same principle to be applied regarding the amendment which has been brought to this Bill. This is British Overseas Territory, excised, Mr.

The Chairman: I am on my feet, Mr. Minister. This is why I expected you, as Minister, a long time ago to give some information to the House that it was some territory that formed part exclusively of some other territory. I was waiting for you. You did not do it. I can't help it if the Member now has the floor and speaks about it.

Chairman, by Order...

Sir Harold Walter: Therefore, on a point of order, your ruling is that it does not apply, Mr. Chairman? The Chairman: You are coming too

Sir Harold Walter: There are degrees in lateness.

Mr. Bérenger: I'll have to start again because he messed the whole thing, and I am very sorry for these ladies upstairs. Je répète...

Sir Harold Walter: Sir, I wish to state, on a point of order...

Mr. Bérenger: I am not giving way. I am also up on a point of order!

The Chairman: The hon. Member has the floor, if he does not want to give the Minister the floor, the Minister will have to wait until he has finished, then he will put to me his point of order. Then I shall be able to listen to the Minister. But, for the moment, he has the floor!

M. Bérenger: Je disais, M. le président, qu'il est triste que le débat ait démarté par une insulte, appuyée par le front bench d'en face, Riant, ricannant, alors que nous parlons du cœur même de notre pays, alors que nous parlons d'une republique indépendante qui est à deux pas de nous, M. le président!

Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo: 1 thought we had dealt with that.

M. Bérenger : Je le répèterai tant que j'aurais envie !

Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo: On a point of order, there is a Standing Order which says that unnecessary repetition is out of order.

Mr. Bérenger: Well, there is another Standing Order which says that interruptions like that are wasting the time of the House.

Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo: I was on a point of order, and I want the ruling of the Chair about it. Because I can't accept...

The Chairman: The Minister's point of order is absolutely receivable. I ask the Member to get to the gist of the matter now.

(2.05 a.m.)

Mr. Bérenger: If I am not stopped, I will do it. But I am stopped now and then by the front bench for no reason! So, I carry on, as usual.

Comme je le disais, M. le président, je suis d'accord avec le député, mon camarade Servansingh, qui a proposé que, pour aujourd'hui, on sépare deux choses—la question de la politique du Gouvernement vis-à-vis de la militarisation de l'océan indien, vis-à-vis de la militarisation de Diego Garcia ou non. Qu'on sépare cela aujourd'hui de la question de la souveraineté de l'Ile Maurice sur ces îles, sur cet archipel.

J'irai loin. Je dirai qu'au nom du pays, ne retournons pas sur ce qui s'est passé en 1965! Qui a fait quoi, laissons cela de côté! Au nom du pays, encore une fois! En passant, je rappelle, M. le président, j'ai écouté le ministre du développement dire qu'il fut parmi les premiers, alors qu'il était à New Delhi, à soulever la question! Non, il ne pourra pas me prouver, je suppose, qu'il a soulevé la question parceque nos dossiera sont complets pour la période avant 1974! Or, l'Inde, M. le président le Order in Council est fait le 8 novembre 1965 — dont M. Dinesh Singh est le Deputy Minister of State for External Affairs d'alors — le 18 novembre 1965, c'est-à-dire moins de deux jours après l'Order in Council—a élevé la voix disant que l'Angleterre n'a pas le droit de le faire! Que c'est contre les résolutions des Nations Unies! Et il prend la part d'un pays qui n'est même pas indépendant ! Je crois qu'il est important de le souligner, sans vouloir revenir, en ce qui nous concerne, sur ce qui s'est passé en vérité en 1965.

M. le président, j'ai écouté le ministre du développement nous dire que, si nous n'incluons pas, dans la définition de notre territoire de l'Etat mauricien, l'archipel des Chagos, "it will not be a tacit acceptance". It will be worse than a tacit acceptance that this has been done once and for all l M. le président, j'aimerais vous rappeler, le député Finlay Salesse dans une question B/510 de 1977 ou 1978.—je crois que c'est 1978 — demande au Premier ministre whether he will state the list of all territories which constitute the State of Mauritius? Le Premier ministre frépond :

"Sir, the following islands form part of the State of Mauritius: Mauritius and the surrounding islands, such as, Round and Flat islands, Rodrigues, Agalega, Tromelin and Cargados Carajos Archipelago".

C'est-à-dire, St. Brandon. Excluant Chagos — et ça c'est un précédent extrêmement grave, que des Français, comme Me Oraison, se permettent de nous faire la leçon, à nous, patriotes mauriciens; ça c'est déjà un précédent grave; ça peut être utilisé déjà contre nous, nonobstant ce que nous allons faire aujourd'hui! Ca, cest déjà un précédent grave, M. le prégdent! Heureusement - et personne je le dit aujourd'hui — le ministre des pêcheries m'écoute — qu'il y a d'autres aits que nous pouvons mettre devant bette Chambre et devant la communauté internationale pour nous défendre! Il y a à peine quelques mois, cette année même — que dis-je? quelques mois quelques semaines - nous avons voté in Fisheries Bill, qui a été proclamé, qui est devenu un Fisheries Act I Dans ce Fisheries Act, il est donné des pouvoirs an Principal Assistant Secretary du ministère des pêcheries de décider comhien de nets pourront être distribués in the Chagos Archipelago! Comment reconcilier ces deux choses? Nous avons applaudi le ministre, de ce côté de la Chambre: les Chagos forment partie de l'Etat mauricien! Ou est la logique dans tout cela ? . . .1

The Prime Minister: Fishing rights!

Mr. Bérenger: Fishing rights! Je continue, M. le président, j'en viens à 1974 — Hansard du 26 juin 1974 — le Premier ministre répond:

'Mauritius has reserved its mineral rights, fishing rights and landing rights and certain other things that go to complete, in other words, some of the sovereignty which obtained before, on that island'.

Je suis d'accord que c'est confus! Mais quand même, c'est quelquechose que nous pouvons utiliser, sur quoi vient se greffer le Fisheries Bill et la déclaration qui a été faite. Il y a d'autres déclarations qui ont été faites. Il y a cette déclaration du Premier ministre à cette question b/634 de 1978, de mon collègue Amédée Darga lui demandant whether he will say if the British Government has recognised the jurisdiction of Mauritius over the waters surrounding Diego Garcla '.

Le Premier ministre répond :

'The British Government has, since July 1971, recognised the jurisdiction of Mauritius over the waters surrounding Diego Garcia'.

Nous ne comprenons pas la réaction du Gouvernement! Je dis que - après le précédent contenu dans la réponse parlementaire B/510 - nous considérons que ce serait un véritable acte de trahison que de voter, aujourd'hui, un texte de loi incluant Tromelin et excluant spécifiquement l'archipel des Chagos! Ce serait un véritable acte de haute trahison! Ce n'est pas une question de politique de parti ; il est question de territoire national, de richesse nationale | Parceque, un jour, l'île Maurice exploitera - je ne parle pas du côté militaire de la chose mais en terme de ressources agricoles, en termes de poissons, en termes de mineraies au fond de la mer. M. le président je crojs que nous n'avons pas le droit de commettre cet acte de trahison! Je pourrais aller plus loin! Je pourrais citer le ministre des finances faisant campagne. Quand? Pas des mois de cela! En février, Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo promet une campagne internationale pour obtenir le retour de l'île à Maurice on parle de Diégo Garcia: Nous sommes dans une position de force pour réclamer le retour de l'île à Maurice", a dit Sir Veerasamy. C'est pourquoi nous avons le droit de dire et aux Anglais et aux Américains qu'ils devraient ficher le camp de Diégo Garcia. Là, n'est pas la question, pour le moment! Pour le moment, nous demandons seulement qu'un acte de trahison ne soit pas commis vis-à-vis de la nation, vis-à-vis de la patrie mauricienne et que cet amendement soit accepté without further discussions! Hier, apparemment, - qu'on me démente si je me trompe - un nombre de députés et de ministres travaillistes ont signé une petition qu'ils ont remis au Premier ministre. Enfin, il faut être logique avec soi-même! Comment peut-on signer une pétition hier, et aujourd'hui ne pas prendre position? Il ne faut pas en faire une question de parti; nous aurions souhaité que le Premier ministre vienne lui-même avec l'amendement; nous aurions souhaité que lui-même propose que l'archipel des Chagos soit inclus dans l'Etat mauricien! Ceci dit, M. le président, nous avons voulu ramener les débats audessus des partis. Je repète que ce ce que le ministre du plan et de développement économique a dit n'est pas correct. Ce serait pire qu'un tacit agreement si nous votions aujourd'hui! Ce serait pire que de ne pas avoir inclus les Tromelin! Inclure les Tromelin, en excluant les Chagos, serait pire que n'importe quoi! C'est pourquoi nous demandons au Gouvernement - sur cette question, au moins, puisqu'il y va du sort du pays, du territoire mauricien, du territoire national de ne pas en faire une question de parti, de prendre l'amendement - c'est un amendement qui n'appartient pas au MMM, c'est un amendement qui appartient au pays! Nous le mettons devant tous les partis qui sont à cette Chambre et nous proposons que ce soit le Premier ministre, lui-même, qui, au nom de l'île Maurice, propose l'amendement, M. le président l

Sir Harold Walter: Sir, I know that it is late; we are in the early hours of the morning, after a hard day's work and our nerves are at the end of their tether. Therefore, we get excited; we use invectives and we allow steam to be let off after several defeats. I am prepared to concede that on a psychological platform. But, Mr. Chairman, we are dealing here with a very important question which goes to the root of the interpretation of the law regarding the definition of the State and the law governing such definition. I know that, to go to the philosophy of it, would go a long time. So, I will come back to it in a minute. But, before I do that, I would like to place on record that it is the second time in this House that the Prime Minister is taken to task in a personal manner!

The hon Member, Mr. Bhayat, has considered it fit to tell the Prime Minister that, by acting in the way he acted, in the interests of the Ilois, he had committed an act of treason! I know that my Prime Minister, in the Sheik Hossen affair, has been called a murderer He has been called somebody who has set fire to a dwelling-house, who has treated the Police with all the names possible! Thank God, il y a encore des juges à Berlin! They vindicated the head of the SSS! Unfortunately, said under the parliamentary immunity, the Prime Minister could not do any thing about it! It is sad that to-day this voice has been re-echoed by somebody who sits on the front bench of the MMM, treating the Prime Minister of traitor! A man who has brought independence to this country! Who has given forty-two years of his life to the service of this country! Who has given an uplift to everybody here for the respect of their dignity! Who has given free education Who has made them what they are to-day Is that the man whom you call a traitor. When he was only acting in good faith when he was acting in the interests of the Ilois? What has happened to-day, Mr. Chairman? Is it not the same Sheridan who has been requested to defend the interests of the Ilois? So. where did the Prime Minister go wrong, Mr. Chairman? Now, you cannot have your cake and eat it! You cannot come and ask for compensation and say that 'I renounce all my rights to go there and, in the same breath, you come here and add to a Bill a territory over which you have no sovereignty! We have been questioned, Mr. Speaker! Why Tromelin is added? Tromelin has never been excised, Mr. Chairman! As early as 1956, this Government let Tromelin on lease to Mr. Britter. In 1956, when the French wanted to operate a meteorological station there, they asked for permission from this Government and they were granted it. For historical and juridical reasons, we are standing on firm ground ! But, Mr. Speaker, we do not believe dans les mirages de la pensée idéologique de certains! We only believe in dialogue! Tromelin is on the good way! Tromelin has been discussed at the highest possible level. The Prime Minister and the President of France! Am I to disclose here the contents of that conversation when the results are not final yet? You wait and see!

Now, Mr. Chairman, Diego Garcia: the statements of the Prime Minister have been quoted here, as if the Prime Minister has been saying a lie! What the Prime Minister has been saying all along is that at the moment that Britain excised Diego Garcia from Mauritius, it was by an Order in Council! The Order in Council was made by the masters at that time! What choice did we have? We had no choice! We had to consent to it because we were fighting alone for independence ! There was nobody else supporting us on that issue! We bore the brunt! To-day everybody wants to jump on that baudwagon! Many of those sitting opposite where were they when independence was being fought? Who were those who wanted independence? To-day, independence is a nice basket of fruit and everybody wants his share out of it! Mr. Speaker, when the excision took place, it became the British Overseas Territory and it is mentioned as such! When the discussions took place, it was made clear that the mineral rights, the fishing rights were preserved even employment of Mauritians on Diego García was promised but, unfortunately, the British who discussed with us, never told us that they were going to have a military base there! What they told us was that they wanted a station for weather purposes.

They wanted a station for fuelling, for their transport and their fleet, that is all. A communications base; the British told us that. As to how the British leased it to the Americans, that's another matter. I am not going to enter into the merits and demerits of the presence of this base there, because it goes to the security of the area. So what is wrong in the answers given by the Prime Minister on Diego Garcia? Is that an act of treason? Now, it was by consent that it was excised. Even that has been mentioned to Mr. Luce when he was here only two or three weeks ago. We mentioned it at the Lusaka Conference to Lord Carrington in the presence of Mrs. Thatcher, we said: "When do you think we can get back Diego Garcia?" Oh, you know it is on a lease, but we bear it in mind, we bear it in mind". Is that type of action, going to be conducive to a dialogue leading to the restitution of Diego when the time comes? There is no motive behind us! There is no hurry for us to get it back. We don't want to see another one coming to put himself there and say : "We want peace. but I enter Afghanistan with 80,000 soldiers"! Super powers again! I don't want to change one for the other. I don't want to be involved in it. We know why all these words are said; the louder they are said, the more beneficial they will be, we understand that. We are not going to play that game, Mr. Chairman, You ruled, Sir, that Seychelles was an independent country and, therefore, we had no sovereignty over it and therefore it could not be entertained. If this principle is acceptable, Mr. Chairman, then for the British Overseas Territory excised from Mauritius, your ruling must hold the same and must carry the same weight. I go further, Mr. Chairman: those who believe in the OAU - though they refuse to pair with me because I will go and vote against their policy, probably I would have been more useful here-will be interested to know that the wise men who founded the OAU when the three groups merged in Cairo, laid down a principle in the OAU Charter: that the frontiers inherited at the time of independence will not be disputed; and had there been such respect, Mr. Speaker, today we would not have seen the tearing away of Africa, we would not have seen blood all over Africa, we would not have seen this period of strike through which it is going. On these two principles, Mr. Chairman, I move that the question cannot be entertained.

The Chairman: Will the Minister of External Affairs say to this House whether the British, what you call it, the British Indian Ocean Territory forms part of the sovereign totally independent country or Sir Harold Walter: It forms part of Great Britain and its overseas territories, just as France has les Dom Tom; it is part of British territory there is no getting away from it; this is a fact, and a fact that cannot be denied; no amount of red paint can make it blue! It is not receivable, Mr. Speaker, in this light, there is no point of order.

(Interruption)

There is no point of order, Mr. Speaken any decision of the Speaker thereon shall not be opened to appeal.

(Interruption)

The Chairman: I know, I know and I am going to take my responsibility have ruled that the Seychelles beingna sovereign country, the question of site Third Member for Rose Belle, and Grand Port cannot be entertained. In the same way I regret that as the BIOT forms part of Britain and is therefore, an independent and sovereign State, this amendment is declared in receivable by me.

M. Biziall: Quand vous aviez rejete la motion que Seychelles soit inclus du territoire mauricien, il existait des preuves que Seychelles, effectivement, se trouve être un territoire indépendant; quand le ministre des affaires étrangères vient, par rapport à partir d'une motion, demander à ce que votre décision sur Seychelles soit étendue, en ce qui concerne les Chagos, la question que je me pose, M. le Président est : puisqu'il est prouv qu'avant 1965 les Chagos formaient partie du territoire mauricien, il faudrait que le ministre des affaires étrangères projuve que cet archipel n'est plus à l'Île Maurico et appartient à l'Angleterre! Est-ce-que le Gouvernement peut, par un document prouver ce que le ministre a avancé ?

Sir Harold Walter: Je réponds à cette question. L'hon. député a cité le ministre des affaires étrangères. Je réfère l'hon membre à l'autorité qu'un propre député de son parti a cité: the Order in Council where Diego Garcia has ben excised and forms part of British Oversess Territory.

The Chairman: This cannot be discussed. This is my ruling. I stand by it, whether it is right or not.

Motion

417

26 JUNE 1980

Motion

3418

(At this stage, the Members of the Opposition left the Chamber)

Clause 3 ordered to stand part of the Clauses 4 to 9 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

The title and the enacting clause were agreed to.

The Bill was agreed to.

The Labour (Amendment) Bill (No. XX 1980) was considered and agreed to.

THE NATIONAL PENSIONS (AMENDMENT) BILL (No. XIV of 1980)

Clauses 1 and 2 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 3 — Section 20 of the principal Act amended.

Motion made and question proposed: "that the clause stand part of the Bill".

Mr. Purryag: Sir, there is an amendment — I move that the words "the prescribed amount" be deleted and replaced by the words "the amount specified in the Second Schedule".

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 3, as amended, ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 4 to 9 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

First Schedule ordered to stand part of the Bill.

On Second Schedule

Mr. Purryag: Sir, I move that, in regard to Section 45A(3), the following paragraph be added: "(c) in such cases as may be prescribed".

Amendment agreed to.

Second Schedule, as amended, ordered to stand part of the Bill.

The title and the enacting clause were agreed to.

The Bill, as amended, was agreed to.

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY LABOUR WELFARE FUND (AMENDMENT BILL)

Clauses 1 to 3 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Sir Harold Walter: Mr. Chairman, it is sad that the Members of the Opposition have left the Chamber in such a shameful way. Sir, it is very serious, what I am going to say: each time they suffer a defeat, they are in that state. Probably none of them ever box — so they never learn how to take blows and to give as many.

The Chairman: It is their right to behave as they wish.

The title and the enacting clause were agreed to.

The Bill was agreed to.

The Fire Services (Amendment) Bill (No. XV of 1980) was considered and agreed to.

ORGANIZATION OF

AFRICAN UNITY

Secretariat

P.O. Box 3243

ORGANISATION DE L'UNITE

AFRICAINE

Secretariat

B. P. 3243

Addis Ababa

ASSEMBLY OF HEADS OF STATE AND GOVERNMENT SEVENTEENTH ORDINARY SESSION 1-4 July 1980 Freetown, Sierra Leone

AHG/Res. 99 to 101 (XVII)

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE SEVENTEENTH ORDINARY SESSION OF THE ASSEMBLY OF HEADS OF STATE AND GOVERNMENT

AHG/Res. 99 (XVII) RESOLUTION ON THE DIEGO GARCIA

The Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity meeting at its 17th Ordinary Session in Freetown, Sierra Leone from 1 to 4 July 1980,

Pursuant to article I, para 2, of the Charter of the Organization of African Unity, which stipulates "The Organization shall include the Continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa",

Considering that one of the fundamental principles of the Organization is the "respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of each state",

Aware of the fact that Diego Garcia has always been an integral part of Mauritius, a Member State of the OAU,

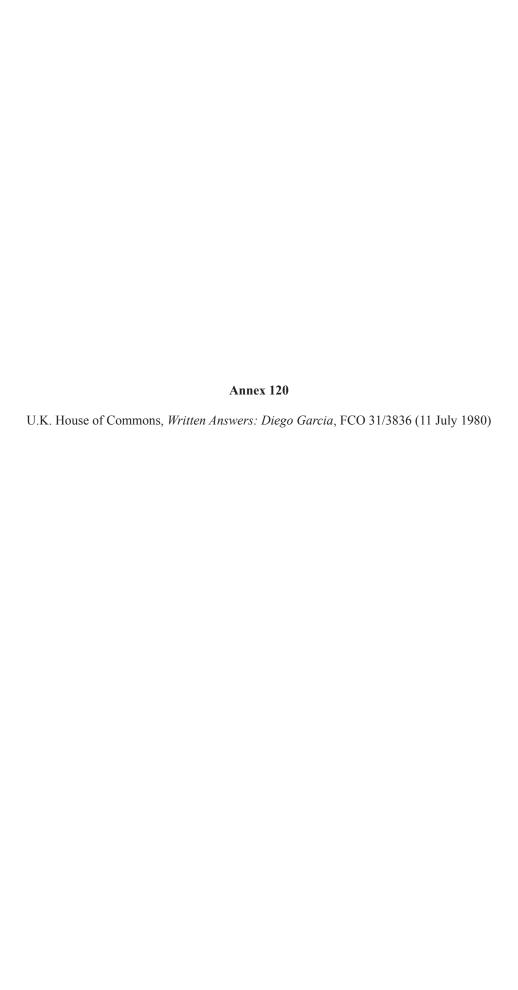

Recognizing that Diego Garcia was not ceded to Britain for military purposes,

 $\underline{\textbf{Realizing}} \ \ \textbf{the militarization of Diego Garcia is a threat to Africa, and to the } \\ \textbf{Indian Ocean as a zone of peace,}$

DEMANDS that Diego Garcia be unconditionally returned to Mauritius and that its peaceful character be maintained.

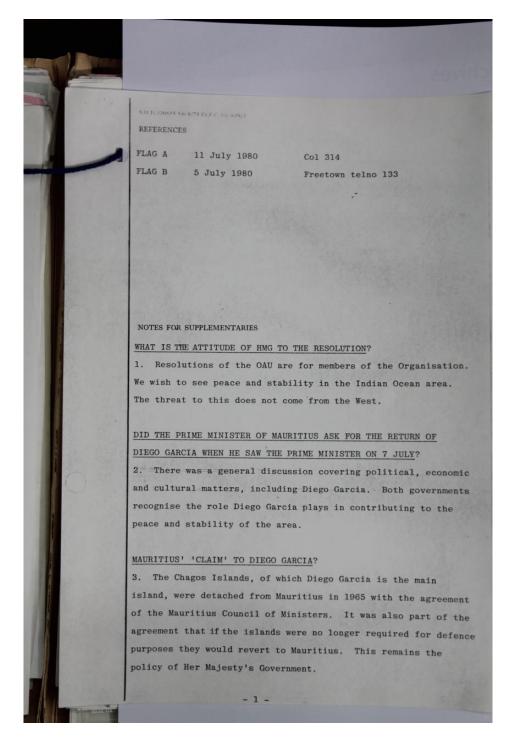

Annex 121 U.K. House of Lords, Parliamentary Question for Oral Answer: Notes for Supplementaries, FCO 31/2759 (23 July 1980)

	House of Lords
	PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION
	for ORAL answer on WEDNESDAY 23 July 8	c due . 8/
	E. A. Department
и	Please submit your draft reply (normal maximum 50 words) through an Under-Section and the Private Secretary to the large to reach this office by	THURSE THURSE
	The draft reply should be accompanied by full supplementary and background materia	1: see Diplomatic Service Procedure Volume 5 for guidance. Text of Question as follows:
и	†*The Lord Brockway — To ask Her Majesty's Government what has been their response to unanimous demand of the Organisation of African Unity that the island of Diego Gas should be returned to Mauritius and that bases and military installations in the Ind. Ocean be removed.	the rcia lian
	My Landa Han Majactula Covernment are sware of the Resolu	ition
	My Lords, Her Majesty's Government are aware of the Resolu on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit	y on y on ı	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
The second secon	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations from the Organisation.	y on
	on Diego Garcia passed by the Organisation of African Unit the 4th of July. They have received no representations fr	y on

4. That is for the Government of Mauritius.

HAS A SETTLEMENT REGARDING COMPENSATION YET BEEN REACHED FOR THE ISLANDERS RESETTLED IN MAURITIUS?

5. Her Majesty's Government have made an offer of £1.25m as compensation for displacement. We await the community's response. This offer is in addition to £650,000 paid in 1973 for resettlement of the families in Mauritius.

US PROPOSALS TO DEVELOP FACILITY ON DIEGO GARCIA?

6. Earlier this year we were consulted on minor improvements, eg improvement to the water supply and fuel storage. We have also held consultations with the Americans on further measures necessary to improve facilities on the Island. Details of these further improvements are still being refined.

(if pressed)

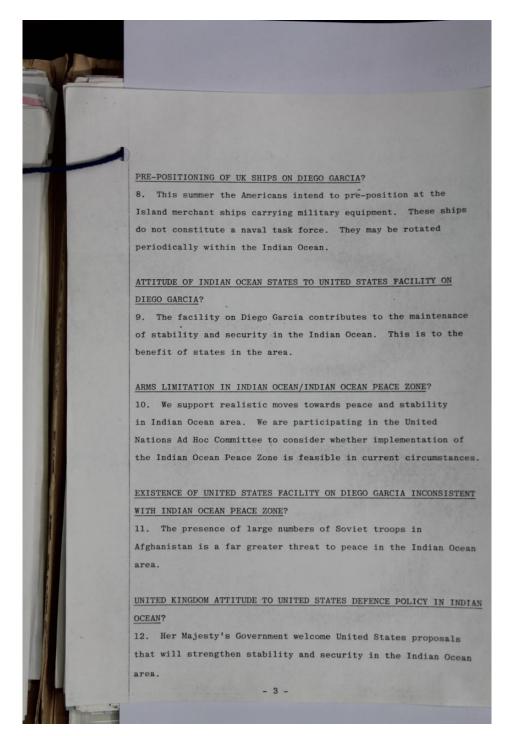

They include larger storage areas, better refuelling arrangements and increases wharfage.

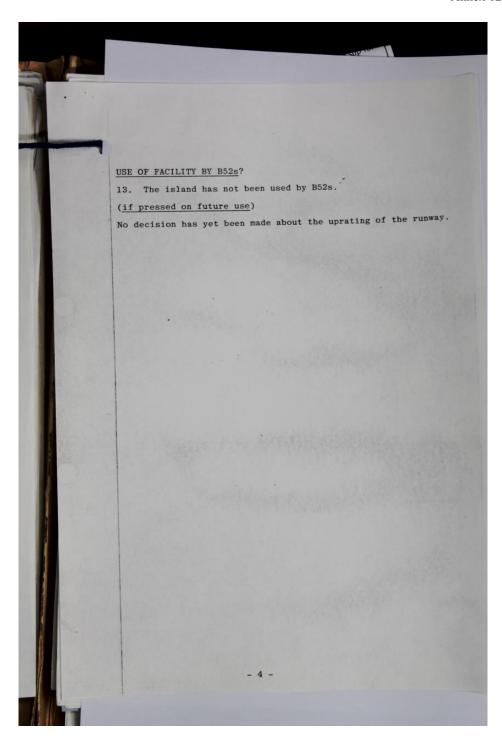

UK/US CONSULTATION ON USE OF DIEGO GARCIA?

7. The published 1976 Anglo-US Agreement establishes certain requirements for consultation about use of the facility at Diego Garcia. These requirements have not changed.

(if pressed)

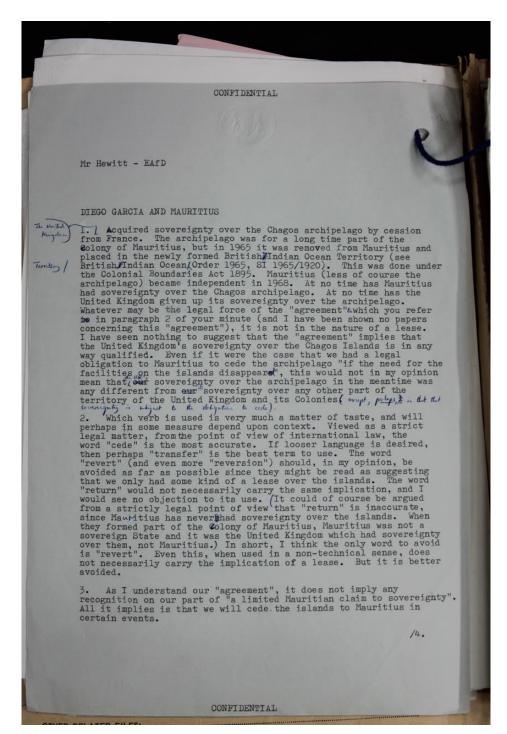

We are satisfied that the two sides have a clear understanding about the circumstances in which joint decision is required.

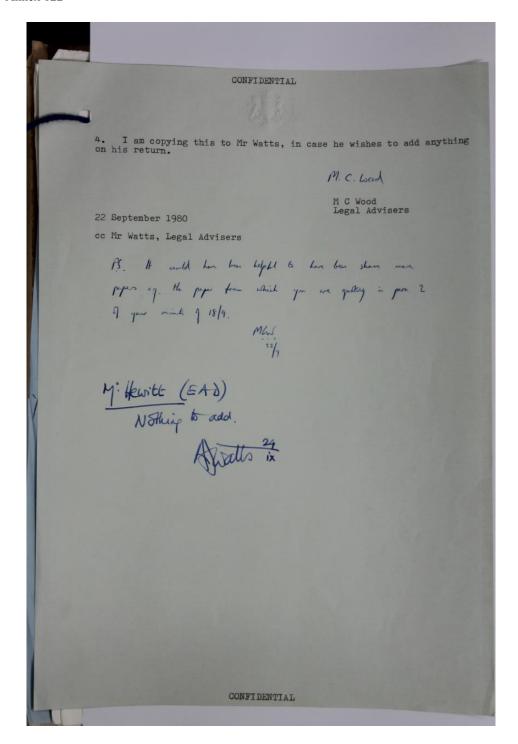

Annex 122

Letter from M. C. Wood to Mr Hewitt, FCO 31/2759 (22 Sept. 1980)

Annex 123 Mauritius Legislative Assembly, Reply to PQ No. B/1141 (25 Nov. 1980)

Oral Questions

CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO _ EXCISION

(No. B/1141) Mr. J. C. de l'Estrac (First Member for Stanley and Rose Hill) asked the Prime Minister whether he will give the reasons why, in 1965, he gave his agreement to the excision of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius.

The Prime Minister: Agreement was not necessary. We were a colony and Great Britain could have excised the Chagos Archipelago.

Mr. de l'Estrac : Will the hon. Prime Minister agree that the excision was done contrary to Resolutions of the United Nations?

The Prime Minister: It is as it was.

Mr. Boodhoo: Was the excision of these islands a precondition for the independence of this country?

The Prime Minister: Not exactly.

Mr. Bérenger: Since the Prime Minister says to-day that his agreement was not necessary for the "excision" to take place, can I ask the Prime Minister why then did he give his agreement which was reported both in Great Britain and in this then - Legislative Council in Mauritius ?

The Prime Minister: It was a matter that was negotiated, we got some advantage out of this and we agreed.

Mr. Bérenger: Can the Prime Minister confirm having said to the Christian Science Monitor this month the following:

"There was a nook around my neck. I could not say no. I had to say yes, otherwise the noose could have tightened,"

Could I ask him to confirm that he fact, he is referring to the referen lun which the PMSD was then requesting against independence?

The Prime Minister: Since my hon, Friend has raised it, let him digest it,

Mr. Boodhoo: We know that there was a delegation to London comprising all political parties in 1965. Rt. hon. Prime Minister inform the House to whom did the British officials first disclose their intention of excising these islands ?

The Prime Minister: There was a committee composed of people who attended the Constitutional Conference. Some of them are dead, except myself and my Friend, Mr. Paturau.

Mr. Bérenger: Can I ask the Prime Minister to confirm that in fact those who discussed with Mr. Harold Wilson when that excision was agreed to, the two culprits were himself and the Minister sitting very next to him?

The Prime Minister: We discussed this with a committee, not with Mr. Harold Wilson.

Mr. de l'Estrac : The Prime Minister has just said that Mauritius gave its agreement because we got some advantage; can we know the nature of that advantage?

The Prime Minister: We had about £ 3 m.

> TROMELIN ISLAND -REFUELLING BY MAURITIAN AIRPLANES

(No. B/1142) Mr. J. C. de l'Estrac (First Member for Stanley and Rose Hill asked the Prime Minister whether he will say if he has had discussions with the French Government with a view to allowing Mauritian airplanes to refuel at Tromelin Island en route to Agalega and back.

The Prime Minister: No, Sir. In fact, there is no need for such discussion since Tromelin is an integral part of the State of Mauritius.

Mr. Jugnauth: Can I ask the Prime Minister whether officially the Government of this country has made known to the French Government that this is the official stand of this country?

. The Prime Minister: We have put it on our map.

Mr. Bérenger: If there is no need to ask for the right to land at Tromelin island, because it forms part of the State of Mauritius, can I ask the Prime Minister whether he has any objection to himself, the Leader of the Opposition, myself and the Minister of External Affairs — if he gets in the Twin Otter of Air Mauritius—to having the Twin Otter of Air Mauritius fly to Tromelin in the very next days?

The Prime Minister: I don't know if arrangements can be made.

Mr. Boodhoo: Is the Rt. hon. Prime Minister in a position to explain to the House in what way the French are exploiting Tromelin island?

The Prime Minister: I cannot say.

CITÉ ROCHES BRUNES — SEWERAGE SYSTEM

(No. B/1143) Mr. J. C. de l'Estrac (First Member for Stanley and Rose Hill) asked the Minister of Housing, Lands and

Town and Country Planning whether he will give the reasons why, in spite of repeated requests no action has been taken in Cité Roches Brunes, Rose Hill, to solve the serious problems caused by the defective sewerage system.

Mr. E. François: Sir, I am advised by the CHA that the emptying of cesspits at Roches Brunes is already underway as a result of representations made by occupiers of the houses. Consideration is being given for the improvement of all pits in the estate.

Mr. de l'Estrac: Will the hon. Minister be honest enough to recognise that work has started after the question was put?

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. Member to withdraw that.

Mr. de l'Estrac : I withdraw the word "honest". Will the hon. Minister agree...

Sir Harold Walter: The hon. Member has to withdraw the whole question.

Mr. de l'Estrac: I am going to put another question, Sir. Will the hon. Minister agree that work has only started after the question was put to him last Tuesday?

Mr. François: I need prior notice of this question, Sir.

C.E.B. TRANSPORT WORKSHOP — REPAIRS OF PERSONAL STAFF CARS

(No. B/1144) Dr. J. B. David (Second Member for Belle Rose and Quatre Bornes) asked the Minister of Power, Fuel and Energy whether he will, for the benefit of the House, obtain from the C.E.B. the following information

Annex 124

Note from M. Walawalkar of the African Research Department to Mr Campbell of the East African Department - Diego Garcia: Research on Mauritian Government's Claim to Sovereignty, FCO 31/3437 (8 Oct. 1982)

SECRET

Verfla Mr Campbell - EAD

DIEGO GARCIA: RESEARCH ON MAURITIAN GOVERNMENT'S CLAIM TO

Reference JEB 040/2 F. PEIDEDIT 1 1/1/2 SOVEREIGNTY.

attached

1. I refer to your minute of 28 September.

(i) 1976 FCO 'Report'.

2. You will have seen a copy of my minute dated 30 September to L & RD, who have been unable to find the Note in question. They have however turned up a reference to it (see attached) on file HKT 243/436/1 Part D of 1976. L & RD believe that the Note itself may well be on Parts A, B or C of the same file, but apparently these have been with EAD for some time. You may therefore be able to put your hands on it.

3. If, as I suspect, however, the Note is indeed the same as that quoted in the footnotes of the recent Minority Rights Group Report, and speaks of "payments of compensation to the Mauritian government for loss of sovereignty* over the Chagos Archipelago" you might prefer simply to tell Mr Lesser that on the basis of information supplied, we are unable to identify the document he requests. requests.

(ii) The £3 million grant.

4. The £3 million grant was paid to Mauritius in recognition of the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago, not, as Mr Lesser states, as compensation for loss of sovereignty over it. This was our position in 1965 and is certainly our position now. Unfortunately, however, the office has not always been consistent in its pronouncements on the matter (cf. para.3 above), though probably the most potentially embarrassing past statement is that enshrined in Hansard 21 October 1975, (Written Answers, col.130):

"Mr Newens asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sums have been paid in compensation to the Seychelles and to Mauritius, respectively, for the surrender of sovereignty and other rights over Diego Garcia and other British territories in the Indian Ocean.

Mr Ennals: Grants amounting to £3 million were provided to Mauritius as compensation for the loss of sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago. A new international airport was constructed for Seychelles at a cost of about £6½ million as compensation for the loss of sovereignty over Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches".

5. In fact the £3 million grant was only one of the conditions under which Mauritius Ministers agreed to the separation of the Chagos Islands. In your reply to Mr Lesser you may find it useful to draw upon the following statement made on 23 June 1977 by the Secretary of State, Mr Luard (Hansard, Written Answers, col. 519-550):col. 549-550):-

"The

my italics

SECRET

CODE 18-77

SECRET

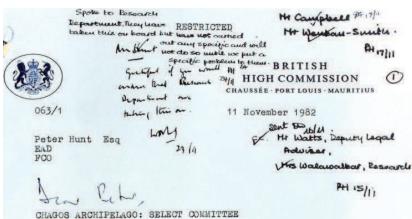

"The Mauritius Council of Ministers agreed to the detachment of the Chagos Islands after discussions which concerned the negotiation of a defence agreement between Britain and Mauritius - since terminated by agreement - and the grant of £3 million additional to the cost of compensating the landowners and a grant to resettle the islands' inhabitants. Understanding was also reached on rights to mineral, oil and fish resources and there was agreement that, in certain circumstances and as far as was practicable, navigational, meteorological and emergency landing facilities on the islands were to remain available to the Mauritius Government. In the event of the islands no longer being required for defence purposes it was agreed that they should revert to Mauritian jurisdiction".

- 6. Negotiations were lengthy and complex. Agreement in principle to the detachment was reached at a meeting with Mauritian Ministers in London on 23 September 1965. After the meeting, Ramgoolam proposed certain amendments to the meeting record in a manuscript letter dated 1st October. These were incorporated in the final record, which was cleared with him. The record was submitted with Colonial Office Secret Despatch no. 123 of 6 October 1965 (copy attached) to the Governor, Port Louis, for confirmation by the Mauritian Government. With certain provisos (regarding the eventual return of the islands to Mauritius, and regarding minerals and oil) the Mauritian Council of Ministers confirmed their agreement, which was notified to HMG in the Governor's secret telno.247 of 5 November. The provisos mentioned above were acknowledged by Colonial Office secret telno.298 of 8 November, which made clear that the Chagos Archipelago would remain under British sovereignty, that the islands were required for defence purposes, and that there was no intention of permitting prospecting on or near them.
- 7. No formal published agreement exists. In response to a parliamentary question, Ramgoolam informed the Mauritian Legislative Assembly in late November 1979 that:
 - "... it would not be in the public interest to release the terms and conditions of the agreement regarding the excision of Diego Garcia from the Mauritian territory. I should like to point out that there is no agreement as such on this issue. There is only a record of discussions that took place in London during the Constitutional talks in 1965. As this document is marked secret and in view of the general convention regarding the protection of secret documents it would not be proper to release the record of the discussions". (1'Express 24 November 1979).
- 8. A communique on the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago and the formation of BIOT was issued by the Chief Secretary's Office, Fort Louis, on 10 November 1965 (Mauritius at that stage not having achieved full self-government). A copy is attached. It announces inter alia that: "... the British Government has undertaken in recognition of the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius, to provide additional grants amounting to £3m. for expenditure on development projects in Mauritius to be agreed between the British and the Mauritius Governments. These grants will be over and above the allocation earmarked for Mauritius in the nextperiod of C.D. & W. assistance".

SECRET Reference 9. I should make the point that the consent of Mauritian Ministers to the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago in 1965 was sought for essentially political reasons, and at the insistence of the then Colonial Secretary, Mr Greenwood. Constitutionally, it was open to Britain, the colonial power, to detach the islands by Order in Council without that consent. 10. Since Mr Lesser intends his research for publication in a journal of international law you will no doubt wish to clear your answers to his questions with the Legal Advisers. Margrella M Walawalkar (Mrs) Research Department 8 October 1982 SECRET

Annex 125

Letter from J. N. Allan of the British High Commission in Port Louis to P. Hunt of the East African Department, FCO 31/3622 (11 Nov. 1982)

- 1. I wrote to you on 8 October telling you of the select committee which has been set up to examine the history of the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago in 1965. When I saw the Minister of External Affairs on 8 November he told me that the committee (which he is chairing) has still a good deal of way to go before it can issue its report. He hoped however that this would be available in January.
- 2. The committee is meeting in private and has the power to call witnesses including Ministers and ex-Ministers. At the moment they are receiving evidence from Sir G Duval who voluntarily agreed to discuss events in 1965. Later they will call the present Frime Minister Mr Jugnauth who of course was in London for the Mauritius Constitutional Conference in 1965 as deputy leader of the Independent Forward Block. Later they will call Sir Seewoosagur to give evidence. Later they will
- 3. It will only be after the evidence has been compiled that a decision will be taken as to whether to employ a jurist.
- 4. While there is nothing very alarming in all this at present I feel sure that you will wish to dust off the 1965 papers since we may well be faced with embarrassing assertions about the connection between the excision of the Chagos Archipelago and the British Government's undertaking to give Mauritius independence.

Allan JN

JEM

29 NOV 1982

04011

RESTRICTED

Ht Wanton-Suntu. Spoke to Research RESTRICTED taken this on board but have not carried An Hont wor do so wate we put a A+ 17/11 Graph of in would At HIGH COMMISSION CHAUSSÉE · PORT LOUIS · MAURITIUS department are thing this ar. 11 November 1982 Sent BO16/11.
Hr Watts, Deputy Legal er Hunt Esq Adviser . Mrs Walawalkar, Research PH 15/11

OS ARCHIPELAGO: SELECT COMMITTEE

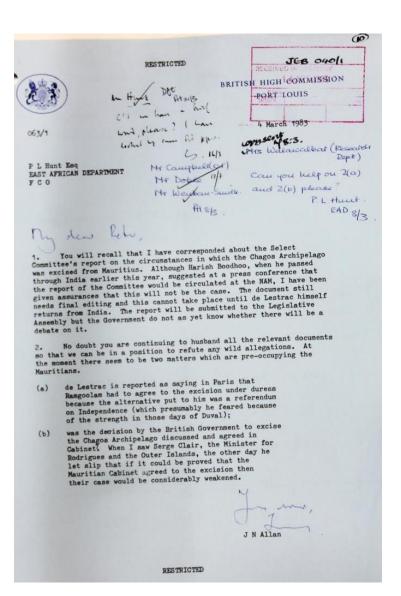

I wrote to you on 8 October telling you of the select nittee which has been set up to examine the history of the achment of the Chagos Archipelago in 1965. When I saw the ister of External Affairs on 8 November he told me that the nittee (which he is chairing) has still a good deal of way to before it can issue its report. He hoped however that would be available in January.

The committee is meeting in private and has the power to I witnesses including Ministers and ex-Ministers. At the ent they are receiving evidence from Sir G Duval who volunly agreed to discuss events in 1965. Later they will call present Prime Minister Mr Jugnauth who of course was in for the Mauritius Constitutional Conference in 1965 as ity leader of the Independent Forward Block. Later they will Sir Seewoosagur to give evidence.

eton the evidence has been commiled that

Annex 126

Letter from J. N. Allan of the British High Commission in Port Louis to P. Hunt of the East African Department, FCO 31/3834 (4 Mar. 1983)

Annex 127

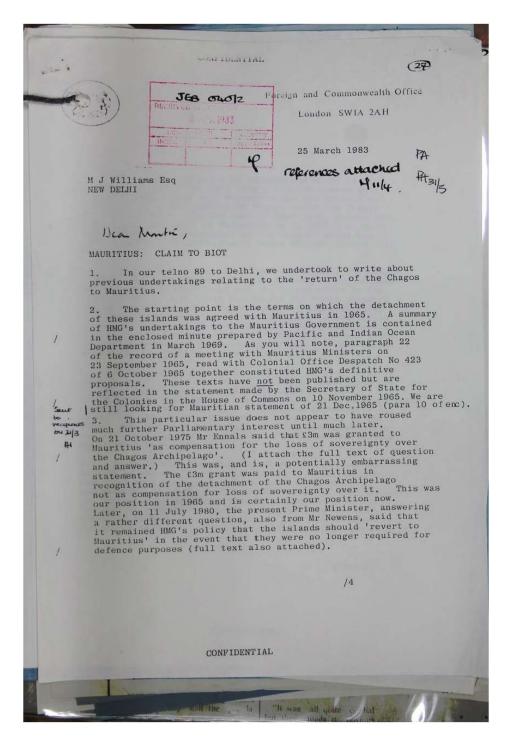

Letter from M. Walawalkar of the African Section Research Department to P. Hunt of the East African Department on the Mauritian Agreement to Detachment of Chagos, FCO 31/3834 (9 Mar. 1983)

REFERE 0 JEB 090/1 SECRET Det . Atsi3 Mr Hunt - EAD MAURITIAN AGREEMENT TO DETACHMENT OF CHAGOS 6 1. I refer to para.2 a) and b) of Mr Allan's letter of 4 March.

a)
2. Although a referendum on independence was the demand of Duval's PMSD it is my firm recollection that the record of the 1965 Conference and of the side-meetings on the detachment of Chagos contain no hint that the threat of a referendum was used by HMG to blackmail Ramgoolam. The Prime Minister did, however, implicitly threaten Ramgoolam with detachment by Order in Council if agreement were not forthcoming. Please see p2 of the attached Note (the Prime Minister's meeting with Ramgoolam on the morning of 25 September). Given that the Constitutional Conference was considering the question of the ultimate status of Mauritius and that the main debate was between the advocates of independence and of continuing association with Britain, however, I imagine that the Prime Minister's further suggestion that the "best solution ... might be Independence and detachment by agreement ..." could also have been interpreted by Ramgoolam as a threat (or a promise). The trouble is that the official record does not tell us everything. It cannot, for example, convey atmosphere and innuendo. I refer to para. 2 a) and b) of Mr Allan's letter of 4 March. Council of Ministers. (The detachment of Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches was also agreed by the Seychelles' equivalent at the time, the Executive Council). The final version of the record of the 23 September 1965 meeting with Mauritian Ministers, which incorporated certain amendments made by Ramgoolam in a manuscript letter dated 1st October, was submitted with Colonial Office Secret Despatch no.423 of 6th October 1965 (copy attached) to the Governor, Fort Louis, for confirmation by the Mauritian Government. With certain provisos (regarding the eventual return of the islands to Mauritius, and regarding minerals and oil) the Mauritian Council of Ministers confirmed their agreement, which was notified to HMG in the Governor's secret telno.247 of 5th November. 4. The above information derives from our records and from memory. I have not called for the relevant departmental files, since I assume that these are the very ones L&RD will wish to scrutinise with a view to the release of documents (Mr Wenban-Smith's minute of 12 January to Miss Blayney refers). In case Mr Allan wants further documentation you might, however, like to have the following reference (of the main file covering exchanges with Mauritian Ministers on the Chagos issue): PAC 93/892/01. Marfarette a lawal-M Walawalkar (Mrs) Research Department 9 March 1983

SECRET

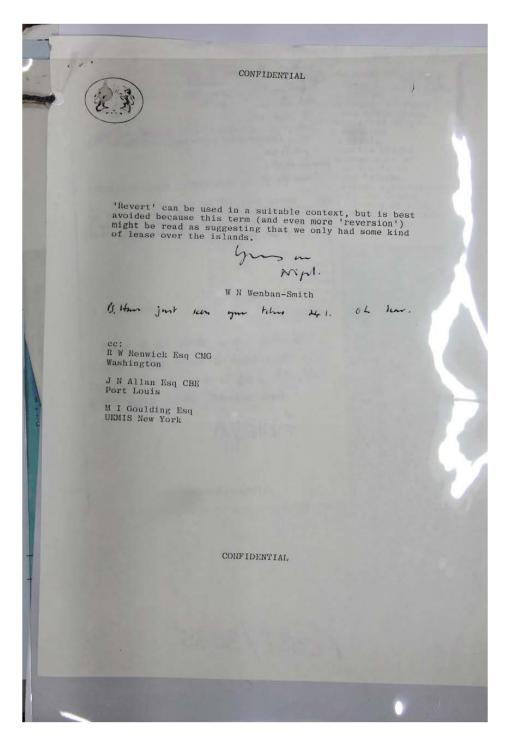

CONFIDENTIAL

- 4. As we have explained in various guidances (e.g. Guidance No. 157 of 20 July 1982), British sovereignty over the Chagos (and over Mauritius and the Seychelles) originated in their cession by France under the Treaty of Paris in 1814. In the case of Mauritius, sovereignty was transferred to it at independence in 1968 i.e. nearly 3 years after the detachment of the Chagos (which has of course remained uninterruptedly under British sovereignty since 1814).
- 5. It is worth noting the difference between the Chagos islands (once a dependency for administrative convenience of the colony of Mauritius) and the Dependencies in the South Atlantic, i.e. South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands, which are, also for reasons of administrative convenience, dependencies of the Falklands Islands colony, whereas title to the Chagos and Mauritius derived from a single source, the Treaty of 1814, the basis of our title to South Georgia and the Sandwich Islands is separate and different from that to the Falklands colony itself.
- 6. It is against this background that we have tried to keep on an extremely narrow path in recent pronouncements. We are of course keen to avoid any suggestion that Mauritius has sovereignty. We also maintain that Mauritius never did have sovereignty. If reminded of the 1975 answer, we should probably have to say something to the effect that all that Mauritius was being compensated for was not receiving the sovereignty it would otherwise have acquired on independence.
- 7. There is also the question of what, we can use in describing the notion of reattachment. 'Cede' obviously describes most accurately any eventual transfer of sovereignty and is the one we prefer to use. But, provided the context does not imply that Mauritius has sovereignty, 'return' is legally acceptable, although this has created confusion in Mauritian minds and has led them to assert that the use of 'return' implies recognition of their sovereignty.

/'Revert'

CONFIDENTIAL

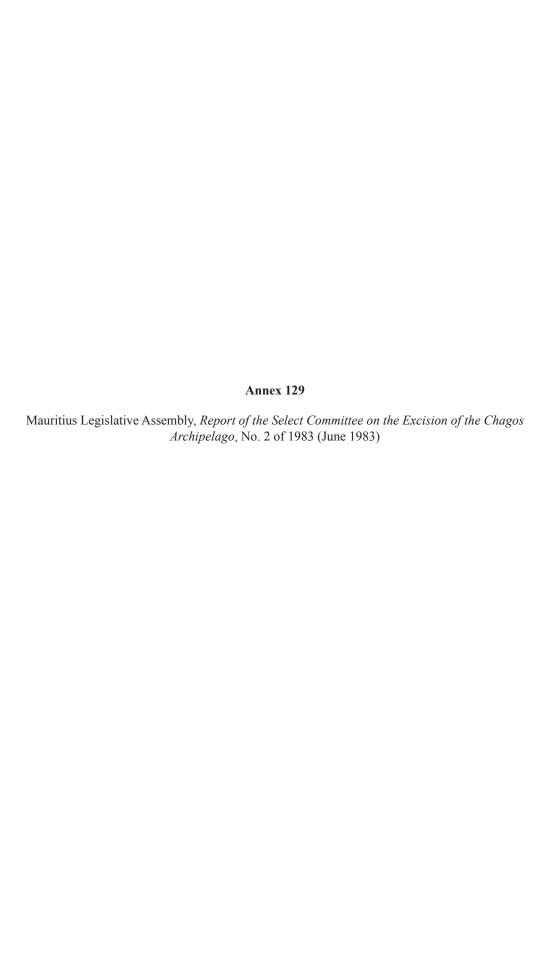

DSK 11 (Revised)
	DRAFT: minute/letter/infalsinex/despatch/mote	TYPE: Draft/Final 1+
0	FROM:	Reference
	W N Wenban-Smith
	DEPARTMENT: TEL. NO: East African Dept 233 4549
SECURITY CLASSIFICATION	TO:	Your Reference
ROPKSEKKEK Seknet	M J Williams Esq NEW DELHI	Copies to:
Confidential RESERVEN MACHINER		R W Renwick CMG Esq WASHINGTON J N Allen CBE Esa PORT LOUIS
PRIVACY MARKING	SUBJECT:	M I Goulding Esq UKMIS NEW YORK
In Confidence		1
CAVEAT	1. In our telno 89 to Delhi, we undertook to write about previous undertakings relating to the 'return' of the blind copy to	Chagos to Mauritius. 2. The starting point is the terms on which the detachm of these islands was agreed with Mauritius in 1965. A summary of HMG's undertakings to the Mauritius Government is contained in the enclosed minute prepared by Pacific and Indian Ocean Department in March 1969. As you will
Mr Weybou-Swith P. L. Hurt 17/3	note, paragraph 22 of the record of a meeting with Mauritius Ministers on 23 September 1965, read with Colon Office Despatch No 423 of 6 October 1965 together constit HMG's definitive proposals. These texts have not been published but are reflected in the statement made by the Secretary of State for the Colonies in the House of Commons on 10 November 1965.
Enclosures—flag(s)	3. This particular issue does not appear to have roused much further Parliamentary interest until much later. On 21 October 1975 Mr Ennals said that £3m was granted to Mauritius 'as compensation for the loss of sovereignty /over over the Chagos Archipelago'. (I attach the full text of question and answer.) This was, and is, a potentially embarrassing statement. The £3m grant was paid to Mauritius in recognition of the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago not as compensation for loss of sovereignty over it. This was our position in 1965 and is certainly our position now. Later, on 11 July 1980, the present Prime Minister, answering a rather different question, also from Mr Newans, said that it remained HMG's policy that the islands should 'revert to Mauritius' in the event that they were no longer required for defence purposes (full text also attached).

- 4. As we have explained in various guidances (eg Guidance No 157 of 20 July 1982), the main basis for our continued sovereignty over the Chagos is that the islands were included among those ceded to us by France by the Treaty of Paris in 1814, and that Mauritius acquired no sovereignty over any territroy until the time of its independence in 1968, nearly 3 years after the detachment of the Chagos islands from its administrative jurisdiction. It is worth noting in passing that there is a difference here between the Chagos, whose status had been that of a Lesser Dependency of Mauritius and the lesser Dependencies in the South Atlantic, Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands. The latter are administered from the Falklands solely for the administrative convenience, and our title to them is quite separate and different from out title to the Falklands themselves. But, when we acquired the Chagos they were already in some sense dependencies of Mauritius.
- 5. It is against this background that we have tried to keep on an extremely narrow path in recent pronouncements.
 We are of course keen to avoid any suggestion that

/Mauritius

REFERENCE HERE DSR 11C Mauritius has sovereignty. We also maintain that Mauritius never did have sovereignty. If reminded of the 1975 answer, we should be obliged to say/that all that Mauritius was being compensated for was the delay in receiving the sovereignty they would have acquired on independence. 6. There is also the question of what verbs we can use in describing the notion of reattachment. 'Cede' obviously describes most accurately the transfer of sovereignty and is the one we prefer to use. But, provided the context does not plainly imply that Mauritius has sovereignty, 'return' is legally acceptable, although this has created confusion in Mauritian minds and has led them to assert that the use of 'return' implies recognition of their sovereignty. 'Revert' can be used in a suitable context, but is best avoided because this term (and even more 'reversion') might be read as suggesting that we only had some kind of lease over the islands.

Rs. 20.00

MAURITIUS LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

REPORT

OF THE

Select Committee

ON THE

Excision of the Chagos Archipelago

PRINTED AND PURCESSED BY CLEE ACREEL, GOVERNMENT PRINTER
PORT LOUIS, MAURITIUS
JUNE 1988

REPORT

OF THE

Select Committee

ON THE

Excision of the Chagos Archipelago

REPORT

The Select Committee on the Excision of the Chagos Archipelago

I - Introduction

1. On 21st July 1982, the following motion standing in the name of the Honourable The Prime Minister was unanimously approved:-

"This Assembly is of the opinion that, in accordance with Standing Order 96 of the Standing Orders and Rules of the Legislative Assembly, a Select Committee of the House consisting of not more than nine members to be nominated by Mr Speaker, be appointed to look into the circumstances which led to and followed the excision of the Chagos Archipe ago, including Diego Garcia, from Mauritius in 1965 and the exact nature of the transactions that took place with documents in support and to report; the said Select Committee to have powers to send for persons, papers and records." (1)

2. On 20th August 1982, Mr Speaker nominated the following Honourable Members to form part of the Select Committee (2):-

The Honourable Minister of Finance

The Honourable Minister of Commerce, Industry, Prices & Consumer Protection

The Honourable Minister of External Affairs, Tourism & Emigra-

The Honourable Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries & Natural Resources

The Honourable Attorney-General and Minister for Women's Rights & Family Affairs

The Honourable Minister for Rodrigues & the Outer Islands

The Honourable A. Gayan

Dr the Honourable S. Peerthum

The Honourable Mrs F. Roussety

- 3. At its first meeting, the Select Committee unanimously elected the Honourable Jean-Claude de l'Estrac, then Minister of External Affairs, Tourism and Emigration, to the Chair.
- 4. The Committee met on 11 occasions and in the course of its proceedings heard witnesses whose names are listed in Appendix 'A' of this Report.

Mauritius Legislative Assembly—Debates No. 8 of 21st July 1982—Col. 1026-1056.
 Mauritius Legislative Assembly—Debates No. 17 of 20th August 1982—Col. 2397—2398.

II - The Chagos Archipelago

- The Chagos Archipelago until 8th November 1965, a dependency of Mauritius - comprises the islands of Diego Garcia, Egmont or six Islands, Peros Banhos, Salomon Islands, Trois Frères, including Danger Island and Eagle Island. It lies some 1200 miles north-east of Mauritius and covers an area from 7°39' to 4°41' S and from 70°50' to 72°41' E. The largest island of the group is Diego Garcia which is about 11 square miles.
- 6. The early history of the archipelago is closely associated with that of the Seychelles which were both explored by the Portuguese as far back as the first half of the sixteenth century. Since then, both archipelagoes have known the fate common to the other islands of the region which changed hands, most particularly, according to the hazards of the long standing rivalry between the British and the French in the Indian Ocean. It is to be noted-as a premonition to the present status of Diego Garcia-that on 18th March 1786 an attempt was made from Bombay, by the East India Company to convert the island into a military base.(1) The venture proved unsuccessful. But when, during World War II, Diego Garcia happened to be a valuable 'naval port of call' (2), the assessment proved to be a worthy one which dates back as far as 1769 when the French Naval Lieutenant La Fontaine made 'a thorough survey of the bay, the first sign of French appreciation of the possible strategic value of that island. (3)

Indeed, the strategical situation of the main island of the Chagos Archipelago-about 3,400 miles from the Cape of Good Hope, 2,600 miles from the North West Cape, Australia, 2,200 miles from Berbera, Somalia and 1,900 miles from Masirah Island, Oman (4)—was bound to make of Diego Garcia a point of capital importance in modern geo-politics. This position, in the nearest vicinity of the Maldives and of India, became more evident after World War II when England gradually withdrew from the region, in the wake of its new policy of granting political independence to its colonies.

7. Hence, the Chagos Archipelago was bound to play a pre-eminent role in what tended to constitute, through Britain's withdrawal, 'one of the largest and most complex power vacuums of the post-war periods.' (5) Later, the Gulf crisis was soon to make of the region a most strategic field of action for the powers which are bent upon controlling the energy routes to Europe and Asia.

Auguste Toussaint — L'Océan Indien aux XVIIIe siècle — Flammarion, p. 65.
 Joël Larus — Diégo Garcia; Political clouds over a vital U.S. base, Strategic Review, Winter 1982 — United States Strategic Institute, p. 46.
 Robert Scott — Limuria, The Lesser Dependencies of Mauritius — Oxford University Press, p. 244.
 Robert Scott — Op. cit. p. 68.

⁽⁵⁾ Joël Larus-Op. cit.

- 8. It might be useful to record here that it was not long after the British colonisation of Mauritius that the islands which constituted the dependencies thereof became an object of considerable interest to the new administering government. On 21st March, 1826, the House of Commons voted a resolution asking that an address be presented to His Majesty requesting that he 'be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House a return of the number of all the islands, which come under the denomination of dependencies of Mauritius, showing their geographical position in reference to that island, the extent of their territory, and any census which may have been taken of their population together with their civil and military establishments and the description of naval force which may have been stationed there at any time since the conquest of the colony.' (1) Complying with the request, Sir Lowry Cole, the then Governor of Mauritius, submitted, on 19th September of the same year, to Lord Bathurst what one of his successors described as 'the first catalogue of the dependencies of Mauritius ever to have been compiled' and which even included two islands 'which are now known to have existed only in the imagination of cartographers.' (2)
- 9. However, since the coming into force of the instructions contained in the Letters Patent of 31 August 1903 which made of the Seychelles a colony administratively independent from Mauritius, thought was constantly given by the British Government to the necessity of sharing between the two colonies the islands around. Such an exercise was concluded in 1921 and the Chagos Archipelago remained one of the lesser dependencies of Mauritius.

III - The British Indian Ocean Territory

10. The long association of the Chagos Archipelago with Mauritius came to an end on 8th November 1965 with the coming into force of the British Indian Ocean Territory Order (Appendix 'B'). The new "colony" originally included not only the Chagos Archipelago, but the Farquhar Islands, the Aldabra Group and the islands of Desroches which formed part of the then British Colony of the Seychelles. Mention of these dependencies of the Seychelles is of strong political relevance. The two main political parties of the Seychelles which met the British Authorities during the first constitutional talks on the independence of that country (14-27 March 1975) made it a point to claim the islands back, but to no avail. However, as a result of the second talks with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and which culmi-nated into the independence of the then colony (28th June 1976) the Farquhar Islands, the Aldabra Group and the islands of Desroches were finally returned to the Seychelles. Hence, with the coming into force on 28th June 1976, of the British Indian Ocean Territory Order 1976, the 'territory' now comprises only the Chagos Archipelago, one of the former lesser dependencies of Mauritius.

⁽¹⁾ Mauritius Archives-SA 9. (2) Robert Scott op. cit. p. 3.

- 11. The excision from Mauritius of the Chagos Archipelago was effected in accordance with the provisions of the Colonial Boundaries Act, 1895, but in complete violation of Resolution 6 of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples voted by the 948th General Meeting of the United Nations Organizations, on 14th December 1960 (Appendix 'C'). Later,
 - (i) the United Nations General Assembly Resolution 2066 voted on 16th December 1965 (Appendix 'D'), in line with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (Appendix 'C'); and
 - (ii) the Resolution on Diego Garcia voted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its 17th Ordinary Session in Sierra Leone from 1st to 4th July 1980. (Appendix 'E') will be flouted in the same manner.

- 12. It would be wrong, however, to pretend that the excision of the Chagos Archipelago was a unilateral exercise on the part of Great Britain. In a statement in the House of Commons, no less a person than the Prime Minister of Great Britain declared that "the Government of Mauritius have been kept fully informed of, and have raised no objection to, the proposed use of Diego Garcia as a naval communication facility". (1) Details of such connivence, together with the Select Committee's opinion on the legal and moral validity of the transaction are shown later in the report. (Para. 52). The Committee, however, hastens to record that the attitude of the political delegation which attended the Mauritius Constitutional Talks 1965 when the question was first mooted is in sharp contrast with the firm and patriotic stand of the Seychelles political leaders who succeeded during the Constitutional Talks which preceded the independence of the Seychelles to recover the territorial integrity of their country.
- 13. The first public announcement in regard to the excision was made in the House of Commons on 10th November 1965 by the then Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr Anthony Greenwood. (2). The news, embargoed for release in Mauritius at 20.00 hrs on that day, reproduced in extenso the Secretary of State's statement and contains the vague indication that the islands would be used for "defence facilities by the British and United States Governments." Mention is also made therein of the compensation to be paid to the company which exploited the plantations on the islands, the cost of "resettling elsewhere those inhabitants who can no longer remain there" and an additional grant of £3m. for development projects in Mauritius (Appendix 'F'). Later, the freeholds were acquired at agreed prices totalling £1,013,200.

⁽¹⁾ House of Commons debates — Vol. 811, Col. 138. (2) House of Commons debates—Vol. 720, Col. 1-2.

- The decision of the British Government became immediately a matter of big concern to most of the countries of the world and particularly to those located in the Indian Ocean and which saw in the process the beginning of a long term militarization of the region, with inevitable risks of involvement in nuclear warfare.
- 15. On the excision issue, as early as 16th December 1965, the United Nations, as its 1398th Plenary Assembly voted a Resolution inviting, inter alia, 'the administering power to take no action which would dismember the territory of Mauritius and violate its territorial integrity.' (Appendix D).
- 16. The Resolution did not, in the least, deter the British Government in its plans. On 30th December 1966, an Exchange of Notes was signed in London between the United Kingdom and the United States Governments on the Availability of certain Indian Ocean Islands for Defence Purposes (Common Paper No. 3231) and which confirmed the deal to use the islands in a joint military venture by the two countries. Indeed, the United States Government agreed at the very start ' to contribute up to £ 5m towards the costs of setting up the British Indian Ocean Territory, by waiving to that extent research and development surcharges for the United Kingdom purchase of the Polaris missile system.' (1) The islands of the British Indian Ocean Territory were made available for the defence purposes of both governments for an initial period of 50 years. (2)
- The nature of these defence arrangements was first released to local public information in a press communique issued on 3rd December 1965 by the Government of Mauritius and which indicated "that at the time the matter was discussed with the Mauritius Government, the British and the American Governments were considering the establishment of a communications centre, supporting facilities and a naval refuelling depot" on the islands. (3) The disturbing element in the communique and which was for the first time brought to the public knowledge refers to prior consultation with the Government of Mauritius on the issue. This feature will be analysed later in the report. (Paras 39-44) In addition, it should be noted that the relatively more detailed press release of the Mauritius Government bears contrast with the euphemistic approach of the United Kingdom Government which persisted as late as 1970, on the eve of an upgrading of such facilities, to pretend that these innocently consisted of "a limited United States naval communications centre, partly operated by the United Kingdom and which would provide communications support to United States and United Kingdom ships and aircraft in the Indian Ocean." (4)

(3) Mauritius Legislative Assembly debates No. 27 of 14th December, 1965, Col. 1850-1851.
 (4) House of Commons debates—Vol. 808, Col. 328.

House of Commons debates—Vol. 899, Col. 271-272.
 House of Commons debates—Vol. 870, Col. 1274.

These arrangements, within the terms of the 1966 Exchange of Notes, were approved; in principle, by the United Kingdom Government in 1968. A further Exchange of Notes was signed on 24th October, 1972, and the facility began operating in 1973 (1) when the United Kingdom Government agreed to "a limited expansion of the radio station" (2) in addition to the original defence facilities which were said then to "consist of a United States navy radio station, an 8,000 ft runway which is not capable of taking the larger transport and tanker aircraft fully laden; a natural anchorage restricted in draught and turning room; accommodation for some 450 personnel; and limited aircraft parking space and oil storage facilities." (2)

18. However, on 5th February, 1974, a statement made in the House of Commons by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Mr Julian Amery, revealed that Her Majesty's Government had agreed in principle to a proposal of the United States Government made in January 1974 and in accordance with the 1966 Anglo-American Agreement (Command Paper No. 3231) to the expansion of the facilities at Diego Garcia and which would involve "improvements to the anchorage and to the airfield as well as to the shore facilities". The last part of the statement is however, indicative of military concern of a larger dimension:—

"Her Majesty's Government have long felt that it is desirable in the general Western interest to balance increased Soviet activities in the Indian Ocean area. Accordingly, they welcome the expansion of the United States facilities which will also be available for British use. Against this background, the United States and the British Governments have agreed to consult periodically on joint objectives, policies and activities in the area. As regards the use of the expanded facilities in normal circumstances, the United States and British representatives in Diego Garcia will inform each other of intended movements of ships and aircraft. In other circumstances the use of the facilities would be a matter for the joint decision of the two Governments." (3)

Later, on 20th March, 1974, the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Miss Joan Lestor, again stressed that one of the reasons for the United Kingdom's acceptance of the United States proposal was the fact that the Soviet naval presence in the Indian Ocean had increased steadily in quantity and quality over the last five years and is larger than that of the Western countries. (4)

House of Commons debates—Vol. 870; Col. 1274.

⁽²⁾ House of Commons debates—Vol. 897; Col. 204.

⁽³⁾ House of Commons debates-Vol. 868; Col. 276-277.

⁽⁴⁾ House of Commons debates-Vol. 870; Col.1275.

19. An assessment of the actual military arrangements on the islands is obviously difficult and whatever may be their size and nature is immaterial to this report. On two occasions at least,—11th March and 22nd July, 1975—the then British Secretary of State for Defence, Mr Roy Mason, declared to the House of Commons that it was not the policy of the British Government "to confirm or deny the presence of nuclear weapons in ships, aircraft or any particular location"—a statement pregnant with alarming military connotations.

Ten days after the announcement in regard to the constitution of the British Indian Ocean Territory, the then Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr Anthony Greenwood, declared to the House of Commons: "There is certainly no question of any derogation from Britain's sovereignty of these territories." (1) And, later, the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Mr Hattersley, re-echoed: "The island of Diego Garcia is British Sovereign Territory." (2) At this stage, the Committee cannot dismiss the fact that such sovereignty was claimed in the teeth of strong opposition from the United Nations Organisation, the Organisation of African Unity and most of the independent States in the Indian Ocean, including India, whose Prime Minister, Mrs Indira Gandhi, on 7th February, 1974, highlighted the danger that the militarization of the Chagos Archipelago constituted for the security of her country.

IV - The Mauritius Constitutional Conference, 1965

- 20. On 7th September, 1965, a Mauritius delegation comprising representatives of the Mauritius Labour Party, the Parti Mauricien Social Democrate, the Independent Forward Bloc, the Muslim Committee of Action and two independent Members of the Legislative Assembly (Appendix G) met at Lancaster House, under the chairmanship of the then Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr Anthony Greenwood, "to reach agreement on the ultimate status of Mauritius, the time of accession to it, whether accession should be preceded by consultation with the people and, if so, in what form." (3) The Conference met until 24th September, 1965.
- 21. The claim for independence was supported at the Conference by the Mauritius Labour Party, the Independent Forward Bloc and the Muslim Committee of Action, although this party had put up certain conditions in regard to the electoral system. The Parti Mauricien Social Democrate advocated, as a substitute for independence, close constitutional associations with Great Britain and submitted that, in any event, the people of Mauritius should be allowed to express their preference in a free referendum.

⁽I) House of Commons debates Vol. 720, Col. 1309.

⁽¹⁾ House of Commons debates Vol. 872, Col. 327.
(2) House of Commons debates Vol. 872, Col. 327.
(3) Repart of the Mauritius Constitutional Conference—September 1965—Sessional Paper No. 6 of 1965, p. 1.

22. In the final communiqué issued on 24th September 1965, the Secretary of State for the Colonies ruled out the proposal submitted by the Parti Mauricien Social Democrate for association with Great Britain on the ground that "given the known strength of the support for independence, it was clear that strong pressure for this would be bound to continue and that in such a state of association neither uncertainty nor the acute political controversy about ultimate status would be dispelled." The plea for a referendum which, in the Secretary of State's opinion would prolong "the current uncertainty and political controversy in a way which would harden and deepen communal divisions and rivalries" was also discarded. The United Kingdom's Government ultimate decision on the issue was "to fix a date and take necessary steps to declare Mauritius independent after a period of six months full internal self-government if a resolution asking for this was passed by a simple majority of the new Assembly." (1)

 The final communiqué also referred to the following defence arrangements between the British and the Mauritius Governments:—

23. At this final Plenary meeting of the Conference the Secretary of State also indicated that the British Government had given careful consideration to the views expressed as to the desirability of a defence agreement being entered into between the British and Mauritius Governments covering not only defence against external threats but also assistance by the British Government in certain circumstances in the event of threats to the internal security of Mauritius. The Secretary of State announced that the British Government was willing in principle to negotiate with the Mauritius Government before independence the terms of a defence agreement which would be signed and come into effect immediately after independence. The British Government envisaged that such an agreement might provide that, in the event of an external threat to either country, the two governments would consult together to decide what action was necessary for mutual defence. There would also be joint consultation on any request from the Mauritius Government in the event of a threat to the internal security of Mauritius. Such an agreement would contain provisions under which on the one hand the British Government would undertake to assist in the provision of training for, and the secondment of trained personnel to, the Mauritius police and security forces; and on the other hand the Mauritius Government would agree to the continued enjoyment by Britain of existing rights and facilities in H.M.S. Mauritius and at Plaisance Airfield. (2)

(2) Op. cit., p. 5.

⁽¹⁾ Report of the Mauritius Constitutional Conference—September 1965—Sessional Paper No. 6 of 1965, p. 4.

That section of the communiqué which touches upon military arrangements makes no mention of any agreement in regard to the excision of any part of the Mauritian territory in the context of either mutual defence or what was ultimately termed "in the general western interest to balance increased Soviet activities in the Indian Ocean." (1)

However, in the light of evidence produced by representatives of the political parties which took part in the Mauritius Constitutional Conference 1965, and which is reviewed at paragraph 25 hereunder, the Committee is convinced, without any possible doubt, that, at a certain time while the Constitutional talks were on, the question was mooted. And, further, the Committee is satisfied that the genesis of the whole transaction is intimately connected with the constitutional issue then under consideration.

- 24. The Committee regrets that, apart from Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam who led the Mauritius Labour Party delegation, the leaders of the other participating political parties are no more. Nevertheless, the Committee has been fortunate enough to hear members from each of the parties present at Lancaster House, in September 1965.
- 25. Their reports to the Select Committee can be summarized as hereunder;
 - A The Mauritius Labour Party

The Mauritius Labour Party, led by the then Premier and Minister of Finance, Dr the Honourable Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, now Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, was, numerically speaking, the most important political party which attended the Constitutional Conference, Sir Seewoosagur was heard by the Select Committee on 6th December 1982. He declared that the eventual excision of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius never appeared on the agenda of the Constitutional talks nor was it ever brought for discussion in Mauritius prior to the Conference. It was only, while the talks were on, that he had two private meetings with the British Authorities; one, at 10, Downing Street where the British Government's decision to grant independence to Mauritius was communicated to him by the then Prime Minister, and the second, on 23rd September, 1965, in one of the committee rooms of Lancaster House where he was, for the first time, informed by the Secretary of State, Mr Anthony Greenwood, of the United Kingdom's intention of detaching the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius.

⁽¹⁾ House of Commons debates Vol. 868, Col. 277.

Sir Seewoosagur declared that he accepted the excision, in principle, as (i) he felt he had no legal instrument to prohibit the United Kingdom Government from exercising the powers conferred upon it by the Colonial Boundaries Act 1895, which powers could not be resisted even by India when the partition of this country took place before its independence (ii) he could not then assess the strategic importance of the archipelago which consisted of islands very remote from Mauritius and virtually unknown to most Mauritians and (iii) it was concretely expressed to him that the islands would be used as a communications centre and not as a military base.

Sir Seewoosagur strongly emphasised that, at no time, during that meeting and during meetings he had subsequently with the Secretary of State — after the Constitutional talks — to discuss details of the excision, was he made aware that the United States of America were in the deal and that the islands would be required for a joint U.K./U.S.A. defence venture. So much so that the statement made in the Legislative Assembly, on 14th December 1965, by the then Acting Premier, Mr Guy Forget, (Appendix 'F') came as a surprise to him. He even declared to the Select Committee that the circumstances which led to the introduction in that statement of certain elements then unknown to him were still shrouded in 'mystery'. He did not deny, however, that while the Conference was on, a Mauritian delegation led by late Mr Guy Forget met the Minister in Charge of Economic Affairs in the American Embassy in London.

Sir Seewoosagur maintained that the choice he made between the independence of Mauritius and the excision of the archipelago was a most judicious one. He thought, however, that had all the political parties present at Lancaster House been united in the claim for independence, better conditions might have been obtained. But, the Parti Mauricien Social Démocrate (P.M.S.D.) walked out of the Conference, as soon as it became evident that independence could not be avoided.

Sir Seewoosagur recalled that at one of the meetings on the excision issue, with the Secretary of State, he stressed that the sovereignty of Mauritius over the islands should be maintained and all rights connected with fishing and mineral prospection should be preserved. He also claimed the possibility for planes to use the strip on Diego Garcia for any emergency landing on their route to and from Mauritius. No records of these proceedings were communicated to him, but he had the impression that, apart from the claim for sovereignty, all the other points were agreeable to the British Government including a proposition that, in the event of excision, the islands would be returned to Mauritius when not needed by the United Kingdom Government. He recognised, however, that apart from certain statements made by himself and members of his Government in international meetings, no official request had been made for the retrocession of the islands to Mauritius.

Touching upon the question of the displacement of the Ilois community, Sir Seewoosagur said that it was never raised with him at any time in London and whatever correspondence he exchanged later in Mauritius with the British High Commission on the subject, had to take into account the unexpected nature of the statement made in the House by late Mr Guy Forget. (Appendix 'F')

Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo confirmed that, at no time, was the question of the excision of the Chagos Archipelago brought on the table of the Mauritius Constitutional Conference of September 1965. He might have been informed of such proposals after the private meeting Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam had with the Secretary of State, Mr Anthony Greenwood, on 23rd September, 1965. He did not object to the principle of the excision as he felt that, being given the defence agreement entered into with Great Britain (paragraph 23)—a decision which had the unanimous support of all political parties present at Lancaster House, most particularly in view of the social situation which had deteriorated in Mauritius—the United Kingdom Government should be given the means to honour such agreement. It was in this context that he viewed the excision of the islands which were to be used as a communications station.

Sir Veerasamy stated that, about one week after the Constitutional talks, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam and himself had discussions with officials of the Foreign Office on the excision issue, where both of them stressed that (i) when no longer needed, the islands should be returned to Mauritius (ii) all rights connected with fishing and mineral prospection would be maintained for Mauritius (iii) the possibility for planes to use the strip on Diego Garcia, in any emergency, on their route to and from Mauritius should be recognized and (iv) 'all the requirements for the installation of the station and for the food and everything would, as far as possible, be taken from Mauritius.' Unfortunately, no minutes of this meeting were circulated.

Sir Veerasamy supported Sir Seewoosagur's contention that nothing was heard in Mauritius about the excision until Mr Guy Forget made a statement in the Legislative Assembly on 14th December, 1965. He also maintained that the substance of this statement was absolutely alien to the nature of the talks he had, in company of Sir Seewoosagur, with the officials of the Foreign Office, in London.

Sir Harold Walter also stated that, at no time in Mauritius, prior to the Constitutional talks, was the question of the excision brought up for discussion. He happened to learn of this issue when he saw the definition of the State of Mauritius in a draft Constitution prepared for the country by the Colonial Office. He then questioned Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam on the matter and the latter revealed to him that he had to make some concessions on that score, as he felt that at one time during the Conference, the British Authorities tended to agree to the claim of the Parti Mauricien Social Democrate (P.M.S.D.) for a referendum.

Sir Harold did not resist the stand taken by the Leader of the Mauritius Labour Party as he knew the amount of pressure that was made to bear on the United Kingdom Government against the grant of independence to Mauritius. Moreover, public opinion in the country was largely divided on the nature of constitutional progress to be achieved. Indeed, he had got Sir Seewoosagur's assurance that the abandonment of the Chagos Archipelago had been agreed on certain conditions, namely, that (i) fishing and mineral prospection rights would be preserved for Mauritius (ii) the islands would be returned when no more needed and (iii) Mauritians would be employed to work there. He further stressed that no Mauritian delegate present at Lancaster House had expressed any dissent on the principle of the excision.

Sir Harold declared having been made aware of the United States' interest in the archipelago "years after" the Constitutional Conference. Everything that could have been published on that issue before or immediately after the talks might have escaped his attention as he was mainly interested in the accession of Mauritius to national sovereignty.

Sir Harold stated that the question of the Ilois was raised in London and they were considered as Mauritians who had migrated to work on the islands. However, the amount of compensation to be paid by the United Kingdom was not discussed at his level and he came to know about it much later.

Sir Satcam Boolell informed the Committee that the question of the excision of the Chagos Archipelago was raised by the British Officials in private with Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, in London. He was not much concerned about it as he only had in mind the independence of Mauritius. He can vaguely recollect that the United Kingdom Government wanted Diego Garcia to be used as a signal station and that the whole archipelago would be returned to Mauritius when no more needed. He was further given to understand that all mineral resources around the islands would remain the property of the Government of Mauritius. At no time was he made aware of the United States involvement in the deal.

Sir Satcam further added that, in spite of the fact that he was then the Minister responsible for agriculture, he had no idea of any bid for the sale of Mauritian sugar on the American market as that transaction was in the hands of the Mauritius Sugar Syndicate.

Sir Satcam affirmed that he did not attend any meetings where the excision of the Chagos Archipelago was discussed and on this question he had put all his trust in the wisdom and experience of Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam.

B. The Parti Mauricien Social Démocrate (P.M.S.D.)

The first political commotion which took place in Mauritius, as a result of the excision of the Chagos Archipelago was the resignation, on 11th November, 1965, of the three P.M.S.D. Ministers (Messrs Koenig, Duval and Devienne) from the coalition Government. The next day, they convened a press conference in Port Louis and explained that the reason for their resignation was Government stand in regard to the excision of the Chagos Archipelago. The party's leader, Mr Koenig, stressed that the P.M.S.D. was not against the use of the archi-pelago for a joint United Kingdom/United States defence venture. But his party felt that Government should have retained the sovereignty of Mauritius over the islands and negotiated their occupation, on the best possible terms, direct with the occupying powers. The P.M.S.D. had in mind the possibility of securing a substantial sugar quota on the United States market and defining a policy of emigration to the United States for unemployed Mauritians.

This stand was supported by Sir Gaëtan Duval, Q.C., one of Mr Koenig's co-delegate, when he appeared before the Select Committee on 12th November, 1982. He underlined that a periodical review of such arrangements direct with the occupying powers would have been most beneficial to Mauritius. Sir Gaëtan further assured the Committee that the Council of Ministers was, from the very start, aware that the Chagos Archipelago would be used for defence purposes jointly by the United Kingdom and the United States. He indicated that this state of affairs is contained in official documents. The possibility of recruiting Mauritian workers for the construction of military installations at Diego Garcia and the purchase, as far as possible, of materials from Mauritius was even envisaged at that time.

Sir Gaëtan explained that, on 23rd September, 1965, while the Mauritius Constitutional Conference was discussing the proposition for a referendum put forward by his party, the chairman, Mr Anthony Greenwood, suspended the proceedings and invited the Mauritian delegates to meet him and offer their views on the future of the Chagos Archipelago. The P.M.S.D. refused to attend the meeting, feeling that such a question was outside the agenda of the Conference and that the party had no mandate to consider any possible excision of part of the Mauritian territory. Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, Sir Abdool Razack Mohamed and Mr Sookdeo Bissoondoyal, representing respectively the Mauritius Labour Party, the Muslim Committee of Action and the Independent Forward Bloc responded to the invitation but Sir Gaëtan was not in a position to say if the final decision was taken in their presence or as a result of private consultations between Mr Anthony Greenwood and Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam. It was, revealed Sir Gaëtan, at the resumption of proceedings, after such a meeting extraneous to the Conference agenda, that the Secretary of State ruled out the suggestion for a referendum, leaving the clear impression that some sort of blackmailing had taken place.

Alluding to the question of the displaced Ilois, Sir Gaëtan argued that the excision having taken place in 1965, that is, three years before the independence of Mauritius, those persons cannot be considered as citizens of Mauritius but British nationals. He regretted that (i) the case of Mr Vencatassen had been withdrawn from the British Law Courts, thus depriving the community at large from obtaining the verdict of the Court on this delicate issue and (ii) the attitude of the Mauritius Government, after independence, vis-avis the United Kingdom, might, in a large measure, have jeopardised the claim of Mauritius for recovering its sovereignty over the archipelago.

C The Independent Forward Bloc (1.F.B.)

Honourable Aneerood Jugnauth, Q.C., Prime Minister of Mauritius, who formed part of the Mauritius Delegation to the Constitutional talks 1965, under the banner of the I.F.B., was heard by the Select Committee. He stated that never, in the course of the talks, was the question of the excision of the Chagos Archipelago raised. Some time before the Conference ended, the Leader of the Mauritius Labour Party, Dr Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, came to the desk of the I.F.B. delegation and told the delegates that he had accepted a proposition from the United Kingdom to use Diego Garcia as a communications station. There was no indication that the islands would be used as a military base, nor was the question of an excision from the Mauritian territory mentioned. Mr Jugnauth said that, at the time, the I.F.B. "had not much to say about it", as the party thought that the installation of communications facilities on the islands was an innocuous venture.

Mr Jugnauth stressed that, at no time, did the Leader of the LF.B. inform h's co-de'egates that he had taken part in any private talks on the issue with the British authorities, nor was the eventual excision of the islands ever discussed at party level. He added that the statement made by Mr Guy Forget in the Legislative Assembly on 14th December, 1965, (Appendix 'F') came as a surprise to him in the sense that it contained facts that were never brought to his knowledge or to that of his party before. He was not a minister when the excision was discussed in the then Council of Ministers and he was never informed subsequently of the decision then taken.

Mr Jugnauth recalled that the withdrawal of the P.M.S.D. from the Constitutional talks had nothing to do with the excision of the Chagos Archipelago which, he repeated, was never brought on the Conference agenda. The P.M.S.D. delegates left when they learnt of the United Kingdom's intention to grant independence to Mauritius.

The Committee wishes at this stage to reproduce a statement made in the Legislative Assembly, on 19th October, 1976 by late Mr. S. Bissoondoyal, then Leader of the I.F.B. on the excision of the archipelago and which supports substantially the evidence of Mr. Jugnauth:—

The London Conference in 1965 witnessed this question coming out whether Mauritius would agree to part with Diego Garcia. That was the question put to me as a Member of the Government, put to me in private. I had an answer for it and that question was also put to the Leader of the Parti Mauricien. I am aware of the attitude of the Parti Mauricien at that time. Now let me make it clear to the House, the aftermath of all this matter was dealt with personally by the Prime Minister and no Government then existing. I was a Member of the Government, I knew what was taking place: (1)

D. Mr Maurice Paturau, D.F.C., C.B.E.-Independent Member Mr Paturau appeared before the Select Committee on 13th December 1982. He formed part of the Mauritius delegation which attended the Constitutional talks of September 1965. He revealed that he participated in no less than two meetings with the British authorities on the question of the excision of the Chagos Archipelago, but all these meetings were extraneous to the open Constitutional Conference which was then in progress, it was in the course of the first of these meetings that Dr Ramgoolam himself and the other party leaders took cognizance of the amount of compensation proposed by the United Kingdom, When the possibility of securing a sugar quota on the American market was evoked by the Mauritian side, the British officials suggested that this question should be dealt with direct with the American Embassy in London. A meeting was accordingly arranged and Mr Guy Forget led the Mauritian delegation which comprised, inter alia, Messrs Abdool Razack Mohamed and Jules Koenig. The request of Mauritius was turned down by the American officials who stated that "as far as Chagos was concerned, they would not commit the American Senate or House of Representatives about anything like a sugar quota." They intimated that anything connected with the Chagos Archipelago issue was a matter for direct negotiation between the United States and the United Kingdom Governments, and not with Mauritius.

The second meeting took place after the P.M.S.D. had retired from the Conference and the Mauritius delegation was then represented by Dr Ramgoolam, Messrs Abdool Razack Mohamed, Sookdeo Bissoondoyal and himself. A final compensation of £3m was then proposed by the United Kingdom Government. He expressed dissent as he thought the compensation inadequate, but the other delegates agreed.

Mr Paturau stressed that during all the negotiations that took place, he had in mind the lease of the Chagos Archipelago by Mauritius. An initial period of thirty years was even proposed during which term a sugar quota at more remunerative prices would be negotiated, coupled with the possibility of obtaining rice and flour from America at subsidized rates. Such lease would have been, more or less, on the model of the North West Cape Agreement between Australia and the United States, signed in 1963. He did not agree that the idea of a communications station was devoid of any military connotation. The American sub-marines needed in fact a land base which would 'generate enough messages at low frequency, but of high power so that they could reach the sub-marine and give it the actual position it was in so that it could fire its missiles with as much precision.'

⁽¹⁾ Debates No. 28 of 1976, Col. 2885-2886.

Referring to the attitude of the P.M.S.D. on the excision issue, Mr Paturau said that, at no time, either in London or in Mauritius, did that party express any opposition to the principle of the excision. The party was most concerned at Lancaster House with reservations in the electoral system and walked out of the Conference on that issue, whereas the resignation of the Ministers of that party from the then Council of Ministers was motivated by the inadequacy of the compensation offered by the United Kingdom Government. As regards the inhabitants of the islands, he explained that, to his mind, those who came from the Seychelles were considered as migrants, whereas the others were "established Mauritians" whose fate was never discussed at the meetings he attended.

V - The Lesser Dependencies in the Wake of a New Destiny

26. In November 1959, a Commission headed by Professor J. E. Meade was appointed to report to His Excellency the Governor of Mauritius, then Sir Colville Montgomery Devere!1, K.C.M.G., C.V.O., on ways and means of improving the economic and social structure of Mauritius. Although the terms of reference of the Commission were wide enough, the Commissioners did not feel that a study of the economic potentialities of the dependencies of Mauritius, including Rodrigues, was justified. Indeed, the temptation of ignoring whatever contribution the lesser dependencies particularly, could make to the economy of Mauritius was so great that at paragraph 6:44 of their report, the Commissioners invited Government to reject an application for financial assistance made by the two private companies which were then engaged in copra production on the Chagos and Agalega islands. (1)

27. The outright ignorance of the lesser dependencies and of their possible contribution to the economy of Mauritius, by the Meade Commission, did not deter the private sector in its attempt to rehabilitate the islands by a more scientific approach to copra production. The sector felt that if the soap and oil industry were to be maintained in Mauritius, as a means of helping both to combat unemployment and to save foreign exchange, it was imperative that the raw materials produced on the islands should not be abandoned. Hence, in September/October 1961, an exploratory survey of the islands was undertaken by a team composed of Mr René Maingard de la Ville-es-Offrans, acting on behalf of Rogers & Co., Mr Paul Moulinié, an entrepreneur from the Seychelles and Dr Octave Wiehé.

J. E. Meade & Others, The Economic and Social Structure of Mauritius—Frank Cases & Co. Ltd. p. 138.

Mr René Maingard de la Ville-es-Offrans, now Sir René Maingard de la Ville-es-Offrans, C.B.E., was heard by the Select Committee on 8th February 1983. He related to the Committee the attempts made by the private sector to rehabilitate copra production on the islands, with a view particularly to saving the soap and oil industry in Mauritius. These attempts may be summarized as follows. In August 1961, the two private companies which were operating on the islands offered to Rogers & Co. to buy 55% of their shares. Rogers & Co., before taking any decision on the offer, resolved to conduct a survey in situ of the islands and this exercise was undertaken by the team referred to at paragraph 27 above. After a full assessment of the economic situation of the operating companies and a thorough survey of the prospects of the industry, the party recommended that the islands be purchased by a private enterprise made up with the equal participation of Rogers & Co., the existing shareholders and Mr Paul Moulinié of the Seychelles. Mr Maingard de la Ville-es-Offrans tried to enlist, for the purpose, the financial support of the Government of Mauritius. Hence, through the agency of Dr Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, a meeting was arranged at Le Reduit between himself and the Governor of Mauritius (Sir Colville M. Deverell, K.C.M.G., C.V.O.), the Colonial Secretary (Mr Tom Vickers, C.M.G.), the Financial Secretary (Mr A. F. Bates, C.M.G.) and Mr A. L. Nairac, C.B.E., Q.C. who was then Minister of Industry, Commerce & External Communications.

The Governor then informed him that, taking into consideration the recommendations of the Meade Commission, the Colonial Office was opposed to any form of Government financial participation in the venture.

On 7th March 1962, the Colonial Steamships Co. Ltd. offered to put up a society, the Chagos Agalega Ltd., at par with Mr Paul Moulinié and shareholders from the Seychelles with a view to purchasing the islands. That company was registered in the Seychelles and the promoters suggested that the sovereignty of the islands should be transferred from Mauritius to the Seychelles. Although the then Governor of the Seychelles seemed agreeable to the project, the Colonial Office again stood in the way. Hence, the exploitation of the islands remained the sole concern of the Chagos Agalega Ltd., which had become the owners of the islands.

In 1964, Mr René Maingard de la Ville-es-Offrans had again the possibility of discussing, inter alia, the future of the islands with top British political personalities, such as Messrs Lennox-Boyd, Patrick Wall, Ian Mac Leod and Sir Tufton Beamish. He got the firm impression out of the talks that the British Government had no intention of parting with the islands for which they had conceived projects of a nature other than industrial. In April 1967, the assets of the Chagos Agalega Ltd. were compulsorily acquired by the United Kingdom Government and the administering company gave full powers to Mr Paul Moulinié to discuss the compensation issue and to take all measures connected with the displacement of the local population. Indeed, neither the Government of Mauritius nor any of the Mauritian shareholders took part in the negotiations. The amount paid by the United Kingdom Government was £660,000.—, but consideration of the company's assets brought the figure to Rs 7,500,000. The Chagos Agalega Ltd was wound up on 19th December 1975 after the compulsory acquisition, on 1st October 1975, of Agalega by the Government of Mauritius. Its registration at the Registrar General's Office of the Seychelles was cancelled on 11th December 1980.

29. The Meade Commission was appointed 'to make recommendations concerning the action to be taken in order to render the country capable of maintaining and improving the standard of living of its people, having regard to current and foreseeable demographic trends' with particular reference to 'the economics of the staple agricultural industries of Mauritius'. In the chapter introductory to their report, the commissioners, however, explained that in their assessment they had chosen to ignore the dependencies of Mauritius, namely Rodrigues, the Chagos Archipelago, Agalega and St. Brandon. They did not even consider a visit to these dependencies necessary. The reason for this deliberate omission is thus outlined in chapter 1:2 of the report. 'Unfortunately, we had no opportunity of visiting the dependencies and have not therefore included them within the scope of our report. We do not think this greatly detracts from our report, however, since the dependencies amount for only 12% of the colony's area and 3% of its population, and play little or no part in the economic life of the island of Mauritius itself.' (1)

This statement might have proved surprising at the time it was published in as much as it looked contradictory to the terms of reference of the Commission which invited the Commissioners, inter alia, to look for a definition of the broad lines of development policy in the future. It is indeed unbelievable that, in that particular context, the unquestionable potentialities of the dependencies, including Rodrigues, in the framing of a new social and economic structure for Mauritius could not have attracted the attention of the experts who formed part of the Meade Commission.

The Select Committee is thus tempted, at this stage, to share Sir Rene's feelings that the deliberate assignment of the dependencies of Mauritius to purposes in no way connected with the economic and social interests of Mauritius, formed part of a definite and long term strategy on the part of the United Kindom Government.

⁽¹⁾ J. E. Meade and Others—op. cit.

PART II

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE

VI - Preliminary Remark

30. At the very outset, the Committee wishes to report a most dep!orable state of affairs. To an application for copies of correspondence exchanged between the Governor of Mauritius and the Secretary of State for the Colonies, pertaining to the years immediately preceding the independence of Mauritius, the Private Secretary and Comptrol'er, Le Reduit, replied that there were 'no record concerning the despatch of document from this office to other departments prior to 1970.' He further added: "I have also made searches in our Archives but have not been able to find any document where the information asked for could have been registered. I understand from Mr E. G. Goldsmith, former Private Secretary, that at the time of independence in 1968, a lot of documents were either destroyed or taken over by Mr Young, who was then Information Officer at the British High Commission."

The Committee deeply regrets that such valuable documents have not been allowed to form part of our archives. Their removal or destruction, in addition to being a national calamity, will be most harmful to the efforts of students in our local political history.

VII — The Anglo-American Survey

- 31. The first serious hint at the possibility of the United Kingdom Government using Mauritius and its dependencies, most particularly Diego Garcia, as a unit for its defence stategy in the Indian Ocean, came from Mr David Windsor, of the United Kingdom Institute of Strategic Studies, in the course of an interview given on the B.B.C. in the programme 'London Calling Mauritius', on 21st February, 1964. (1). This opinion was subsequently carried by the written press overseas which made no mystery of the United Kingdom's choice of 'keeping Aden at all costs, enlarging Britain's fleet of aircraft carriers, or finding some territory in the Indian Ocean, if there is one, with natural facilities and a small, politically isolated population.' (2).
- 32. However, no allusion to any consultation between the United Kingdom Government and the local authorities was reported until the 31st July, 1964, when a local daily reproduced the following information from its London correspondent:

"Il y a eu à Maurice, une importante réunion du Cabinet des Ministres, présidée par Sir John Rennie, probablement le 13 ou le 14 juillet. Au cours de cette réunion, Sir John a tenu les ministres présents au courant d'un communiqué dans lequel le Secretaire d'Etat aux Colonies, M. Sandys, révèle l'intention de Londres de faire de Maurice, des Seychelles et d'Agalega une importante base navale militaire.' (3)

⁽¹⁾ Advance-22nd February 1964.

⁽²⁾ The Economist—4th July 1964
(3) Le Mauricien—31st July 1964.

33. The meeting of the Council of Ministers referred to in the press excerpt quoted at paragraph 32 above took place on the 14th July 1964. The Minutes of that meeting indicate that the then Governor of Mauritius, Sir John Shaw Rennie, K.C.M.G., O.B.E., made a statement on certain devements in the field of defence. The Select Committee regrets that the Governor's pronouncement cannot be reproduced as it, undoubtedly, forms part of the records which have either been destroyed or removed to the British High Commission as mentioned in paragraph 30 of this report. However, this situation does not deter the Select Committee in its opinion that Sir John's statement was of a nature which cannot but render absolutely misleading, both to the House and to the nation, the interjection made in the Legislative Assembly, on 10th November, 1964, by Honourable Satcam Boolell to the effect that the Government of Mauritius was not aware of any military project conceived by the United Kingdom Government for either Mauritius or any of its dependencies. (1) Indeed, in reply to a parliamentary question in the House of Commons on 5th April 1965, Mrs Eirene White, then Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, revealed that consultation prior to the survey had in fact taken place both at the level of the Premier and of the Council of Ministers. She stated: "The Premier of Mauritius was consulted in July last about the joint survey of possible sites for certain limited facilities that was then about to begin. In November the Council of Ministers, who had been kept informed, were told that the results of the survey were still being examined and that the Premier would be consulted again before any announcement was made in London or in Washington." (2) However, the Select Committee will establish hereunder (para. 34) that not only the Council of Ministers but the whole Legislative Assembly sitting in 1964 were informed, in unequivocal terms, of the British-American technical survey of the islands. The information was even released to the press on 14th December, 1964.

34. On 10th November, 1964, in the Legislative Assembly, at adjournment time, Honourable B. Ramlallah intervened lenghtily on certain speculation to the effect that a joint Anglo-American survey was in progerss in Diego Garcia and requested a full and prompt explanation from Government (Appendix 'H'). The reply came on 14th December, 1964, in the form of a letter from the then Chief Secretary, Mr Tom Vickers, C.M.G., addressed to Honourable Ramlallah, copied to all Members of the Legislative Assembly and released to the press. (Appendix 'I'). Confirmation is contained therein of (i) the presence of a joint British-American survey team 'on certain islands, including the Chagos Archipelago, Agalega, but not including Mauritius' and (ii) prior notification of this exercise having been given to the Council of Ministers. Such notification was no doubt contained in Sir John Rennie's statement to the Council of Ministers on 14th July, 1964. (paragraph 33) and brings to naught all future submissions to the effect that any United Kingdom's project for the islands was first communicated to both the Premier and his Ministers en marge of the Constitutional talks of September 1965 and that the United States participation therein was unheard of prior to that conference.

⁽¹⁾ Mauritius Legislative Assembly Debates No. 23 of 10th November 64 Col. 1574. (2) House of Commons Debates—Vol. 710, Col. 26.

35. The news of the Anglo-American survey of the islands met with protests from nearly all quarters of the Mauritian press which urged the then Government to combat the project. The danger of thus pushing the Indian Ocean into the zone of nuclear warfare was vehemently denounced in the Upper House of Parliament, India, on 18th November 1965, by the then Indian Minister of State for External Affairs, Mr Sardar Swaran Singh, and a no less energetic condemnation of the project was echoed in Sri Lanka by the then Prime Minister, Mrs Bandaranaike. And, at this stage, the Select Committee wishes to underline that, in the face of the complete indifference of the then Government, even a group of Mauritians living in the United Kingdom took the initiative of publishing in the British press their strong opposition to the Anglo-American venture. (1) Unfortunately, none of these outbursts of indignation succeeded in provoking from the then Premier of Mauritius and his Ministers a single note of protest.

On 15th June 1965, nearly on the eve of the Constitutional talks, Dr J. M. Curé, pressed Government to say whether the United States of America had any military interests in our dependencies. He urged Government to convey to the British Authorities 'the inadvisability of entering into any agreement with the United States of America before a change in our Constitution as envisaged by the London Conference of September next' and to ascertain, in the first instance 'the presence of oil fields in our dependencies before alienating them'. (Appendix J) The reply again came from Mr Tom Vickers who referred the Legislative Assembly to the reply he made on 14th December 1964 to Honourable Ramlallah. (Appendix I) Hence, when the parliamentary vacations came on 29th June, 1965, the Ministers who formed part of the Mauritius delegation to the Constitutional talks of September of that year, prepared their trip to Lancaster House in a spirit which, as far as the lesser dependencies were concerned, bordered, in the Select Committee's opinion, on outright collusion. Indeed, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam when he deponed before the Select Committee on 6th December, 1982, made no bones of submitting that his main concern at Lancaster House was the independence of Mauritius and that he was prepared to achieve that aim at any costs. He stated: 'A request was made to me. I had to see which was better-to cede out a portion of our territory of which very few people knew, and independence. I thought that independence was much more primordial and more important than the excision of the island which is very far from here, and which we had never visited, which we could never visit.' He added: "If I had to choose between independence and the ceding of Diego Garcia, I would have done again the same thing.'

⁽¹⁾ Le Mauricien-29th September, 1964.

VIII - Outside the Conference Table, 1965

37. The Select Committee accepts the unanimous statements made by the participants at the Constitutional Conference of September 1965, and who deponed before the Select Committee (paragraph 25), to the effect that at no time was the question of the excision of any part of the Mauritian territory brought for discussion at the open Conference. Such decision of the United Kingdom Government was privately communicated to the then Premier, Dr the Honourable Seewoosagur Ramgoolam. But the Select Committee is not prepared to put on the sole shoulders of the latter the blame for acceding unreservedly to the United Kingdom's request. Evidence is not lacking to show that, indeed, the Premier shared with, at least, the leaders of the political parties present at Lancaster House, and with some independent participants, including Mr Paturau, D.F.C., the United Kingdom's offer of excision of the islands and the interests of the United States of America in the deal. So much so that, at one time during the Conference, a Mauritian delegation comprising MM Guy Forget (Labour), Jules Koenig (PMSD), Abdool Razack Mohamed (CAM) and Maurice Paturau (Independent) met the Minister in charge of Economic Affairs in the American Embassy in London in an attempt to secure, against the proposal for excision, a remunerative market in America for Mauritian sugar. The only surviving member of that particular delegation, Mr Maurice Paturau, D.F.C., informed the Select Committee that the American authorities turned down the proposition and stressed that all matters incidental to the Chagos Archipelago issue were meant for discussion between the United States and the United Kingdom and not with Mauritius.

The most decisive event in the history of the excision of the Chagos Archipelago occurred on Thursday, 23rd September, 1965, on the eve of the closing session of the Constitutional talks. On that day, discussions were officially held between a group of United Kingdom officials, headed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr Anthony Greenwood, and a number of Mauritain Ministers. Evidence produced before the Select Committee shows, without any possible doubt, that the following Ministers took part in the proceedings: The Premier (Dr Seewoosagur Ramgoolam), the Minister of Social Security (Mr Abdool Razack Mohamed), the Minister of Industry, Commerce and External Communications (Mr Maurice Paturau, D.F.C.), the Minister of Local Government (Mr Sookdeo Bissoondoyal). As regards Mr Koenig, the minutes do not refer to his presence (Appendix K). The Chief Secretary's memorandum (Appendix M) mentions his attendance at certain discussions, without specifically referring to the meeting held on 23rd September 1965. Sir Gaëtan Duval categorically affirmed that Mr Koenig did not attend that meeting and Mr Paturau stated that he had no recollection of Mr Koenig being present. Record of the proceedings (Appendix K) indicates (i) the eight conditions on which Dr the Honourable Seewoosagur Ramgoolam undertook to obtain the approval of the local Council of Ministers and (ii) the acceptance thereof, in principle, by MM Mohamed (CAM) and Bissoondoyal (IFB). As regards the other participant, Mr Paturau, he had expressed dissent about the amount (£ 3m) of final compensation offered, which he considered to be totally inadequate. (Paragraph 25).

IX-Before the Council of Ministers

- The relevant parts of the minutes of the meeting held on 23rd September, 1965 (Appendix 'K') were transmitted to the Governor of Mauritius under cover of Colonial Office Despatch No. 423 dated 6th October 1965. (Appendix 'L'). The Select Committee notes that this document does not give any definite character to the proposals which Dr the Honourable S. Ramgoolam had undertaken to carry to the approval of his colleagues in the Council of Ministers. Hence, (i) defence and internal security would have to be negotiated, after independence (ii) projects to which the £3 m compensation would be devoted would be the subject of further discussions (iii) the British Government would use their good offices, without any firm guarantee of success, with the United States Government to secure concessions over sugar imports, supply of wheat and other commodities, to use labour and materials from Mauritius for construction works on the islands and (iv) to ensure that navigational and meteorological facilities, fishing rights and the possibility of using the air strip for emergency landing and refuelling of civil planes be made available to Mauritius. As regards the two other crucial points, namely, the return to Mauritius of the islands when no more needed and the exclusive right of Mauritius to 'the benefit of any mineral and oil discovered in or near the Chagos Archipelago', the United Kingdom Government simply took note, whilst stressing that the archipelago would remain under British Sovereignty.
 - 40. The arrangements regarding defence and internal security appear, in more details, in the final communiqué issued at the end of the Conference, (para, 23) Hence, in the Memorandum (Appendix 'M') prepared by the Chief Secretary, Mr Tom Vickers, C.M.G., for the Council of Ministers and embodying the United Kingdom's reservations on the proposals agreed to in principle by the Premier, Mr Mohamed and Mr Bissoondoyal (Appendix 'K'), a significant change had occurred. Point (i) relating to the defence agreement had been replaced by the following: (i) the Chagos Archipelago would be detached from Mauritius and placed under British Sovereignty by Order in Council. And the last paragraph of the Memorandum invited the Government of Mauritius to give confirmation of his willingness 'to agree that the British Government should now take the necessary legal steps to detach the Chagos Archipelago'. The Select Committee notes with concern that this unexpected proposition which had supposedly emerged from the discussions held on 23rd September 1965, but which is not contained in the original record of proceedings (Appendix 'K') did not strike the attention of any Mauritian Minister as being new and unwarranted.
 - 41. The Council of Ministers met on 5th November 1965 and the names of the Ministers present are listed in Appendix 'N' of this Report. Telegram 247 from Mauritius to the Secretary of State (Appendix 'O') translates the views of the Council of Ministers on the Chief Secretary's memorandum (Appendix 'M') and reports the dissent of the P.M.S.D. Ministers, in relation to the inadequacy of the compensation offered. No dissentient voice was recorded on the principle of (i) the detachment of the archipelago and (ii) the establishment of "defence facilities" thereon (Appendices 'P' & 'Q'). On the 11th November 1965, the P.M.S.D. Ministers resigned from the Coalition Government and in a press conference held the next day, they re-affirmed that their objection was not based on the principle of putting the islands at the disposal of the joint U.K./U.S. venture, but merely on the conditions under which such facilities have been granted, in complete indifference of the social and economic needs of Mauritius.

- 42. The United Kingdom's views on the last hour reservations of the Council of Ministers in regard to the excision came by way of telegram 313 dated 19th November 1965 (Appendix 'R'). It reasserts the hypothetical character of all future negotiations with the United States about sugar imports. The conditions under which the islands would be returned to Mauritius and prospections for oil and minerals permitted, are worth quoting:
 - 3. As regards point (vii) the assurance can be given provided it is made clear that a decision about the need to retain the islands must rest entirely with the United Kingdom Government and that it would not (repeat not) be open to the Government of Mauritius to raise the matter, or press for the return of the islands on its own initiative.
 - 4. As stated in paragraph 2 of my telegram No. 298 there is no intention of permitting prospecting for minerals and oils. The question of any benefits arising therefrom should not therefore arise unless and until the islands were no longer required for defence purposes and were returned to Mauritius.
- 43. The latest development as regards the eventual return of the islands to Mauritius when no more required is contained in a reply made by the British Prime Minister in the House of Commons, on 11th July, 1980, and which is reproduced hereunder:—

I had a useful exchange of views on 7 July with the Prime Minister of Mauritius on political, economic and cultural matters. Diego Garcia was one of the subjects discussed. When the Mauritius Council of Ministers agreed in 1965 to the detachment of the Chagos Islands to form part of British Indian Ocean Territory, it was announced that these would be available for the construction of defence facilities and that, in the event of the islands no longer being required for defence purposes, they should revert to Mauritius. This remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government. (1)

As regards the plea for employing Mauritian labour on construction works on the islands, the Select Committee is reproducing at Appendix 'S' of this report, an eloquent and self-explanatory exchange of correspondence between the Prime Minister of Mauritius and the British High Commissioner, as late as February/March 1971.

⁽I) House of Commons debates - Vol. 988, Col. 314.

44. The agreement of the Council of Ministers for the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius having been obtained at the sitting of 5th November, 1965, the Governor of Mauritius, Sir John Shaw Rennie, K.C.M.G., C.B.E., addressed a confidential letter to Ministers on 10th November, 1965, conveying the substance of the public announcement to that effect that was to be made in the House of Commons later on the same day. Sir John's letter together with the text of a communique to be released immediately afterwards are herewith reproduced as annexures T and U respectively.

X-The Public Announcement

45. Before entering into the last stage of description of the circumstances which led to the excision of the Chagos Archipelago, the Select Committee wishes to summarize hereunder the sequence of events leading thereto and underline at the same time the responsibilities of the then Premier, Dr the Honourable Seewoosagur Ramgoolam and its Council of Ministers therein:—

(i) In August 1964, an anglo-american survey of the islands takes place. On the 14th July preceding, the whole Council of Ministers is so informed by the then Governor of Mauritius, Sir John Shaw, Pagnic K. C.M.G. C. B.F. (Para. 33)

Shaw Rennie, K.C.M.G., C.B.E. (Para. 33)

(ii) In September 1965, the Mauritius Constitutional Conference is held in Lancaster House, London. En marge of these talks, the Premier is apprised in private of the joint UK/US project of using the islands for "defence" purposes. This information is conveyed by him to his fellow delegates and a delegation comprising the Deputy Leader of the Mauritius Labour Party, the Leader of the P.M.S.D., the Leader of the CAM and an Independent Member meets the Minister in Charge of Economic Affairs in the American Embassy, London, in an attempt to negotiate, in return for the use of the Chagos Archipelago, certain facilities from the United States of America. (Para. 37)

(iii) On 23rd September 1965, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr Anthony Greenwood, meets the Premier and certain Ministers of the Coalition Government. The discussions include the eventual detachment of the Chagos Archipelago. (Para. 38).

(iv) On 5th November 1965, the Council of Ministers is invited to give inter-alia, its agreement to the detachment. The agreement is given, in principle. (Para. 41).

(v) On 8th November, 1965, the British Indian Ocean Territory Order is issued. (Para. 10).

(vi) On 10th November, 1965, the Governor of Mauritius, Sir John Shaw Rennie, K.C.M.G., C.B.E., addresses a confidential letter to Ministers informing them of the United Kingdom's Government final decision on the issue and attaching the text of a press release in that connection. (Para. 44).

The above catalogue of events is most important for the comprehension of the most undignified attitude of certain Labour Ministers of the last Government who deponed before the Select Committee. (Para. 25).

- 46. Evidence shows that Dr the Honourable Seewoosagur Ramgoolam came back from the London Constitutional Conference on 11 October 1965 and left again for the United Kingdom on 29 November 1965, for medical treatment. He returned on 3 January 1966.
- 47. As already indicated by Sir John Shaw Rennie, K.C.M.G., C.B.E. (para. 44), the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr Anthony Greenwood, made on 10th November, 1965, an announcement in the House of Commons regarding 'new arrangements for the administration of certain islands in the Indian Ocean.' The text of that communication was released in Mauritius by the Chief Secretary's Office on the same day. (Appendix 'U')
- 48. On 14th December 1965, a parliamentary question was put to the Premier and Minister of Finance requesting a comprehensive statement 'on the question of the sale or hire of the island of Diego Garcia to either the United Kingdom Government or the United States of America or to both jointly' and certain other related matters. (Appendix F.) Honourable Guy Forget, on behalf of the Premier and Minister of Finance, replied to the question and reproduced verbatim the reply made by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in the House of Commons, on 10th November, 1965 (Appendix U).
- 49. On 6th December 1982, when Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam appeared before the Select Committee, he declared, to the Committee's astonishment and dismay, that the statement made in the Legislative Assembly, on 14th December 1965, by Mr Guy Forget, came as a surprise to him. 'Something was done mysteriously', he added. Indeed, he further stated: 'When I came back from the Conference to Mauritius, I was faced with the statement made to a question put in Parliament, by the late Mr Forget, which I said, as I still maintain, is a mystery to me.' And Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam went further as to declare that as late as 1972, when, as Prime Minister, he accepted on behalf of the Mauritius Government the receipt of a sum of £ 650,000 from the United Kingdom Government 'in full and final discharge of your Government's undertaking, given in 1965, to meet the cest of resettlement of persons displaced from the Chagos Archipelago since 8th November 1965, including those at present still in the archipelago' (Appendix W), he was still unwillingly bound by Mr Forget's statement.

When asked by the Select Committee to comment on Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam's observations that, "Mr Forget's statement came as a complete surprise to him and that there is a mystery surrounding Mr Forget's statement on the 14th December," Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo replied:—"If he had said that, then his recollection is as good as mine." Sir Veerasamy, who was then Minister of Education and Cultural Affairs, did not remember having seen the text of the communique (Appendix 'T') which the Governor of Mauritius addressed to Members of the Council of Ministers on 10th November 1965.

That element of surprise in the face of Honourable Forget's statement was also shared by Sir Harold Walter.

28

XI. The Displaced Ilois

50. On 3rd October 1980, the Public Accounts Committee, a Sessional Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly produced a detailed report on the "financial and other aspects of the 'sale' of Chagos Islands and the resettlement of the Displaced Ilois." The report is reproduced at Appendix 'Z'.

The Committee wishes to underline a new disturbing element in the question of the resettlement of the displaced population of the excised islands. Deponing before the Select Committee on 6th December 1982, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam stated that the resettlement issue was "taken up here in Mauritius" after the Constitutional Conference of September 1965. He stated that the issue was so extraneous to the proceedings at Lancaster House that, when he wrote to the British High Commissioner, on 4th September 1972, acknowledging receipt of a sum of £ 650,000 from the British Government "in full and final discharge" of the United Kingdom's undertaking given in 1965 "to meet the cost of resettlement of persons displaced from the Chagos Archipelago since 8th November 1965, including those at present still in the archipelago" (Appendix 'W'), he was simply acting in the "context" of the unexpected reply made by Mr Forget in the Legislative Assembly on 14th December 1965 (Appendix 'F').

In the light of documentary evidence produced, the Committee cannot but reject Sir Seewoosagur's submission. Item (iii) of the Record of Meeting held at Lancaster House, on 23rd September 1965, (Appendix 'K') indicates that the question was raised with him on that occasion. And Colonial Office Despatch No. 423 of 6th October 1965 (Appendix 'L') reports that he agreed that the document under reference was an accurate report of the proceedings.

On 4th November 1965, a Memorandum by the Chief Secretary (Appendix'M') conveying the points agreed upon at the meeting of 23rd September 1965, was circulated to the then Council of Ministers and item (iii) thereof again alluded to the resettlement question.

Hence as far back as September 1965, documents relating to such a delicate issue were in Government files and the Committee, whilst deploring Sir Seewoosagur's inaccurate statement before the Select Committee, strongly condemns the then Government for its indifference towards the displaced Ilois, Although the amount of compensation had been paid into the public treasury as far back as 1972, it was not until January 1977, after Mr Prosser's visit to Mauritius as a result of strong public agitation that, as a measure preliminary to some sort of rehabilitation, a survey of the persons involved was conducted.

XII. The Latest Developments

51. The Committee feels much comfort in the Resolution contained in the Political Declaration voted at the Non-Aligned Movement's New Delhi Summit Meeting, 1983, about Diego Garcia. (Appendix 'X'). It fully concurs with the views expressed to the effect that "the establishment and strengthening of the military base at Diego Garcia has endangered the sovereignty, territorial integrity and peaceful development of Mauritius and other states". It sincerely hopes that this new Resolution, added to those already adopted by international organisations, such as the United Nations General Assembly (Appendix 'D') and the Organisation of African Unity (Appendix 'E') will contribute to the return to Mauritius of that part of its territory.

XIII. Conclusions

- 52. Five main themes emerge from the Committee's proceedings and they are set out hereunder as a concluding chapter to this report.
 - A. The political climate prior to the Constitutional Conference, 1965

All the political parties which appeared before the Committee, —with the exception of the P.M.S.D. whose stand will be commented upon in the subsequent sub-paragraph- were unanimous in their submission (para. 25) that the question of the excision of the islands or their use for defence purposes did not occupy public opinion prior to the Constitutional Conference of September 1965. So much so that none of them did think it appropriate to make their stand known before leaving for the Constitutional talks. Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam alleged that the proposition of the U.K. Government was first communicated to him in private talks while the Conference was in progress. Honourable Aneercod Jugnauth, Q.C., then a member of the I.F.B. delegation, stated to the Committee that before the different delegations to the 1965 Constitutional Conference parted, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam had come to the desk where the I.F.B. delegation was and had informed them that he had had private talks with the British Government and had agreed, on behalf of the Government of Mauritius, to a request for communications facilities to be installed at Diego Garcia, He added: - "When he told us that, we took note and we had not much to say about it."

Evidence produced before the Committee does not support the claim that the question of the excision of the islands or their use for defence purposes did not occupy public opinion prior to the Constitutional Conference. Amongst others, the more salient features indicative of the U.K. Government's definite plans for the militarization of the islands with United States involvement and their possible excision therefor are listed chronologically hereunder:—

- 1. On 21st February 1964, Mr David Windsor, of the United Kingdom Institute of Strategic Studies, in a broadcast styled "London Calling Mauritius" hinted, in most unequivocal terms, at the U.K.'s decision of using Mauritius and its dependencies as a unit for its defence strategy in the Indian Ocean (para. 31). Report of this broadcast was lengthily reproduced in the local press. (Appendix 'A 1').
- 2. On 4th July 1964, the Economist, reviewing the U.K.'s military strategy as a result of the political uncertainties in Aden, called for a "military effort" for the setting up of a new Indian Ocean base and stressed that "this way of thinking points unerringly to some kind of Anglo-American exercise." Again, this article was taken up in the local press. (Appendix 'A 2').
- 3. On 22nd July 1964, the Australian paper "Daily News" revealed that talks had been initiated between Washington and Whitehall for a joint military venture in the Indian Ocean and pointed Mauritius as a logical base for such operation both for reasons of strategy and political stability. This excerpt was also published in the local press. (Appendix 'A 3').
- 4. On 30th August 1964, Reuter confirmed that "high level discussions" were in progress for providing new American bases "on British islands in the Indian Ocean" and reported that a technical survey had already been effected. (Appendix 'A 4').
 - On 31st August 1964, the "Daily Telegraph" directly alluded to the possibility of using Diego Garcia as a Polaris communications centre. (Appendix 'A 5').
 - On 5th September 1964, the Economist carried a more direct allusion to the "present Anglo-American search for a communications centre (and may be something more) in the Seychelles or one of the Mauritius dependencies." (Appendix 'A 6').
 - 7. On 23rd September 1964, a group of Mauritian nationals residing in London lodged in the British press a strong protest against the possible installation of "military bases on Mauritian territory and on other islands in the Indian Ocean." This denunciation was reproduced in the local press. (Appendix 'A 7').

- 8. On 10th November 1964, Honourable B. Ramlallah intervened rather lengthily on the question (Appendix'H') in the Legislative Assembly. His intervention succeeded in obtaining from Government side two contradictory statements. On the same day, Honourable Satcam Boolell, then Minister of Agriculture and Natural Resources, interjected that Government was not aware of the project. This assertion will be contradicted on 14th December 1964 when the Chief Secretary will confess that indeed "a joint British-American technical survey of certain islands, including the Chagos Archipelago and Agalega but not including Mauritius" had been in progress and that the Council of Ministers—of which Honourable Boolell was a member—had been duly informed. (Appendix 'I'). Such information was, indeed, communicated to the Council of Ministers by the then Governor-General on 14th July 1964. (Para. 33).
- 9. On 16th January 1965, the Economist, in an article headed "Strategies West and East" confirmed that a joint Anglo-American survey of the islands had been effected and, for the first time, hinted at the necessity of excising the Aldabra Group from the Seychelles and Diego Garcia from Mauritius, by an Order-in-Council. (Appendix A 8).
- 10. On 5th April 1965, Reuter made mention of a statement in the House of Commons by Mrs Eirene White, then Under-Secretary of State for the Coionies, who indicated that consultations about the joint Anglo-American survey of the islands had taken place with the Mauritian authorities, at two levels: namely, with Dr. the Honourable Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, in July 1964 and with the Council of Ministers in November of the same year. (Appendix 'A 9').
- 11. On 9th May, 1965, the Washington Post revealed that, as a result of the technical survey, Diego Garcia stood first on the priority list drawn by the American and British authorities as a recommended location for a joint Anglo-American military facility in the Indian Ocean and referred to the necessity of entrusting the administration of the island to London. The paper revealed that the United States had requested that the "entire archipelago be acquired" and that such exercise should be completed before the forthcoming Constitutional Conference. This illuminating article even hinted at the U.S. idea "wherever possible, to buy out indigenous inhabitants of the islands selected for military use and move them elsewhere." (Appendix 'A 10').

- 12. On 3rd June 1965, news broke out in the local press that the Anglo-American military base would, in fact, be installed on the dependencies of Mauritius and of the Seychelles and that a sum of Rs 135 m had been voted for the acquisition of the islands and the displacement of their inhabitants. (Appendix 'A 11').
- 13. On 15th June 1965, Dr. M. Curé, by way of a parliamentary question, urged Government to "express to the British Government the inadvisibility of entering into any agreement with the United States of America" for the eventual acquisition of the dependencies of Mauritius, before the forthcoming Constitutional Conference. The Chief Secretary replied that he had nothing to add to the information communicated by him to Mr Ramlallah on on 14th December 1964. (Appendix 'I')
- 14. On 19th June 1965, the local press carried information to the effect that the joint U.K./U.S. military project in the Indian Ocean was on the agenda of the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference which was then in session and requested the prompt intervention of the Premier of Mauritius and of the Government. The appeal fell on deaf ears. (Appendix 'A 12').
- 15. On 27th July 1965, the local press again reported that the Government of Mauritius had been put in presence of the whole scheme, including the excision of the islands and that the Premier had offered, as a counter-proposal, the lease thereof. (Appendix 'A 13').

This long—but not complete—catalogue of events translates, in the Committee's opinion, the psychosis prevalent in the public mind, both in Mauritius and overseas, on the issue, prior to the Constitutional Conference of September 1965. It is a matter of regret therefore, that none of the political parties which, at that time, formed part of the Coalition Government, did think it fit to allay the fears of the population. Hence, the Select Committee strongly condemns the passive attitude of the political class represented in the then all-party Government and which formed part of the Mauritian delegation which attended the Constitutional Conference of September 1965. Their silence, in the light of such repeated warnings from responsible sectors of public opinion, bordered, in the Committee's judgment, on connivence.

Even more strongly, the Select Committee condemns the attitude of the then Ministers who, as will be commented upon at sub-paragraph (C), gave their agreement to the excision of the Chagos Archipelago and to its use for U.K./U.S. defence interests.

> The attitude of the Parti Mauricien Social Démocrate (P.M.S.D.) The position of the P.M.S.D. on the excision of the Chagos Archipelago was made known to the Select Committee by Sir Gaëtan Duval when he deponed on 12th November 1982. He claimed that the P.M.S.D. had not been against the use of the archipelago for a joint U.K./U.S. venture, but had been dissatisfied with the conditions attached to the deal. The sovereignty of Mauritius ought to have been preserved and negotiations for terms most beneficial to the social and economic betterment of the Mauritian population, subsequently conducted with any nation interested in the use of the islands. Sir Gaëtan explained that the then Leader of the P.M.S.D. even refused to attend the meeting held on 23rd September 1965, as a proof that the party was adamant on the excision issue. Referring to the reasons for the resignation of P.M.S.D. Ministers from Government, Sir Gaëtan had this to say: "Je dois vous dire qu'à ce moment là nous démissionnons non pas parcéque nous étions contre l'idée de la construction d'une base américaine, mais parce que nous étions contre l'idée de la cession d'une partie du territoire mauricien". He will later state: "Nous étions d'accord sur le principe de la base anglo-américaine à Diego Garcia mais nous refusions la cession."

> The Select Committee regrets not being able to accept Sir Gaëtan's submission. On no less than three occasions, documentary evidence will establish without the least possible doubt that the P.M.S.D. was indeed agreeable, in principle, to the excision of the Chagos Archipelago but objected to the terms thereof. These occasions are listed hereunder:—

(i) the Minutes of the Council of Ministers indicate that on 5th November 1965, the Council was called upon to give "their agreement that the British Government should take necessary legal steps to detach the Chagos Archipelago." On that day, the P.M.S.D. Ministers intimated that "while they were agreeable to detachment of the Chagos Archipelago they must reconsider their position as Members of the Government in the light of the Council's decision because they considered the amount of compensation inadequate". (Appendix 'P'). These Minutes were approved without any amendment to that effect, on 12th November 1965, (Appendix 'Q') in the absence of the P.M.S.D. Ministers who had resigned the day before. (ii) Public confirmation of the Minutes of the Council of Ministers held on 5th November 1965 (Appendix 'P') was however given at a press conference held by the leaders of that party on 12th November 1965 to explain their resignation as Ministers. The following excerpts from press reports are worth quoting:—

Je tiens à déclarer de la façon la plus formelle que le P.M.S.D. n'est pas contre le principe de céder les Chagos ou que cet archipel devienne un centre de communications pour faciliter la défense de l'Occident. Le P.M.S.D. en approuve le principe: il est en désacord sur les termes et les conditions de cette cession. (Mr Koenig) (1) Nous ne sommes pas contre l'excision des îles pour les besoins militaires de l'Ouest. (Mr Koenig) (2)

(iii) On 14th December 1965, Mr Duval, by way of a parliamentary question invited Government to give an opportunity to the Legislative Assemby "to discuss the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius and its inclusion in the British Indian Ocean Territory, specially in view of the stand taken by India and other Afro-Asian countries". Mr Forget, on behalf of the Premier and Minister of Finance, rightly referred Mr Duval to the press conference of the P.M.S.D. held on 12th November 1965 where no disagreement against the excision was expressed by the party. The supplementary question put by Mr. Duval re-affirmed that the P.M.S.D. was concerned by the conditions of the excision and not by the excision itself. (Appendix 'Y').

Hence, the plea of the P.M.S.D.'s opposition to the excision of the islands does not hold water.

C. The existence of documents

Both Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam and Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo, when they deponed before the Select Committee (para. 25A) stated that at no time were they put in presence of any document relating to the excision of the islands. They argued that there never existed any agreement thereon nor any minutes of proceedings of possible discussions on the issue. This statement was made not only to the Committee but was very often repeated in the Legislative Assembly, in the past, in reply to interventions from all sides of the House.

⁽¹⁾ Le Mauricien-13th November 1965

⁽²⁾ L'Expreis-13th November 1965

The Select Committee is in a position to reject these statements. In spite of Sir Seewoosagur's declaration to the effect that no Minutes whatsoever had been produced to him, the Select Committee has been able to obtain at least two documents from files kept at the Prime Minister's Office and which indicate the contrary. They are listed hereunder:—

- (i) The record of the meeting held at Lancaster House and which outlines the points agreed upon between the Secretary of State for the Colonies on one side and on the other Dr the Honourable Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, the Honourable Abdool Razack Mohamed and the Honourable Sockdeo Bissoondoyal. The document is reproduced at Appendix 'K' of this report.
- (ii) Colonial Office despatch No. 423, dated 6th October, 1965, which confirms that the contents of the record mentioned above had already been agreed in London with Dr the Honourable Scewoosagur Ramgoolam "and by him with Mr Mohamed, as being an accurate record of what was decided". (Appendix 'L').
- (iii) Furthermore, on 5th November 1965, the Council of Ministers, including Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam and Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo, gave their agreement to the effect that, "the British Government should take the necessary legal steps to detach the Chagos Archipelago." (Appendix 'P').

In these circumstances, the Select Committee cannot but record its indignation at the attitude of these Senior Ministers of the then Government who, before the Committee, in the Legislative Assembly, and in public pronouncements, denied the existence of any documents relating to the detachment of the islands. In the same breath, the Select Committee wishes to denounce the then Council of Ministers which did not hesitate to agree to the detachment of the islands.

D. The United States Involvement and Defence Considerations

The Select Committee again rejects the submission made by the then Leaders of the Mauritius Labour Party and the Independent Forward Bloc to the effect that, from information made available to them, in 1965, the islands would be used as a communications centre only with no United States involvement.

The United States interest in the deal was evident ever since 1964 when the technical survey of the islands was being carried out. The evidence is contained in the then Chief Secretary's reply to Mr Ramlallah, (Appendix 'I'). Again, at the Constitutional Conference of September 1965, the United States involvement was such that a delegation headed by the Deputy Leader of the Mauritius Labour Party visited the Minister in Charge of Economic Affairs at the American Embassy, in London, in an attempt to secure, for Mauritius, some benefits in return for the excision. (Para. 37). And later, the record of the meeting held at Lancaster House on 23rd September 1965, will, in no uncertain terms, at items (iv) (v) and (vi) bear testimony of the U.S. presence in the deal. (Appendix 'K').

In addition, all documents exchanged between the Secretary of State for the Colonies and the Mauritius Government preceding and following the then Council of Ministers' agreement to the excision (Appendices 'L', 'M', 'O', 'R') bear reference to a joint U.K./U.S. venture. Some of the letters, including the memorandum submitted to the Council of Ministers by the Chief Secretary on 4th November 1965 (Appendix 'M') were even boldly headed "U.K./U.S. Defence Interests".

Here again, the Select Committee cannot but strongly denounce such deliberate misleading of public opinion on the matter.

E. The Blackmail Element

Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam's statement before the Select Committee is highly indicative of the atmosphere which prevailed during the private talks he had, at Lancaster House, with the British authorities. He avered that he was put before the choice of either retaining the archipelago or obtaining independence for his country, but refused to describe the deal as a blackmail. Sir Gaëtan Duval argued that the choice was between the excision and a referendum on independence. This contradiction is substantially immaterial to the Committee. What is of deeper concern to the Select Committee is the indisputable fact that a choice was offered through Sir Seewoosagur to the majority of delegates supporting independence and which attitude cannot fall outside the most elementary definition of blackmailing. Sir Harold Walter, deponing before the Select Committee on 11th January 1983, will even go to the length of stating that the position was such that, had Diego Garcia which "was, certainly, an important tooth in the whole cogwheel leading to independence" not been ceded, the grant of national sovereignty to Mauritius "would have taken more years probably".

The Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples voted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 14th December 1960 (Appendix 'C') clearly sets out at para. 5 that the transfer of power to peoples living in "Trust and Non-Self Governing Territories or all other Territories" should be effected "without any conditions and reservations". In addition , at para. 6, it expressedly lays down that, "any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations."

Hence, notwithstanding the blackmail element which strongly puts in question the legal validity of the excision, the Select Committee strongly denounces the flouting by the United Kingdom Government, on these counts, of the Charter of the United Nations.

1st June 1983.

JEAN-CLAUDE DE L'ESTRAC Chairman

APPENDIX A

List of Persons who Deponed Before the Select Committee and Date of Hearing

- 1. Sir Charles Gaëtan Duval, Q.C.—Leader of the Opposition—12th November 1982.
- Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, G.C.M.G. 6th December 1982.
- 3. Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo, Kt. 13th December 1982.
- 4. Mr Maurice Paturau, D.F.C., C.B.E. 13th December 1982.
- 5. Sir Harold Walter, Kt. 11th January 1983.
- 6. Sir Satcam Boolell, Kt. 11th January 1983.
- The Hon. Aneerood Jugnauth, Q.C. Prime Minister of Mauritius 1st February 1983.
- 8. Sir René Maingard de la Ville-es-Offrans, C.B.E. 8th February 1983.

APPENDIX B

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

1965 No. 1920

Overseas Territories

The British Indian Ocean Territory Order 1965

Made

8th November 1965

At the Court at Buckingham Palace, the 8th day of November 1965

Present

The Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in Council

Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of the powers in that behalf by the Colonial Boundaries Act 1895, or otherwise in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

- This Order may be cited as the British Indian Ocean Territory Order Citation, 1965.
 - 2. (1) In this Order-

Interpretation.

- "the Territory" means the British Indian Ocean Territory;
- "the Chagos Archipelago" means the islands mentioned in schedule 2 to this Order;
- "the Aldabra Group" means the islands as specified in the First Schedule to the Scychelles Letters Patent 1948 and mentioned in schedule 3 to this Order.
- (2) The Interpretation Act 1889 shall apply, with the necessary modifications, for the purpose of interpreting this Order and otherwise in relation thereto as it applies for the purpose of interpreting and otherwise in relation to Acts of Parliament of the United Kingdom.
 - 3. As from the date of this Order-

British

- (a) the Chagos Archipelago, being islands which immediately before Ocean Territhe date of this Order were included in the Dependencies of tory to be a Mauritius, and
- (b) the Farquhar Islands, the Aldabra Group and the Island of Desroches, being islands which immediately before the date of this Order were part of the Colony of Seychelles, shall together form a separate colony which shall be known as the British Indian Ocean Territory.

4. There shall be a Commissioner for the Territory who shall be appointed by Her Majesty by Commission under Her Majesty's Sign Manual and ment of office of Commissioner. Majesty's pleasure.

Powers and duties of Commissioner. 5. The Commissioner shall have such powers and duties as are conferred or imposed upon him by or under this Order or any other law and such other functions as Her Majesty may from time to time be pleased to assign to him, and, subject to the provisions of this Order and any other law by which any such powers or duties are conferred or imposed, shall do and execute all things that belong to his office according to such instructions, if any, as Her Majesty may from time to time see fit to give Oaths to be taken by Commissioner.

- 6. A person appointed to hold the office of Commissioner shall, before entering upon the duties of that office, take and subscribe the oath of allegiance and the oath for the due execution of his office in the forms set out in Schedule 1 to this Order.
- Discharge of Commissioner's functions during from or incapable of discharging the functions of his office, those functions vacancy, etc.

 The Commissioner of the Co
 - (2) Before any person enters upon the performance of the functions of the office of Commissioner under this section, he shall take and subscribe the oaths directed by section 6 of this Order to be taken by a person appointed to hold the office of Commissioner.
 - (3) For the purposes of this section-
 - (a) the Commissioner shall not be regarded as absent from the Territory, or as prevented from, or incapable of, discharging the functions of his office, by reason only that he is in the Colony of Seychelles or is in passage between that Colony and the Territory or between one part of the Territory and another; and
 - (b) the Commissioner shall not be regarded as absent from the Territory, or as prevented from, or incapable of, discharging the functions of his office at any time when an officer is discharging those functions under section 8 of this Order.

Discharge of Commissioner's functions by deputy. 8. (i) The Commissioner may, by instrument under the Official Stamp of the Territory, authorize a fit and proper person to discharge for and on behalf of the Commissioner on such occasions and subject to such exceptions and conditions as may be specified in that Instrument such of the functions of the office of Commissioner as may be specified in that Instrument.

- (2) The powers and authority of the Commissioner shall not be affected by any authority given to such person under this section otherwise than as Her Majesty may at any time think proper to direct, and such person shall conform to and observe such instructions relating to the discharge by him of any of the functions of the office of Commissioner as the Commissioner may from time to time address to him.
- (3) Any authority given under this section may at any time be varied or revoked by Her Majesty by instructions given through a Secretary of State or by the Commissioner by Instruments under the Official Stamp of the Territory.
- There shall be an Official Stamp for the Territory which the Commis-Official sioner shall keep and use for stamping all such documents as may be Stamp.
 by any law required to be stamped therewith.
- 10. The Commissioner, in the name and on behalf of Her Majesty, Constitution may constitute such offices for the Territory, as may lawfully be constituted by Her Majesty and, subject to the provisions of any law for the time being in force in the Territory and to such instructions as may from time to time be given to him by Her Majesty through a Secretary of State, the Commissioner may likewise—
 - (a) make appointments, to be held during Her Majesty's pleasure, to any office so constituted; and
 - (b) dismiss any person so appointed or take such other disciplinary action in relation to him as the Commissioner may think fit.
- 11. (1) The Commissioner may make laws for the peace, order and Power to good government of the Territory, and such laws shall be published in make laws, such manner as the Commissioner may direct.
- (2) Any laws made by the Commissioner may be disallowed by Her Majesty through a Secretary of State.
- (3) Whenever any law has been disallowed by Her Majesty, the Commissioner shall cause notice of such disallowance to be published in such manner as he may direct.
- (4) Every law disallowed shall cease to have effect as soon as notice of disallowance is published as aforesaid, and thereupon any enactment amended or repealed by, or in pursuance of, the law disallowed shall have effect as if the law had not been made.
- (5) Subject as aforesaid, the provisions of subsection (2) of section 38 of the Interpretation Act 1889 shall apply to such disallowance as they apply to the repeal of an enactment by an Act of Parliament.

Commissioner's powers of pardon, etc.

- The Commissioner may, in Her Majesty's name and on Her Majesty's behalf—
 - (a) grant to any person concerned in or convicted of any offence against the laws of the Territory a pardon, either free or subject to lawful conditions; or
 - (b) grant to any person a respite, either indefinite or for a specified period, of the execution of any sentence imposed on that person for any such offence; or
 - (c) substitute a less severe form of punishment for any punishment imposed by any such sentence; or
 - (d) remit the whole or any part of any such sentence or of any penalty or forfeiture otherwise due to Her Majesty on account of any offence.

Concurrent appointments.

- Whenever the substantive holder of any office constituted by or under this Order is on leave of absence pending relinquishment of his office—
 - (a) another person may be appointed substantively to that office;
 - (b) that person shall, for the purpose of any functions attraching to that office, be deemed to be the sole holder of that office.

Disposal of land.

14. Subject to any law for the time being in force in the Territory and to any Instructions from time to time given to the Commissioner by Her Majesty under Her Sign Manual and Signet or through a Secretary of State, the Commissioner, in Her Majesty's name and on Her Majesty's behalf, may make and execute grants and dispositions of any lands or other immovable property within the Territory that may be lawfully granted or disposed of by Her Majesty.

Existing

- 15. (1) Except to the extent that they may be repealed, amended or modified by laws made under section 11 of this Order or by other lawful authority, the enactments and rules of law that are in force immediately before the date of this Order in any of the islands comprised in the Territory shall, on and after that date, continue in force therein but shall be applied with such adaptations, modifications and exceptions as are necessary to bring them into conformity with the provisions of this Order.
- (2) In this section " enactments" includes any instruments having the force of law.

Exercise of jurisdiction by courts.

- 16. (1) The Commissioner, with the concurrence of the Governor of any other colony, may, by a law made under section 11 of this Order, confer jurisdiction in respect of the Territory upon any court established for that other colony.
- (2) Any such court as is referred to in subsection (1) of this section and any court established for the Territory by a law made under section 1 of this Order may, in accordance with any directions issued from time to time by the Commissioner, sit in the Territory or elsewhere for the purpose of exercising its jurisdiction in respect of the Territory.

- 17. (1) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Order but subject Judicial proceedings. to any law made under section 11 thereof,
 - (a) any proceedings that, immediately before the date of this Order, have been commenced in any court having jurisdiction in any of the islands comprised in the Territory may be continued and determined before that court in accordance with the law that was applicable thereto before that date;
 - (b) where, under the law in force in any such island immediately before the date of this Order, an appeal would lie from any judgment of a court having jurisdiction in that island, whether given before that date or given on or after that date in pursuance of paragraph (a) of this subsection, such an appeal shall continue to lie and may be commenced and determined in accordance with the law that was applicable thereto before that date;
 - (c) any judgment of a court having jurisdiction in any such island given, but not satisfied or enforced, before the date of this Order, and any judgment of a court given in any such proceedings as are referred to in paragraph (a) or paragraph (b) of this subsection, may be enforced on and after the date of this Order in accordance with the law in force immediately before that date.
- (2) In this section "judgment" includes decree, order, conviction, sentence and decision.
- 18. (1) The Seychelles Letters Patent 1948 as amended by the Seychelles Amendment Letters Patent 1955 are amended as follows:-
 - (a) the words " and the Farquhar Islands " are omitted from Patent 1948 the definition of " the Colony " in Article 1(1); and Mauri-
 - (b) in the first schedule the word "Desroches" and the words titution "Aldabra Group consisting of", including the words Order 1964, specifying the islands comprised in that Group, are omitted.
- (2) Section 90(1) of the Constitution set out in schedule 2 to the Mauritius (Constitution) Order 1964 is amended by the insertion of the following definition immediately before the definition of "the Gazette":— "Dependencies" means the islands of Rodrigues and Agalega,
 - and the St. Brandon Group of islands often called Cargados Carajos; ",
- (3) Section 2(1) of the Seychelles (Legislative Council) Order in Council 1960 as amended by the Seychelles (Legislative Council) (Amenddefinition of "the Colony" of the words "as defined in the Seychelles Letters Patent 1948 ".

44

APPENDIX B-continued

19. There is reserved to Her Majesty full power to make laws from Power time to time for the peace, order and good government of the British reserved to Her Majesty. Indian Ocean Territory (including, without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing, laws amending or revoking this Order).

(sd) W. G. AGNEW

SCHEDULE I

Section 6

OATH (OR AFFIRMATION) OF ALLEGIANCE

I,.....do swear (or do solemnly affirm) that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second, Her Heirs and Successors, according to law. So help me God.

OATH (OR AFFIRMATION) FOR THE DUE EXECUTION OF THE OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER

SCHEDULE 2

Section 2(1)

Diego Garcia Egmont or Six Islands

Péros Banhos

Salomon Islands Trois Frères, including Danger Island and Eagle Island

SCHEDULE 3

West Island Middle Island South Island

Cocoanut Island

Euphratis and other small Islets.

Note: The British Indian Ocean Territory Order 1965 was amended, as follows, by the British Indian Ocean Territory (Amendment) Order 1968:—

(a) In the definition of "the Aldahra Group" in section 2(t) the words " as specified in the First Schedule to the Seychelles Letters Patent 1948 and " were omitted;

(b) in schedule 2 for the words—
"Trois Fréres, including Danger Island and Eagle Island." there were substituted the words—
"Three Brothers Islands
Nelson or Legour Island

Eagle Islands Danger Islands. "; and

(e) in schedule 3 the words "Polymnic Island" were inserted immediately after the words "Cocoanut Island".

APPENDIX B—continued OVERSEAS TERRITORIES

The British Indian Ocean Territory Royal Instructions 1965

Dated 8th November 1965 Elizabeth R.

Instructions to Our Commissioner for the British Indian Ocean Territory or other Officer for the time being performing the functions of his office.

We do hereby direct and enjoin and declare Our will and pleasure as follows:-

- 1. (1) These Instructions may be cited as the British Indian Ocean Citation, Cerritory Royal Instructions 1965.
- (2) These Instructions shall come into operation on the same day as the British Indian Ocean Territory Order 1965 and thereupon the Instructions issued to Our Governor and Commander-in-Chief for Mauritius and dated the 26th February 1964, and the Instructions issued to Our Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of Seychelles and dated the 11th March 1948, and the Additional Instructions issued to the said Governor and Commander-in-Chief and dated the 2nd May 1960 and the 29th July 1963, shall, without prejudice to anything lawfully done thereunder, and in so far as they are, respectively, applicable to the islands comprised in the British Indian Ocean Territory as defined in the British Indian Ocean Territory Order 1965, cease to have effect in respect of those islands.
- 2.—(1) In these Instructions "the Commissioner" means the Com-Interpretamissioner for the British Indian Ocean Territory and includes the person tion, who, under and to the extent of any authority in that behalf, is for the time being performing the functions of his office.
- (2) The Interpretation Act 1889 shall apply, with the necessary adaptations, for the purpose of interpreting these Instructions and otherwise in relation thereto as it applies for the purpose of interpreting, and in relation to, Acts of Parliament of the United Kingdom.
- 3.—(1) These Instructions, so far as they are applicable to any Instructions functions of the office of Commissioner to be performed by such person to be observed as is mentioned in paragraph (1) of the preceding clause, shall be deemed deputy, to be addressed to, and shall be observed by, such person.
- (2) Such person may, if he thinks fit, apply to Us through a Secretary of State for instructions in any matter; but he shall forthwith transmit to the Commissioner a copy of every despatch or other communication addressed to Us.
- 4. In the enacting of laws the Commissioner shall observe, so far as is Rules for the practicable, the following rules:—
- (1) All laws shall be styled Ordinances and the words of enactment shall be "Enacted by the Commissioner for the British Indian Ocean Territory".

- (2) Matters having no proper relation to each other shall not be provided for by the same Ordinance; no Ordinance shall contain anything foreign to what the title of the Ordinance imports; and no provision having indefinite duration shall be included in any Ordinance expressed to have limited duration.
- (3) All Ordinances shall be distinguished by titles, and shall be divided into successive sections consecutively numbered, and to every section there shall be annexed in the margin a short indication of its
- (4) All Ordinances shall be numbered consecutively in a separate series for each year commencing in each year with the number one, and the position of each Ordinance in the series shall be determined with reference to the day on which the Commissioner enacted it.

- Certain Ordinances not to be enacted instructions through a Secretary of State, enact any Ordinance within any without instructions.

 Graph ordinance ordinance within any without instructions.

 Graph ordinance ordinance within any without instructions.

 Graph ordinance ordinance ordinance ordinance contains a clause suspending the operation thereof until the signification of Ordinance ordinance. ding the operation thereof until the signification of Our pleasure thereon, that is to say-
 - (1) any Ordinance for the divorce of married persons;
 - (2) any Ordinance whereby any grant of land or money, or other donation or gratuity may be made to himself;
 - (3) any Ordinance affecting the currency of the British Indian Ocean Territory or relating to the issue of bank notes;
 - (4) any Ordinance imposing differential duties;
 - (5) any Ordinance the provisions of which shall appear to him to be inconsistent with obligations imposed upon Us by Treaty;
 - (6) any Ordinance affecting the discipline or control of Our Forces by land, sea or air;
 - (7) any Ordinance of an extraordinary nature and importance whereby Our prerogative, or the rights or property of Our subjects not residing in the British Indian Ocean Territory, or the trade, transport or communications of any part of Our dominions or any territory under Our protection or any territory in which We may for the time being have jurisdiction may be prejudiced;
 - (8) any Ordinance whereby persons of any community or religion may be subjected or made liable to disabilities or restrictions to which persons of other communities or religions are not also made liable, or become entitled to any privilege or advantage religions; 7197

(9) any Ordinance containing provisions which have been disallowed by Us;

Provided that the Commissioner may, without such instructions as aforesaid and although the Ordinance contains no such clause as aforesaid, enact any such Ordinance (except an Ordinance the provisions of which appear to him to be inconsistent with obligations imposed upon Us by Treaty) if he shall have satisfied himself that an urgent necessity exists requiring that the Ordinance be brought into immediate operation; but in any such case he shall forthwith transmit a copy of the Ordinance to Us together with his reasons for so enacting the same.

- 6. When any Ordinance has been enacted, the Commissioner shall Ordinances at the earliest convenient opportunity transmit to Us, through a Secretary through of State, for the signification of Our pleasure, a transcript in duplicate of Secretary of the Ordinance duly authenticated under the Official Stamp of the British State. Indian Ocean Territory and by his own signature, together with an explanation of the reasons and occasion for the enactment of the Ordinance.
- 7. As soon as practicable after the commencement of each year, the Ordinances Commissioner shall cause a complete collection to be published, for to be general information, of all Ordinances enacted for the British Indian yearly. Ocean Territory during the preceding year.
- 8. Every appointment by the Commissioner of any person to any Appointoffice of employment shall, unless otherwise provided by law, be expressed ments to be during pleasure only.
- (1) Before disposing of any lands to Us belonging in the British Disposition Indian Ocean Territory the Commissioner shall cause such reservations of Crown to be made therefrom as he may think necessary for any public purpose.
- (2) The Commissioner shall not, directly or indirectly, purchase for himself any land or building in the British Indian Ocean Territory to Us belonging without Our special permission given through a Secretary of State.
- 10. Whenever any offender has been condemned by the sentence of Power of any court having jurisdiction in the matter to suffer death for any offence capital cases, shall call for a written report of the case from the judge who tried it, and for such other information derived from the record of the case or elsewhere as he may require, and may call upon the judge to attend upon him and to produce his notes; and if he pardons or respites the offender, he shall as soon as is practicable, transmit to Us through a Secretary of State a report upon the case, giving the reason for his decision.

Given at Our Court at St. James's this eighth day of November 1965 in the fourteenth year of Our Reign.

1514 (XV)

Declaration on the granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples
The General Assembly,

Mindful of the determination proclaimed by the peoples of the world in the Charter of the United Nations to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom.

Conscious of the need for the creation of conditions of stability and well-being and peaceful and friendly relations based on respect for the principles of equal rights and self-determination of all peoples, and of universal respect for, and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recognizing the passionate yearning for freedom in all dependent peoples and the decisive role of such peoples in the attainment of their independence,

Aware of the increasing conflicts resulting from the denial of or impediments in the way of the freedom of such peoples, which constitute a serious threat to world peace,

Considering the important role of the United Nations in assisting the movement for independence in Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories,

Recognizing that the peoples of the world ardently desire the end of colonialism in all its manifestations,

Convinced that the continued existence of colonialism prevents the development of international economic cooperation, impedes the social, cultural and economic development of dependent peoples and militates against the United Nations ideal of universal peace,

Affirming that peoples may, for their own ends, freely dispose of their natural wealth and resources without prejudice to any obligations arising out of international economic cooperation, based upon the principle of mutual benefit, and international law,

Believing that the process of liberation is irresistible and irreversible and that, in order to avoid serious crises, an end must be put to colonialism and all practices of segregation and discrimination associated therewith,

Welcoming the emergence in recent years of a large number of dependent territorie into freedom and independence, and recognizing the increasingly peaceful trends towards freedom in such territories which have not yet attained independence,

Convinced that all peoples have an inalienable right to complete freedom, the exercise of their sovereignty and the integrity of their national territory, solemnly proclaims the necessity of bringing to a speedy and unconditional end colonialism in all its forms and manifestations;

And to this end Declares that:

- The subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a denial of fundamental human rights, is contrary to the Charter of the United Nations and is an impediment to the promotion of world peace and cooperation.
- All peoples have the right to self-determination, by virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development.
- Inadequacy of political, economic, social or educational preparedness should never serve as a pretext for delaying independence.
- 4. All armed action or repressive measures of all kinds directed against dependent peoples shall cease in order to enable them to exercise peacefully and freely their right to complete independence, and the integrity of their national territory shall be respected.
- 5. Immediate steps shall be taken, in Trust and Non-Self Governing Territories or all other territories which have not yet attained independence, to transfer all powers to the peoples of those territories, without any conditions or reservations, in accordance with their freely expressed will and desire, without any distinction as to race, creed or colour, in order to enable them to enjoy complete independence and freedom.
- Any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.
- 7. All states shall observe faithfully and strictly the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the present Declaration on the basis of equality, non-interference in the internal affairs of all states, and respect for the sovereign rights of all peoples and their territorial integrity.

14th December 1960.

948th plenary meeting

United Nations General Assembly Resolution 2066

QUESTION OF MAURITIUS

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Mauritius and other islands composing the Territory of Mauritius,

Having examined the chapters of the reports of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the Territory of Mauritius,

Recalling its resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence 40 Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Regretting that the administering Power has not fully implemented Resolution 1514 (XV) with regard to that Territory,

Noting with deep concern that any step taken by the administering Power to detach certain islands from the Territory of Mauritius for the purpose of establishing a military base would be in contravention of the Declaration, and in particular of paragraph 6 thereof,

- Approves the chapters of the reports of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the Territory of Mauritius and endorses the conclusions and recommendations of the Special Committee contained therein;
- Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of the Territory of Mauritius to freedom and independence in accordance with General Assembly Resolution 1514(XV),
- Invites the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to take effective measures with a view to the immediate and full implementation of Resolution 1514 (XV);
- Invites the administering Power to take no action which would dismember the Territory of Mauritius and violate its territorial integrity;
- Further invites the administering Power to report to the Special Committee and to the General Assembly on the implementation of the present resolution;
- Requests the Special Committee to keep the question of the Territory of Mauritius under review and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its twenty-first session.

1398th plenary meeting, 16 December 1965

APPENDIX E

AHG/Res: 99(XVII)

RESOLUTION ON THE DIEGO GARCIA.

The Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity meeting at its 17th Ordinary Session in Freetown, Sierra Leone from 1 to 4 July, 1980.

Pursuant to article 1, para 2, of the Charter of the Organization of African Unity, which stipulates 'The Organization shall include the continental African States, Madagascar and other islands surrounding Africa.',

Considering that one of the fundamental principles of the Organization is the respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of each state $^{\circ}$,

Aware of the fact that Diego Garcia has always been an integral part of Mauritius, a Member State of the Organization of African Unity,

Recognizing that Diego Garcia was not ceded to Britain for military purposes,

Realising that the militarization of Diego Garcia is a threat to Africa and to the Indian Ocean as a zone of Peace,

Demands that Diego Garcia be unconditionally returned to Mauritius and that its peaceful character be maintained.

DIEGO GARCIA — SALE OR HIRE — (No. A/33) — Mr J.R. Rey (Moka) asked the Premier and Minister of Finance whether he will make a statement on the question of the sale or hire of the Island of Diego Garcia to either the United Kingdom Government or to the Government of the United States of America or both jointly and state what is the price offered by the would-be purchasers and what is the minimum price insisted upon by the Government of Mauritius?

Mr. Forget on behalf of the Premier and Minister of Finance:-

I would refer the Honourable Member to the following communique issued from the Chief Secretary's Office on 10th November on the subject of the Chagos Archipelago, a copy of which is being circulated. In discussions of this kind which affect British arrangements for the defence of the region in which Mauritius is situated, there could, in the Government's view, be no question of insisting on a minimum amount of compensation. The question of the sale or hire of the Chagos Archipelago has not arisen as they were detached from Mauritius by Order in Council under powers possessed by the British Government.

(Communique)

EMBARGOED FOR RELEASE UNTIL 2000 HOURS LOCAL TIME WEDNESDAY 10th NOVEMBER

Defence facilities in the Indian Ocean

In reply to a Parliamentary Question the Secretary of State made the following statement in the House of Commons on Wednesday November 10th:—
"With the agreement of the Governments of Mauritius and the Seychelles new

With the agreement of the Governments of Mauritius and the Seychelles new arrangements for the administration of certain islands were introduced by an Order in Council made on the 8th November. The islands are the Chagos Archipelago, some 1,200 miles north east of Mauritius, and Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches in the western Indian Ocean. Their population are approximately 1,000, 100, 172 and 112 respectively. The Chagos Archipelago was formerly administered by the Government of Mauritius and the other three islands by that of the Seychelles. The islands will be called the British Indian Ocean Territory and will be administered by a Commissioner. It is intended that the islands will be available for the construction of defence facilities by the British and U.S. Governments, but no firm plans have yet been made by either Government. Compensation will be paid as appropriate."

The cost of compensating the Company which exploits the plantations and the cost of resettling elsewhere those inhabitants who can no longer remain there will be the responsibility of the British Government. In addition, the British Government has undertaken in recognition of the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius, to provide additional grants amounting to £3m. for expenditure on development projects in Mauritius to be agreed between the British and the Mauritius Governments. These grants will be over and above the allocation earmarked for Mauritius in the next period of C.D. & W. assistance.

The population of the Chagos Archipelago consists, apart from civil servants and estate managers, of a labour force, together with their dependants, which is drawn from Mauritius and Seychelles and employed on the copra plantations. The total number of Mauritians in the Chagos Archipelago is 638, of whom 176 are adult men, employed on the plantations.

APPENDIX G

MAURITIUS CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE — 1965

Mauritius Delegation

The Mauritius Labour Party ... Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam

Hon. G. Forget Hon. V. Ringadoo Hon. S. Boolell Hon. H. Walter Hon. R. Jomadar Hon. R. Jaypal

Dr the Hon. L. R. Chaperon

Hon. V. Govinden, M.B.E. Hon. H. Ramnarain Hon. R. Modun Hon. S. Veerasamy Dr the Hon. J. M. Curé

The Parti Mauricien Social Démocrate ... Hon, J. Kænig, Q.C.

Hon. J. Kænig, Q.C.
Hon. L. R. Devienne
Hon. C. G. Duval
Hon. J. C. M. Lesage
Hon. H. Rossenkhan

The Independent Forward Bloc

... Hon. S. Bissoondoyal Hon. A. W. Foondun Hon. D. Basant Rai Hon. A. Jugnauth Hon. S. Bappoo

The Muslim Committee of Action

... Hon. A. R. Mohamed Hon. A. H. Osman Hon. H. R. Abdool

Independent Members

... Hon, J. M. Paturau, D.F.C. Hon, J. Ah-Chuen

Extract from Debates No. 23 of 10th November, 1964 - Adjournment

Mr. B. Ramlallah (Poudre d'Or) - Anglo-American Military Base

Sir, as we have been speaking of America and Americans, there is a very pertinent question which is in the air about the projected base in Mauritius or at Diego. I think if the Government is able to do so; if it is not going to reveal a secret, the sooner it makes a declaration about that projected base the better it will be. Even the British Press is writing about it. There is much wild talk going around it in Mauritius. In India, Pakistan, everywhere people are talking about it, and we do not know what is the foundation of the talk. I understand even Mrs Bandaranaike has said in a press interview that she is opposed to the base in this part of the world.

Anyway I think the sooner something is said about it, the better it will be for the Government because people think that Government is in a way connected with it. Probably £ 125m or £ 115m...

Mr Boolell: The Government is not aware of it.

Mr Ramlallah: The Minister has come to my rescue. If this Government is not aware of it, I hope the Premier will stand up and say that we have not been consulted, that something is being done behind our back. There is something in the air there is no doubt about it.

Prospection is going on; we know that a lot of experts have come to Mauritius and surprisingly enough the Government has not been made aware. It is time the Government makes a declaration and says bluntly to the Imperial Government, We have heard of that. You should tell us what is in store. "We have heard something very painful — that America wants to have the base at Diego, which was supposed to be our colonial territory and which would then be cut off from us. They want to do it in order not to give us the £125m or whatever it is. That is something which makes us think seriously and I hope Government will give it all the seriousness which it deserves.

APPENDIX I

No. 19085

14th December, 1964

On the adjournment of the Legislative Assembly on 10th November, you referred to speculation about defence installations.

The position is that a joint British-American technical survey of certain islands, including the Chagos Archipelago and Agalega but not including Mauritius, has been in progress. The results of the survey are still being examined and no decisions have been taken either by the British or by the American Government as to their respective requirements. The Council of Ministers was notified of the survey in advance and will be consulted about further steps in due course.

I am circulating a copy of this letter to other members of the Assembly and releasing it to the Press in the usual way,

TOM VICKERS Chief Secretary

The Hon. B. Ramlallah, M.L.A. c/o Mauritius Times
Port Louis.

Extract from Debates No. 15 of 15th June, 1965 Acquisition of Dependencies of Mauritius by the U.S.A.

(No. A/30) Dr J. M. Curé (Nominated Member) asked the Chief Secretary whether the Government has been approached for the acquisition of our dependencies or part thereof by the United States of America for military purposes. If so, will he make a statement thereon and state whether the Government will

- (a) express to the British Government the inadvisability of entering into an agreement with the United States of America before a change in our Constitution as envisaged by the London Conference of September next; and
- (b) ascertain the presence of oilfields in our dependencies before alienating them?

Mr Vickers: I have nothing to add to the information I conveyed to Hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly by the circulation of the copy of the letter which I addressed to the Hon. Member for Poudre d'Or on the 14th December, 1964, after he had raised the matter on the adjournment of the Legislative Assembly on the 10th November, 1964.

Extract from Record of Meeting held in Lancaster House on Thursday, 23 September, 1965, between the Colonial Secretary (Mr Greenwood) and Mauritian Ministers

Paragraphs 22 and 23

- 22. Summing up the discussion, the Secretary of State asked whether he could inform his colleagues that Dr Ramgoolam, Mr Bissoondoyal and Mr Mohamed were prepared to agree to the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago on the understanding that he would recommend to his colleagues the following:
 - i. negotiations for a defence agreement between Britain and Mauritius;
 - ii. in the event of independence an understanding between the two governments that they would consult together in the event of a difficult internal security situation arising in Mauritius;
 - compensation totalling up to £3m, should be paid to the Mauritius Government over and above direct compensation to landowners and the cost of resettling others affected in the Chagos Islands;
 - iv. the British Government would use their good offices with the United States Government in support of Mauritius' request for concessions over sugar imports and the supply of wheat and other commodities;
 - v. that the British Government would do their best to persuade the American Government to use labour and materials from Mauritius for construction work in the islands;
 - vi. the British Government would use their good offices with the U.S. Government to ensure that the following facilities in the Chagos Archipelago would remain available to the Mauritius Government as far as practicable:
 - a. Navigational and Meteorological facilities;
 - b. Fishing Rights;
 - Use of Air Strip for emergency landing and for refuelling civil planes without disembarkation of passengers;
 - vii. that if the need for the facilities on the islands disappeared the islands should be returned to Mauritius;
 - that the benefit of any minerals or oil discovered in or near the Chagos Archipelago should revert to the Mauritius Government.
- 23. Sir S. Ramgoolam said that this was acceptable to him and Messrs Bissoondoyal and Mohamed in principle but he expressed the wish to discuss it with his other ministerial colleagues.

APPENDIX L

Colonial Office Despatch to Governor of Mauritius No. 423 dated 6 October, 1965

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the discussions which I held in London recently with a group of Mauritius Ministers led by the Premier on the subject of U.K./U.S. Defence Facilities in the Indian Ocean. I enclose a copy of the record prepared here of the final meeting on this matter with Mauritius Ministers. This record has already been agreed in London with Sir S. Ramgoolam, and by him with Mr Mohamed, as being an accurate record of what was decided.

- 2. I should be grateful for your early confirmation that the Mauritius Government is willing to agree that Britain should now take the necessary legal steps to detach the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius on the conditions enumerated in (i)-(viii) in paragraph 22 of the enclosed record.
- 3. Points (i) and (ii) of paragraph 22 will be taken into account in the preparation of a first draft of the Defence Agreement which is to be negociated between the British and Mauritius Governments before Independence. The preparation of this draft will now be put in hand.
- 4. As regards point (iii), I am arranging for separate consultations to take place with the Mauritius Government with a view to working out agreed projects to which the £3 million compensation will be devoted. Your Ministers will recall that the possibility of land settlement schemes was touched on in our discussions.
- 5. As regards points (iv), (v) and (vi) the British Government will make appropriate representations to the American Government as soon as possible. You will be kept fully informed of the progress of these representations.
- 6. The Chagos Archipelago will remain under British sovereignty, and Her Majesty's Government have taken careful note of points (vii) and (viii).

I have the honour to be,

ctc

C M (65) 183

APPENDIX M

4th November, 1965

COPY No. 19

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

UK/US Defence Interests in the Indian Ocean

MEMORANDUM BY THE CHIEF SECRETARY

As Council is aware, the establishment of a communications centre and supporting defence facilities on Diego Garcia by the U.S. Government for joint UK/US use was further discussed in London in September by the Secretary of State for the Colonies with the Premier, the Minister of Social Security, the Minister of Industry, the Minister of Local Government and the Attorney-General. The Secretary of State explained that a lease would not be practicable from the point of view of the British and the American Governments. The Ministers were also informed of the difficulties in the way of obtaining a quid pro quo in the form of trading concessions, such as a bigger allocation of sugar in the American market, and on this point they had an interview with the Minister in charge of Economic Affairs in the American Embassy in London.

- The proposals that eventually emerged from these discussions are as follows:

 (i) the Chaega Archipelego should be dead a local and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead a local and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead a local and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead a local and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead a local and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead a local and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead a local and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead as a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead and a second of the chaega archipelego should be dead arc
 - (i) the Chagos Archipelago should be detached from Mauritius and placed under British sovereignty by Order in Council;
 - (ii) in the event of independence a defence agreement should be negociated between Britain and Mauritius and there should be an understanding between the two Governments that they would consult together in the event of a difficult internal security situation arising in Mauritius;
 - (iii) thee ompensation totalling up to £3 million should be paid to the Mauritius Government to be devoted to agreed development projects over and above direct compensation to land owners and the cost of resettlement of others affected in the Chagos Archipelago;
 - (iv) the British Government would also use their good offices with the U.S. Government in support of the request of Mauritius for concessions over sugar imports and the supply of wheat and other commodities;
 - (v) the British Government would do their best to persuade the U.S. Government to use labour and materials from Mauritius for construction work in the Chagos Archipelago;
 - (vi) the British Government would use their good offices with the U.S. Government to ensure that the following facilities in the Chagos Archipelago would remain available to the Mauritius Government as far as practicable;
 - (a) navigational and meteorological facilities;
 - (b) fishing rights;
 - (c) use of air strip for emergency landing and for refuelling civil planes without disembarkation of passengers;

- (vii) if the need for the facilities in the Chagos Archipelago disappeared, sovereignty would be returned to Mauritius;
- (viii) the benefit of any minerals or oil discovered on or near the Chagos Archipelago would revert to the Mauritius Government.
- 3. The Secretary of State has said that as regards point (iii) he is arranging for consultations to take place with the Mauritius Government with a view to working out the agreed projects to which the £3 m. compensation will be devoted (Ministers present at the discussions in London will recall that the possibility of land settlement schemes was raised). As regards points (iv), (v) and (vi) the British Government will make appropriate representations to the U.S. Government and will keep the Mauritius Government fully informed of progress in the matter. The Chagos Archipelago will remain under British sovereignty and the British Government have taken careful notes of points (vii) and (viii).
- 4. The Secretary of State has now asked for early confirmation that the Mauritius Government is willing to agree that the British Government should now take the necessary legal steps to detach the Chagos Archipelago on the conditions enumerated in paragraph 2 above.

T. D. VICKERS

APPENDIX N

(65)45

Copy No. 23 Council of Ministers

Minutes of Proceedings of the 45th Meeting held on Friday the 5th November 1965.

PRESENT: His Excellency the Governor (Sir John Rennie, K.C.M.G., O.B.E.)

The Premier and Minister of Finance (Dr. the Honourable Sir Secwoosagur Ramgoolam, Kt.)

The Chief Secretary (The Honourable T.D. Vickers, C.M.G.)

The Minister of Works and Internal Communications (The Honourable J.G. Forget)

The Minister of Education and Cultural Affairs (The Honourable V. Ringadoo)

The Minister of Social Security (The Honourable A. R. Mohamed)

The Minister of Agriculture and Natural Resources (The Honourable S. Boolell)

The Minister of Health (The Honourable H. E. Walter)

The Minister of Information, Posts & Telegraphs & Telecommunications (The Honourable A. H. M. Osman)

The Minister of Industry, Commerce & External Communications (The Honourable J. M. Paturau, D.F.C.)

The Minister of Local Government & Co-operative Development (The Honourable S. Bissoondoyal)

The Attorney-General (The Honourable J. Kænig, Q.C.)

The Minister of Labour (The Honourable R. Jomadar)

The Minister of State (Development) in the Ministry of Finance (The Honourable L. R. Devienne)

The Minister of Housing, Lands and Town & Country Planning (The Honourable C. G. Duval)

The Minister of State (Budget) in the Ministry of Finance (The Honourable K. Tirvengadum)

TELEGRAM No. 247 FROM MAURITIUS TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES SENT 5th NOVEMBER 1965

Your Secret Despatch No. 423 of 6th October.

United Kingdom/U.S. Defence Interests,

Council of Ministers today confirmed agreement to the detachment of Chagos Archipelago on conditions enumerated, on the understanding that

- statement in paragraph 6 of your despatch ,, H.M.G. have taken careful note of points (vii) and (viii) " means H.M.G. have in fact agreed to them.
- (2) As regards (vii) undertaking to Legislative Assembly excludes
 - (a) sale or transfer by H.M.G. to third party or
 - (b) any payment or financial obligation by Mauritius as condition of return.
- (3) In (viii) "on or near" means within areas within which Mauritius would be able to derive benefit but for change of sovereignty. I should be grateful if you would confirm this understanding is agreed.
- 2. PMSD Ministers dissented and (are now) considering their position in the government. They understand that no disclosure of the matter may be made at this stage and they also undesrtand that if they feel obliged to withdraw from the Government they must let me have (resignations) in writing and consult with me about timing of the publication (which they accepted should not be before Friday 12th November).
- 3. (Within this) Ministers said they were not opposed in principle to the establishment of facilities and detachment of Chagos but considered compensation inadequate, especially the absence of additional (sugar) quota and negotiations should have been pursued and pressed more strongly. They were also dissatisfied with mere assurances about (v) and (vi). They also raised the points (1), (2) and (3) in paragraph 1 above.

APPENDIX P

Extract from Minutes of Proceedings of the Meeting of the Council of Ministers held on 5th November 1965

UK/US Defence interest in the Indian Ocean,

No. 553 Council considered the Governor's Memorandum CM (65) 183 on UK/US Defence Interests in the Indian Ocean.*

Council decided that the Secretary of State should be informed of their agreement that the British Government should take the necessary legal steps to detach the Chagos Archipelago on the conditions enumerated on the understanding that the British Government has agreed to points (vii) and (viii) that as regards point (vii) there would be no question of sale or transfer to a third party nor of any payment or financial obligation on the part of Mauritius as a condition of return and that "on or near" in point (viii) meant within the area within which Mauritius would be able to derive benefit but for the change of sovereignty.

The Attorney General, the Minister of State (Development) and the Minister of Housing said that, while they were agreeable to detachment of the Chagos Archipelago, they must reconsider their position as members of the Government in the light of the Council's decision because they considered the amount of compensation inadequate, in particular the absence of any additional sugar quota, and the assurance given by the Secretary of State in regard to points (v) and (vi) unsatisfactory.

^{*}reproduced as Appendix 'M'

Extract from Minutes of Proceedings of the Meeting of the Council of Ministers held on 12th November 1965

C. M. (65) 46

COPY No. 23

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

Minutes of Proceedings of the 46th Meeting held on Friday the 12th November 1965

PRESENT: His Excellency the Governor (Sir John Rennie, K.C.M.G., O.B.E.)

The Premier and Minister of Finance

(Dr the Honourable Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, Kt.)

The Chief Secretary (The Honourable T. D. Vickers, C.M.G.)

The Minister of Works and Internal Communications) (The Honourable J. G. Forget)

The Minister of Education and Cultural Affairs

The Minister of Education and Cultural Affairs (The Honourable V. Ringadoo)

The Minister of Social Security (The Honourable A.R. Mohamed)

The Minister of Agriculture and Natural Resources

(The Honourable S. Boolell)

The Minister of Health (The Honourable H. E. Walter)

The Minister of Information, Posts & Telegraphs & Telecommunications (The Honourable A. H. M. Osman)

The Minister of Industry, Commerce & External Communications (The Honourable J. M. Paturau, D.F.C.)

The Minister of Local Government & Co-operative Development

(The Honourable S. Bissoondoyal)

The Minister of Labour (The Honourable R. Jomadar)

The Minister of State (Budget) in the Ministry of Finance (The Honourable K. Tirvengadum)

Council met at 10.20 a.m.

The Governor announced that the previous afternoon he had received from the Honourable J. Kænig, M.L.A., the Honourable L.R. Devienne, M.L.A., and the Honourable C.G. Duval, M.L.A., their letters of resignations as appointed members of the Council of Ministers. These resignations took immediate effect, i.e. from Thursday the 11th November 1965.

Confirmation of Minutes The Minutes of the 45th Meeting held on Friday the 5th November 1965 were corrected and confirmed.

APPENDIX R

TELEGRAM No. 313 TO MAURITIUS FROM SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES SENT 19th NOVEMBER 1965

Your telegram No. 254.

U.K./U.S. defence interests.

There is no objection to Ministers referring to points contained in paragraph 22 of enclosure to Secret despatch No. 423 of 6th October so long as qualifications contained in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the despatch are borne in mind.

- 2. It may well be some time before we can give final answers regarding points (iv), (v) and (vi) of paragraph 22 and as you know we cannot be at all hopeful for concessions oversugar imports and it would therefore seem unwise for anything to be saidr locally which would raise expectations on this point.
- 3. As regards point (vii) the assurance can be given provided it is made clear that a decision about the need to retain the islands must rest entirely with the United Kingdom Government and that it would not (repeat not) be open to the Government of Mauritius to raise the matter, or press for the return of the islands on its own initiative.
- 4. As stated in paragraph 2 of my telegram No. 298 there is no intention of permitting prospecting for minerals and oils. The question of any benefits arising therefrom should not therefore arise unless and until the islands were no longer required for defence purposes and were returned to Mauritius.

(Passed to Ministry of Defence for transmission to Mauritius).

APPENDIX S

No: 1138

18th February 1971

In connection with the proposed construction of an austere naval communications facility on Diego Garcia under the terms of a bilateral agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States of America, I should be grateful if consideration could be given to the possibilities of employing Mauritian labour.

As you know, Mauritius is faced with a severe unemployment problem, and the Mauritius Government is exploring all the possibilities of relieving the situation. Favourable consideration of request made will undoubtedly help the Mauritius Government while, at the same time providing the British and the U.S. Governments with readily available labour.

> S. RAMGOOLAM Prime Minister

His Excellency Mr P. Carter British High Commissioner, Port Louis.

> BRITISH HIGH COMMISSION Chaussée, Port Louis, Mauritius 22 March 1971

Dr the Hon. Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam Kt, M.L.A. Government House

Port Louis.

Dear Prime Minister,

- 1. You will remember that in my letter of 18 February replying to yours of the said date, I said that I would consult my Government regarding your enquiry about the possibility of employing Mauritian labour on Diego Garcia.
- 2. I have now heard from my Government. They have asked me to say that they are, of course, well aware of the undertaking that they gave on this subject to the Mauritius Government in 1965, namely that they would do their best to persuade the American Government to use labour from Mauritius for works of construction on the Islands. They are also well aware of the provisions of sub-paragraph (7)(a) of the Anglo-American exchange of notes of 1966 (Cmnd 3231) on the British Indian Ocean Territory. Indeed, Her Majesty's Government did tackle United States Government and urged this proposition on them. However, Her Majesty's Government have now heard from the United States Government that it will not be possible for them to employ any Mauritians on the Diego Garcia facility.
- 3. I understand that the United States Ambassador in Mauritius is informing your Government of this decision.

Kindest regards,

Yours very sincerely,

PETER A. CARTER

APPENDIX T

GOVERNMENT HOUSE MAURITIUS

10th November, 1965

My Dear Minister,

In the light of the decision by the Council of Ministers last Friday and a similar decision by the Government of the Seychelles an Order in Council has been made to introduce new arrangements for the administration of the Chagos Archipelago, Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches as a new territory to be called the British Indian Ocean Territory. The Secretary of State will be making a statement in Parliament in reply to a Parliamentary Question later today and I intend to issue thereafter the enclosed statement.

The Secretary of State has confirmed that the Chagos Archipelago will remain under British sovereignty but is nevertheless giving further consideration to the points raised in the Council of Ministers on Friday and the U.S. Government has been warned that certain points will be raised with them.

Yours sincerely, J. S. RENNIE

Note:-The text of the question and reply is reproduced at Appendix 'V'

Embargoed for release until 2000 hours local time Wednesday, 10th November

Defence facilities in the Indian Ocean

In reply to a Parliamentary Question the Secretary of State made the following statement in the House of Commons on Wednesday November 10th:—

"With the agreement of the Governments of Mauritius and the Seychelles new arrangements for the administration of certain islands were introduced by an Order in Council made on the 8th November. The islands are the Chagos Archipelago, some 1,200 miles north-east of Mauritius, and Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches in the Western Indian Ocean. Their populations are approximately 1,000, 100, 172 and 112 respectively. The Chagos Archipelago was formerly administered by the Government of Mauritius and the other three islands by that of the Seychelles. The islands will be called the British Indian Ocean Territory and will be administered by a Commissioner. It is intended that the islands will be available for the construction of defence facilities by the British and U.S. Governments, but no firm plans have yet been made by either Government. Compensation will be paid as appropriate.

The cost of compensating the Company which exploits the plantations and the cost of resettling elsewhere those inhabitants who can no longer remain there will be the responsibility of the British Government. In addition, the British Government has undertaken in recognition of the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius, to provide additional grants amounting to £3 m. for expenditure on development projects in Mauritius to be agreed between the British and the Mauritius Governments. These grants will be over and above the allocation earmarked for Mauritius in the next period of C.D. & W. assistance.

The population of the Chagos Archipelago consists, apart from civil servants and estate managers, of a labour force, together with their dependants, which is drawn from Mauritius and Seychelles and employed on the copra plantations. The total number of Mauritians in the Chagos Archipelago is 638, of whom 176 are adult mea employed on the plantations.

Chief Secretary's Office Port Louis 10th November, 1965

APPENDIX V

WRITTEN ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS Wednesday, 10th November, 1965

MAURITIUS AND SEYCHELLES

Defence Facilities

Mr James Johnson asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies what further approaches have been made to the Mauritius and Seychelles Governments about the use of islands in the Indian Ocean for British and American defence facilities.

Mr Greenwood: With the agreement of the Governments of Mauritius and Seychelles new arrangements for the administration of certain islands in the Indian Ocean were introduced by an Order in Council made on 8th November. The islands are the Chagos Archipelago some 1,200 miles north-east of Mauritius, and Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches in the Western Indian Ocean. Their populations are approximately 1,000, 100, 172 and 112 respectively. The Chagos Archipelago was formerly administered by the Government of Mauritius and the other three islands by that of Seychelles. The islands will be called the British Indian Ocean Territory and will be administered by a Commissioner. It is intended that the islands will be available for the construction of defence facilities by the British and United States Governments, but no firm plans have yet been made by either Government. Appropriate compensation will be paid.

British High Commission Chaussée, Port Louis, Mauritius

3211

26th June 1972 Dr the Rt Hon. Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam Kt, M.L.A. Government House,

My dear Prime Minister,

I refer to the meeting in London on 23 February, 1972, between yourself, Sir Harold Walter and Lord Lothian, and to your meeting with Baroness Tweedsmuir on 23 June; 1972, at which the Mauritius Government scheme for the resettlement of the persons displaced from the Chagos Archipelago was discussed.

- The scheme has been fully appraised in London and I have been authorised to inform you that the British Government are prepared to pay £ 650,000 (the cost of the scheme) to the Mauritius Government provided that the Mauritius Government accept such payment in full and final discharge of my Government's undertaking, given at Lancaster House, London, on 23 September, 1965, to meet the cost of resettlement of persons displaced from the Chagos Archipelago since 8 November, 1965, including those at present still in the Chagos Archipelago.
- 3. Accordingly, I should be most grateful if you would confirm that you are willing to accept the payment of £ 650,000 in full and final discharge of my Government's undertaking, and to agree that the British Government may state this in public, should the need arise.
- When replying, perhaps you would indicate the date and manner in which the Mauritius Government wish payment to be made.

Yours very sincerely, R. D. GIDDENS

4th September 1972

With reference to the communication No. 32/1 dated the 26th June, 1972, by the then Acting High Commissioner, I confirm that the Mauritius Government accepts payment of £ 650,000 from the Government of the United Kingdom (being the cost of the scheme for the resettlement of persons displaced from the Chagos Archipelago) in full and final discharge of your Government's undertaking, given in 1965, to meet the cost of resettlement of persons displaced from the Chagos Archipelago since 8 November, 1965, including those at present still in the Archipelago. Of course, this does not in any way affect the verbal agreement giving this country all sovereign rights relating to minerals, fishing, prospecting and other arrangements.

In regard to the date and manner of the payment to be made I presume it will be in British pounds sterling made to the Government of Mauritius at the earliest date convenient to your Government.

The Government of Mauritus has no objection to the Government of United Kingdom making a public statement to this effect, should the need arise.

With my warmest regards,

S. RAMGOOLAM Prime Minister

APPENDIX X

Extract from the Political Declaration of Non-Aligned Movement's New Delhi Summit Meeting 1983

IX-MAURITIAN SOVEREIGNTY OVER THE CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO, INCLUDING DIEGO GARCIA

81. The Heads of State or Government expressed, in particular, their full support for Mauritian sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was detached from the territory of Mauritius by the former colonial power in 1965 in contravention of United Nations General Assembly resolutions 1514(XV) and 2066(XX). The establishment and strengthening of the military base at Diego Garcia has endangered the sovereignty, territorial integrity and peaceful development of Mauritius and other States. They called for the early return of Diego Garcia to Mauritius.

Debates No. 27 of 14th December 1965

Chagos Archipelago - Detachment from Mauritius

(B/245) Mr C. G. Duval (Curepipe) asked the Premier and Minister of Finance whether he will give an opportunity to the House to discuss the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius, and its inclusion in the British Indian Ocean Territory, especially in view of the stand taken by India and other Afro-Asian countries.

Mr Forget on behalf of the Premier and Minister of Finance :-

No, Sir, since I understand from the public statement made by the Leader of the Opposition on November 12th that there is no disagreement between the Opposition and the Government on the principle of the detachment and use for defence facilities of the Chagos Archipelago.

Mr Duval: Sir, in view of the reply of the hon. Minister replacing the Premier, and in view of the fact that there have been contradictory statements made by members of the Government at different moments about the conditions attached to the excision of the base, will the Minister say whether, at least, the correspondence exchanged between Her Majesty's Government and this Government will be released to the public?

Mr Speaker: This does not arise from the question.

APPENDIX Z

SPECIAL REPORT OF THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE FOR THE 1980 SESSION

Financial and other aspects of the "Sale" of Chagos Islands and the Re-settlement of the displaced Ilois

Introduction

Your Committee investigated into the Revenue received by Government in 1975 for the "SALE" of the Chagos Archipelago and in 1972, for the re-settlement of the displaced Ilois and also into all the disbursements effected in relation to this matter. In the course of our inquiry we came across some disturbing facts which we have felt should be brought to notice.

£3 m cash compensation from U.K. in 1965

Your Committee was informed that financial compensation for the "SALE" of Your Committee was informed that manicial compensation for the "SALE of Diego Garcia was effected in two stages. The sum of £ 3 m was paid by the British Government in financial year 1965/66 and was credited to Capital Revenue, item L IV/4—"Sale of Chagos Islands", as per the Accountant General's Financial Report for the financial year 1965/66. This item did not appear in the Estimates of 1965/66. Your Committee enquired whether the word "sale" had caused any problem at the time but was unfortunately unable to obtain any information on this matter. It has also not been possible to get any information on the basis on which the sum of £ 3 m was arrived at in the discussions with the British Government in 1965.

In an answer to a Parliamentary Question (PQ B/754 of 1979) the Prime Minister informed the House that the compensation of £3 m was meant for the implementation of development projects in Mauritius. The money was therefore credited to Capital Revenue and was not earmarked for any specific project.

Your Committee was also not able to ascertain whether any cash compensation was effected to the company exploiting the copra plantations in the Chagos at the time.
We learned from the representative of the Prime Minister's Office that it was a Seychellois Company, namely Moulinié & Co.

£ 650,000 from U.K. in 1972 for Resettlement Scheme

The second payment of £ 650,000 by the British Government was effected on 28th October, 1972 and credited to Capital Revenue, item L 1/8 — "Financial Assistance for Resettlement Scheme" in the Financial Report of 1972/73. This item had not appeared in the Estimates for the year 1972/73. This figure was arrived at after discussions had taken place between the British and Mauritian Governments, on a special cussions had taken place between the British and Mauritian Governments, on a special scheme "devised to build housing estates and establish pig-rearing co-operatives on land to be provided by the Government of Mauritius", (Forward to the Prosser Report submitted to Government in 1976) for the resettlement of persons displaced from Diego Garcia, Land at Roche Bois and at Pointe aux Sables was duly acquired for this purpose.

No details on how and when this initial scheme was worked out, were provided to your Committee.

In the Foreword to the Prosser Report the Prime Minister's Office states the following:

"Not long after, it became clear that the displaced persons concerned were not happy with the proposed scheme. An official survey confirmed that the majority was in favour of the simple expediency of sharing the financial assistance received from Britain among the workers, irrespective of their need for proper housing and for a planned means of future livelihood".

Your Committee has not obtained any information on the survey mentioned above although there was an official request for the details of how and when the displaced persons showed dissatisfaction with that initial scheme.

The Prosser Report

For 5 years after funds had been made available by the U.K. Government for the resettlement of the displaced llois, the Government of Mauritius was unable to arrive at a satisfactory decision on the manner in which the funds should be utilised. In 1976, the Prime Minister discussed the problems affecting the displaced llois with the British Government and it was decided that Mr A.R.G. Prosser, C.M.G., M.B.E., Adviser on Social Development in the Ministry of Overseas Development, would visit Mauritius in order to advise on an appropriate solution to the problem.

The major recommendations made by Mr Prosser were the following:

- (a) The immediate setting up of a Resettlement Committee with a first-class administrative officer attached to it on a full time basis. The Government did implement this recommendation. Its composition was in fact reinforced by the inclusion of the Secretary to the Cabinet as its Chairman. It was unfortunate however, that the Committee was not provided with an administrative officer on a full time basis. The Principal Assistant Secretary of the Ministry for Rodrigues was assigned this duty on a part time basis. Your Committee appreciates the fact that his normal duties as P.A.S. in his own Ministry, must not have left him much time to deal with the Ilois problem.
- (b) Another important recommendation was an occupational training scheme for the unemployed. Mr Prosser even made the interesting suggestion that functional training could be combined with the building of houses necessary for the Resettlement Scheme. This scheme will be described later.

Mr. Prosser recommended that the sum of Rs 750,000 should be set aside for this purpose, immediately.

- It is very unfortunate that Government never considered this interesting recommendation.
- (c) Welfare services. Mr. Prosser suggested that the Resettlement Committee should allocate Rs 60,000.— to the Social Welfare Commissioner so that the present Social Worker could be funded for a period of 3 years. We were informed that a primary school teacher was seconded for duty to the Social Welfare Division to work with the llois on a full time basis. But we obtained no information on the length of time for which she was thus employed.

Your Committee was informed by representatives of the Prime Minister's Office that Mr Prosser's recommendations for a housing scheme had been rejected by the representatives of the Ilois on the Resettlement Committee and that the latter had opted for eash compensation.

However, your Committee was seriously concerned by some of the facts that came to light in the survey carried out in January 1977 in specific relation to the housing issue. It is true that representatives of the Ilois did formally request that the money available be distributed in cash to the Ilois, at a meeting of the Resettlement Committee held on 4th December 1976. However, the survey carried out in January 1977 revealed that of the 557 families who had registered, 341 had opted for a house and 213 for cash compensation. 3 had not expressed any option. Of the 38 families in Agalega, 6 had opted for a house in Mauritius and 32 for cash payment with the possibility of continued employment there. It should also be well noted that representatives of the Ilois did enquire, at a meeting of the Committee held on 19th February 1977, whether there was any possibility of satisfying both options. According to the minutes of proceedings of that meeting, the Resettlement Committee felt that this proposal would not be feasible. However, the Chairman added that the views of the Committee would be submitted to the Government and a decision would be taken at a later stage. In spite of the fact that a majority of households, over 60% opted for housing, one year later, in December 1977, Government decided to effect cash compensation to all llois, irrespective of their date of arrival.

Your Committee wanted to know in very concrete terms, the way in which the proposal for a housing scheme was presented to the Ilois. We wanted to know whether Government had worked out in detail the type of houses to be built, the length of time it would take to construct them etc., and whether such information had been made available to the representatives of the Ilois. Your Committee was unfortunately, not provided with this information.

What your Committee found even more surprising was the fact that after it had been discovered in January 1977 that a majority had opted for housing and that the representatives of the Ilois had in February 1977, requested that both options, namely housing and cash compensation, be considered, the Prime Minister, in December 1977, stated the following in a reply to a Parliamentary Question (B/746 of 1977):

"The Government has finally given up hope to convince the families from Diego Garcia that it is in their best interests to have houses built for them rather than to have a cash compensation only. So steps are being taken to share the grant as well as the interest accrued thereon to the families".

Surveys of the Ilois

It has not been easy to establish the exact number of persons that were transferred from the Chagos Archipelago. In reply to a Parliamentary Question in the House of Commons in November 1965, in relation to defence facilities in the Indian Ocean, the Secretary of State referring to the Chagos Archipelago and Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches islands said the following:

"Their population are approximately 1000, 100, 172 and 112 respectively". (See Annex I)

On 14 December 1965, in the Legislative Council, Mr Forget, on behalf of the Premier and Minister of Finance informed the House that:

"The total number of Mauritians in the Chagos Archipelago is 638, of whom 176 are adult men, employed on the plantations". (See Annex I).

In Mauritius, two main surveys were carried out to establish the total number of Ilois families. The first survey was carried out by the Public Assistance Officers who collected relevant information from the displaced Ilois everytime a group landed in Mauritius. The survey revealed that 426 families had been transferred from the Chagos since 1965. This figure of 426 families was considered to be the correct one by Mr. Prosser.

In 1976, when the possibility of the distribution of cash compensation to all Ilois, irrespective of their date of arrival, came up, the Resettlement Committee, set up in 1976, upon a recommendation made by Mr Prosser, decided that a registration of all 119 settled in Mauritius should be carried out. This second major survey was carried out, in January 1977, by the Public Assistance Division of the Ministry of Social Security under the aegis of the Resettlement Committee. In this case, press and radio/Tv communiques were issued asking all displaced persons to register themselves? The figure arrived at in this second survey was 557 families.

seaf

1126

3

350

Of these 557 families-

378 persons were under 5 years of age

543 persons were between 5-12 years of age

334 persons were between 12-18 years of age

1068 were adults

102 were above 60 years of age.

Over 150 persons had arrived before 1965. (See Annexures II & III)

The survey also indicated that there were 38 Ilois families in Agalega.

Although the Ilois were provided with facilities for their registration, a number of persons were left out for various reasons. The representatives of the Prime Minister's Office informed your Committee that there have been a certain number of complaints from those who claim not to have received any compensation; the Permanent Secretary of the Prime Minister's Office has even received letters from some Ilois in Rodrigues, Australia and South Africa. It should be noted that there was, in fact, no facilities provided for registration of the Ilois in Rodrigues, Agalega and St. Brandon, when the 1977 survey was carried out.

Government has now decided to proceed with a new survey of all those who had failed to register in 1977. Your Committee recommends that this facility should be extended to those Ilois residing in the Seychelles as well.

The Ilois in Agalega

Your Committee was informed that in the Resettlement Committee, a suggestion was made to the effect that a possibility existed for the families in Agalega to be given shares in the Agalega Corporation to the value of their allocation instead of being paid in cash. Your Committee was not provided with any information on the manner in which cash compensation was actually effected in Agalega.

Cash compensation

When Government finally decided to go ahead with cash compensation, payment was effected in March 1978 on the basis of the survey carried our in January 1977. The following payments were then made:

					Rs	Total
351 children ui	ider 5			222	1,000	351,000
459 children be	tween 5	and 11			1,200	550,800
474 children be	tween 11	and 18			1,500	711,000
1081 adults					7,590	8,204,790
109 old age per	nsioners	(additional)			250	27,250
71 females wi	th childre	en (additional			250	17,750
			TOTAL			9,862,590
Amount availab	le (includ	ling interest)				11,167,604
Amount paid						9,862,580
			BALANCE			1,305,014

Disbursements as from 1972

Various disbursements were effected as from 1972 when funds were made available by the British Government. The total amount disbursed from 1972 to 1977 was Rs 155,773.33 (Annex IV). Apart from the cash compensation of Rs 9,858,827 effected in 1977/78, there was a further disbursement of Rs 18,605 in 1978/79. Your Committee has, however, not been able to obtain any details on the nature of all the disbursements effected, apart from the cash compensation of Rs 9,858,827 effected in 1978. It should also be noted that interest was, of course, not credited on the disbursements. Interest on the account was paid at 6% per annum between 28th October 1972 and 31st December 1977 although the Bank Rate had risen to 7% from March 1977 to January 1978, and to 9% from January 1978 to October 1979 and has been 10½% since then.

Your Committee fails to understand why interest was not credited to the Fund after December 1977. If accounts had been properly kept, a higher sum would have accumulated in the form of interest.

Further financial assistance from U.K. Government

At a meeting of the Resettlement Committee held on 19th February 1977, a representative of the Ilois wanted to know whether there was any possibility of obtaining further assistance from the British Government. The Committee according to the Minutes of Proceeding of that Meeting "agreed that there was little, if any, likelihood of such assistance forthcoming".

However, representatives of the Prime Minister's Office informed your Committee that it had always been the wish of the Mauritian Government that such further assistance should be provided by the U.K. Government. Your Committee has however, not been informed whether such request has been made formally and officially by the Government since March 1978.

In a reply to a Parliamentary Question in June 1980, (B/766 of 1980) the Prime Minister informed the House that:

"Regarding the additional compensation to be paid to the Ilois, the British Government has already offered a supplementary amount of £ 1.25 million for their resettlement but is unable to pursue the matter because of a court action in the United Kingdom. The matter being sub-judice, we have to wait for the outcome".

Your Committee is aware of the fact that the Prime Minister is referring to the court action entered by certain members of the Ilois community presenting legal claims to the U.K. Government. They are being represented by Mr. B. Sheridan who during his visit in Mauritius in November 1979 tried to make the Ilois sign a document (a deed of acceptance and power of attorney) the terms and conditions of which are reproduced in Annexure V.

In reply to a Parliamentary Question in November 1979 (P.Q. B/1033 of 1979) the Prime Minister informed the House that Government had spent Rs 2,015 on Mr Sheridan during his visit in Mauritius. This would imply that he was in Mauritius in an official capacity, to a certain extent.

General Comments

- Your Committee feels that this whole problem of displaced persons which arose since 1965 did not receive the serious attention it deserved on the part of government until 1976 when Mr Prosser visited Mauritius. The first serious survey to establish the exact number of persons involved was carried out as late as in January 1977.
- 2. The compensation of £650,000 was linked to a specific scheme when it was made available in 1972. The money was distributed 5 years later when conditions of life had become very difficult due to rapid inflation during that corresponding period. Mr Prosser himself made a very pertinent remark in that respect in specific relation to the housing scheme:
 - "Unfortunately, from the time of the signing of the agreement between the Mauritius Government and the British Government the cost of housing in Mauritius has risen approximately 500%". (Prosser Report. Para 19)

Mr Prosser made that remark in 1976 and the money was distributed in March 1978.

- 3. Throughout his Report, Mr Prosser placed emphasis on the necessity to find an urgent solution to the problem, because of the terrible conditions in which he found the Ilois when he visited Mauritius. In para 24 of the Report he says:
 - "The fact is that the Ilois are living in deplorable conditions which could be immediately alleviated if action is taken on the lines I have suggested".
- Cash compensation was effected almost two years after Mr Prosser had written his Report.
- 4. Your Committee feels that it is very unfortunate that Government promised that additional funds would be made available in the Resettlement Scheme being proposed by Mr Prosser but no such additional financial assistance has been forthcoming.
- There is a serious lack of information on the nature of disbursements that were effected since the grant became available in 1972. The Ilois do not seem to be at all aware of the details of these disbursements.

Your Committee was also not at all satisfied with the approximate way in which interest on the account was worked out. In our opinion total interest accrued on the account, should have been much higher.

- The survey carried out in January 1977 was not comprehensive enough. A number of Ilois were left out for some reason or another.
- 7. Your Committee feels that the Hois were not presented with a housing scheme worked out in concrete terms nor were the advantages of such a scheme over straight cash payment sufficiently stressed. It is normal that for persons, who have been living in deplorable conditions for such a long time cash compensation represented immediate relief. But as it was rightly pointed out by the Prime Minister's Office in the Foreword to the Prosser Report, the recommendations in the Report, especially the housing scheme would have been ,, in the long term interest of the people concerned ".
- Finally, Your Committee is concerned that it has not been confirmed whether Government has so far made any formal and official request for further financial assistance despite the fact that the majority of the Ilois are still living in deplorable conditions.

V. NABABSING,

3rd October, 1980.

Chairwoman.

EXTRACT FROM DEBATES NO. 27 OF 14 DECEMBER 1965

DIEGO GARCIA — SALE OR HIRE (No. A/33) Mr J. R. Rey (Moka) asked the Premier and Minister of Finance whether he will make a statement on the question of the sale or hire of the Island of Diego Garcia to either the United Kingdom Government or to the Government of the United States of America or to both jointly and state what is the price offered by the would-be purchasers and what is the minimum price insisted upon by the Government of Mauritius?

Mr Forget on behalf of the Premier and Minister of Finance :-

I would refer the Honourable Member to the following communiqué issued from the Chief Secretary's Office on 10th November on the subject of the Chagos Archipelago, a copy of which is being circulated. In discussions of this kind which affect British arrangements for the defence of the region in which Mauritius is situated, there could, in the Government's view, be no question of insisting on a minimum amount of compensation. The question of the sale or hire of the Chagos Archipelago has not arisen as they were detached from Mauritius by Order in Council under powers possessed by the British Government.

(COMMUNIQUÉ)

EMBARGOED FOR RELEASE UNTIL 2000 HOURS LOCAL TIME WEDNESDAY 10TH NOVEMBER

Defence facilities in the Indian Ocean

In reply to a Parliamentary Question the Secretary of State made the following statement in the House of Commons on Wednesday November 10th:

"With the agreement of the Governments of Mauritius and the Seychelles new arrangements for the administration of certain islands were introduced by an Order in Council made on the 8th November. The islands are the Chagos Archipelago, some 1,200 miles north-east of Mauritius, and Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches in the Western Indian Ocean. Their population are approximately 1,000, 100, 172 and 112 respectively. The Chagos Archipelago was formerly administered by the Government of Mauritius and the other three islands by that of the Seychelles. The islands will be called the British Indian Ocean Territory and will be administered by a Commissioner. It is intended that the islands will be available for the construction of defence facilities by the British and U.S. Governments, but no firm plans have yet been made by either Government. Compensation will be paid as appropriate."

The cost of compensating the Company which exploits the plantations and the cost of resettling elsewhere those inhabitants who can no longer remain there will be the responsibility of the British Government. In addition, the British Government bundertaken in recognition of the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius, to provide additional grants amounting to £ 3 m. for expenditure on development projects in Mauritius to be agreed between the British and the Mauritius Governments. These grants will be over and above the allocation earmarked for Mauritius in the next period of C. D. and W. assistance.

The population of the Chagos Archipelago consists, apart from civil servants and estate managers, of a labour force, together with their dependents, which is drawn from Mauritius and Seychelles and employed on the copra plantations. The total number of Mauritians in the Chagos Archipelago is 638, of whom 176 are adult men employed on the plantations.

ANNEX II

SURVEY OF ILOIS

Year of Arrival

				000011.000
Locality				No. of families	30's	40°s	50'5	60°s	70°s	Unknown
1. Baie du Tombes	ıu			5	_	-	4	1	_	_
2. Bois Marchand	200			2		and the	-	2	-	-
3. Beau Bassin			100	9		4	3	1	1	_
4. Cassis			133	94	-	1	17	61	14	1
5. Cité La Cure				22		1	3	7	10	1
6. Docker's Flat	2000	The s	10000	40	_		6	11	23	_
7. Grand River No	orth W	est		5	-	-	2	3	-	-
8. Le Hochet			222	5	10000	775	270	4	1	2007
9. Les Salines				. 51	_	1	6	35	- 3	1
10. Pointe aux Sable	es			31	-	2	11	14	1	3
11. Pailles	*		(88.6)	16	-	2	57.4	10	4	_
12. Port Louis				4	-	-		2	2	-
13. Petite Rivière				26	-	-	9	12	3	2
14. Roche Bois			166.60	225	3	7	28	139	35	13
15. Ste. Croix				10	-	-	2	7	1
16. Other areas				12	-	1	-	10	1	- 5%
TOTAL	2550			557	3	19	.91	319	104	21
				7777		5.000

82

ANNEX III

SURVEY OF ILOIS

Population according to Age-Group

Local	ity			No. of families	Under 5	5-12	12-18	Adults	Over 60
1. Baie du Tombe	au	200		5	3	7	3	7	-
2. Bois Marchand				2	_	1	-	5	-
3. Beau Bassin				9	3	6	15	22	3
4. Cassis		201		94	67	82	49	181	17
5. Cité La Cure				22	24	27	14	64	3
6. Docker's Flat	4.0			40	31	48	30	107	4
7. Grand River N	orth West			5	1	2	5	10
8. Le Hochet	•••			5	1	6	8	10	-
9. Les Salines				51	43	44	19	94	10
10. Pointe aux Sabi	les	Conc	0.00	31	24	38	22	72	7
11. Pailles				16	14	8	8	22	3
12. Port Louis				4	3	8	1	8	2
13. Petite Rivière	3440	COMMO		26	14	22	28	55	5
14. Roche Bois	944			225	130	210	117	370	45
15. Ste. Croix			52.00	10	11	16	6	13	1
16. Other Areas		2000		12	9	18	9	28	1
TOTAL				557	378	543	334	1068	102

Disbursed in 1974-75	31st December, 1977					ETAMBY tant-General
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Bisbursed in 1973-74 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.76 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs 28.10.72 to 30.6.73 (246 days) - 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 100 1.7.73 to 30. 6.74 = 6 × Rs 8,539,006 310,250 100 1.7.75 to 30. 6.75 = 6 × Rs 8,514,903 512,340 100 1.7.75 to 30. 6.76 = do 512,340 100 1.7.76 to 30. 6.77 = 6 × Rs 8,514,903 510,894 100 1.7.77 to 31.12.77 = 184 × 6 × Rs 8,510,893 257,425 365 100 TOTAL 2,656,711 Amount received 8,510,893 (after disbursement)			11,167,604
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Balance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 12,402.00 Balance on 30.6.74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 15,175.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.76 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.73 (246 days) - 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.74 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,510,893 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,530,000 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,530,000 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,530,000 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,530,000 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,530,000 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,530,000 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,530,000 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,530,000 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.75 8,530,000 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on				(after disbur	sement)
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Balance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 112,402.00 Balance on 30.6.74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 15,175.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.76 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,514,903.00 Anterest at 6% per annum Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.73 (246 days) — 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 — 350,462 Interest of the second				TOTAL		2,656,711
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Balance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.76 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs 100 1.7.73 to 30. 6.74 = 6 × Rs 8,554,181 100 1.7.75 to 30. 6.75 = 6 × Rs 8,514,903 100 1.7.75 to 30. 6.76 = do	365 100
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Balance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.76 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 30.6.73 (246 days) — 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 — 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 30.6.75 8,514,903 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,514,903 8,514,903 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,00		Rs 8,51	0,893		-	257,425
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Balance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.76 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Disbursed July 77 to 30.6.73 (246 days) 246		14,503			1000	510,054
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Balance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.76 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,514,903.00 Ajoliance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Balance on 30.6.73 (246 days) — 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 I.7.73 to 30. 6.74 = 6 × Rs 8,554,181		14 903
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Balance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,514,903.00 Annual Salance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Balance on 30.6.73 (246 days) — 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 1.7.73 to 30. 6.74 = 6 × Rs 8,554,181 513,250						- 1000
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Bisbursed in 1972-73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 112,402.00 Bisbursed in 1974-75 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 15,175.00 Bisbursed in 1974-75 8,539,006.00 Bisbursed in 1976-77 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 24,103.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs Bisl0.72 to 30.6.73 (246 days) — 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462 7.7.73 to 30. 6.74 = 6 × Rs 8,554,181 513,250		39,006			=	512,340
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Salance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 8,539,006.00 Salance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,514,903.00 Alance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs S.10.72 to 30.6.73 (246 days) — 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462	()	J 1, 101			11.00	5.5,250
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,583.00 Balance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 112,402.00 Balance on 30.6.74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 15,175.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 24,103.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs 8.10.72 to 30.6.73 (246 days) — 246 × 6 × Rs 8,666,583 350,462	7.73 to 30 6.74= 6 × P = 8.5	Libert School	100			513,250
Rs Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Salance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 112,402.00 Balance on 30.6.74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 15,175.00 Salance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 24,103.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,510,893.00 Interest at 6% per annum Rs	one of source (a to days)	-				Sec. 2019 1.300
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Salance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 112,402.00 Balance on 30.6.74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 15,175.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 24,103.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,510,893.00 Balance on 31.12.77 8,510,893.00
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 112,402.00 Balance on 30.6.74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 15,175.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,514,903.00 Disbursed July 77 to December 77 8,514,903.00	In	terest e	at 6º/ ner an	num		Rs
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,666.67 Salance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 112,402.00 Salance on 30.6.74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 15,175.00 Salance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Salance on 30.6.76 8,539,006.00 Disbursed in 1976-77 24,103.00 Salance on 30.6.77 8,514,903.00	Balance on 31.12.77			777	•••	8,510,893.00
Amount received on 28.10.72		77				4,010.00
Rs Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.76 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.76 8,539,006.00	Balance on 30.6,77			3494		8,514,903.00
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 15,175.00 Balance on 30.6.75 8,539,006.00 Balance on 30.6.76 8,539,006.00	Disbursed in 1976-77			*	37.77	24,103.00
Rs Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973-74 112,402.00 Balance on 30.6.74 8,554,181.00 Disbursed in 1974-75 15,175.00	Balance on 30.6.76
Rs Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972–73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973–74 12,402.00 Balance on 30.6.74 8,554,181.00	Balance on 30.6.75	444				8,539,006.00
Rs Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972–73 8,666,583.00 Disbursed in 1973–74 112,402.00	Nick	***		***
Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972-73 8,666,583.00 Balance on 30.6.73 8,666,583.00	Balance on 30.6.74			322		8,554,181.00
Rs Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67 Disbursed in 1972–73 83.33
Rs Amount received on 28.10.72 8,666,666.67						-
Rs	(55) THE THE PROPERTY OF THE P
ANNEX IV						terror to a State of the ANNEX IV

ANNEX V

DEED OF ACCI	EPTANCE AND I	POWER O	F ATTORNEY
This is the Deed of me (1
my family who have hereunt	to subscribed their	names and	seals.
I am an Ilois who left as (2) never to return. My family w	on the	in the ship hen are (4)	(3)day of19
Adult children's names	Addresses		Dates of Birth
Infant children's names	Addresses		Dates of Birth

We know that the United Kingdom Government has already paid the Mauritian Government £650,000 for the resettlement of the Ilois people who came to Mauritius following the setting up of British Indian Ocean Territory and has offered to make available a further £ 1,250,000 for the purpose provided it is accepted by the Ilois in full and final settlement of all claims whatsoever upon the United Kingdom Government by the Ilois arising out of the following events:—the creation of British Indian Ocean Territory, the closing of the plantations there, the departure or removal of those living or working there, the termination of their contracts, their transfer to and resettlement in Mauritius and their prohibition from ever returning to the Islands composing British Indian Ocean Territory (the events) and of all such claims arising out of any incidents or circumstances occuring in the course-of-the events or out of the consequences of the events, whether past, present or to come ("their incidents circumstances and consequences").

So that this money may be paid to help the Ilois.

ANNEX V-continued

- We appoint Bernard Sheridan of 14 Red Lion Square, London WC 1 as our Attorney in accordance with S. 10 of the Powers of Attorney Act 1971 and in particular we authorize him to receive the £ 1,250,000 on behalf on the Ilois in such instalments and amounts and subject to such conditions as he in his absolute discretion and without need to make further reference to us, may agree with the United Kingdom Government.
- 3. We accept the money already paid to the Mauritian Government and the money to be paid to Mr Sheridan as aforesaid in such instalments as he shall agree in full and final settlement and discharge of all our claims however arising upon the United Kingdom Government (both upon the Crown in right of the United Kingdom and the Crown in right of British Indian Ocean Territory) and upon its servents, agents and contractors in respect of the events, their incidents, circumstances and consequences and we further abandon all our claims and rights (if any) of whatsoever nature to British Indian Ocean Territory.
- 4. We understand accept and agree that by entering into this Deed we shall not be able to sue the United Kingdom Government in respect of the events, their incidents, circumstances and consequences and hereby covenant not to do so.
- We agree that all questions concerning the validity and construction of this Deed and any disputes arising upon it shall be governed by English law and justifiable only in English Courts.

⁽¹⁾ Insert name and address of head of family

⁽²⁾ Insert name of Island

⁽³⁾ Insert name of ship and date of leaving BIOT

⁽⁴⁾ Insert name and address of wife

⁽⁵⁾ Insert name of head of family

L'île Maurice base de la Réserve Stratégique Britannique

Au cours d'une interview qui a été diffusée, hier soir, dans le programme "London Calling Mauritius", M. David Windsor, de l'Institut des Etudes Stratégiques de Grande Bretagne a parlé de la possibilité pour Maurice de servir de base à une brigade de la Réserve Stratégique du Royaume-Uni.

Les récents troubles en Est-Afrique, au Bornéo, à Aden ont mis en relief l'impérieuse nécessité pour le Gouvernement britannique d'avoir des troupes disponible dans un rayon qui ne soit pas trop éloigné des foyers de troubles afin qu'elles puissent se porter le plus rapidement possible au secours des Gouvernements de ces territoires si ces derniers font appel à leur aide.

Il est difficile pour ces troupes de se rendre avec la rapidité voulue de la Grande Bretagne au Bornéo, par example. Si des bases peuvent être créées dans des régions assez rapprochées des centres possibles de troubles, la situation serait grandement améliorée.

Maurice est bien placé dans ce sens, située comme elle l'est, à un angle d'un triangle, dont les deux autres angles sont Aden et Singapour. Une brigade de la Réserve Stratégique, stationnée à Maurice, pourrait se rendrerapidement dans un pays membre de la Fédération de Grande Malaisie, à Aden ou dans les territoires est-africains. De plus, notre dépendance, Diego Garcia, possède un port naturel immense qui pourrait abriter des unités de la Marine Royale.

M. Windsor a dit que les autorités britanniques étudient attentivement cette possibilité. Le stationnement d'une brigade de la Réserve Stratégique à Maurice, de même que l'utilisation de la rade de Diego Garcia comme base pour la marine britannique, donnerait de l'emploi à un grand nombre de Mauriciens et aiderait à résoudre, du moins en partie, notre problème de chômage.

The Economist-July 4, 1964

So the search has properly been on for a well-situated, sparsefy populated, politically unexplosive haven in the Indian Ocean. Eyes, logarithms and compasses have been turned to Mauritius and to the Seychelles; the pointers suggest that there is a good deal to be said for one of the island dependencies of Mauritius, one at least of which does have a natural harbour and was used during the second world war. Mauritius is politically calm: its party leaders have agreed to form an all-party government and to discuss internal self-government some time after October, 1965.

But even under these moderately propitious stars, is it up to Britain alone once again to set about the job of looking for a reasonably secure base east of Suc2? There has been endless argument about what an Indian Ocean base is for: a stepping stone to south-east Asia; a mounting post for peace-keeping operations like the useful east African ones in January; a guard against Arab take-over bids like the Iraq-Kuwait incident in 1961; a warning eye on British oil interests. The point is not so much which of these functions survive scrutiny—the first and second look the sounder ones—but that Sir Alec Douglas Home, Mr Wilson and Mr McNamara all agree that collectively they justify a military effort.

L'île Maurice et la nécessité d'une base dans l'Océan Indien

Les alliés occidentaux sont à la recherche d'une base, d'un marchepied entre l'Europe et l'Australie et l'Extrême Orient.

Cette nécessité a donné lieu à un marchandage dans les coulisses entre Washington et Whitehall au sujet de l'établissement d'une base importante, sur une île de l'Océan Indien.

Le choix semble devoir se porter sur l'île Maurice, située à 500 milles à l'est de Madagascar.

Une des propositions britanniques serait à l'effet que les USA aident à établir une base importante dans l'Océan Indien dont le double but de servir de poste de relais aux Britanniques et de ravitailler une flotte américaine de porte-avions.

Les Américains, de leur côté, ont laissé entendre qu'un engagement américain dans l'Océan Indien pourrait être conditionnel à l'appui que la Grande Bretagne donnerait au plan américain pour une force nucléaire mixte au service de Nato.

L'île Maurice, ou l'une de ses dépendances est le choix le plus plausible —non seulement pour des raisons logiques et stratégiques: ce pays jouit d'une certaine stabilité politique. Il a une population de 550,000, faite en grande partie d'Indiens introduits par les Français et les Anglais, et qui a atteint un stade d'harmonie politique et multiraciale tel que l'indépendance pourrait lui être accordée demain n'étaient le manque de devises étrangères et un lourd problème de chômage. En fait, c'est exactement le genre de pays qui bénéficierait de l'argent et de l'emploi additionnels qu'une base militaire importante y déverserait.

(APPENDIX 'A 4')

London. (00.55) August 30. New American bases being sought on British islands in the Indian Ocean were "purely and simply to provide radiocommunication link," official sources said here tonight.

"But," the sources added, "they could, of course, be extremely useful as forward staging points for troops."

High-level discussions are now taking place between the United States and British Governments to consider the usefulness of various islands which might be used. A British survey ship is in the Indian Ocean and experts are studying the possibilities.

The sources said they were looking for a small island on which to set up a small American relay station. This would provide better communications between United States forces in the......

"If we find one big enough and if we could lay down a runway without spending millions on it, we could have a first-class base for troops," an authoritative source said. London (08.33) Aug. 31 The Daily Telegraph stated here today that co-operation between Britain and America over the use of remote but, by modern requirements, stregically based islands as defence posts of various kinds, was long overdue.

This Conservative daily said it would be 'short-sighted' to limit the cocperation to the Mauritius dependency of Diego Garcia—"the use of which by the American Navy as a Polaris communications centre is under discussion between the two countries."

The Telegraph continued: "There are several reasons why America now needs these posts in parts of the world, such as the Indian Ocean, where at present she has none.

"Her Polaris fleet is expanding fast. She wants to be better equipped for getting forces and military aid very quickly to possible trouble spots.

"One contingency might be a renewed Chinese attack on India. Others might arise from increasing Russian and Chinese activities in Africa.

"Britain has the islands strewn about. America has the forces and the money. Britain is over extended and cannot take full responsibility for new commitments just because the only possible bases happen to be British islands. The case for co-operation in some form is overwhelming."

The Telegraph stated that no doubt a howl of indignation against "Anglo-American imperialism" would arise from the Communist countries at "any such precautionary measures."

It added: "This will be joined by most of the Afro-Asian countries, although perhaps with less conviction by those who are aware of Communist activities and their own need for disinterested help in a crisis.

"In fact the islands in question are inhospitable, with populations of a couple of hundred people, who would certainly welcome and benefit from an American presence."

(APPENDIX 'A 6')

The Economist

A Vacuum to fill

The east African operations of last January, which saved the governments of Kenya, Tanganyika and Uganda from their mutinying armies, were mode's of what can be done. It does not take much imagination to think of three or four places in this rickety reach of the globe where the same call for help may be heard again. This may give offence, but is it not possible in Ceylon, or Persia, or somewhere in the Persian Gulf, or somewhere on the east coast of Africa again?

This is presumably the thought that lies behind the present Anglo-American search for a communications centre (and maybe something more) in the Seychelles or one of the Mauritius dependencies. The difficulty lies in winning Afro-Asian acceptance of the British share in this operation.

The Indian Ocean is the only large part of the world where the United States does not already bear the main burden of looking after western interests. It cannot be expected to bear the whole extra weight of trying to preserve stability between Nairobi and Singapore too; and British knowledge of the area, and the present deployment of British forces, make it common sense for Britain to help out. But Britain's surviving colonial entanglements—particularly the Aden entanglements in the north-west—still cause suspicion. This is why it is essential to explain as clearly as possible the distinction between the colonial period, which is now very near its inevitable end, and the quite different aims Britain and America hope to pursue together in the vastly changed conditions of the post-colonial period.

Des Mauriciens à Londres protestent

There are persistent reports in the London press that joint consultations are at present being held between the British and American Governments for the setting up of certain bases in the Indian Ocean. Allegedly the Government of Mauritius is being consulted on the question. We are being told that these bases will be used for a communications system,but the implication is so serious that Mrs Bandaranaike of Ceylon has felt it necessary to issue a statement expressing concern about the matter and the Indian Government has deftly proposed a nuclear-free zone in the Indian Ocean.

I feel sure that the Governments of India and Ceylon would not have been unduly worried if the discussions were merely for the installation of innocuous communication centres. I draw the conclusion, and voice the apprehension of hundreds of Mauritians in London, that the Anglo-American discussions are a conspiracy to find surreptitious ways for inaugurating a cluster of military bases on our soil and on other islands in the Indian Ocean with all the cold war concomitants that these entail.

The danger inherent in the presence of military bases in any part of the world cannot be ignored and there are too many glaring examples for us to be apathetic to the situation. The attitude of our leaders has not yet been made public but I have a strong suspicion that somehow the British Government will attempt to link this question of bases with the granting of Independence.

Let us make it clear to our elected representatives that we are not going to allow Mauritius to become a pawn on the Chessboard of the Big Powers. The presence of military bases on our soil will endanger our national security, for in the event of any war there is not one single military installation that will be immune from retaliatory measures. If it is true, as has been openly suggested in the London press, that in reality these bases will be used mainly for operations in Malaysia and South East Asia, then we shall find ourselves involved in an unholy alliance which tends to exacerbate an already tense situation fraught with unprecedented danger.

There will undoubtedly be sophisticated arguments in favour of allowing these bases to operate, on the grounds that they would bring employment and foreign capital to help us out of our present economic plight. These arguments would banish morality from the field of politics and must be rejected as despicable pragmatic logic in the most repulsive form of Machiavelism.

We are not prepared to pawn our lives for the benefit of a few crumbs of bread.

APPENDIX 'A 7'-continued

If our leaders consider that the affairs of our country can only be administered by leasing our land for doubtful military enterprises then they ought to say so to the people and in no uncertain terms. I trust our people will not be easily duped.

We do not wish to become a partner in the gigantic conflict between East and West. What we require from all the nations of the world is to be allowed to pursue our destiny in peace and friendship. Our internal problems are exacting enough and we will have to pool all the energy we can muster to bring about their solution.

I call upon all responsible citizens and particularly the intellectuals, writers, journalists and artists who have a special responsibility, being the guiding light of our nation, to do everything in their power to awaken and arouse the national consciousness to this dangerous threat.

Tell our political leaders that if it is their intention to mortgage our national security for questionable economic advantages, then we shall not rest at all until the danger is removed.

1

94

(APPENDIX 'A 8')

The Economist-January 16, 1965

Strategies West and East

Here the Indian Ocean has been a relative gap, and it happens that Britain still possesses in it and in the south Atlantic various islands which might be made into useful staging-posts. A joint Anglo-American survey has been made of a possible chain of such posts on Ascension Island, Aldabra or another island in the Seychelles, Diego Garcia in the Chagos Archipelago, and an island in the Cocos group, the administration of which was prudently transferred some years ago from Singapore to Australia. This scheme would give British and American forces convenient access to Singapore and Australia, either by way of Aden or across, or round, southern Africa, by a route relatively immune to political hazards. There are, however, one or two possible political hazards to be surmounted first. The islands are insignificant bits of sand or coral and barely inhabited; still Aldabra is administered from the Seychelles and Diego Garcia from Mauritius, and each would need to be detached by, presumably, an Order in Council and administered from London, to make the investment of putting runways and other installations on them seem a reasonable bet.

(APPENDIX 'A 9')

London. 23.55 April 5. (1965) The Government was asked in the House of Commons today what approaches had been made to the Government of MAURITIUS regarding certain facilities for an Anglo-United States base in the Indian Ocean.

Mrs Eirene White, Colonial Under-Secretary, replied that the Premier of MAURITIUS (Dr S. Ramgoolam) was consulted in July last about the joint survey of possible sites for certain limited facilities that was then about to begin.

She added: "In November, the Council of Ministers, who had been kept informed, were told that the results of the survey were still being examined and that the Premier would be consulted again before an announcement was made in London or in Washington."

MAURITIUS, an island in the Indian Ocean, was ceded to Britain by France in 1814.

THE WASHINGTON POST

Sunday, May 9, 1965

ENGLAND, U.S. PLAN BASES IN INDIAN OCEAN

by Robert Eastabrook Washington Post Foreign Service

London, May 8. Plans for developing a series of joint Anglo-American military facilities on largely uninhabited islands in the Indian Ocean have received preliminary approval by Britain's Labor Government.

The initial outlay for acquiring necessary real estate in remote island dependencies of the British Colonies of Mauritius and the Seychelles has been estimated at $28 million.

This would include the cost of buying out and moving the few indigenous inhabitants

Discussions have been under way for a year about a chain of communications and staging sites, relatively invulnerable to anticolonial agitation, to assist peacekeeping operations in South and Southeast Asia as well as Africa if necessary.

In January the United States relayed a list of six to eight recommended locations based upon a survey made by an American team aboard a British ship last summer.

Navy Seeks Site

First on the priority list is Diego Garcia, a Mauritius dependency in the Chagos Archipelago 1000 miles south-west of Ceylon. Funds are already assured for a Navy communications relay station on Diego Garcia. The American request, however, is that the entire Chagos Archipelago be acquired.

Before plans can be carried further, Britain must approach local authorities in Mauritius and the Seychelles in order to transfer administrative responsibility to London for the Chagos and other faraway dependencies.

Some urgency attaches to this step because constitutional talks looking to possible early independence for Mauritius are scheduled for this fall, and it will be necessary to complete the transfer beforehand.

APPENDIX 'A 10'-continued

Any fears that the British Labour Government might not be enthusiastic about the Indian Ocean scheme have been delayed by the enthusiasm with which new ministers have taken up the idea. It dovetails with the "East of Suez" defence concept of Prime Minister Wilson.

Foreign Secretary Michael Stewart, Defence Secretary Denis Healey and Navy Minister Christopher Mayhew are particularly impressed with the possibilities. The government is under heavy pressure, however, to economise on military expenditures.

No precise arrangement has been made for sharing the initial cost, but Britain reportedly expects the United States to bear the larger portion. How much Britain can devote to development of the actual military facilities will be determined in part by a broad defence review now under way.

Inadequate Water

Such development may be relatively expensive in some instances because some of the islands lack adequate water or are surrounded by coral. But whatever the eventual American share, many diplomats as well as military men consider the cost well warranted because the opportunity to obtain such secure sites may never recur.

In addition to the Chagos Archipelago, other sites under consideration include the Aldabra islands, a dependency of the Seychelles 300 miles northwest of Madagascar, where Britain wants an air field; the Farquhar Islands, also a Seychelles dependency 150 miles north-east of Madagascar; the Agalega Islands, a Mauritius dependency 500 miles north-east of Madagascar, and the Australian-owned Cocos Islands 500 miles south of Sumatra.

American officials emphasize that the Indian ocean facilities would be primarily logistical and would not be intended as full-scale bases with garrisons. They could nevertheless be used for servicing or staging conventional air, sea and ground forces.

In response to a recent question in Parliament, Wilson denied that any submarine basis are contemplated in the area. Even though the Indian Ocean facilities would not be large, however, their presence would be potential reassurance to governments that might be intimidated by Chinese nuclear weapons.

APPENDIX 'A 10'-continued

Although no one likes to talk about abandonment of the big British base at Aden, some planners are thinking about an alternative. The official position is that the question of the future of the Aden base will be negotiated when the Federation of South Arabia becomes independent in 1968.

Present thinking is that either Britain or the United States would assume individual responsibility for the operation of each particular site, but that all such facilities would be available for use by both countries.

No. Formal Request

No formal request for transfer of the dependencies has yet been made to the governments of Mauritius or the Seychelles, although officials were advised of the military survey.

Similarly the Australian government has not yet been approached for facilities in the Cocos Islands, but no difficulty is anticipated in view of the extensive Australian cooperation with Britain and the United States.

In the case of Mauritius the situation becomes delicate because of internal political disagreement over whether the 720 square mile territory with a population of 700,000 should opt for full independence or some lesser status in the Commonwealth.

Transfer of the dependencies could become a bone of contention, although some Mauritians believe that the military facilities would benefit the area.

Actually the far-removed dependencies are atached to Mauritius only for convenience of administration. The total population of all such lesser dependencies is under 2000.

With the Seychelles there is less of a problem because the 45,000 people are not so far advanced towards independence. This colony (where Archishop Makarios of Cyprus spent a period in exile during the mid-1950s) lacks air connections:

Officials here suggest that agreement to build an airport as an aid to communications and tourism might ease the transfer of the dependencies.

APPENDIX 'A 10'-continued

The idea of American planners has been wherever possible to buy out indigenous inhabitants of the islands selected for military use and move them elsewhere. British or American nationals would then be brought in to staff the facilities.

In the case of Diego Garcia it would be necessary to purchase one foreign-owned coconut plantation. Transfer of the 664 residents of the Cocos Islands is not contemplated, however. Cocos already has a civil airport that is a stop on the route between South Africa and Australia.

Perhaps because of cost, British authorities have regarded the transfer of population as less important. Although they acknowledge that military facilities on the Indian Ocean islands might stimulate new "colonialism" propaganda charges, they believe that it probably would be possible to operate them with the local production remaining.

Les U.S.A. proposent Rs 135 m pour militariser les dépendances de Maurice et des Seychelles

Les Etats Unis sont fin prêts pour l'installation de bases militaires dans les dépendances de l'Île Maurice et les Seychelles. Des fonds ont déjà été votés pour une station de relais télégraphiques destinée à la marine. La station serait située à Diego Garcia. Des experts sont arrivés à une estimation précise: Rs 135 millions, pour le coût initial de l'acquisition des terres nécessaires et le déplacement (avec dédommagement) des habitants de ces terres. Ils sont au nombre de 2000.

Toutefois, les Etats Unis ne peuvent aller de l'avant. Il faut d'abord obtenir des gouvernements mauricien et seychellois le transfert du contrôle administratif des territoires convoités au gouvernement de Londres. Dans les milieux américains on pousse à la roue pour que le transfert ait lieu avant la conférence constitutionnelle de septembre prochain.

Londres d'accord

Le gouvernement travailliste britannique a donné son accord préliminaire au projet de création d'une chaine d'installations militaires angloaméricaines dans des îles de l'ocean Indien. C'est Robert H. Estabrook du Washington Post Foreign Service qui l'a affirmé récemment.

Il déclare par ailleurs que le nouveau gouvernement a accepté cette idée avec enthousiasme et que Michael Stewart (Affaires Etrangères), Denis Healey (Défence) et Christopher Mayhew (Marine) ont été impressionnés par les perspectives du plan. Il précise que le gouvernement britannique, sous la pression de difficultés économiques, voudrait économiser sur le budget militaire et s'attend à ce que les U.S.A. financent en grande partie le projet.

Un chapelet de stations

1. La première priorité militaire est Diégo Garcia, dépendance mauricienne de l'archipel des Chagos à 1,000 milles au sud-ouest de Ceylan. Mais les conseillers U.S. voudraient que l'archipel entier soit acquis. Les autres possibilités sont: 2. les îles Aldabra, dépendances des Seychelles, à 300 milles au nord-ouest de Madagascar, où la Grande Bretagne voudrait créer un aéro-drome. 3. les îles Farquhar, dépendances des Seychelles, à 150 milles au nord-est de Madagascar, 4. les îles Agaléga (Maurice) à 500 milles au nord-est de Madagascar et 5. les îles Cocos, possession australienne à 500 milles au sud de Sumatra.

APPENDIX 'A 11'-continued

La menace chinoise

Robert Eastabrook rapporte que les bases ne seraient pas dotées de garnisons mais serviraient au transit et au déploiement des forces de l'air, de mer et de terre. Même des installations de deuxième ordre seraient une garantie tangible de protection pour les pays qui pourraient être intimidés par la force nucléaire chinoise.

Aden abandonné en 1968

Personne ne parle ouvertement de l'abandon de la grosse base britannique à Aden mais certains conseillers en statégie pensent à une alternative. Ce n'est qu'en 1968, lorsque la fédération de l'Arabie du Sud deviendra indépendante, que l'Angleterre négociera l'avenir de la base d'Aden.

La tactique américaine

A en juger par ce que rapporte ce correspondant américain, la tactique américaine consiste à minimiser la nature des liens entre Maurice et ses dépendances. Ainsi, il est allégué que ces îles dépeuplées ne représentent rien, Les U.S.A. ont évidemment intérêt à sous-estimer la valeur de nos dépendances.

La procédure préconisée par les "cerveaux" américains est d'acheter les droits des habitants d'îles choisies pour leur valeur militaire et les transférer ailleurs pour faire du repeuplement anglo-saxon.

Une base en deux temps

10,143,1

Par ailleurs, de source britannique, on croit savoir que M. Robert Mc Namara, Secrétaire d'Etat américain à la defense, est tombé d'accord pour commencer la construction des installations à Diégo. Celle-ci, d'abord une station de communications américaine, pourrait devenir éventuellement une base d'arrière-garde anglo-américaine, si la base d'Aden est perdue.

L'Express-3 June 1965.

Un gros morceau à la conférence du Commonwealth: le dilemme des bases.

Wilson décidera-t-il sans Ramgoolam?

La question de l'installation de bases dans l'Océan Indien (à Diego Garcia notamment) sera soulevée à la conférence des Premiers ministres du Commonwealth qui se réunit actuellement.

L'installation d'une base militaire dans une de nos dépendances touche de près notre pays. Or, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, Premier, n'assiste pas à la conférence des Premiers ministres du Commonwealth. L'île Maurice, colonie, n'a pas été invitée par le gouvernement britannique.

Toutefois, nous pensons que Sir Seewoosagur ou un délégué averti de notre gouvernement comme M. Maurice Paturau devrait, pour une fois, être à Londres afin de pouvoir discuter à l'échelon individuel de cette importante question avec les représentants des gouvernements du Commonwealth qui participent à la conférence.

Notre correspondant particulier à Londres rapporte dans une dépêche en date du 17 juin, date de l'ouverture de la conférence des Premiers Ministres du Commonwealth:

> "La Grande Bretagne discutera avec ses partenaires du Commonwealth de la possibilité de l'installation de bases militaires dans les îles de l'Ocean Indien".

Il poursuit et dit que la presse britannique de dimanche dernier a fait mention de consultations que M. Harold Wilson, Premier Ministre britanique, a eues ce jour-là avec ses senior ministers à Chequers, pour préparer la voie.

> "For straight talking later this week to Prime Ministers Conference on Britain defence dilemma".

La Grande Bretagne demandera à l'Australie et à la Nouvelle-Zélande de l'aider dans sa tâche de défendre le monde libre. Ces deux pays ont intérêt à la défense de l'Extrême Orient et de l'Asie en raison de la menace nucléaire chinoise.

Les points suivants seront soulevés avec les membres qui participeront à la conférence du Commonwealth et qui ont été mis en avant par M. Denis Healey, ministre de la Défense de Grande Bretagne.

(1) La défense du Sud Est asiatique et de l'Inde peut être assurée par une force mobile dépendant d'avions de transport ou par une chaine de bases militaires dans l'Ocean Indien. Les bases sont-elles moins chères et meilleures?

APPENDIX 'A 12'-continued

- (ii) Un avion de transport coûte £ 60 millions et un investissement de £ 25 millions est nécessaire tous les 5 ans, pour lui permettre d'être opérationnel.
- (iii) Pour les bases militaires dans les îles, les avions F 111 seraient choisis.
 - (iv) Le nombre de so'dats nécessaires pour maintenir une base.

Notre correspondant particulier précise qu'une des inquiétudes exprimées par la presse britannique est la suivante:

"Can Island bases in Indian Ocean cover the oil rich Sheikdoms of the Persian Gulf and enable Britain to close the costly and politically difficult base at Aden?

Il faut toutefois préciser ici que la question militaire sera traitée "as, a side line issue" avec les ministres du Commonwealth.

Le progrès des territoires britaniques vers l'indépendance et leur admission dans le Commonwealth est un des sujets qui sera discuté au cours de la 14e réunion des chefs de gouvernements du Commonwealth, qui a commencé à Londres avant-hier (jeudi 17 juin 1965).

Cette question ainsi que certaines autres sont inscrites sur l'agenda. Elles furent toutes acceptées par les représentants des 21 pays membres, après qu'ils aient été reçus par le Premier ministre britanique, M. Harold Wilson.

Les autres sujets à l'ordre du jour consistent en une revue de la situation politique et économique dans le monde et la création du secretariat du Commonwealth. La question de l'immigration sera aussi soulevée.

L'Express-19 June 1965.

(APPENDIX 'A 13')

BASE BRITANNIQUE DANS L'ARCHIPEL DES CHAGOS

La Grande Bretagne veut retrancher les Chagos de l'administration de Maurice Opposition de Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam qui propose une location

La défense à l'Est d'Aden

Pour ceux qui ont suivi de près l'évolution de la situation politique et militaire en Arabie du Sud, la déclaration faite à Londres par le Secrétaire d'État aux colonies, M. Anthony Greenwood, annonçant que l'Arabie du Sud doit être indépendante avant la fin de 1966, n'a pas été une surprise.

La presse britannique avait fait état de l'évolution de cette situation. Un journal britannique, l'ECONOMIST, avait même conclu que, pour pouvoir contenir la Chine en profondeur à l'Est d'Aden, la métropole pourrait être amenée à porter son choix sur "une île de l'Ocean Indien".

Nous sommes en mesure d'annoncer, aujourd'hui, que ce projet britannique a pris corps.

Le gouvernement de Maurice a été mis en présence, tout récemment, d'une proposition formelle de Londres à ce sujet.

Cette proposition est la suivante:

La métropole offre de faire acquisition de l'Archipel des Chagos pour y établir des bases aériennes. Nos dépendances deviendraient ainsi une zone d'atterrissage.

Une condition importante est attachée à cette proposition: l'île Maurice accepterait que l'Archipel des Chagos soit retranché de sa dépendance.

Londres a offert de déplacer à ses frais les habitants de ces îles—trois cents ou quatre cents familles—pour les replacer, en les dédommageant, à Agaléga.

Le gouvernement britannique n'a encore présenté aucun prix ferme de dédommagement au gouvernement mauricien. On en ignore le montant exact.

105

APPENDIX 'A 13'-continued

Ramgoolam: pas de retranchement

A ces propositions, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam a objecté que l'archipel des Chagos soit retranché de la dépendance de Maurice. Le Premier, leader du Parti Travailliste, veut plutôt d'un bail, condition qui, à ses yeux, viendrait grossir les revenus de Maurice.

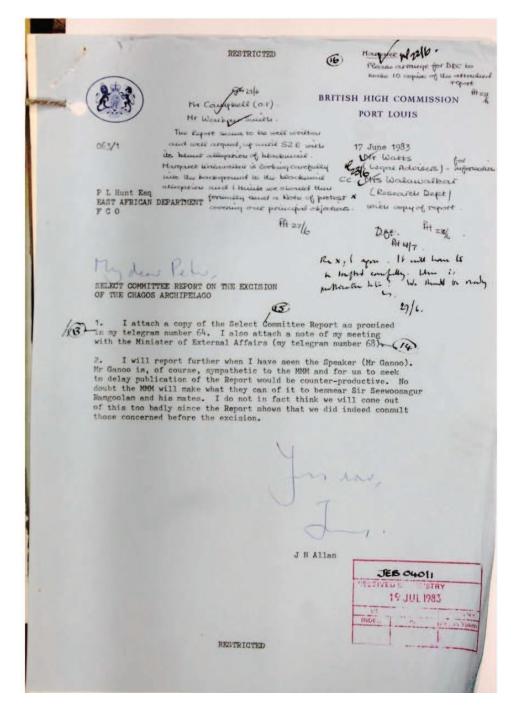

A cette objection de Sir Seewoosagur, Londres opposerait, croyons-nous savoir, une objection de taille pleine d'enseignement: non retranché de la dépendance de Maurice, l'archipel des Chagos, devenu base aérienne britannique, continuerait à dépendre des aléas d'un gouvernement mauricien.

La métropole pourrait donc être bientôt placée devant une alternative fort embarrassante pour elle: (a) ou bien imposer sa décision en la déguisant, comme il convient en pareille circonstance, d'une procédure ad hoc; (b) ou bien céder à l'objection de Sir Seewoosagur et reviser toute la question.

Sir Seewoosagur se trouve, de ce fait, dans une situation clé. Il est peu probable qu'il puisse abandonner ainsi des dépendances mauriciennes et ses objections, il faut l'en féliciter, sont, cette fois, celles d'un esprit avisé dont la circonspection est pleine de sagesse. Aucun Mauricien ne pourrait lui donner tort en la conjoncture.

Annex 130

Letter from J. N. Allan of the British High Commission in Port Louis to P. Hunt of the East African Department, FCO 31/3834 (17 June 1983)

Annex 131

Letter from P. Hunt of the East African Department to J. N. Allan of the British High Commission in Port Louis, FCO 31/3834 (14 July 1983)

RESTRICTED

Foreign and Commonwealth Office

London SW1A 2AH

Telephone 01- 233 8696

OF JEB 04011 19 JUL 1983

J N Allan Esq CBE

PORT LOUIS

Your reference

Our reference

Date 14 July 1983

Det to Mr Walts , Deputy Legal Advitor.

PA # 15/7

Dear James,

Thank you for your letter 063/1 of 17 June enclosing a copy of the Select Committee Report and a note of your meeting with the Minister of External Affairs.

- 2. We think that you struck just the right note with Gayan and picked out all the points which are objectionable to us. Our view here is that the Report is reasonably well written and well argued, at least until paragraph 52E with its rather blunt and emotional allegation of blackmail. We would wish however to put in a formal Note listing our principal objections. We are putting a draft to our Legal Advisers and hope to let you have it shortly.
- 3. We look forward to hearing what sort of impact the Report makes locally when it is circulated.

yours ever!

Peter.

P L Hunt East African Department

DECRET WITH OUR OR ADDUTT AGO. WELDNIT ANTONIS WITH MU

DETACRMENT OF THE CHAGOS ARCHIPFLAGO: NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE MAURITIANS (1965)

Nexotiations in Mauritius

L. A joint Anglo-US survey of a number of Indian Ocean islands with a view to their suitability for defence use was carried out from June to August 1961. The Premier of Memitius, The Sewcosagn Rangcolam, and the Executive Council of Seychelles, were consulted first, and raised no objection. The Premier of Memitius, The Sewcosagn Rangcolam, and the Executive Council of Seychelles, were consulted first, and raised no objection. The premier of the Memorial and the Sex Archipelage from Neuritius, but his reaction to this was guarded.

2. The Governor of Meuritius was instructed on 19 July 1965 (CO Secret and personal telegram number 196) to open discussions with Mauritius Ministers on the detachment of Chagos and on 18 compensation:

"In putting the matter to your unofficials you should indicat that regards Diego Garcia there is a firm requirement for the setable ment of a Communications Station and supporting facilities regards Diego Garcia there is a firm requirement for the setable ment of the Chagos Archipelago) you should indicate that mainder of the Chagos Archipelago) you should indicate the mainder of the Chagos Archipelago) you should indicate the mainder of the Chagos Archipelago) you should indicate the state of the Chagos archipelago). You should explain that it would be intended that the Island in question should explain that it would be intended that the Island in question should be constitutionally be intended that the Island in question should be constitutionally be intended that the Island in question should be constitutionally be intended that the Island in question should be constitutionally be intended that the Island in Question should explain that it would be intended that the Island in Question should explain that it would not be prepared to go ahead on any other basis. Any Suggestion of the partial Memorial Primary and Gardiner and Seychelles and established, by Order and office of the C

DECEMBER CALLED TO SERVICE AND ASSESSMENT OF THE SERVICE AND ASSES

4. A week later, the Council of Ministers, with Ramgoolam speaking for the Ministers as a whole, gave the Governor their response: they were sympathetically disposed to providing the Chagos Archipelago for Anglo-US use and prepared to play their part in the defence of the Commonwealth and the free world. They would like any agreement fover the use of Diego Caroia to provide also for the defence of Mamiritius. Ministers objected however to detachment, which would be unacceptable to public opinion in Mauritius. They asked therefore that consideration might be given to how UK/US requirements might be reconciled with a long term lease, eg for 99, years. They wished also that provision should be made for safeguarding mineral rights to agricultural rights were ever granted a metroprological and air navigation facilities should also be assured to Mauritius. As regards compensation, they suggested that the United States of sugar at the Commonwealth negotiated price against the purchase annually from Nauritius 700,000 to hop,000 tons of sugar at the Commonwealth negotiated price against the purchase by Mauritius from the United States of 75,000 tons of rice and 50,000 tons of wheat; an imerican manket for up to 20,000 tons of frozen tuna would also be of interest. The United States might also be helpful about immigration. They also hoped that some use might be made of Mauritius labour in construction work. Ramgoolam suggested discussions with representatives of the British and American Governments either on the occasion of, or before, the Constitutional Conference to be held in London in September. The Government of defence facilities must be made available directly by HMS and that a leasehold arrangement therefore would not do: if on reconsideratio Ministers were prepared to accept detachment, HMS would do their utmost in negotiations with the US Government to secure the various trade and other benefits requested, but Ministers were warned that chances of success were limited by the fact that some of their suggestions

Negotiations in London

6. The Defence and Overseas Policy Committee (OPD) considered the detachment of the Chagos islands and also a defence agreement with an independent Mauritius, on 31 August 1965. (Independence for Mauritius appears to have been the constitutional solution at the forefront of Ministerial thinking here, although the final decision between a referendum on independence and some form of special association with Britain claimed by the PMSD and for /elections elections followed by full independence claimed by the Labour Party - rested with the Mauritius Constitutional Conference due to take place in September.) The Deputy Secretary of State for Defence, supported by the Foreign Secretary, Mr Stewart, urged that "The Agreement of the Mauritius Ministers to the Automotive of the Mauritius Constitutional Conference, in response to the request of Mauritius Constitutional Conference, in response to the request of Mauritius Constitutional Conference, in response to the request of Mauritius Constitutional Conference, in response to the request of Mauritius Ministers we might accept responsibility for the external defence of Mauritius Deceme independent, since this might embroil us with opposing facial groups on the Island. If agreement on the detachment of the Thagos group could not be acotained, we should nevertheless transfer them to direct United, Kingdom sovereignty by Order in Councilristine Colonial Secretary, Mr Greenwood, said however that he Was not in agreement with these proposals. The Mauritius Constitutional Conference would in any case be difficult. When the Committee had lest discussed detaching the islands, they had agreed that the proposed compensation should be increased and that the agreement of the Mauritius Government was essential. Their Ministers would be very disappointed at our not agreed, that the proposals on sugar. The offer to accept responsibility for internal defence would he their proposals on sugar. The offer to accept responsibility for internal security at the request of the Mauritius Government was essential after Materian Part of the Conference and could probably only be satisfactorily resolved by an assurance that we would provide forces for internal security at the request of the Mauritius Government after independence for assistance in internal security would be sympathetically considered, Mauritius Minister (Mr Milson) said "that at the forthooming Conference we might if necessary agree to "consider sympathetically" the provision of

The main objects of the Conference were described in FO Guidance telno.401 as being: "to decide whether full independence or some form of special association with Britain should be the ultimate goal towards which Mauritius should move; to settle the timing of the transition to this goal and to decide what (if any) prior population consultation should be stipulated; and to secure the maximum possible measure of agreement between the Mauritian political parties on the provisions of the new Constitution." 202.4

SECRET

in Council if the agreement of Mauritius Ministers could not be obtained to this course need not be jaken at this stage, and until we could see how the forthcoming Conference progressed. It was, however, essential that our postition on the detachment of the islands should in no way be prejudiced during its course and the Colonial Secretary should firing the matter back to the Committee in good time for a decision to be reached on this issue before the Conference reached any Confusion. Scare

7. The Constitutional Conference took place in London from 7-21, September 1967. Completely separate side-meetings and Provide the Conference of the Conference and the Percords of the meetings on Chagos both show that there was in Conference and the records of the meetings on Chagos both show that there was in Conference and the records of the meetings on Chagos both show that there was in Conference Heart time. Defence Agreement was mentioned in both, Fet also conference agreement was mentioned in both, Fet also conference and the records of the meetings on Chagos both show that there was in Conference and the records of the Manister - except inessum as a possible Anglo-Hauritian Defence Agreement was mentioned in both, Fet also conference and the Manister - was mentioned in both, Fet also conference and the Manister and Parket and the Secretary is initial, exploratory, talk on Monday 15th September with Rangolem (now Sir Seewoosagur) revealed, the Manister of the Claps, Schonena (Committee of Manister at the subject of the Claps, Schonena (Committee of Manister at the subject of the Claps, Schonena (Committee of Manister at the subject of the Sir, Schonena (Committee of Manister at the subject of their discousions was quite separate from that of the Conference proper. Its pointed, out the colocation stores of settlement of the Conference for interior of was a subject of the Conference of defence facilities in the Chagos islands built by the US but available for joint UK-US use and Eritain's ability to give defence hel compensation for the detachment of the islands. He had made an initial offer of £1 million and this had not been badly received. If it would help to secure agreement we might consider making available a further £1 million to finance development schemes over a period of years. We might also consider a provision that after gay, 99 years, the islands would revert to Mauritius if they were no longer required by the United Kingdom and United States. There had been some discussion about a continuing British responsibility for alternal security, but this had been fin the context of thourse constitutional development rather than 00 the Getachment of the islands. Of the two main Mauritius Fartise one favoured independence while the other preferred a form of association with the United Kingdom. Both would want some assurance of continued British assistance in maintaining internal security but it might not be necessary for us to 60 to beyond an agreement the bad sear the request of the Mauritius Government ... The had not be necessary for us to 60 to beyond an agreement of the context of the Mauritius Government ... The had not pressed for an indicate of the following the translation as yet shout a defence agreement on the detachment and he was hobbit; that by them agreement on the detachment and he was hobbit; that by them secured. He had not pressed for an indicate would have been secured. He had not pressed for an indicate would have been strength of their bargaining position and under green might only induce them to put up their price. The translation of the detachment of the strength of their bargaining position and under green might only induce them to put up their price. The maintain good prints agreement would be reached urgarity and savisfactory decision for the detachment of the islands was necessary both in Prime Ministers of the Golonial Secretary is the tendence would wish to take note of the Golonial Secretary is the minister of the constitutional Conference. When the surface have the context of the maintain

/compensation

SECRET

- Competibation

/the

B

the scale on which the United States has accepted expenditure on bases elsewhere had to be borne in mind." On this occasion Rangoolam did, however, admit for the first time, in an oblique manner, of the possibility of the detachment of Chagos, whilst continuing to envisage some agreement with the inericans ("an alternative arrangement might be to Galculate what benefit and other trade arrangement that they had been suggesting and for the United States Government to make yearly payments to Mauritius of that amount ... He was talking in this connection in terms of a lease but if the islands were detached then different figures could easily be calculated; [it should in many case be provided that if the islands were detached then different figures could easily be calculated; [it should in many case be provided that if the islands were detached then different figures could easily be calculated; [it should in any case be provided that if the islands ceased to be needed for defence purposes they would revert to Mauritius.")

11. Meanwhile, the Constitutional Conference was reaching deadlock on the issue of Mauritius' future status. It is meeting between the UK delegation and PMND representatives on the morning of 23rd September it became clear to PMND leader Koening that HMG were not going to accept his Party's proposal for a referendum on independence and he withdraw the Party from the Conference. This withdrawal was unconnected with the Chagos issue, but Koenig also stayed away from the meeting on the afternoon of 23 September at which Ministers gave agreement, in principle, to detachment (para.13) and later the PMND used the pretext of inadequate compensation secured in the negotiations to withdraw from the all-party Government in Mauritius (para.17). Minister, Mr Wilson, held a private meeting with Ramgoolam. He emphasised that the question of the detachment of Chagos was a completely separate matter from the question of Mauritius' constitutional future. He warmed that because of American interest, the Mauritians

13. At 2.30 p.m. on that afternoon the Colonial Secretary met Ramgoolam and other Ministers (minus Koenig) and a tentative agreement was reached. Early in the discussion the Colonial Secretary said: "This [ie compensation, the offer of a defence agreement etc] was the furthest the British Government could go. They were anxious to settle the matter by agreement but the other British Ministers concerned were of course aware that the islands were distant from Mauritius, that the link with Mauritius was an accidental one and that it would be possible for the British Government to detach them from Mauritius by Order in Council."

SECRET 14. Some days after the meeting on 23rd September, and prior to departure overseas, the Secretary of State asked officials in the Colonial Office to get the final record of the meeting agreed with the Mauritian Ministers before they left London. One Minister (Paturau) had already left for Mauritius. Ramgoolam was due to visit the Colonial Office on 30th September, and the opportunity was taken to clear the minutes with him and see if he could clear the record with Mr Mohamed and Mr Bissandoyal. Ramgoolam took away the draft and after consulting Mr Mohamed wrote a letter dated 1st October agreeing the draft record with certain amendments. On ith October, Sir Hilton Poynton and Mr Trafford Smith saw Ramgoolam and Ringadoo to clear up various matters, including the final draft. Puzzled by Ramgoolam's reference to "two islands" in his letter of 1st October, they sought clarification from him. Trafford-Smith later minuted: "It turned out that the "two islands' point was probably due to a misunderstanding at least he did not press it, and I wonder whether, confronted with a map showing the islands in the Chagos group, he had in fact previously realised that there were so many.

As regards the other points, the two Ministers agreed to our revised presentation which effectively said that we would do our best to negotiate these facilities with the Americans."

15. The amendments were incorporated into the final agreed record of the 23rd September meeting, the relevant paragraphs of which read:

G

- "22. Summing up the discussion, the SECRETARY OF STATE asked whether he could inform his colleagues that Dr Ramgoolam, Mr Bissoondoyal and Mr Mohamed were prepared to agree to the detachment of the Chagos Archipelago on the understanding that he would recommend to his colleagues the following:
 (i) negotiations for a defence agreement between Britain and Mauritius;

 (ii) in the event of independence an understanding between the two governments that they would consult together in the event of a difficult internal security situation arising in Mauritius;

 (iii) compensation totalling up to £3m. should be paid to the Mauritius Government over and above direct compensation to landowners and the cost of resettling others affected in the Chagos Islands;

 (iv) the British Government would use their good offices with the United States Government in support of Mauritius' request for concessions over sugar imports and the supply of wheat and other commodities;

 - and the supply of wheat and other commodities; that the British Government would do their best to persuade the American Government to use labour and (∀) persuade the American Government to use Labour and materials from Mauritius for construction work in the islands;

 /vi)

the British Government would use their good offices with the US Government to ensure that the following facilities in the Chagos Archipelago would remain available to the Mauritius Government as far as practicable:

(a) Navigational and Matagoria.

SHORETS:

- (vii)
- practicable:

 (a) Navigational and Meteorological facilities;

 (b) Fishing Rights;

 (c) Use of Air Strip for emergency landing and for refuelling civil planes without disembarkation of passengers that if the need for the facilities on the islands disappeared the uslands should be returned to Mauritius that the benefit of any minerals or oil discovered in or near the Chagos Archipelago should revert to the Mauritius Government. (vii)

- or near the Chagos Archivelago should revert to the Mauritius Government.

 25. SIR S RAMGOCIAM said that this was acceptable to him and Messrs. Bissoondoyal and Mohamed in principle but he expressed the wish to discuss it with his other ministeral colleagues."

 16. At the same time it had been agreed within the C.O. on the advice of the Governor (Sir John Rennie) that the right way to proceed was to send a secret despatch (in the non-personal series) which could be shown to the Mauritian Winisters asking for formal confirmation of the revised record as finally agreed by Sir S Ramgoclam and Mr Ringadoo, and effectively by Mr Mohamed, whose consent Ramgoolam had secured. This despatch was sent on 6th October (no.423).

 17. With certain provisos (regarding the eventual return of the islands to Mauritius, and regarding the eventual return of the Mauritian Council of Ministers confirmed their agreement, which was notified to HMG in the Governor's secret telno.2Pr of 5th November 1965. (The provisos mentioned showe were acknowledged by CO secret telno.298 of 8th November, which made clear that the Chagos Archipelago would remain under British soverstancy and that the Islands were required for defence purposes, and that the resumble of the compensation. On Il November Koenig, Duval and Devieme (PMSD) resigned from the Government. The following day they gave a press conference at which they gave a press conference at which they gave a kineir reason for this action the inadequacy of compensation for the Ioss of Chagos and the insufficiency of errorts to improve it, especially in regard to sugar exports and immigration to the United States; however the PMSD also publicly declared that the Party had no objection in principle to detachment or to defence facilities.

Section African Section Research Department 15 July 1983 15 July 1983

Annex 133 Letter from D. A. Gore-Booth to W. N. Wenban-Smith of the East African Department, FCO 58/3286 (15 July 1983)

- 1. In part 5 of his letter of 26 April about Diego Garcia and the NAM Summit, Mig Goulding promised a further letter on what we say about relinquishing Diego Garcia when we no longer require it for defence purposes. Mig's departure, my arrival and the fact that the papers have languished in assorted trays in the interim have conspired to delay our doing so. My apologies. However, with Mauritius in the middle of an election campaign and a new government taking office in August, now is probably a good time to focus once again on what, in UN terms at least, could become a very tricky subject if not handled properly.
- 2. Your letter of 25 March to Martin Williams in New Delhi implied that, depending on the circumstances, all three terms, "return", "cede", "revert", are all acceptable. While this may be true as far as Parliament is concerned, it would be a mistake for us to rely on such loose definitions at the UN where precise terminology has been elevated to the status of a high art form and where any sovereignty battles over Diego Garcia are likely to be fought. Moreover you will have seen (Mike Maclay's letter of 8 April to Peter Hunt) that the Mauritian Permanent Representative here was sufficiently sensitive to the question to comment to the Ambassador that he found it difficult to believe Mrs Thatcher had told Ramgoolam that we would "return" Diego Garcia to Mauritius when we no longer needed it.
- 3. What is required I think is a new locus classicus on Diego Garcia, perhaps in reply to an inspired PQ to the Secretary of State or the Prime Minister, made in such a way as to expunge the ambiguities and inconsistencies that have appeared in previous Ministerial pronouncements. These simply do not square with the policy we are under instructions to defend (Mr Ennals' 1975 statement and the Prime Minister's answer in July 1980 are I think particularly unfortunate examples). Once made we should stick to whatever term has been agreed and draw on it as necessary in explanation of our position. Failure to get this right would store up no end of trouble for us at the General Assembly (Diego Garcia is not at present inscribed on the agenda, but IOPZ is and could well provide a forum for raising the sovereignty question).

CONFIDENTIAL

4. As for the wording we should use, I am afraid that notwithstanding your views, we consider "revert" less than acceptable since it clearly implies that Mauritius did at one time exercise sovereignty over the territory. For the same reasons we question too the use of the term "return", even subject to your proviso. We cannot readily foresee circumstances in which the proviso would be realisable, and, even if it were, it would make plain that we were weaselling. My own feeling is that to talk of a "return" of Diego Garcia to Mauritius is essentially incompatible with our claim that the Chagos were never part of Mauritius.

5. I should be most grateful to know what you think. This might be an appropriate point to remind you of paragraph 4 of Mig Goulding's letter of 26 April suggesting a piece of paper setting out our case on Diego García which we could leave with selected. NAM Missions in New York and also send to capitals. No doubt you are already giving some thought to this. If you agree to the idea of a new Ministerial statement it might be as well to leave the paper until the terms of that statement can be included.

D A Gore-Booth

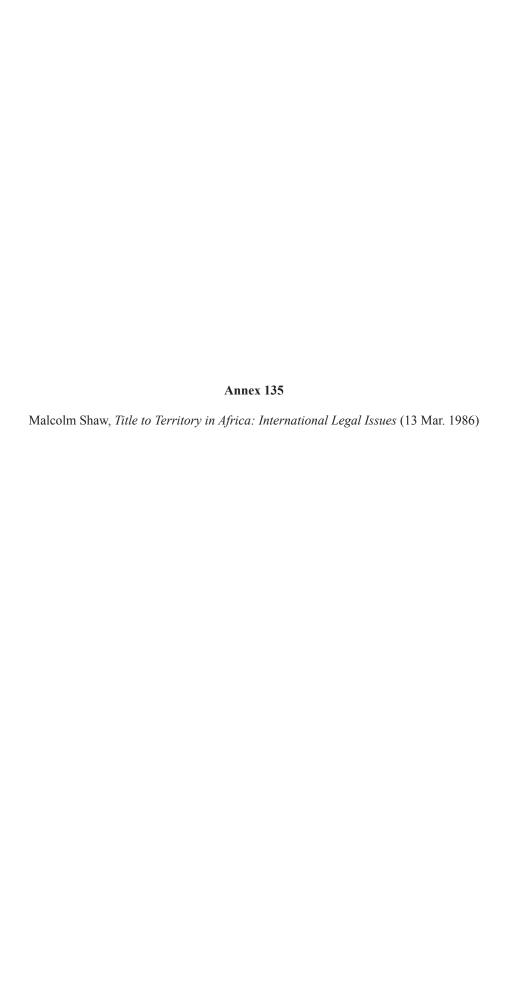

cc: J N Allan Esq CBE, Port Louis

M J Williams Esq, NEW DELHI

S J Gomersall Esq, Washington

Annex 134 Note from A. Watts to Mr Campbell, FCO 31/3836 (received 23 Aug. 1983)

CONFIDENTIAL H TEB STOJ2 M' Campbell (GAD) 23 AUG 1983 BOT: "Return", "cede", Etc. I don't und like Either 'AEDERL' SE 'return'. Both suggest the Chops were previously Mauritins', and that that state of affairs with be resumed: the first limb of that proposition is, of course not one we would readily go along with, at kest without a lot of supplementary Explanation about 'administrative convenience' and 80 on '(FdE' or 'transfer' both SEE on to ans much botter, sice they carry wo with cathon of previous Mauritian rights own Brot. And 'cede' implies that we do won fossen soverejaty, while transfer. forits in the Saux due choin. Walls wir

TITLE TO TERRITORY IN AFRICA

International Legal Issues

MALCOLM SHAW

CLARENDON PRESS · OXFORD 1986

THE GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY LAW LIBRARY

MR O A 1987

LAG 555. . S46 1986

Oxford University Press, Walton Street, Oxford OX2 6DP Oxford New York Toronto Delhi Bombay Calcutta Madras Karachi Kuala Lumpar Singpore Hong Kong Tokyo Nairobi Dar es Salaam Cape Town Melbourne Auckland and associated companies in Beirut Berlin Ibadan Mexico City Nicosia Oxford is a trade mark of Oxford University Press

Published in the United States by Oxford University Press, New York

@ Malcolm Shaw 1986

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise, without the prior permission of Oxford University Press.

This book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, re-sold, hired out or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form of binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data

Sham, Malcolm, 1927—Title to territory in Africa: international legal issues.

1. Territory, National—Africa 2. Africa—Boundaries

1. Title

341.4'2 JX4084.AJ

1. SPN - 2. - 6

ISBN 0-19-825379-6

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data
Shaw, Malcom N. (Malcolm Nathan), 1947—
Title to territory in Africa.
Revision of thesis (Ph.d.)—University of Keele, 1979
Bibliography: p.
Includes index.
1. Territory, National—Africa. 2. Africa—Boundaries.
3. Self-attermination, National
4. Decolonization—Africa. 1. Title
JX4085.S46 1985 341.42096 84-20766
ISBN 0-10-882370-6 ISBN 0-19-825379-6

> Set by Set Fair Printed in Great Britain by Billing & Sons, Limited, Worcester

Variag #0/542904

raises the question of the authoritativeness of such interpretations. Whereas an amendment by subsequent practice will be binding, whether a particular interpretation of a Charter provision contained in one or more resolutions of the General Assembly possesses a persuasive quality, and to what extent, will be determined on the basis of the numbers and identity of States voting for the proposed interpretation. Thus, Charter interpretation in this narrow sense constitutes one element of Charter modification by practice and is subsumed under the generally recognized heading of Charter interpretation. The advantage of this latter process is that it enables the majority of States to modify the Charter to accord with contemporary conditions, while imposing certain limitations as to the quantity of States proposing the change, and thus providing some protection to minorities. It is also necessary for the proposed modification to be directly referable to a particular provision of the Charter.

Such changes may be, and generally will be, accomplished by Assembly resolutions, which may either be related to a specific situation or be more generally framed. Thus, Charter interpretations may occur other than as responses to particular disputes. Not all such resolutions will be of the same persuasive nature and a series of resolutions over a period of time will usually be required.

(b) Self-Determination

1. General Approach

At this point we shall turn to examine the question of whether the right of self-determination can be regarded as established through the medium of Charter interpretation as a result of practice subsequent to the creation of the UN Organization. As an introduction, one should note the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. This was adopted on 10 December 1948, in the form of an Assembly resolution by 48 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions. It built upon Charter provisions regarding human rights (for example, Articles 1, 55, 56, 62, and 76) and enumerated a list of human rights and fundamental freedoms 'as a common standard of schievement for all peoples and all nations'. Although the principle of self-determination was not referred to in this Declaration, which concentrated upon the elucidation of individual rights, its path forward was cleared in the same way in that democratic rights seemed to lead inevitably in international society to consideration of the rights of peoples to define their own cultural and national status. 105

74 The Establishment of the Legal Right to Self-Determination

The Declaration was not legally binding as such in view of the terms in which it is expressed and the circumstances surrounding its adoption, ¹⁰⁶ but has come to have a significant effect within the international community. Some of its provisions might be taken as reflecting general principles of law, others as relatively new international stipulations. However, it can be regarded in essence as an influential interpretation by the General Assembly of the relevant Charter provisions upon human rights and fundamental freedoms, and as such of legal value as part of the law of the United Nations. ¹⁰⁷

There have been a number of resolutions dealing with self-determination both generally and with regard to particular situations, and it is possible to point here to what appears to be a significant distinction. Resolutions and declarations that posit principles of law may be regarded as valid interpretations of the Charter if the necessary requirements of unanimity (or near-unanimity) and referral have been met. However, resolutions and other UN and State practice referable to the specific situations are often limited by two factors. Firstly, such practice in concentrating upon a particular situation is of restrictive value since it deals only with one aspect of the principle under discussion which may be modified or even distorted by virtue of other principles, deemed relevant in that particular situation, ¹⁰⁸ and secondly by the greater likelihood of opposing votes and behaviour that will rob the practice of its claim to universality. 109 However, it is possible for such defects to be remedied by a consideration of the temporal element. In other words, a series of resolutions, for example calling for self-determination in different colonial territories, may be regarded as subsequent practice relevant to the interpretation of the particular Charter provisions in question. Examples of such practice will be noted in the following section, 110 but it will be useful in this context to recall the views of the ICJ regarding Article 27 of the Charter. The court declared that 'the proceedings of the Security Council extending over a long period supply abundant evidence that presidential rulings and the position taken by members of the Council . . . have consistently and uniformly interpreted the practice of voluntary abstention by a permanent member as not constituting a bar to the adoption of resolutions This procedure followed by the Security Council... has been generally accepted by members of the United Nations and evidences a general practice of that Organization.'111

A similar process can be seen with regard to Article 2(7) of the Charter, concerning domestic jurisdiction, which has over the years been increasingly restrictively interpreted 112 while the General Assembly has progressively widened the scope of its jurisdiction under Chapter XI of the Charter by asserting its competence both to request political information on non-self-governing territories under Article 73(e) and to decide which territories may be regarded as non-self-governing. The Assembly has also proclaimed its authority to decide between competing aspirations of the right to self-determination and to declare whether territories have exercised or should exercise the right to self-determination. 114

In all of these instances State practice over a period of time has been consolidated into Charter interpretation. Whether such practice can be treated as a valid interpretation will depend on all the circumstances of the case, but the presumption would be that the larger the number of resolutions, for instance applying the principle of self-determination to different territories, and the longer the period during which such practice has been operating, the greater would be the likelihood that a persuasive or even binding view of the Charter term has been expressed.

Resolution 421 (v) of 4 December 1950 embodied the request of the General Assembly for a study of the ways and means 'which would ensure the right of peoples and nations to self-determination', and this was taken further by resolution 545 (VI), which stated that the proposed article on self-determination in the International Covenants on Human Rights should be expressed in the terms that all peoples have the right to selfdetermination. It also noted that the article should stipulate that all States should promote the realization of the right in conformity with the principles and purposes of the United Nations. Resolution 637 (VII) proclaimed that self-determination was a fundamental human right. 115 This resolution also declared that UN member States 'shall recognise and promote the realization of the right' with regard to the peoples of trust and non-self-governing territories under their administration 'according to the principles and spirit of the Charter of the United Nations'. The Commission on Human Rights considered the concept of self-determination over a number of sessions 117 and submitted recommendations to the UN Economic and Social Council, including a suggestion for the establishment of a Special Commission to examine situations resulting from alleged denials or inadequate realizations of the right to self-determination in certain circumstances. 118 This was, however, opposed and the matter was referred back to the Commission on Human Rights for reconsideration. 119 During the reconsideration a number of representatives pointed out that self-determination was only a principle and not a right. It was declared that the Charter had not granted

76

Such objections were overridden, as was the view that the realization of self-determination fell essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of States, and the Commission reaffirmed its previous recommendation which was sent to the General Assembly. 120 The General Assembly at its eighth session asked the Commission to give priority to recommendations regarding international respect for the right of self-determination, 121 and by the next session the Assembly already had before it the draft International Covenants on Human Rights prepared by the Commission and transmitted by the Economic and Social Council. 122

The Commission suggested that both International Covenants should have an identical first article ¹²³ and this article, according to the draft of the Third Committee of the Assembly, read as follows:

1. All peoples have the right to self-determination. By virtue of the right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development....

3. All States parties to the Covenant including those having responsibilities for the administration of non-self-governing and trust territories shall promote the realization of the right of self-determination and shall respect that right in conformity with the provisions of the UN Charter. 124

At the Twelfth Session, the Assembly declared in resolution 1188 (XII) that member States were to give due respect to the right of self-determination. From this point, the proposed Covenants became enmeshed in UN discussions from which they were only to emerge nine years later.

At this point we shall turn to two General Assembly declarations that might be treated as authoritative interpretations of the Charter. 125

The Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (the Colonial Declaration) was adopted by the General Assembly of 14 December 1960 in resolution 1514 (XI) by 89 votes to 0 with 9 abstentions. This has had a profound impact upon international affairs and has been treated with particular reverence by the States of the Third World. It has been regarded by many as the 'second Charter' of the United Nations drawn up for the subjugated peoples of Africa and Asia. ¹²⁶ Indeed, Parry has written that the Declaration by itself has had the effect of modifying that part of international law that deals with territorial sovereignty. ¹²⁷

The Declaration emerged after a debate in the Assembly initiated by the Soviet premier 128 and was drafted by forty-three States. 129 The preamble noted that 'all peoples have an inalienable right to complete freedom, the exercise of their sovereignty and the integrity of their national territory' and proclaimed the necessity of 'bringing to a speedy and unconditional end colonialism in all its forms and manifestations'. The Declaration laid down seven principles, stressing that 'all peoples have the right to self-determination; by virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development'. Inadequacy of political, economic, social, or educational preparedness was not to serve as a pretext for delaying independence. Immediate steps were to be taken to transfer power to the peoples of non-independent countries, but attempts aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unit and territorial integrity of a country were deemed incompatible with the purposes and principles of the UN

The Declaration has been treated by a number of countries as constituting a binding interpretation of the Charter, or a restatement of principles enshrined in the Charter, ¹³⁰ and it has been similarly regarded by some writers. ¹³¹ However, there are others who dispute this. One view already discussed is that any action by the General Assembly could only be recommendatory in such circumstances and that therefore the Declaration could be nothing more than a general statement of objectives. ¹³²

But the most significant criticism of the Declaration as an authoritative interpretation of the Charter is concerned with the inconsistencies that are noticeable between the two instruments. Paragraph 1 of the Declaration proclaimed that 'the subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a denial of fundamental human rights [and] is contrary to the Charter of the United Nations'. However, this is not too clear in the Charter itself, for Chapters XI and XII legitimize certain relationships of dependence regarding non-self-governing and trust territories, ¹³³ subject to defined conditions.

The Declaration in paragraph 3 notes that 'inadequacy of political, economic, social or educational preparedness should never serve as a pretext for delaying independence', while Article 73(b) declares that States administering non-self-governing territories must 'assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions, according to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and their varying stages of advancement' and Article 76(b) underlines that among the basic objectives of the trusteeship system is the 'progressive development towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples'.

78

Paragraph 5 of the Declaration emphasizes that 'immediate steps' should be taken in all non-independent territories to transfer power to the people, and this seems inconsistent with Articles 73 and 76. However, the call by the USSR, in particular, for immediate independence or the proclamation of a date at the end of 1961 for this to be achieved was not accepted 134 and this provision should perhaps be regarded rather as a change of pace than as a change of essence. The Declaration also blurs the distinction between trust and non-self-governing territories by positing the same provisions for all territories that have not yet attained independence. In addition, the Declaration in paragraph 5 appears to regard independence as the only legitimate goal of the whole process. This latter provision runs counter to a number of UN resolutions, for example those recognizing the exercise of self-determination involved in the relationship of dependence between the USA and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, ¹³⁵ and between New Zealand and The Cook Islands ¹³⁶ and Niue ¹³⁷ after elections had been held in the respective dependent territories. In fact, the UN Secretary-General noted in 1963 that 'the emergence of dependent territories by a process of selfdetermination to the status of self-government either as independent sovereign States or as autonomous components of larger units has always been one of the purposes of the Charter and one of the objectives of the United Nations'.138

Such inconsistencies have led Bokor-Szego¹³⁹ and Martine, ¹⁴⁰ for example, to deny that the Colonial Declaration is an authoritative interpretation since it appears actually to amend the Charter, the argument turning on where the line between interpretation and amendment should be drawn. Fifteen years of State practice in the process of decolonization formed the background to the Colonial Declaration and enabled it to bring up to date the relevant Charter provisions in a way marking contemporary consensus views as to, for example, the effect of inadequacy of political, social, economic, or educational preparedness. All interpretations refine and develop the concept under consideration, in a manner acceptable to those concerned, and may be no less influential or binding because of that.¹⁴¹

However, it does not follow that everything contained in the Declaration (or in similar resolutions, for that matter) constitutes a binding obligation. Some elements would remain upon a purely hortatory level, for example the solemn proclamation in the preamble to the Declaration stressing 'the necessity of bringing to a speedy and unconditional end colonialism in all its forms and manifestations'. On the other hand, there may be statements which are inconsistent with instruments interpreting the Charter—for instance, the apparent acceptance in the Declaration that independence is the sole object of selfdetermination. This contrasts with UN practice, as noted above, recognizing other relationships, and with the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in Accordance with the Charter of the United Nations (resolution 2625 (xxv)), which noted that 'the establishment of a sovereign and independent State, the free association or integration with an independent State or the emergence into any other political status freely determined by a people constitute modes of implementing the right of self-determination by that people'. 142

It would therefore seem that where one is faced by conflicting interpretations of equal standing, resort must be had to the intentions of the members of the United Nations, as revealed in their practice, and upon this basis it would seem that the stipulation in the 1960 Declaration restricting self-determination to the attainment of independence must be regarded as only a suggestion and not an authoritative interpretation of the Charter. Nevertheless the core of the Declaration does constitute an interpretation of the Charter and one that has underpinned the end of colonialism. ¹⁴³

Higgins has noted that it 'must be taken to represent the wishes and beliefs of the full membership of the United Nations'. As to the juridical character of the Declaration, Higgins stresses that in it the right of self-determination is regarded 'as a legal right enforceable here and now'. As

This approach is underlined by the action taken by the United Nations to implement the Declaration. On 27 November 1961 the General Assembly created a subsidiary organ entitled the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence, ¹⁴⁶ which was enlarged from seventeen to twenty-four member States the following year. ¹⁴⁷ It has gradually widened its sphere of activity so that, apart from the Trusteeship Council (which is only concerned now with the trust territory of the Pacific Islands), it is the only organ responsible for issues dealing with dependent territories. The Committee has been very active and has done much to pressure the colonial powers and the administering powers. ¹⁴⁸ It has also stressed the position that the United Nations intended the Colonial Declaration to act as a juridical signpost to complete decolonization and not merely as a solely hortatory pronouncement.

გი

Virtually all UN resolutions proclaiming the right to self-determination of particular peoples expressly refer to the 1960 Declaration. ¹⁴⁹ Judge De Castro particularly noted in the Western Sahara case how the African group at the United Nations that prepared a draft resolution on the Sahara problems for discussion in the Fourth Committee was at pains to refer four times to resolution 1514 (XV) in reaffirming the right of the people of Western Sahara to self-determination. ¹⁵⁰ The International Court has specifically referred to the Colonial Declaration as an 'important stage' in the development of international law regarding non-self-governing territories, ¹⁵¹ and as 'the basis for the process of decolonization'. ¹⁵²

On 16 December 1966 the General Assembly adopted the International Covenants on Human Rights, which consisted of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Optional Protocol to the latter. Both Covenants have an identical first article which declares inter alia that 'all peoples have the right to self-determination. By virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development' and that 'the States parties to the present Convention including those having responsibility for the administration of non-self-governing and trust territories shall promote the realization of the right of self-determination and shall respect that right in conformity with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations'.

The inclusion of the right to self-determination in the International Covenants occurred because the General Assembly in resolution 545 (VII) recommended that the proposed Covenants should incorporate such a provision and in resolution 637 (VII) declared that the right to self-determination was a 'fundamental human right'. It is to be noted that the preambles to both the Covenants refer to the 'obligation of states under the Charter of the United Nations to promote universal respect for and observance of human rights and freedom'. ¹⁵³

The International Covenants came into force in 1976¹⁵⁴ and are thus binding as between the parties, but it would seem that they are of legal value over and above that, not only as practice leading to or reflecting a customary rule, but also as a persuasive interpretation of the notion of human rights as embodied in the Charter.¹⁵⁵

status of the Declaration since it was effected at the merely organic or institutional level rather than on a formal, legally binding inter-State level¹⁵⁸ and concludes that 'there can hardly be any doubt... that the Declaration embodied in Resolution 2625 (xxv)... is to be considered from a legal point of view as an instrument of a purely hortatory value'.¹⁵⁹ This approach, however, cannot be supported. The Declaration was intended to act as an elucidation of certain important Charter provisions, although not as an actual amendment of the Charter, and was adopted by member States on that basis.¹⁶⁰

State practice within and outside the United Nations also supports the view that the right to self-determination exists in international law. State practice, other than resolutions and declarations purporting to express principles of law, can be important in the process of Charter interpretation provided it is linked to particular Charter stipulations and provided over a period of time sufficient practice has accumulated for it to be treated as a valid and general interpretation rather than as strictly limited conduct specifically related to a particular situation.

It is realized that this formulation may fail to provide an adequate guide as to whether a proposition can be accepted as an authoritative Charter interpretation in a number of instances, but it is clearly impossible to lay down firm conditions as to the time that should be encompassed or the number of relevant resolutions that must be adopted. In each case much will depend upon acceptance and acquiescence by an increasing number of States regarding the propositions involved in particular situations constituting general principles interpreting the Charter.

One must be careful not to deny the members of an organization the capacity to harmonize its constitution with contemporary needs by means of their subsequent practice. After all, the aim of interpretation is to enable the overwhelming majority to determine the nature and extent of the obligations and rights they have agreed to in circumstances minimizing adverse effects upon dissentient members. ¹⁶¹

State practice that does not fall within the categories mentioned may nevertheless be relevant in the process of Charter interpretation as evidence of recognized interpretations, and thus may be of value in emphasizing the form and content of a particular interpretation. It may also play a vital role in pointing out which interpretations are to be regarded as valid, binding ones, much as State practice may also constitute evidence of particular rules of customary law. State practice, of course, may also lead to a new customary law. One should note that those member States that abstain with regard to such interpreting resolutions as the 1960 and 1970 Declarations discussed above may well still be bound by them. $^{\rm 162}$

2. Specific Approach

State practice, particularly as manifested in the United Nations, concerning the status and application of self-determination in specific situations exceeds the abstract, general expression of self-determination as a right, in terms of both frequency and diversity, and accordingly must be considered as a significant factor.

General Assembly resolutions proclaiming that specific territories should be entitled to the exercise of the right of self-determination are ultimately founded upon the established competence of the Assembly to determine which territories are non-self-governing. This is partly because self-determination has been deemed non-applicable to independent territories and partly to side-step the doctrine of domestic jurisdiction.

Article 2(7) of the Charter declares that 'nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State' and the history of the first decade and a half of the UN Organization largely centres around attempts to establish a balance between this provision and the perceived need to end colonialism. This latter aim was achieved, at least as far as the United Nations was concerned, through establishing a clear divison between the administering State and its administered territories, contrary to the wishes of a number of colonial powers, particularly France with regard to Algeria and Portugal with regard to its African possessions. Having instituted this division and provided an exception to Article 2(7), the Assembly proceeded to make recommendations regarding the future of these non-self-governing territories. 163 Based upon its recognized competence to decide which territories were non-self-governing territories, the General Assembly successfully asserted its competence to determine whether or not a nonself-governing territory had attained a full measure of self-government as referred to in Chapter XI of the Charter, and to this end a series of resolutions were adopted expressing the Assembly's views as regards specific cases. 164 Despite the objections of the colonial powers, the doctrine of domestic jurisdiction as declared in Article 2(7) has been interpreted by the subsequent practice of the UN Organization and its members so that the affairs of non-self-governing territories may be discussed within the Organization and rendered subject to UN resolutions and declarations as to their political status.

84 The Establishment of the Legal Right to Self-Determination

The competence of the Assembly was initially founded upon Chapter XI of the Charter, but later resolutions disregarded this Chapter and concentrated instead on the concept of self-determination as the basic relevant principle.

The large number of Assembly resolutions calling for self-determination in specific cases represents international practice regarding the existence and scope of a rule of self-determination in customary law. They also constitute subsequent practice relevant to the interpretation of particular Charter provisions. For example, resolutions proclaiming that an obligation exists under Article 73(e) of the Charter to transmit information in a particular case may be regarded as a binding interpretation of the Charter provision in that specific instance since the competence of the General Assembly to determine such matters has been clearly recognized. 165 The change from Chapter XI to self-determination with the Colonial Declaration as the juridical basis for the process marks the stronger line taken by the Assembly as a whole but the effect remains broadly similar-that is, the determination by the General Assembly of a factual situation within which the declared norm will be deemed to operate. By such methods, of course, the outlines of the norm itself will be elucidated, and to that extent factual determinations by the Assembly will be juridically relevant.

However, unlike Assembly resolutions of a general nature, they cannot themselves authoritatively interpret a principle as a legally binding norm; their function in this sphere rests rather upon delimitation, ¹⁶⁶ though such determinations may also provide for the application of non-legal principles to a particular situation.

The Algerian problem¹⁶⁷ was first included on the agenda of the assembly in 1955, and it was claimed that France had broken the provisions of the Charter on self-determination.¹⁶⁸ The Assembly, however, decided not to pursue the matter¹⁶⁹ and the Security Council did not place it upon its agenda.¹⁷⁰ In succeeding sessions, resolutions proclaiming the right of the Algerian people to self-determination failed to be adopted although support for the proposition was growing.¹⁷¹ In fact, it was only in 1960 that a resolution was adopted which referred to the right of the Algerian people to self-determination.¹⁷² Despite this hesitant start, and in view of the changed climate of opinion in France itself, the Assembly passed without opposition in the following session resolution 1724 (XVI) which called for the implementation of 'the right of the Algerian people to self-determination and independence respecting the unity and territorial integrity of Algeria'.

This resolution, which significantly referred to the Colonial Declaration of 1960, also asserted that the United Nations had a part to play in the fulfilment of this right.

A large role has been performed in this process by the Special Committee established after the adoption of the Colonial Declaration. 173 For example, the Special Committee was requested to study the situation in Southern Rhodesia by General Assembly resolution 1745 (XVI) and its report formed the basis of an Assembly resolution criticizing the failure of the United Kingdom to carry out the Colonial Declaration, and affirming that Southern Rhodesia was a non-self-governing territory. 174 The Assembly adopted resolution 1755 (XVII) proclaiming the right of the people of Southern Rhodesia to self-determination, and the problem has been discussed at the United Nations at great length. 175 The claim of the United Kingdom that the problem was an internal matter and that therefore the United Nations could not consider it, was clearly rejected, and resolution 1747 (XVI) affirmed that 'the territory of Southern Rhodesia is a non-self-governing territory within the meaning of Chapter XI of the Charter of the United Nations'. This situation was altered, at least as far as the United Kingdom was concerned, by the unilateral declaration of independence by the government of Southern Rhodesia, but the General Assembly vigorously attacked 'any agreement reached between the administering power and the illegal racist minority regime which will not recognise the inalienable rights of the people of Zimbabwe to self-determination and independence in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514 (xv),177

In its first six years, the Special Committee considered some seventy territories, ¹⁷⁸ and in 1974, for example, it discussed thirty-nine territories, the majority being Pacific or Atlantic islands. ¹⁷⁹ In virtually all cases the Special Committee has recommended that the territory become independent in the light of its right to self-determination, although in some instances association with another State was accepted, for example, Niue and the Cook Islands.

Throughout the years of the existence of the UN Organization a great number of resolutions have been adopted calling for self-determination in particular situations and these constitute State practice and international practice of overwhelming importance. The majority of such resolutions have referred specifically to the 1960 Colonial Declaration, thus strengthening its claim to be the fount of legality as far as the right to self-determination is concerned. It has been noted that 'if this right [of self-determination] is still not recognized as a juridical norm in the practice of a few rare States or the writings of certain even rarer theoreticians, the attitude of the former is explained by their concern for their traditional interests, and that of the latter by a kind of extreme respect for certain long-entrenched postulates of classical international law'. ¹⁸⁰

It is submitted in conclusion that the right to self-determination has been accepted by the United Nations by virtue of the process of Charter interpretation as a basic principle in the law of the United Nations, and that from this proposition certain legal effects flow with regard to, for example, the definition of the determining unit, the capacity of the people of the territory in question to decide its political, economic and social status, the role of force in the process, and the locus standi of the colonial power. ¹⁸¹ Some of these notions will be examined in later chapters. ¹⁸²

III. CUSTOMARY INTERNATIONAL LAW

The practice supporting the right of self-determination as emanating from Charter interpretation may also be of relevance in establishing the existence of a right to self-determination as a rule of customary law. Custom differs from treaty interpretation in a number of vital ways. It is founded on State practice, whereas treaty interpretation relates to practice construed with reference to a treaty provision, and it is dependent upon the opinio juris, the belief or expression of an accepted legal obligation. This, as we have seen, is not necessarily the case with respect to the interpretation of treaty-charters, for practice not amounting to custom may have the effect of interpreting a particular stipulation.

The International Court of Justice is directed by Article 38(1) of its statute to apply 'international custom as evidence of a general practice accepted as law' and Brierly emphasized this in terms of a 'usage felt by those who follow it to be an obligatory one'. ¹⁸³ Oppenheim notes that 'whenever and as soon as a line of international conduct frequently adopted by States is considered legally obligatory or legally right, the rule which may be abstracted from such conduct is a rule of customary international law'. ¹⁸⁴

Precisely how one is to interpret and balance the two factors of State practice and opinio juris is subject to conflicting analyses, ¹⁸⁵ but it is commonly recognized that both elements are required. Usage is needed as the source material delineating the content and scope of the proposed rule, while the opinio juris is essential in differentiating norms of customary international law from State behaviour embarked upon for existed, it avoided the necessity.⁴⁵ On the other hand, the tenor of the court's opinion appeared to favour the supremacy of self-determination and therefore the rejection of the Moroccan thesis concerning territorial integrity.⁴⁶

The principle of self-determination itself was defined by the court as 'the need to pay regard to the freely expressed will of peoples'⁴⁷ and this was clearly accepted as the crucial point, although consultation could be dispensed with in limited instances. ⁴⁸ Judge Nagendra Singh regarded consultation on the decolonization process as 'an inescapable imperative', ⁴⁹ while Judge Dillard referred to the 'cardinal restraint which the legal right of self-determination imposes . . . it is for the people to determine the destiny of the territory and not the territory the destiny of the people'. ⁵⁰

II. THE NATURE OF THE 'SELF' AND TERRITORY

The relevant instruments of the United Nations have consistently referred to the application of self-determination to 'all peoples'. Accordingly, some discussion of a 'people' is merited. Sociological dicussions of the nature of a people centre around certain common characteristics, which are reinforced by an awareness of a distinct consciousness. Deutsch writes that by 'peoples' one means groups of individuals bound together by certain complementary habits and characteristics, including language, customs, and history.⁵¹ Scelle noted that the term indicated that legal rights 'may be exercised collectively by any group of nationals of a State without further prerequisites as regards such group than that of the common wish of the individuals of which it is composed, ⁵² while Cobban held that 'any territorial community, the members of which are conscious of themselves as members of a community and wish to maintain the identity of their community, is a nation'.53 Although this may be acceptable as a guide-line in sociopolitical theory, it does not necessarily follow that the same concepts should govern the legal definition of a people, since the additional perspective of an international community founded upon the basis of a finite number of territorially based entities called States is involved. This extra factor argues for certainty and stability in the process of State formation as in the protection of the integrity of existing States.

Part of the problem lies in the confusion for terminology apparent in Article 1(2) of the UN Charter. This called for 'friendly relations among nations based on...self-determination of peoples', and the question arose as to whether these terms were interchangeable. Certain delegates to the Commission on Human Rights replied in the affirmative, ⁵⁴ but others emphasized that 'peoples' was wider than 'nations' since it could comprise all or part of the population of a State or indeed the inhabitants of several States. ⁵⁵ However, by referring to 'nations' in Article 1(2), the Charter is in essence concerned with States, since this would provide the only likely explanation of Article 1(4), whereby the United Nations was to be 'a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of ... common ends'.

A trend emerged in later discussions in favour of restricting the notion of 'peoples' to the inhabitants of a particular State or colony, that is, to clearly defined political units.⁵⁶ Johnson regarded the use of the term as signifying the desire to ensure that a narrow application of 'nations' would not prevent the extension of the principle of self-determination to peoples who might not yet qualify as nations.⁵⁷ However, such discussions failed to reach a clear conclusion and one must turn to State practice to determine the juridical definition of a people.

In Europe, the principle of self-determination centred around recognized nations such as the Magyars, Germans, Poles, and Italians, the aim being to create a sophisticated political structure upon the basis of the nation and thus to ensure the emergence of the national-State and the demise of the multinational empires. As Cobban noted, 'the history of self-determination is a history of the making of nations and the breaking of States'.58 In actual fact, very few of the colonial borders in Africa coincided with ethnic lines. Each territory tended to contain a multitude of different tribal groupings and each border to split tribes amongst different administrative authorities. For example, the frontiers of Ghana cut through the areas of seventeen major tribes. ⁵⁹ The Bakongo Kingdom was partitioned between the Belgian Congo, the French Congo, and Portuguese Angola, while the Ewes were to be found in the British Gold Coast, British Togoland, and French Togoland. On the other hand, Kenya included over 200 tribes and Nigeria comprised hundreds of separate groups. 60 All this has meant that in Africa, with few exceptions, one could not establish a newly independent State emerging from within colonially drawn frontiers upon the basis of a unified ethnic self.

Mazrui has attempted to get around this problem by stressing the notion of 'pigmentational self-determination' as the basis for sovereignty in Africa. He has written that 'the right to sovereignty was not merely for nation-States recognizable as such in a Western sense, but for "peoples" recognizable as such in a racial sense, particularly where differences of colour were manifest'. ⁶¹ This approach leads to the notion of 'racial sovereignty' rather than national sovereignty in discussions of self-determination problems in the States of Africa and Asia. However, it confuses more than it elucidates, for it appears to ignore questions of domination by one people over another of the same race and the dilemma of secession. It has also been contradicted in State practice, in cases of the alleged denial of self-determination to a minority racial group within an independent State, as for example in Southern Sudan. ⁶² Mazrui's thesis can also lead to severe definitional problems with respect to 'pigment' and 'race'. In any event, it is far too simplistic as a legal tool for analysing the nature of self-determination in Africa.

Umozurike defines the concept of 'people' for the purposes of selfdetermination in very wide terms indeed. He notes that 'the legitimate "self" . . . is a collection of individuals having a legitimate interest which is primarily political, but may also be economic, cultural or of any other kind'63 and continues by stating that 'individuals, as peoples, are entitled to exercise rights and enjoy a commensurate share in determining their political, cultural and economic future'. ⁶⁴ To reconcile this broad approach with reality, he is impelled on the one hand to extend the concept of self-determination to include self-government, local autonomy, merger, association and other forms of participation in government⁶⁵ and on the other to declare that the mere assertion of a right to self-determination does not ipso facto make the claim a question of selfdetermination in international law. 66 It is a matter of degree depending upon all the circumstances of the case, particularly the seriousness of the 'abuse of sovereign power, to the detriment of a section of the population'.67 In other words, whether the claim is one of international law appears to be dependent upon a prior contravention of the principle by the government complained of, i.e. the legal right of self-determination arises upon the abuse of the political principle of self-determination. It is clear that this approach confuses the political and legal principles and appears also to misunderstand the nature of self-determination as developed through international practice. Part of the problem may have occurred because of the linking of self-determination of peoples with individual human rights in the world community, something which tended to downgrade the importance of human rights by the focus upon self-determination as a fundamental human right.

In determining the nature of the 'self' in self-determination, it must be realized that the relevant definition of 'peoples' is not the sociological one but the legal one. There is a difference, and upon that difference the legal concept of self-determination is predicated. The International Court has pointed to this by noting that the fact that the General Assembly has not consulted the inhabitants of a particular territory in relation to selfdetermination may be due to the consideration that 'a certain population did not constitute a "people" entitled to self-determination'.68 International instruments have consistently maintained that any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the UN Charter⁶⁹ and this would appear to rule out the right of secession from an independent State. In addition, practice reveals that not every 'people' is deemed to have the right in law of self-determination. The legal concept of selfdetermination is founded upon a particular definition of the 'self' that has emerged in doctrine and in practice this definition is centred upon the non-self-governing territories (and the mandated and trust territories as well). Whether or not the political concept has been infringed may be relevant in a broad political sense, but it has no bearing upon the legal issue. The concept of self-determination has been the legal instrument in the process of ending colonialism.⁷⁰

An early attempt to extend the doctrine of self-determination in international law to all countries occurred in the so-called 'Belgian thesis'. This was a move spearheaded by the Belgians to widen the obligations under Chapter XI of the Charter to include 'colonial situations' within independent States. As was noted, many States oppress groups within their own frontiers by a variety of discriminatory measures, and there seemed to be no reason, it was argued, why such groups could not count as 'peoples [who] have not yet attained a full measure of self-government'. However, this proposition was strongly rejected by the non-colonial powers, who argued that the term 'non-self-governing territories' clearly referred to entities distinct from the metropolitan State. The solution of the solution of the self-governing territories' clearly referred to entities distinct from the metropolitan State.

The terms in which UN resolutions have been expressed have also manifested the rejection of the Belgian thesis. Resoluton 1514 (xv), the Colonial Declaration, emphasized the necessity to end colonialism and called for immediate steps to be taken in non-independent territories to transfer power to the people, while resolution 1541 (xv) noted that 'the authors of the Charter...had in mind that Chapter XI should be applicable to territories which were then known to be of colonial type'⁷³ and declared that 'prima facie' there is an obligation to transmit information in respect of a territory which is geographically separate and is distinct ethnically and/or culturally from the country administering it'. Once this has been established, then under Principle V other elements may be brought into consideration. These elements 'may be inter alia of an administrative, political, judicial, economic or historical nature. If they affect the relationship between the metropolitan State and the territory concerned in a manner which arbitrarily places the latter in a position or status of subordination, they support the presumption that there is an obligation to transmit information under article 73(e) of the Charter.' To make the point even clearer, the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law (resolution 2625 (xxv)) stipulated that 'the territory of a colony or other non-self-governing territory has, under the Charter, a status separate and distinct from the territory of the State administering it; and such separate and distinct status under the Charter shall exist until the people of the colony or non-self-governing territory have exercised their right of self-determination in accordance with the Charter.'

The provisions of Article 1 of the International Covenants on Human Rights are, however, more problematic. It is noted that 'all peoples have the right of self-determination'. There exist here a number of possibilities. It may be argued indeed that every group that regards itself as a 'people' may be entitled under international law to 'freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development'. But in the sense of permitting such groups to secede from independent States, such an interpretation is not acceptable under international law. If it is understood to mean that such groups are entitled to play a part within the internal structures of States to resolve their own domestic status, this may be acceptable even if in practice grave doubts must exist as to the efficiency of such a principle, particularly where a number of groups exist within any one State. It could be argued that the phraseology of Article 1 is intended to relate only to non-self-governing territories in the sense that 'peoples' could only be interpreted in such a context. The Indonesian representative, for example, noted that it was perfectly clear that in a discussion of the right of self-determination 'the peoples concerned were the inhabitants of colonies administered by foreign peoples, absolutely different in race, culture and geographical habitat. Academic discussions of the definition of such peoples were therefore superfluous, since everyone, especially the administering Powers, knew perfectly well which peoples were aspiring towards self-government.'⁷⁵

Within the context of his study on the historical and current development of self-determination for the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the UN Commission on Human Rights, Cristescu notes that it would be premature and even presumptuous to provide a definition that would be comprehensive. However, one could point to certain elements of a definition that have been emerging in UN discussions.

These elements are:

- (1) that the term 'people' denotes a social entity possessing a clear identity and its own characteritics;
- (2) the term implies a relationship with a territory, even if the people in question have been wrongfully expelled from it and artifically replaced, for example by another population;
- (3) a people should not be confused with ethnic, religious, or linguistic minorities, whose existence and rights are recognized in Article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.⁷⁶

These elements, however, raise many questions. In particular, the lack of guide-lines by which to measure a 'social entity', a 'clear identity', and 'its own characteristics'; the lack of any kind of restriction of time or circumstances with regard to the wrongful expulsion of a people from a territory and artificial replacement, a factor which, if taken seriously, could have momentous consequences; and the lack of a proper analysis of the concept of minorities. With respect to the latter point, it may be pointed out that in some cases whether or not a 'people' is a 'minority' depends upon where one draws the territorial line and this is at the heart of many self-determination claims, for example the Somali situation. The problems associated with this may be illustrated by noting the definition given by Capotorti in his 1979 Study on the Rights of Persons Belonging to Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities for the UN Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. The analysed the issue in terms of groups numerically inferior to the rest of the population of a State, in a non-dominant position, whose members—being nationals of the State—possess ethnic, religious or linguistic characteristics differing from those of the rest of the population and show if only implicitly a sense of solidarity, directed towards preserving their culture, traditions, religion or language.

While the minority issue has been clearly differentiated from the self-determination issue in UN practice, the difficulty remains of drawing the line firmly between the two and in many cases it is not really possible. Certainly, many claims to self-determination are met with the response that the group in question constitutes only a minority and thus is entitled only to this lower-level right.

UN practice on a number of occasions has discussed the right to self-determination in the context of 'colonial domination', 'alien occupation', and 'racist regimes', ⁷⁸ and it could be argued that the right itself is to be so qualified, but this again raises many definitional problems, particularly relating to the concepts of 'alien occupation' and 'racist regimes'. The confusion inherent here is taken a step further by Gros-Espiel's view in his Report that if 'beneath the guise of ostensible national unity, colonial and alien domination does in fact exist, whatever legal formulation may be used in an attempt to conceal it, the right of the subject people concerned cannot be disregarded without international law being violated'. ⁷⁹

This appears to require a probing behind the veil of State independence and sovereignty that would not appear to be acceptable in the current situation of international law.

The current situation would appear to be that, as a legal right, self-determination as leading to modifications in the international status of a territory applies only to an accepted non-self-governing territorial situation. All groups may be entitled to self-determination in the sense of fully participating within the internal constitutional structure of a particular State, but they will not thereby acquire a right under international law to self-determination in the former sense. On The possibility exists of developments in the interpretation of self-determination, both in the twilight areas of territories occupied by foreign powers where a basic sovereignty dispute exists and of States where a minority oppresses a majority of a different 'people', and generally with regard to all States, but certainly in the latter case one must pay heed to international practice and accept that that is clearly not the situation at the moment. The people-territory dialectic may open the way in the future for modifications of the basic principle, but that is yet to come. States

The problem of defining a 'people', which so engrossed UN delegates in the 1950's in particular, has currently resolved itself for legal purposes, therefore, in a territorial sense. A people in a sociological sense would only be accepted as a people in legal terms for the purposes of self-determination if it inhabited a particular type of territory. The distinction between trust and non-self-governing territories was fundamental in the UN Charter, with differing provisions for each and emphasis upon the former, but it has been of decreasing importance in practice. The call for self-determination has been made regarding both types of territory and the right has been accepted as being equally applicable to both. State practice reveals that the clarification of the 'self' has been made in clear territorial terms and within a particular temporal framework, i.e. in terms of pre-independent territories. The former proposition will be examined in the light of practice relating to Africa in the following section, and the latter in Chapter 5.

III. THE SPATIAL FACTOR—STATE PRACTICE

The determination of the self in terms of a defined territorial framework raises the question also as to inviolability of the territorial unit as colonially determined prior to independence, since the date at which the territorial 'self' crystallized is of crucial importance, and thus the relationship between self-determination and territorial integrity in the pre-independence situation.

(a) Namibia (South-West Africa)

South-West Africa was awarded to the Union of South Africa as a mandated territory after the First World War under the League of Nations system. 82 In 1946 the League adopted a resolution recommending the termination of its functions as regards mandated territories and noting that Chapters XI, XII, and XIII of the United Nations Charter corresponded to Article 22 of the Covenant of the League, which had dealt with the creation of the mandate system.⁸³ Following this recommendation and the dissolution of the League, the United Nations requested in resolution 61 (1) that South-West Africa be placed under the trusteeship system and rejected in resolution 65 (I) South African proposals to incorporate the territory into the Union of South Africa. The issue was eventually referred to the International Court which held that South Africa alone was not competent to modify the international status of the territory. That competence rested with South Africa acting with the consent of the United Nations.⁸⁴ Liberia and Ethiopia as the two black African member-States of the League sought a declaration from the court that South Africa had broken the terms of the mandate and was thus in breach of international law.85 The Court decided in 1962 that it had jurisdiction to decide the case on its merits, but in 1966 it held that individual League members had no locus standi to sue the mandatory power in respect of its treatment of the inhabitants of the mandated territory and dismissed the case. 86 The problem then reverted to the political organs of the United Nations.

One of the primary objectives of the United Nations in this situation has been to preserve the territorial integrity of South-West Africa and prevent South Africa annexing or partitioning it. Assembly resolution 65 (I) firmly rejected any attempt at annexation and this was reinforced by the stand of the International Court in 1950, when the principle of non-annexation was declared to be of paramount importance. However, over the years, South Africa has sought to divide the territory on racial and tribal grounds on a number of occasions. In 1958 the Good Offices Committee, established by the Assembly the previous year in resolution 1143 (XII), issued its Report in which it suggested that some form of partition of the territory involving annexation of part by South Africa and the establishment of a trusteeship over the remainder might provide the basis for an agreement with South Africa.⁸⁷

106

This was quickly rejected by the General Assembly, which called for full discussion for an agreement 'which would continue to accord to the mandated territory of South-West Africa as a whole an international status'.88 In 1961 the Assembly proclaimed 'the inalienable right of the people of South-West Africa to independence and national sovereignty and established a UN Special Committee for South-West Africa. However, the government of South Africa proceeded with preparations to divide the territory. The report of the Odendaal Commission was tabled early in 1964 and advocated a series of ten separate homelands for the Africans, three coloured townships, and a white area. However, the bulk of the industrial and mineral wealth would be situated within the European areas.⁹⁰ In discussions before the UN Special Committee against Apartheid, it was reported that the objective of the plan 'was seen to be to divide the territory on tribal lines, create Bantustans with small populations and integrate the territory more closely with the Republic (of South Africa)'. 91 The South Africa government in a White Paper of April 1964 accepted the report and endorsed the view that 'it should be the aim as far as practicable to develop for each population group its own homeland in which it can attain self-determination and self-realisation'. 92

This view was not accepted by the United Nations, which strove to emphasize the territorial integrity of South-West Africa. The Odendaal Report was criticized by the Special Committee on Decolonization as a device to prolong the control of the South African authorities⁹³ and condemned by the General Assembly in 1965. ⁹⁴ In 1966, following the decision of the International Court, the Assembly adopted a resolution reaffirming the inalienable right of the people of South-West Africa to self-determination, freedom, and independence and proclaiming that the territory had an international status which it would retain until independence. ⁹⁵ The resolution reaffirmed the applicability of resolution 1514 (xv) and terminated the mandate. The intention was that thenceforth South-West Africa would come under the direct responsiblity of the United Nations, and to this end an ad hoc Committee for South-West Africa was established.

In resolution 2248 (XXII) the Assembly re-emphasized the 'territorial integrity of South-West Africa' and the right of its people to freedom and independence in accordance with the UN Charter, resolution 1514 (XV), and all other resolutions concerning the territory. A UN Council for South-West Africa of eleven members was established to exercise various powers and functions. 96 The Assembly declared in resolution 2325 (XXII) that South Africa's continued presence in the territory was a 'flagrant violation of its territorial integrity and international status as determined by General Assembly resolution 2145 (XXI)'. However, in 1968 the South African parliament adopted the Development of Self-Government for Native Nations in South-West Africa Act, which was intended to implement the Odendaal Report, 97 and accordingly the Act established certain areas for the different nations and provided for various administrative machinery in each homeland. In pursuance of this policy, legislative and executive councils were created between 1969 and 1972 for the Ovambos, Kavangos, and the inhabitants of the Eastern Caprivi. 98 In April 1968 the Assembly resolved to change the name of the territory to Namibia and condemned the Pretoria government for consolidating its illegal control and destroying the unity of the people and the territorial integrity of the country. Following the Development of Self-Government Act, the Assembly adopted resolution 2403 (XXIII) attacking South Africa for destroying the territorial integrity of Namibia. At this point, the Security Council by resolution 264 (1969) recognized the termination of the mandate by the General Assembly and declared that the actions of the South African government 'designed to destroy the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia through the establishment of Bantustans are contrary to the provisions of the United Nations Charter'. By resolution 269 (1969), the Council declared that the continued occupation of Namibia by South African authorities constituted an 'aggressive encroachment on the authority of the United Nations, a violation of the territorial integrity and a denial of the political sovereignty of the people of Namibia'. It also called upon South Africa to withdraw its administration from the territory immediately. 99 By resolution 284 (1970), the Council requested an advisory opinion from the International Court on the legal consequences for States of the continued presence of South Africa in Namibia. In its opinion, the court emphasized that the principle of self-determination was applicable to all non-self-governing territorities ¹⁰⁰ by virtue of the 'subsequent development of international law', in particular resolution 1514 (xv), and the subsequent independence of all but two of the trust territories. The opinion of the court was that the continued presence of South Africa in the territory was illegal and should be terminated. UN members were obliged to recognize this illegality and refrain from actions and declarations implying recognition or lending support to such presence and administration. ¹⁰¹ The opinion was approved by the Security Council in resolution 301 (1971), which also reaffirmed the national unit and territorial integrity of Namibia and condemned all measures by the government of South Africa to destroy that unity and integrity, including the establishment of Bantustans.

South Africa, however, continued to maintain its policy of separate development with the proposed partition of the territory into separate black and white States. ¹⁰² In 1973 the South African Foreign Minister appeared to suggest that Namibia might beome independent in about ten years, ¹⁰³ while the United Nations continued to adopt resolutions proclaiming the right of the people of the territory to self-determination and independence and reaffirming the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia, as well as criticizing the Bantustan proposals. ¹⁰⁴

In 1975 a Constitutional Conference opened in Windhoek in Namibia with delegates from eleven ethnic groups, but without the participation of SWAPO, the UN-recognized national liberation movement. 105 The aim was to establish a multiracial government to run the territory until independence, which was intended to be the end of 1978, according to a committee of the conference. 106 The conference ended in the spring of 1977, with proposals for a draft constitution with a three-tier system based on ethnicity, not on separate Bantustans. The principle of the territorial integrity of Namibia was thus accepted by the South Africansupported conference. 107 However, the ethnically based proposals were rejected by the UN Council for Namibia, which reiterated its support for the struggle of the people under SWAPO's leadership to achieve selfdetermination and independence and called upon the Security Council to take action. 108 In resolution 31/146, the General Assembly criticized the convening of the conference as an attempt by South Africa to 'perpetuate its colonial exploitation of the people' and impose upon the people a bogus constitutional structure aimed at subverting the territorial integrity and unity of Namibia'. This resolution also expressed support for the armed struggle of the people, led by SWAPO, to achieve self-determination, freedom, and independence in a united Namibia. The International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Zimbabwe and Namibia held in Maputo, Mozambique, in May 1977 rejected all attempts by South Africa to dismember the territory of Namibia. ¹⁰⁹ The plan for an interim administration on multi-ethnic lines as envisaged by the Windhoek conference was, however, abandoned by South Africa, and Judge Steyn was appointed instead as Administrator-General for Namibia during the transition period. ¹¹⁰ Assembly resolution 32/9D reaffirmed the terms of resolution 31/146, in particular as regards the need for maintaining the territorial integrity of Namibia. ¹¹¹

In the spring of 1978 South Africa announced its acceptance of Western proposals¹¹² for a settlement in Namibia involving a UN peace-keeping force. However, concern for the territorial integrity of Namibia was evident in the Ninth Special Session of the General Assembly, ¹¹³ and in resolution S-9/2, containing the Declaration on Namibia and a Programme of Action, South Africa was urged to respect the integrity of the territory. Namibia was declared to be the direct responsibility of the United Nations until genuine self-determination and independence, and the mandate given to the Council for Namibia as the legal Administering Authority until independence was reaffirmed.

Since 1978 negotiations have continued between the five-nation Western contact group, South Africa, and SWAPO. A variety of proposals have been discussed, with some problems eliminated and other problems, for example the Cuban presence in Angola, appearing. 114 In April 1981 the security Council failed to adopt four draft resolutions which would have imposed comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against South Africa because of its actions regarding Namibia, on account of negative votes cast by the USA, United Kingdom and France. 115 The UN Council for Namibia, however, in June 1981 issued the Panama Declaration, condemning South Africa for its attempts to impose an 'internal settlement', reaffirming free support for SWAPO as the sole and authentic representative of the Namibian people, and stating that Namibia's accession to independence must be with its territorial integrity intact, including Walvis Bay and the offshore islands. 116.

It has been accepted by all parties that the territorial integrity of Namibia prior to independence is to be maintained and that the appropriate 'self' for the exercise of self-determination is to be defined in terms of a united territory of Namibia. It could be argued that Namibia as a mandated territory was a special case in this respect, but practice seems to show that the same principle operates with respect to other non-governing territories.

(b) Pre-Independent Kenya and Somali Claims for Self-Determination 117

Any examination of the Kenya colony and protectorate in relation to its minority Somali population must centre on the strong desire to maintain the territorial integrity of the colony that was clearly manifested both by the British administration and by the colony's emerging African rulers. ¹¹⁸

The Northern Frontier District (NFD) of Kenya consisted in 1962 of some 102,000 sq. miles in six administrative areas and a population of 388,000, including approximately 240,000 Somalis. These people had gradually migrated southwards over the years and displaced the majority of the Galla tribes, themselves representatives of an earlier Hamitic invasion. In the years preceding 1939 there were many disputes between those of Somali origin and the non-Muslim Gallas which necessitated much stricter military control than was exercised in southern Kenya. After the Second World War there were increasing signs of Somali nationalism, and with the creation of the Somali Republic in July 1960, the Somalis of the NFD began demanding the right to secede from the Kenyan colony and join their brethren. 119 The British Prime Minister, however, declared in April 1960 that 'Her Majesty's Government does not and will not encourage or support any claim affecting the territorial integrity of French Somaliland, Kenya or Ethiopia. This is a matter which could only be considered if that were the will of the Governments and peoples concerned.'120 This clearly appeared to define such 'governments and peoples' in terms of the whole of the territories involved and not parts of them.

Nevertheless, a delegation from the NFD consisting of pro-secessionist members was invited to the Kenyan Constitutional Conference in London in 1962. They requested autonomous status for the area so that upon Kenya's independence it could join the Somali Republic. ¹²¹ A UN plebiscite in the area was suggested, but the idea was rejected. However, a commission was appointed to discover the views of the area's population to various constitutional proposals. This commission reported that the majority of the population supported the secessionist approach. ¹²² But at the same time, the Regional Boundaries Commission visited the area and a new system of regions was proposed for Kenya, which would split the NFD into three regions: the north-eastern region and parts of the eastern and coast regions. The commission declared that they would have recognized the SADR and that this constituted admittance by virtue of simple majority. Nineteen States walked out of the conference and the stability of the OAU was gravely threatened.²⁸³

(m) The British Indian Ocean Territory

The issue of the territorial integrity of the colonial unit in the period prior to independence was also raised with regard to the creation of the British Indian Ocean Territory in 1965. The arrangements were introduced by Order in Council made on 8 November 1965. The territory was to consist of the Chagos archipelago, formerly administered by the government of Mauritius, and the islands of Aldabra, Farquhar, and Desroches, formerly governed by the Seychelles authorities. The aim of the creation of the new colony was the establishment of defence facilities by the UK and USA governments and an Exchange of Notes between the two governments on this subject occurred in December 1966.²⁸⁴

Compensation was to be paid to the Mauritius and Seychelles governments, and the figure mentioned with respect to the former was in the region of £3 million. The issue of the level of compensation and the problem of the deportation to Mauritius of the one thousand or so inhabitants of the Chagos archipelago caused considerable controversy, as did the construction of a large American base on the island of Diego Garcia in the archipelago, ²⁸⁵ but the problem to be considered here revolves around the territorial integrity of colonial units prior to independence. ²⁸⁶

In 1965 the UN General Assembly considered the Mauritius situation and several States emphasized that the proposed arrangement with regard to the Chagos archipelago would be contrary to the 1960 Colonial Declaration and the principle of self-determination. The suggested creation of military bases in particularly aroused opposition. The UK representative denied that any question of splitting up national territorial units was involved since the islands concerned had been uninhabited when acquired and had been attached to the Mauritius and Seychelles administrations as a matter of administrative convenience. However, this argument misses the point about the evolution of territorial units as colonially determined and the consequent right of the inhabitants of that entity as it has developed over time to concretize its existing political status and proceed to self-determination and independence. To disrupt the territorial integrity of colonial units at the pre-independence stage on the basis of the haphazard nature of their original constitution would be to undermine the viability and meaning of the principles of territorial integrity and self-determination as they have developed. The General Assembly ultimately adopted resolution 2066 (xx), without opposition, in which it noted that 'any step taken by the administering power to detach certain islands from the territory of Mauritius for the purpose of establishing a military base' would contravene the Colonial Declaration and in particular paragraph 6 thereof. This provision stipulates that any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unit and territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the UN Charter.

The resolution also invited the United Kingdom not to dismember the territory of Mauritius and violate its territoral integrity. A number of succeeding General Assembly resolutions reiterated the proposition that any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unit and territorial integrity of colonial territories and the establishment of military bases in such territories was incompatible with the UN Charter and the Colonial Declaration of 1960.²⁸⁹

The issue resurfaced in 1980 in response, it would seem, to the growth of the American military presence on the Chagos islands. On 26 June 1980, forty-eight of the seventy-member parliament of Mauritius called for the return of Diego Garcia and this prompted the Mauritius government to take up the issue. ²⁹⁰ At the OAU summit of July 1980 a resolution on the issue, unanimously adopted, declared that Diego Garcia 'had always been an integral part of Mauritius, a member State of the OAU' and that the island be unconditionally returned to Mauritius and its peaceful character be maintainted. ²⁹¹ The British attitude has been that the Chagos islands were under British sovereignty and that once they were not required for defence purposes they should revert to Mauritius. ²⁹²

On 7 July 1982 an agreement relating to compensation for families moved to Mauritius from the Chagos archipelago was signed by the United Kingdom and Mauritius, in which both sides maintained their respective positions on the sovereignty issue.²⁹³

The issue raised within the context of decolonization and self-determination is whether the colonial power may alter the territorial composition of the unit concerned prior to independence. It is clear that historically States have been regarded as having sovereignty over their colonial territories and that this would include the competence to modify the extent of the territory of a given unit. Many colonial rearrangements attest to this. However, the development of the right of self-determination clearly introduced constraints upon the authority and capacity of the colonial power. To permit the administering authority to alter the territorial composition of the colonial entity upon independence would be to undermine the concept of self-determination and would allow the colonial power to affect the choice to be made by a process of territorial severance, irrespective of the potential economic consequences of such a policy.

The Chagos case raises the temporal factor, since the episode took place some three years prior to independence. However, it is clear that the event was part of the process leading to Mauritian independence. Madeley claims that Mauritian independence was made conditional upon agreement to the Chagos archipelago removal from the territorial framework concerned.²⁹⁴ It could, therefore, be argued that, in the light of the evolution and status of the principle of self-determination by the mid 1960s, the United Kingdom was under an obligation to maintain the existing territorial framework of the colonial unit until independence and that any defence arrangements with regard to Diego Garcia should have been made after Mauritian independence. The one mitigating factor in this case to be noted relates to the apparent acceptance of the arrangement by the Mauritian government from independence and until 1980. A map of Mauritius was prepared during 1980, with the help of an expert from the British Ministry of Defence, which excluded the Chagos archipelago, and an opposition amendment to include the islands was rejected in the Legislative Assembly. Indeed, the Minister for Foreign Affairs was reported as arguing that 'Diego is legally British. There is no getting away from it. This is a fact that cannot be denied. '295 Following talks with the British Prime Minister on 17 July 1980, the Mauritian Prime Minister in a press conference acknowledged British sovereignty over Diego Garcia (and thus presumably over the whole of the Chagos archipelago) at present.296

These factors, coupled with the apparent lack of protest prior to 1980, weaken to some extent the Mauritian case, since they would suggest that they had adopted the 1965 arrangement and might therefore be stopped from subsequently denying the legality of the transaction. Although this would appear to lay a heavy burden upon a poor, newly independent State, it is an important factor to be considered.²⁹⁷

(n) The Malagasy Islands

Issues similar in essence to those involved in the Chagos archipelago dispute and in the same geographical region have been raised with regard to the Malagasy Islands of Glorieuses, Juan de Nova, Europa, and Bassas da India. These islands are situated in the Indian Ocean between Madagascar and Mozambique. $^{298}\,$

The Glorieuses islands were acquired by France in 1892 and were administered at first in conjunction with the colony of Mayotte and then together with the Comoros archipelago (including Mayotte) as part of Madagascar. Ultimately the Comoros archipelago was removed from Madagascar in 1946, leaving the Glorieuses islands as a dependence of the latter. ²⁹⁹ The other islands constituting the Malagasy islands complex were acquired in 1897 and were regarded as dependencies of the colony of Madagascar from that time. ³⁰⁰

On 14 October 1958 the overseas territory of Madagascar became an autonomous State within the French community and on 26 June 1960 it became a fully independent State. However, on 1 April 1960, during the course of independence negotiations, France issued a decree in which it placed the Malagasy Islands (and the island of Tromelin)³⁰¹ under the authority of the Minister dealing with overseas départements and territories and thereby revoked all earlier and contrary dispositions.³⁰² In other words, the territorial integrity of the colonial unit was altered and at a very late stage indeed. Since 1960, the islands have not comprised part of an overseas territory or département of France, although they have been administered by the Prefect of the Département of Reunion.³⁰³

France has argued in addition that Madagascar has, since 1960, acquiesced in French sovereignty over the islands, and particularly noted the transmission to it by Madagascar in 1962 of various administrative documents or 'dossiers domaniaux' relating to the islands, Bardonnet's opinion is that the transmission amounted to an implicit recognition of French sovereignty³⁰⁴ and certainly such a presumption would appear to be raised, particularly since Madagascar did not raise the issue until after a change in government in 1972.

From the mid 1970s, Madagascar began to assert its claim and a telegram in such terms was sent to the UN Secretary-General on 10 February 1976. Recourse was had to both the OAU and the United Nations. In July 1979 the OAU Assembly discussed the issue and called for the return of the islands to Madagascar. To December 1979 the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted resolution 34/91 inviting France to initiate negotiations with Madagascar without delay for the reintegration of the islands in question arbitrarily separated from Madagascar. The Assembly also called upon the French government to repeal the measures which infringed upon the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Madagascar. This resolution was adopted by 93 votes to 7, with 36 abstentions. The following year, resolution 35/123 was adopted, by 81 votes to 13, with 37 abstentions, calling upon France as a matter of urgency to initiate the negotiations envisaged in resolution 34/91. France refused to recognize the competence of the General Assembly in the matter, stating that the Assembly did not have the power to distribute territories or remodel existing boundaries. The islands had never had an indigenous population and had been acquired during the last century at a time when they were res nullius. For Madagascar, the issue was one of incomplete decolonization as well as one of sovereignty, national unity, and territorial integrity. ³⁰⁶

Self-Determination, Decolonization, and Territory

Thus, a similar question to the Chagos archipelago matter is posed, although the time factor was more drastic in this case. Islands of relatively tiny populations were detached from the colonial units within which they had been administered in the period leading up to independence and after a short period of silence the independent state concerned asserted a claim based essentially on self-determination. As a rule, the need to maintain the colonial unit during the period leading up to independence is clearly a crucial element in the viability of the concept of self-determination, and the arguments based on separate acquisition in the colonial era cannot be permitted to override the territorial integrity of the entity as established in the practice of the colonial State. Further factors may be introduced to modify this and they will be considered briefly in the 'Conclusions' section of this Chapter.

IV. COLONIAL ENCLAVES

One important exception to the proposition that the inhabitants of a non-self-governing or trust territory should have the right to determine their own political structure and future within the colonially defined borders is afforded by that category of small territories known as colonial enclaves. The normal definition of an enclave refers to an area totally surrounded by the territory of other States or the territory of one other State. The week, in the case of colonial enclaves, the framework for discussion relates to a relatively small area totally surrounded on the landward side by the territory of one other State, thus allowing for a stretch of coast. This type of enclave is a territory detached by a colonial power from the surrounding territory and placed under the administration of a separate party from that governing the dismembered State. In such cases, the United Nations has adopted the doctrine that the country

Annex 136

Richard Edis, Peak of Limuria: The Story of Diego Garcia (1993)

PEAK OF LIMURIA

The Story of Diego Garcia

Foreword by HRH the Duke of York

Richard Edis

BELLEW PUBLISHING London First published in Great Britain in 1993 by Bellew Publishing Company Ltd 8 Balham Hill London SW12 9EA

Reprinted 1994, 1998

Copyright © Richard Edis 1993

Richard Edis is hereby identified as author of this work in accordance with section 77 of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise without the prior permission of the publisher.

ISBN 1 85725 070 2

Front and rear endpapers: Foreign and Commonwealth Office Library

Designed by Mick Keates Phototypeset by Intype, London Printed and bound in Great Britain by MPG Books Ltd, Bodmin, Cornwall

Acknowledgements

The author would like to acknowledge the generous help he has received in preparing this book from the following: Fred Barnett, Chris Bayly, David Bellamy, Barbara Bond, Charles Borman, Mervyn Brown, Don Cairns, John Canter, Andrew Cook, Richard Cox, William Foot, Alan Francis, David George, Fred Hatton, Tom Harris, Martine Jardine, Kees Dirkzwager, Dan Layman, Shirley Miller, Simon Malpas, Marcel Moulinie, David Stoddart, Bob Strike, Claude Talbot, Nigel Taylor, John Topp, Stephen Turner, Francisco Viqueira, Roger Wells, Elizabeth Wood and HRH the Duke of York.

Contents

Foreword by HRH the Duke of York	vii
Preface	ix
I A Laurel on the Sea	1
II Takamakas, Turtles, Corals, Coconut Crabs,
II Takamakas, Turues, Corais, Coconac Grass,	7
Shearwaters and Sharks	15
III From out the Azure Main	21
IV Discovery
V Settlement	28
VI Abolition of Slavery	35
VII The Oil Island	39
VIII The Coaling Station Interlude	47
IX The Emden Incident	52
X Partir C'est Mourir un Peu: Life Between the Wars	56
XI Outpost of Empire: Diego Garcia and the Second World War	61
XII The End of an Era	69
XIII The Establishment of BIOT and the Coming of the 74
Americans	80
XIV Footprint of Freedom	86
XV 'One of the Wonderful Phenomena of our Globe'
Notes	88
Bibliography	94
Index	97

BUCKINGHAM PALACE

I was delighted to be given the opportunity to read this excellent book about Diego Garcia by Richard Edis who was Commissioner for the British Indian Ocean Territory from 1988 until 1991. It makes fascinating reading for anyone who has sailed the Indian Ocean and especially for those who have been fortunate enough to visit the island, as I was when I was serving in HMS Edinburgh in 1988.

I can testify to the remoteness of the Chagos Archipelago and to the low profile of its coast line. When bound for Diego Garcia and after a few days at sea it is a testing moment for a young navigation officer of a warship when confirmation of the accuracy of his work is received barely an hour before the established time of arrival. The low lying terrain is never quite able to express itself as an island paradise but there are rich compensations in the abundance of marine and birdlife. And I am glad to say that the expansion of the military facilities, while adding immeasurably to the strategic role and economy of the island, has not been allowed to interfere with the precious balance of nature.

The sea and maritime affairs have always been and always will be the prime factors in shaping the island's destiny. It is now over twenty five years since the birth of the British Indian Ocean Territory and Richard Edis' eloquent account of the history of Diego Garcia is a timely and informed contribution to the island's records.

Andrew

the sea, maritime expansion and naval power which have shaped the island's story, as this book will show.

Originally I had in mind only a short booklet but I soon became absorbed in the surprisingly rich amount of original material available about this small island, especially in the archives of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the India Office Library, and decided to produce a more comprehensive work. Essential for anyone who wants to go deeply into the history of the area as a whole is Sir Robert Scott's beautifully written book Limuria, which was published in 1961 in Britain and reprinted in the USA in 1974. Sadly it is now out of print but should be available in good reference libraries.

Although my book touches only briefly on natural history, the bibliography mentions several works on this subject, an appreciation of which can considerably enhance enjoyment of the island. The most comprehensive of these is The Geography and Ecology of Diego Garcia by Stoddart and Taylor. Although not specifically about Diego Garcia, David Bellamy's Half of Paradise about two scientific expeditions to other islands in the Chagos Archipelago is very readable.

This study is dedicated to all those whose lives have been touched in some way by this wonderful island. The proceeds from the sale of this book will go to the protection and promotion of Diego Garcia's natural and historical heritage.

RICHARD EDIS

June 1993

Preface

The idea for this book came to me when I was out for a run, a practice I have pursued with pleasure along jungle paths on my frequent visits to Diego Garcia. During such visits I found among the people who were working there an appetite for knowledge about the island's past, which I hope that this modest study will help to satisfy. I hope it will also serve as a souvenir of time spent there for the thousands of men and women who have lived on or visited the island. Now that the name Diego Garcia has become known internationally because of the present military facility, there may be wider interest too.

It might be assumed that, apart from the area developed as a naval facility in recent years, the Chagos Archipelago is a paradise largely untouched by human hand. While it is true that the reef and marine life surrounding the islands is uniquely rich and unspoiled, the land itself and the wildlife on it have been altered drastically by human agency over several centuries. From the dawn of the modern age the islands, and Diego Garcia in particular, have been washed by the tide of world events and touched by the ebb and flow of empires. Not surprisingly in view of their location it has been the sea, maritime expansion and naval power which have shaped the island's story, as this book will show.

Originally I had in mind only a short booklet but I soon became absorbed in the surprisingly rich amount of original material available about this small island, especially in the archives of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the India Office Library, and decided to produce a more comprehensive work. Essential for anyone who wants to go deeply into the history of the area as a whole is Sir Robert Scott's beautifully written book Limuria, which was published in 1961 in Britain and reprinted in the USA in 1974. Sadly it is now out of print but should be available in good reference libraries.

Although my book touches only briefly on natural history, the bibliography mentions several works on this subject, an appreciation of which can considerably enhance enjoyment of the island. The most comprehensive of these is The Geography and Ecology of Diego Garcia by Stoddart and Taylor. Although not specifically about Diego Garcia, David Bellamy's Half of Paradise about two scientific expeditions to other islands in the Chagos Archipelago is very readable.

This study is dedicated to all those whose lives have been touched in some way by this wonderful island. The proceeds from the sale of this book will go to the protection and promotion of Diego Garcia's natural and historical heritage.

RICHARD EDIS

June 1993

I

A Laurel on the Sea

iego Garcia is the largest of more than 50 islands that make up the Chagos Archipelago, which constitutes the present extent of the British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT). The Territory is the sole remaining dependency of the Crown in the region and is situated near the geographical centre of the Ocean from which it takes its name.

The Chagos Archipelago is one of the most far-flung areas of the globe outside the polar regions. Diego Garcia lies roughly 7 degrees south of the Equator and 72 degrees east of Greenwich. The Chagos are separated from the nearest land by huge expanses of ocean, 'utterly lost in the great water wastes: star land in sea space', as the writer Alan Thompson poetically described them.¹ The southernmost Maldives lie 400 miles to the north, the Cocos-Keeling islands 1500 miles to the east, the Seychelles 1000 miles to the west and Mauritius 1200 miles to the south-west. Over 2000 miles to the south lie the bleak windswept islands of Amsterdam and St Paul. All these islands are themselves outposts in the immensity of the Indian Ocean.

The remoteness of the Chagos is best appreciated when the approach is made by sea. Yachtsmen, fishermen and the crews of warships and supply vessels still make the trip. Whether by sail or steam this involves a voyage of many days with nothing but ocean and only seabirds, dolphins and flying fish for occasional company. Another vessel is a rare sight indeed. Otherwise, there is only the long swell, the approaching squall and the theatre of sunset and sunrise to break the monotony.

A dozen or so miles from Diego Garcia a low line is scarcely discernible which gradually comes into focus as a fringe of coconut trees and a white line of breakers on the reef. From the north, the only entrance to the lagoon, Diego looks like a string of small islets, each with its crown of high trees. The scene has scarcely changed today from the sketches made by eighteenth-century naval officers to guide future mariners making their landfall. As a vessel approaches the Main Pass, it becomes apparent that there are three small islands masking the mouth of the lagoon and that what appear to be two other islands are the embracing arms of a huge atoll. The air is full of frigate birds, boobies and terns. The vast lagoon, 13 miles long by $4^{1}/_{2}$ miles across, stretches far away into the distance, forming a small inland sea, a little world turned in on itself.

Describing the scene in 1885 in terms that remain true to this day, the naturalist Gilbert Bourne said:

On a fine day, the varied colours of the still waters of the lagoon, the low-lying strip of land covered with vegetation of a vivid green, the dazzling strip of white sand which borders the shore and the clear sunny sky, will afford a picture which will not easily be forgotten.²

The sea was the traditional way to approach Diego Garcia. Nowadays the more usual way is by air from the Gulf, Singapore or Mauritius. Although crossed infinitely more swiftly, the vastness and emptiness of the ocean still impress and intimidate through the aeroplane window. Massive, towering clouds make stately progress like the billowing sails of galleons. The sea below is an opaque dark blue. Suddenly there is the excitement of sighting land after many hours over nothing but water. 'A laurel on the sea, a circle of bursting, startling green', a Second World War soldier-poet described it.3

Indeed what the traveller notices at once from the air is the dramatic shape of the thin necklace of land, which appears little more than an outline of a pencil mark on the ocean. Of all the atolls in the Chagos Archipelago, Diego Garcia is the most perfect, forming a shaky V-shape extending about 15 miles from north to south and with a distance of about 35 miles around the circumference from tip to tip. Visitors have called forth various images to describe its shape. The early nineteenth-century Mauritian historian, Charles Grant, the Viscount of Vaux, described it as being 'in the form of a serpent bent double'.4 The eighteenth-century French cartographer, Abbé Rochon, said more prosaically that it 'resembled a horseshoe'.5 Its more recent, late twentieth-century American residents have likened it to the outline of a footprint in the sand, with the islets at the mouth of the lagoon forming the toe-marks.

From the air, the vivid contrast between the varying blues of the lagoon, lighter, and with more green, than the dark blue indigo of the surrounding ocean, is apparent. It is also possible to make out on the upper western arm of the island the wide apron of the airfield, neatly arranged low-lying buildings, antennae in extensive aerial farms, ships at anchor in the lagoon and, as the plane makes its final approach, the roofs of the old plantation buildings peeping out of the vegetation on the eastern side.

Travellers arriving today in Diego Garcia, whether by air or by sea, must first be processed by British India Ocean Territory Customs, in their smart and functional sandcoloured uniform of desert boots, long socks, shorts, shirt and beret with the Crown and palm tree badge. The red telephone box at the airport entrance is a further reminder that this is British territory. However, the drive along the fine road leading from the airport or the fleet landing jetty to the Downtown area on the north-west tip of the island is reminiscent of the Florida Keys and a reminder that the present residents are predominantly American.

The road runs through immaculately groomed grass verges, past the civilian workers' accommodation, the British Club, the sports fields and other recreational facilities, the fire station and the Cable and Wireless building with its satellite dish, to the impressive, white, headquarters building overlooking the lagoon, outside which the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes fly side by side. Not far away stands the BIOT police station with its traditional blue British police lamp and the distinctive wavy blue and white BIOT flag flying outside.

The Downtown area, containing the quarters of the military personnel, has all the facilities of a small town, including an interdominational place of worship, shops, eating-places, a swimming pool, a bowling alley and a bus service. Everything is beautifully laid out with ample lawns and carefully planted decorative trees and shrubs. Incongruously, broods of wild chickens peck their way nonchalantly between the buildings, and the occasional feral cat is to be seen padding about. Madagascar fodies flit from tree to tree, red-capped if in mating plumage. The human residents, American, British, Filipino and Mauritian, military and civilian, male and female, make their way about on buses, bicycles and on foot, in the last case often in jogging kit. Near the northern tip is Cannon Point, where two 6-inch guns still point out to sea, as they have done since 1942.

As you drive south down the island beyond the airfield, the buildings and facilities begin to thin out. A poignant reminder of the past is the well-maintained cemetery near the old settlement of Point Marianne, containing the resting place of earlier islanders as well as graves from the Second World War. It now contains a monument to those who fell in a more recent conflict, that of the Gulf in 1991. The thick vegetation that lines the road on either side conceals the narrowness of the land and lends a deceptive air of spaciousness as the ribbon of the road unfolds. There are only occasional glimpses of the calm waters of the lagoon on the one side and the breakers on the reef on the ocean side, even though these are at some points separated by only 100 yards. Large land crabs scuttle across the road, which is scattered with the shells of those who lost the game of chicken with vehicles.

Half way down the western side, beyond the Donkey Gate, which is designed to keep the animals clear of the runway, wild donkeys, alone or in groups, begin to appear. They are especially numerous in the extensive grassland areas around the transmitter antennae near the southern bend of the island, looking for all the world like game on the African plains. Near the transmitter site is Turtle Cove, where small lemon sharks and turtles can be seen swimming in the clear water of the narrow channel leading from the lagoon to a large, enclosed, swampy area known as Barochois Sylvaine.

The road becomes unpaved coral as it leaves the area set aside for military purposes near the bottom of the eastern arm. It passes at first through fairly open coconut groves but the vegetation thickens markedly as it approaches the old plantation area at East Point.

East Point is a completely different world from the Downtown Area. Here are the remains, which the British authorities are trying hard to preserve, of a plantation society which lasted for two centuries. The manager's elegant château, recently restored, dominates the plantation square and faces the old jetty, cross and flagstaff by the lagoon shore. Around it stand the plantation chapel, itself also recently restored, the jail, the blacksmith's shop, the store, the hospital, copra mills and the remains of the copra drying sheds. The orange blossoms of a flame tree and pink and white ground flowers add colour to the scene. On the shore lies the remarkably intact wreck of a Second World War Catalina flying boat, still shining silvery in the sun. Farther up there is the morgue and behind it a macabre 'bleeding stone' where corpses were drained of their blood, around which the moss seems to grow with especial luxuriance. Nearby is the old graveyard with tombs from far back into the nineteenth century. The last burial, that of a small child, dates from 1971 just before the evacuation of the plantation.

Beyond East Point the road becomes no more than a track, heavily encroached on by the vegetation. After the brooding remains of the old settlement of Minni Minni, now almost lost in heavy vegetation and thick with moss and ferns, the track reaches Barton Point. This is the extreme north-east tip of the island and is a distance of about 37 miles by road from the north-west tip at Simpson Point. There is a fine beach of white sand between Barton Point and Observatory Point, studded with shells of all shapes and sizes, many of them occupied by small hermit crabs, and pieces of white, pink, green and blue coral. In the waters offshore, the coral heads of the reef are host to a myriad of fish.

Opposite Barton Point lies East Island, the largest of the islets at the mouth of the lagoon. It is designated as a nature reserve and is the home of large numbers of red-footed boobies which roost in the vegetation, and ferocious-looking giant crabs, which lurk in holes in the interior. The remains of buildings and machinery from the coaling station era are also in evidence there. Middle Island has a small interior lagoon of murky water from which you half expect some sea monster to erupt as a tidal surge makes itself felt.

Beyond the extensive reef around Middle Island, known as Spurs Reef, lies the deep-water channel of the Main Pass, on the other side of which is the small scrap of West Island and so back to Eclipse Point. There are few finer places to be on a clear, balmy night under the palm trees, the dark-blue velvet sky alight with stars, and the waves breaking translucent white in the moonlight on the reef.

Takamakas, Turtles, Corals, Coconut Crabs, Shearwaters and Sharks

iego Garcia is a low-lying tropical atoll with an average elevation of only 6 feet above sea level. The maximum natural elevation is around 25 feet in dunes near Point Marianne. If the greenhouse theory of atmospheric warming with a consequent rise in sea level is valid, the Chagos group, like the neighbouring Maldives, must be one of the places in the world most vulnerable to its impact. So far, however, there is no sign of significant encroachment by the sea and indeed the land area has shown considerable stability since it was first mapped accurately more than 200 years ago.

The surface area of Diego Garcia is not much more than 10 square miles. The island is composed entirely of coral rock. Some pumice rock found near Barton Point is likely to be debris from the explosion of the Mount Krakatoa volcano in the East Indies (now Indonesia) in 1889. There is a layer of poor soil which in places barely covers the underlying coral but in more heavily vegetated areas has a depth of a couple of feet of peaty earth. The typical profile across the island starts on the ocean-side reef with a wide, eroded, seawashed platform of dangerously sharp rock, a scattering of boulders and a narrow, sandy beach. There is a steep ridge at the edge of the land which then slopes gently downward to a less pronounced ridge and another sandy beach on the lagoon-side. In places the land is indented on the inside rim by depressed areas with narrow entrances which flood and drain on each tide and are known as 'barochois'. Particularly extensive barochois are found in the south and south-east, such as Barochois Maurice and Barochois Sylvaine.

Diego Garcia is the wettest tropical atoll in the Indian Ocean and experiences average rainfall of over 100 inches a year. Gilbert Bourne, visiting in 1886 observed: 'it would be scarcely beside the truth to say that rain may be expected every day; that at least was my experience.'1 If not quite true, it is rare for there to be periods of more than a few days without rain, which comes in short, intense downpours, which race as squalls across the lagoon. There is consequently a high water-table of surprisingly unbrackish water, taking into account the proximity of the sea on every hand. The explanation, which was discovered quite recently, is that there are extensive 'water lenses' in Diego Garcia, caused by fresh water, with its lower specific gravity, floating on top of the sea water which permeates the ground at a lower level. These fresh-water lenses are readily tapped by shallow wells. There are few natural bodies of standing fresh water above ground but rainwater gathers sufficiently after the frequent downpours to provide adequate drinking water for wildlife.

The climate of Diego Garcia was described by an early visitor Charles Pridham, in 1846, in the following terms: 'there is almost continually a delightful freshness and softness in the atmosphere, and although very hot in the sun, the air where there exists any shade is cool and the nights invariably very pleasant.' Temperatures generally range between the upper seventies and the mid-eighties Fahrenheit (25°–28°C).

There is a high level of humidity but it is ameliorated by frequent breezes and is less stifling and enervating than elsewhere in comparable latitudes. The island is also mercifully free of unpleasant tropical manifestations such as malaria.

There are distinct if marginal variations of season in Diego Garcia which are governed by changes in the predominant winds, which in turn govern the direction of the currents. From December to March the wind blows mainly from the north-west under the influence of the monsoon, which brings hotter temperatures (an average of 85°F/28°C) and heavier rainfall (a mean of over 12 inches in January). In April and May there is a transition in the prevailing wind from the west to the south-east. From June to September the south-east trade winds blow and the weather is cooler (79°F/26°C) and relatively drier (6 inches of rain in June). October and November is another period of transition, with variable wind directions. Diego Garcia is fortunate to lie between the northern and southern cyclone belts in the Indian Ocean, so avoiding the storms which periodically devastate Mauritius, Reunion and Rodrigues to the south and the coast of the Indian sub-continent to the north. However, the tail of a cyclone will occasionally clip the island, usually during the period of the south-east trades.

Behind the rhododendron-like 'scavvy' thicket (Scaevola tacada) which fringes the shores, the vegetation of the island is now dominated by coconut trees, either of self-sown 'cocos bon dieu' (God's coconuts) or the cultivated variety established in the plantation era. Early historical accounts suggest that this was not always so and that much larger areas were covered by broadleaf trees. Impressive varieties of the latter which survive individually or in clumps around the island are the white wood tree (Hernandia sonora), the rose or mapou (Barringtonia asiatica) and the takamaka (Calophyllum inophyllum). The white wood tree can grow to a height of 60 feet and has small, cream-coloured flowers. The rose tree is even taller and has a massive girth. It has leaves 18 inches long and its flower of four white petals, with a mass of slender pink stamens protruding from the centre, gives off a heavy scent. The flowers last only from dusk to dawn of a single night but when fallen they spread a fragrant carpet round the tree. The seed husk of the rose tree has a characteristic square shape, designed, like a coconut, to be waterborne. The takamaka grows slowly into a giant oak-shaped tree and is supported by a widespread network of roots above ground. It has shiny leaves with fine parallel veins, a small, delicate flower with a clump of yellow stamens at the centre and fruit like a large gooseberry. The wood of the takamaka is excellent for boat-building and has been used as such around the islands of the Indian Ocean to construct traditional craft such as pirogues.

A number of other impressive trees were introduced in the old plantation areas, such as the giant fig trees at Point Marianne and Minni Minni and the breadfruit trees at East Point. It is not clear when the ironwood tree (Casuarina), with its needle-like leaves and pine-like appearance, was introduced. Its seeds are very resistant to sea-water and it is possible that they arrived originally on drifting branches. However, it is now spreading widely in the areas where construction has taken place because of its liking for disturbed soil. Its ability to extract and fix nitrate from the soil gives it an advantage over other vegetation. Numerous other exotic flora - fruit trees, shrubs, flowers, vegetables and grasses were introduced in the plantation era and more recently for decorative and dietary purposes. Both the amateur and professional botanist will find Diego Garcia a happy hunting ground.

Diego Garcia also holds delights for the ornithologist. At least 35 species of bird have been identified. The bird population has been subject to vicissitudes over the years. Before the arrival of man there were probably enormous colonies of seabirds and also possibly some native species of landbird. Human activity had a devastating effect on the bird life. The vegetation was, as we have seen, transformed by the cutting down of much of the natural broadleaf woodland and its replacement by coconut trees. Worse still, predators were introduced in the form of rats, cats, dogs and, of course, man himself, for whom birds were a source of meat, eggs and feathers.

The closing of the plantations and the rigorous conservation policy of the BIOT administration may well have led to a revival of a number of species which had become rare or disappeared from the island altogether. Today, long-standing winged inhabitants of Diego Garcia which can be termed indigenous include various sorts of terns, noddies, boobies, frigates and green herons. The island is also a staging post for migratory birds such as shearwaters, turnstones, plovers, sandpipers, whimbrels and perhaps storm-petrels on their way between breeding areas and wintering areas around the Indian Ocean. Land birds introduced from Madagascar, Mauritius, Seychelles and India since the nineteenth century include fodies, Madagascar turtle doves, cattle egrets, barred ground doves, mynahs and the domestic fowl which now run wild. Many of the birds of Diego Garcia are beautifully portrayed on the 1990 definitive set of British Indian Ocean Territory postage stamps.

There are no indigenous mammals in Diego Garcia and no sign that any ever existed. Of those introduced in the plantation era, which included horses, cattle, sheep, pigs and dogs, only donkeys, cats and rats have survived and thrived. The wild donkeys could perhaps in due course evolve into a distinctive breed, the Diego donkey. An imaginative proposal to introduce the endangered Rodrigues fruit bat to the island has, for the moment at least, been abandoned.

If Diego Garcia has a native 'king' species it should surely be the giant coconut or robber crabs. Their Creole name is cipaye or sipaille. The coconut crab has a mottled purplish appearance and can grow to 3 feet across. Their enormous pincers can rip open a coconut husk. They are nocturnal creatures but can be found in the day skulking in holes in the ground or under fallen vegetation. They should be treated with great respect - a writer in 1802 noted that their pincers could snap off the iron tips of walking sticks - but if approached from the right direction (the rear), can be picked up. This, however, requires strong nerve. Other crabs, the land crab and the fiddler crab, energetically excavate sandy areas, including in the barochois. On the beach, most shells on examination are found to be occupied by hermit crabs and immature coconut crabs.

There are a couple of types of lizard or, more accurately, geckos on the island, at least one species of toad, but no snakes. Despite the presence of African bees, hornets, several variety of spider and one of scorpion, the main hazard when walking or jogging in the jungle of Diego Garcia is not creepycrawlies but being hit on the head by a falling coconut. Five per cent of the identified insect specimens, including a butterfly, are unique to the island and there are doubtless more still to be discovered.

If land fauna on Diego Garcia is admittedly fairly limited, marine life is exceptionally rich. As Gilbert Bourne wrote in 1886, 'to describe the immense and varied marine fauna that abounds around this island requires a paper on natural history'.3 Spectacular visitors to the shore are two varieties of large marine turtle, the green and the hawksbill. Their life span is 150 years and they only start breeding when they are 50. After mating at sea the females come ashore on the high tide in different seasons according to species, the hawksbill during the north-west monsoon and the green during the south-east trades, and lay their numerous eggs, which look like table-tennis balls, in the sand. The turtles were formerly hunted for their flesh and their shells by the islanders but they are now protected by law and it seems likely that these endangered species are increasing in numbers around the Chagos. Appropriately, the green and hawksbill turtles are supporters on the BIOT coat of arms. Smaller species of turtle live permanently in the lagoon, especially at the south-

The deep ocean beyond the reef supports dozens of species of fish. There are 14 types of shark alone, including the white, grey, tiger, hammerhead, white tip, black tip, nurse and sand shark. Tuna, especially the big eye, yellowfin and skipjack varieties are present in huge quantities. Prized game fish such as the wahoo, marlin, swordfish, kingfish, sunfish, mahi mahi, bonito, dorado and barracuda are commonly found. The BIOT administration took steps in 1991 to conserve fish stocks in what is probably the least exploited area of the Indian Ocean by introducing a licensing regime in a 200 mile zone around the Chagos. Sperm whales, which breed to the west of the islands, and dolphins receive specific protection.

Richest of all from an ecological point of view is the reef, which teems with a vast variety of life. The living coral itself is Diego Garcia's chief natural glory and indeed the cause of its very existence. The Chagos Archipelago constitutes one of the great reef systems of the world and probably the most pristine. About 100 species of coral, some very rare, have been identified around Diego Garcia and in its lagoon.

The coral animal itself is a primitive organism known as a polyp. It is akin to a sea anemone and the calcium it extracts from sea-water gradually builds up into a variety of remarkable shapes and sizes. The evocative names given to the differing structures formed give a good idea of their appearance: staghorn, organ-pipe, brain, table, mushroom, moss and so on. The shape of coral rock formed is influenced by the depth at which it grows. The range of colours – yellow, green, pink, blue, violet, brown and grey – is derived from the minute plants which live inside the polyps.

Reef-building corals are delicate and choosy organisms. They are found in a belt around the world in the Indian Ocean, the Pacific and the Caribbean 30 degrees either side of the Equator where the sea temperature is below 100°F (37°C) and above 68°F (20°C). Corals need the right amount of oxygen and salinity in the water. They cannot grow above water and because they need light will not grow much below 150 feet in depth. They like water that is somewhat disturbed but not rough. Consequently, the reef corals are less luxuriant on the south-east side of Diego Garcia which is most exposed to storms.

There are living coral reefs both around and inside the lagoon of Diego Garcia. These are alive with literally hundreds of varieties of small, brilliantly coloured tropical fish such as are found in aquariums all over the world, as well as the larger grouper, snapper, jack, emperor, trevally, moray eel, sting ray and manta ray. Seaweeds in a multiplicity of forms, sea cucumbers, octopuses, crabs, lobsters and small turtles add to the variety. Underwater swimming is a constant delight in Diego Garcia, although in addition to watching out for sharks an eye must be kept open for the sinister stone fish and the scorpion fish with their poisonous spines.

14 Peak of Limuria

III

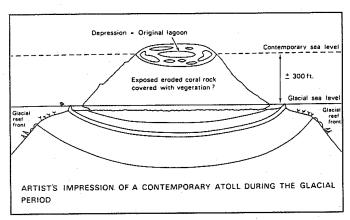

From out the Azure Main

iego Garcia and its sibling islands comprise all that remains above sea-level of huge underwater mountains of volcanic origin which rear dramatically from the ocean bed 10,000 feet or more below. The romantic appellation for these islands is the 'Peaks of Limuria'.

Limuria is the name given to the ancient continent which used to exist in the middle of the Indian Ocean, a sort of Indian Ocean Atlantis. This lost continent was probably created as a result of apocalyptic volcanic activity 130 million years ago as the land mass of what is now India gradually drifted away from Africa. Even now seismic activity is common in the area. A severe earthquake is reported to have occurred in Diego Garcia in 1812 and there was another major one elsewhere in the Chagos Archipelago in 1913. An earthquake measuring as high as 7.6 on the Richter Scale struck Diego Garcia in November 1983. Although causing limited damage to buildings, it ruptured some of the underground fuel lines. Earthquakes of 6.0 or above on the Scale occur regularly. There have been a dozen such occurrences since 1940. Luckily the lack of a wide surrounding platform of shallows precludes the building of tidal waves as a result of seismic activity.

16 Peak of Limuria

It seems likely that over the aeons of time the sea level in the Indian Ocean waxed and waned as a result both of uplift and subsidence, and of the periodic ice ages which locked up water in the icecaps. Because of the sea level changes during this period, the underlying peaks of basalt became overlaid with coral limestone to a depth of as much as a mile. Only 17,000 years ago, at the end of the last ice age, the sea level was 300 feet lower than at present. This would have meant that, where there are now only banks and atolls, a vastly larger area of dry land would have existed, including the whole of the present Chagos Bank and large adjacent islands.

(From book Half of Paradise by Professor David Bellamy)

We cannot know what type of vegetation flourished then or what sort of wildlife roamed the land because, as the Polar icecaps melted, the sea swept in like Noah's flood. The land may well have been entirely submerged. As Lord Tennyson wrote as he came to grips with dawning scientific reality in his poem In Memoriam,

There rolls the deep where grew the tree, Oh earth what changes hast thou seen!¹ Certainly no trace of pre-Holocene, that is before the last ice age, flora and fauna remains, in contrast to the larger land masses in the Western Indian Ocean now comprising Madagascar, Mauritius, Reunion and Seychelles, which had sufficient elevation to avoid being totally engulfed. In these places weird and unique forms of life such as the lemur and, until hunted to extinction, the dodo survived. In fact, the limited range of land flora and fauna in the islands of the Chagos Archipelago suggests that in their latest form they emerged from the sea perhaps only a couple of thousand years ago. Like Britain in the song 'Rule Britannia', Diego Garcia literally 'at heaven's command arose from out the azure main'. Given no further significant changes in sea level during this period and the lack of evidence of major movements of the earth's crust in the area, how could this happen?

The solution to the mystery was first put forward by no less an authority than Charles Darwin, the great nineteenth century natural scientist and author of The Origin of the Species which fundamentally altered man's view of the world. In 1842 Darwin published a work called The Structure and Distribution of Coral Reefs, which was based on the observations he carried out during his epic four-and-a-half year voyage around the globe on HMS Beagle. One of the Beagle's missions was to take soundings around coral islands and to determine if the atolls sat on the summits of extinct volcanoes. Darwin and the Beagle visited the Cocos-Keeling Islands and Mauritius in the Indian Ocean but, impatient to return home after such a long voyage, did not call at the Chagos group. However, Darwin drew extensively in his book on coral reefs on a thorough scientific survey of the Chagos, and Diego Garcia in particular, carried out in 1837 by Captain Robert Moresby. As he acknowledged in the preface:

I must most particularly express my obligations to Captain Moresby, Indian Navy, who conducted the survey of the archipelagos of low coral islands in the Indian Ocean.

According to Darwin's theory, as the sea level rises, the living coral grows up too, keeping pace with and just below the surface of the water. On to this submerged platform wash boulders of dead coral and sand, forming a bank which builds up above high water. Once a dry bank is established it begins to be colonised by seeds of plants and trees borne on the ocean currents. The predominant current washing the Chagos Archipelago is the Malabar current coming from the direction of South-East Asia. It is therefore not surprising that most of the indigenous flora on the islands is of Asian origin. Of these, the key to stabilising the newly emergent islands will have been Scaevola tacada, commonly known as 'scavvy' in Diego Garcia, which thrives in sand and does not mind some contact with salt water. It forms a strong and impenetrable thicket along shorelines just above high water. Because of their buoyant water-borne husks the coconut and the rose tree will have been among early trees to establish themselves. Ironwoods and the creeper Caesalpina bondue may have arrived as sea-borne seeds floating on vegetal debris. Birds, which can migrate huge distances across the ocean, will also have been the agents of colonisation by bringing seeds on their bodies. And their droppings, forming guano, will have helped enrich the poor mixture of sand and coral and thus encouraged further growth of vegetation, which in decay also fertilised the ground.

As Darwin recognised, Diego Garcia is unusual as an atoll in that almost the whole reef around the lagoon has been converted into land, 'an unparalleled case, I believe, in an atoll of such large size', he observed.² It seems likely that the present island is the result of the merging of a number of smaller islands that established themselves on the reef. The narrowness of the land at various points and the undeveloped nature of the vegetation, especially on the eastern arm of the island north of Minni Minni, suggests that some of the various individual islands which originally existed were joined up only comparatively recently. This could eventually happen between Eclipse Point and West Island. And a new island is forming at the mouth of the lagoon to the west of Middle Island at the north-western end of Spurs Reef. This islet was given the name Anniversary Island in honour of the 25th anniversary of the establishment of the British Indian Ocean Territory in November 1990. If it survives, it will be interesting to see how quickly it is colonised by 'scavvy' and coconuts.

Darwin's theory of the origin of atolls is still accepted, although he seems to have been misled by some of Moresby's data to conclude that the Chagos was a dying group of coral atolls sitting on top of subsiding submarine mountains. He does not appear to have taken into account the effect of rises and falls in sea level because of periodic ice ages. He later acknowledged Gilbert Bourne's work on the subject and conceded that in the case of Diego Garcia there was no evidence of subsidence.

The fact that a minute marine creature could be responsible for the creation of solid land can still amaze today as much as it did the great scientists who discovered the phenomenon. Darwin wrote:

Everyone must be struck with astonishment when he first beholds one of those vast rings of coral rock, often many leagues in diameter, here and there surmounted by a low verdant island with dazzling white shores, bathed on the outside by the foaming breakers of the ocean, and on the inside surrounding a calm expanse of water which from reflection is generally of a bright but pale green colour. The naturalist will feel this astonishment more deeply after having examined the soft and almost gelatinous bodies of those apparently insignificant coral polypifers, and when he knows that the solid reef increases only on the outer edge, which day and night is lashed by the breakers of an ocean never at rest.3

Bourne echoed the same sentiment on visiting Diego Garcia itself in 1885:

The most unimaginative person will not fail to be struck with wonder that the vital activity of animals so low on the scale as coral polyps has been sufficient to raise up this island above the waves and to maintain it there in spite of the increasing wear and tear to which it is subject from the restless waves of the great southern ocean.⁴

20 Peak of Limuria

IV

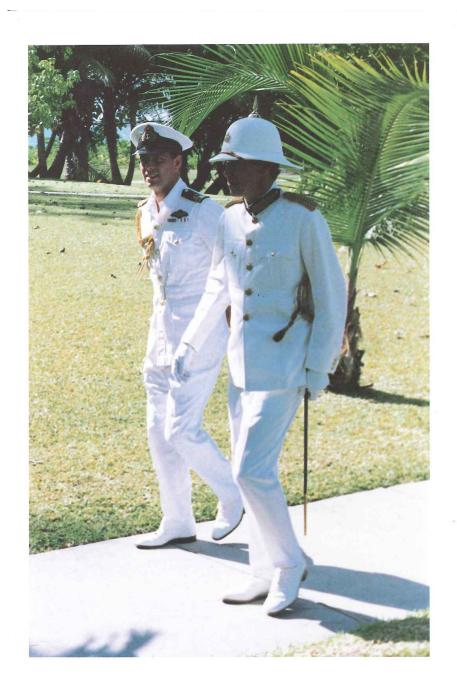

Discovery

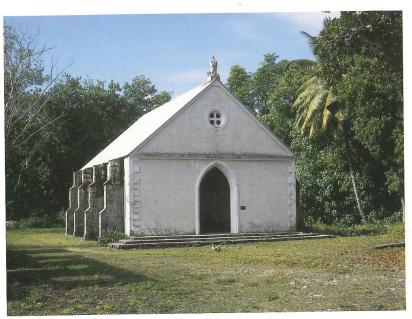

The Chagos islands may well have been untouched by human footprints from their formation until the dawn of the modern era. It is possible that the Malagasy may have visited the islands as they made their way around the Indian Ocean from present-day Indonesia to their future home in Madagascar in the early days of the Christian era. It has been suggested that it was they who introduced the coconut and that the old Maldivian name for the islands was of Malagasy origin.1 The Arabs who reached the Laccadive and Maldive islands immediately to the north in the ninth century may have had some inkling of islands to the south. And a remarkable Chinese expedition during the Ming Dynasty commanded by Cheng Ho, the Great Eunuch of the Imperial Palace, would have sailed close to the Chagos in 1413-15. However, if any of these intrepid voyagers did visit the islands, we shall never know for they left no mark or record.

What is certain is that the Portuguese sighted and named the islands in the early sixteenth century. In the course of the fifteenth century, the traditional route through the Eastern Mediterranean, the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf to the Asian sources of luxuries which Europe sought was blocked by the expansion of the war-like Ottoman Turks. Driven by a mixture of crusading zeal and mercantile enterprise, the Portuguese pioneered an alternative sea route around Africa to India and the Spice Islands in the later fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries. Their route lay across the Indian Ocean.

The actual discoverer of the islands was probably Pedro Mascarenhas, after whom the Mascarene group of islands comprising Mauritius, Reunion and Rodrigues is named. It was the custom of the Portuguese explorers to call newly discovered islands after either captains of vessels or saints' days. There were fleets to the Indian Ocean in 1509 and 1512 commanded by Diego Lopes and Garcia de Naronha respectively. It is tempting to assume that some combination of these names was applied to the largest of the islands that they stumbled on in their caravels and nãos far out in the Indian Ocean. According to another account, a Spanish navigator actually named Diego Garcia visited the island in 1532.2 However, the origin of the name can be no more than speculation. Early maps give a variety of other names including Gratia, Graciosa, Don Garzia and Chagos island. The existing name only became definitive towards the end of the eighteenth century. The Portuguese names for other groups in the Archipelago also stuck, Peros Banhos, and Three Brothers, which is a translation of the Portuguese 'Três Irmãos'.

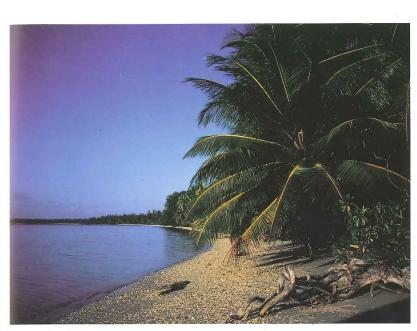

The only evidence found in Diego Garcia of Portuguese visits are the roof tiles brought up by divers from the floor of the lagoon in Rambler Bay. It was the custom to carry such items on the outward voyage from Portugal as ballast which could be put to good use on arrival before loading up with spices, calicoes, muslins and chinaware for the return trip. There may well be Portuguese wrecks in other parts of the Archipelago. One fairly well-documented case is that of a não (a type of sailing ship of about 500 tons, named the Conceição (Conception) which was outward bound from Lisbon to Goa in India with a cargo of jewels, gold and silver in 1555 when it ran aground on the reefs of Peros Banhos.³ The captain Francisco Nombre and other officers appropriated

East Point chapel. (NSF Fotolab, Diego Garcia)

Lagoon just before sunset. (Dan Layman)

A coconut crab. (Dan Layman)

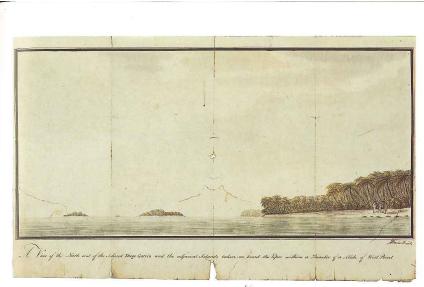

A family of red-footed boobies. (Dan Layman)

A sixteenth-century Portuguese map of the Indian Ocean. (The British Library)

View of the north end of Diego Garcia; 1786; watercolour by Lieutenant Wales. (India Office Collection, British Library)

The settlement at East Point, 1819; Dutch print by Lieutenant Verhuell. $(Mr\ K.\ Dirkzwager)$

Six-inch naval guns at Cannon Point, installed in 1942. (NSF Fotolab, Diego Garcia)

the only undamaged boat, filled it with as much treasure as it could carry and set out for India, leaving 350 crew and passengers to fend for themselves. Of these 50 eventually managed to reach India in improvised craft but the rest perished from hunger and exposure. It is possible that remains of the Conceição's equipment and cargo could still be found.

Among the rare references to the Chagos in this period is the claim to them made by the Christian King of the Maldives, Dom Manuel, who was installed by the Portuguese in the mid-sixteenth century. The islands were called 'Folovahi' in the Maldivian language Divehi, which means something like 'ten islands'. However, two attempts by the Maldivians to colonise the islands failed when they could not locate them.

The discovery of the Chagos Archipelago was a minor incidental by-product of the opening up of the seaway from Europe to the Indies. The islands were not on the main route, which followed the African coast to around the latitude of present-day Kenya and then struck out towards India. Accordingly they were not regarded as of any value as way-stations for water and fresh supplies. On the contrary, the Chagos Archipelago with its network of dangerous reefs was seen as a peril to be given a wide berth. The inaccuracy of the charts, which scattered islands, many of them imaginary, over a wide area increased the uncertainty of navigation in the central Indian Ocean.

The English, along with the French and Dutch, began to follow the route pioneered by the Portuguese to the lucrative entrepôts of the East in the later sixteenth century. The experience of the captain of one of the first English fleets to penetrate the Indian Ocean graphically illustrates the perils posed to early navigators in the seas around the Chagos. Setting out from Agalega Island north-east of Madagascar in the direction of India in late March 1602 Sir James Lancaster found himself two weeks later trapped within the reefs of the Chagos Bank. For several days the ships tried to find a way out of the maze or 'pound' (enclosure) as Lancaster called it. Eventually, led by a small boat from which constant sounding of the depth was made, the fleet was able, 'thanks be to God', to nose gingerly out of the reefs to the open ocean to the north and continue its voyage.

Although Lancaster did not land on any of the islands in the Chagos he left a vivid account of his earlier landfall at Agalega, an island which shares many of the same characteristics:

As we coasted along this island, it seemed very fair and pleasant, exceeding full of fowl [birds] and coconut trees; and there came from the land such a pleasant smell as if it had been a garden of flowers.⁴

For a further century and a half, after Lancaster's inadvertent visit, although the Dutch established themselves from 1639 in Mauritius and the French from 1654 in Reunion, the Chagos remained in a sort of limbo, vaguely in the consciousness but rarely visited by the European nations contending for the upper hand in the Indian Ocean. If pirates, who in the early eighteenth century established a shortlived stronghold in eastern Madagascar and bases in the Seychelles, ever used or visited Diego Garcia, there is no record of this but the intriguing possibility cannot be discounted. An eighteenth century cannon-ball was discovered in the jungle on the eastern arm of the island in 1989. And a mid-nineteenth century ordinance reserved to the Crown any buried treasure found on Diego Garcia.

As time went on, the contest in the Indian Ocean became increasingly one between Britain and France, with India as the prize. The five wars fought by the two countries in the course of the eighteenth century spilled over into eastern seas. Meanwhile the French were assidiously island-hopping. In 1722 they took over Mauritius which the Dutch had abandoned in 1703, and renamed it the Ile de France. They also colonised Rodrigues 300 miles to the east in 1742.

From the 1740s the French began systematically to survey the islands to the north and the north-east of their principal base on Mauritius. Up to this point these islands remained inaccurately fixed, still unknown, or even figments of the imagination, as was the case in their rendering in the chart the 'English Pilot' published in 1755. The co-ordinator of this effort was the renowned French cartographer Après de Mannevillette who embodied his findings in his famous map of the Indian Ocean 'Neptune Oriental', published in 1780. Much of this effort of filling in the gaps on the map was directed towards the north where Mahé in the Seychelles group was first formally possessed in 1756 and then colonised in 1768. However, several expeditions visited the Chagos. In 1770 a Monsieur la Fontaine in the vessel L'Heure du Berger surveyed the northern part of the lagoon at Diego Garcia and produced the first detailed map of the island. This ship also achieved the feat of sailing the dangerous passage between East Island and Barton Point. Subsequently a British ship, the Hampshire, was wrecked attempting the passage in 1793. Elsewhere in the Archipelago, in 1777, the French ship Salomon visited and named the islands of that name in the northern Chagos.

The British, from their bases in India, were also showing an interest in the islands. In 1760 the Egmont visited the islands which bear its name. In 1763 the Speaker and the Pitt surveyed the banks named after them and also visited Diego Garcia, producing a rough sketch from the north which may be the first known pictorial rendering of the island. In 1772 the Eagle called at the island of the same name. And in 1774 the Drake visited Diego Garcia and carried out a detailed survey of the entrance to the lagoon, including detailed sketches by a Joseph Mascall which show West, Middle and East islands, which were named respectively Red Beach, Black Beach and White Beach islands on the picture. This expedition left sheep, goats and pigs on the island as fresh provisions for future expeditions.

On the British side, the driving force in mapping the islands of the Central Indian Ocean was Scotsman Alexander Dalrymple, the Hydrographer of the East Indian Company, who published in 1786 a Memoir concerning the Chagos Archipelago and the Adjacent Islands. Dalrymple sent orders from London to the Company's base in Bombay to despatch vessels:

to ascertain the numerous shoals and islands in the Southern Passage from the Maldives to Madagascar as an accurate knowledge of these hitherto much neglected Seas is essential to the security of the Navigation of the Company's ships.⁵

As a result of these instructions, a comprehensive exploration of the Archipelago was undertaken by Lieutenant Archibald Blair of the East India Company Marine in 1786 and 1787. He was given orders that:

for facilitating the more particular survey of the island afterwards, he was to leave a distinguishing mark on all the principal points, which should terminate his angles, or form stations, to enable those points to be found at any future time.⁶

Accordingly, in May 1786, Blair carried out a survey of Diego Garcia, setting up flag staffs at key places to act as reference points. Although he was given only a couple of weeks for the undertaking, Blair produced a highly accurate map which would pass muster today. He also observed the eclipse of Jupiter's moons, which no doubt accounts for the names Eclipse and Observatory Points at the entrance to the Diego Garcia lagoon.

The transformation in knowledge about the Chagos resulting from these systematic surveys meant that, in future, mariners would avoid the experience of James Horsburgh, who later succeeded Dalrymple as the East India Company Hydrographer. In May 1786 he was wrecked on Diego Garcia in the Atlas on the point on the east coast which bears his name:

The charts on board were very erroneous in their rendering of the Chagos Islands and Banks and the Commander trusting too much to dead reckoning was steering with confidence to make Ady or Candy (islands which turned out not to exist)... but unfortunately, a cloud over Diego Garcia prevented the helmsman from discerning it (the officer of the watch being asleep) till we were on the reef close to the shore; the masts, rudder and everything above deck went with the first surge; the second lifted the vessel over the outer rocks and threw her in toward the beach, it being high water and the vessel in ballast, otherwise, she must have been dashed in pieces by two or three surfs on the outer part of the reef and every person on board have perished.⁷

The survivors from the ill-fated Atlas were rescued by the expedition described in the next chapter.

V

Settlement

Monsieur Dupuit de la Faye was given a grant of Diego Garcia by the Governor of Mauritius in 1778 and there is evidence of temporary French sojourns. However, the first systematic attempt to colonise the island was made by the British. In 1786 the East India Company, the great commercial corporation which established and ran Britain's Empire in the East for 250 years, decided that it was now feasible to establish a victualling station where, as Dalrymple put it:

ships might be enabled to get refreshments after their long voyage from Europe before they came into the low latitudes where the light winds and tedious passages consequent to them, had so often proved fatal to the lives of the seamen before they could reach India.¹

It was also hoped that Diego Garcia could be a base for further exploration of the islands of the central Indian Ocean, as well as in future wars against France.

The aim was that the new settlement should be self-sufficient. According to the reports available, Diego Garcia had good water, soil which would support 'legumes' (vegetables) and an abundance of fish, turtles and 'land lobsters'. The latter 'fed on coconuts and are very good, their tails very fat'. The expedition was to take with it boatloads of soil and to experiment with the growing of grain, fruit and vegetables. It was also to bring cattle and poultry.

After meticulous planning, the expedition set out from Bombay on 15 March 1786 in four ships, the Admiral Hughes, the Drake and the survey ships Viper and Experiment. Richard Price and John Smyth, senior officials of the East India Company, were respectively first and second in command. Price was appointed 'Resident of Diego Garcia', effectively the first British representative. The civilian element included carpenters, smiths, bricklayers, coopers, stockmen, gardeners, bakers, butchers, tailors and two doctors as well as 50 servants. An engineering officer Captain Sartorius commanded the military element, who were all volunteers. This consisted of 64 Indian infantry sepoys and 2 bandsmen, 24 Indian engineer pioneers and a number of marine surveying officers led by Lieutenant Blair, mentioned in Chapter IV. They also took with them one field piece and 6 or 8 pieces of smaller artillery.

The expedition sailed with sealed orders to be opened at sea in order to keep its destination secret from the French. The instructions included contingency plans in case any French were encountered on the island. If 'beyond all expectations...a regular settlement...who cannot be removed by force were found, new orders were to be sought. However, if only 'straggling French' were present these were to be 'deemed to be there without authority and not any impediment to occupying the island and establishing a settlement'.3 In fact when the expedition entered the lagoon of Diego Garcia on 27 April 1786, they were surprised to see a canoe set out from the shore with five men on board who produced papers from a Monsieur Le Normand about his establishment on the island, which consisted of 'a dozen huts of the meanest appearance'. The British expedition chose not to regard this as evidence of a proper French title to the island and on 4 May 'took formal possession of the island of Diego Garcia and all its Dependencies in the name of His Majesty King George the Third and in the name and for the use of the Honourable United Company'. The hoisting of the British flag was saluted with three volleys of musketry. The East India Company's own flag, on which the American Stars and Stripes was modelled, will also have been flown by the expedition. The Frenchmen found on the island left for Mauritius to report this turn of events.

Meanwhile, the expedition got down to its task of laying out a settlement, building a fort, planting crops, measuring temperatures and winds and surveying the land and the lagoon. A Lieutenant Wales produced charming water-colour sketches of the island, one of which showed three men in broad-brimmed hats and knee-breeches strolling on the shore among the crabs near Cannon Point, and another of two of the expedition's ships sailing across the mouth of the lagoon. The settlement was established on the site of the present East Point, which was named Flag Staff Point. The climate was found to be quite healthy and few men fell sick. Temperatures taken over a four week period between early May and early June showed a range of 73°F to 87°F (approximately 23°C to 31°C), which is remarkably consistent with presentday readings. However, the agricultural experiments were disappointing. Vegetables such as potatoes and grain would grow but the amazing swarms of rats caused problems. Most of the turkeys and ducks died and the cattle sickened. There were also disagreements over whether the island was militarily defensible and who was responsible for surveying the lagoon.

The reports from Price and Smyth to the Council in Bombay sowed doubts about the settlement's viability. The Directors of the East India Company in London also became concerned when they learned of the expedition's 'magnitude and unnecessary cost.' A further problem was that the French were exercised by the establishment of the settlement. The Governor of Mauritius, the Vicomte de Souillac, sent a letter of protest to Bombay. An international incident seemed likely to develop. Accordingly the Bombay Council decided in August 1786 'to entirely withdraw the settlement from Diego Garcia'. A letter from Bombay Castle signed by Governor Rawson Hart Boddam (after whom Boddam island in the Salomons is named) instructed Price and Smyth that 'on receipt of this letter you will immediately issue the necessary orders for the embarkation of the stores, ammunition and provisions and for evacuating the island'. The expedition sailed away in October 1786, leaving Lieutenant Blair to complete his survey of the rest of the Archipelago.

The French authorities in Mauritius were sufficiently alarmed by news of the British settlement to send the frigate Minerva to enforce their claim and eject the interlopers. However, by the time the French ship arrived, the British had already left. The French none the less put up a stone pillar proclaiming their sovereignty. A similar marker decorated with fleur de lys survives at Mahé in the Seychelles but that on Diego Garcia has disappeared; perhaps it still lies somewhere on the island awaiting discovery.

The British incursion led the French to take a more active interest in the islands. In the later 1780s businessmen in Mauritius were granted concessions to gather coconuts. A petition to operate in one of the islands reads 'this desert island uninhabited up to the time of writing, can nevertheless hold out prospects to an industrious and enterprising man.'7 The first named individual to receive this concession in Diego Garcia was the same Monsieur Le Normand whom the British encountered in 1786. A Sieur Dauguet was also granted fishing rights. It is not clear whether these concessions involved the setting up of permanent establishments or merely limited visits. The French in Mauritius also seem to have begun using Diego Garcia as a leper colony, apparently in the belief that turtle meat helped to cure this condition. According to one account, a British ship anchored off Diego Garcia in 1792 and sent ashore two Lascars or Indian seamen to look for water. These encountered a small party of lepers. When they reported the fact on coming back on board, such was the fear of leprosy in those days that the ship's master put the Lascars ashore to fend for themselves - a nightmare story if true.

In 1793, a Mr Lapotaire of Port Louis proposed to the French authorities that instead of loose coconuts being brought back to Mauritius from Diego Garcia for processing, a 'factory' be established to extract copra and oil from them on the island. Lapotaire sent out two ships with 25 to 30 men in each and a complement of slaves to set up the enterprise, which could be termed Diego Garcia's Jamestown, and seems to have been based at the north-west corner of the island. By the next year, Lapotaire was exporting a considerable amount of oil to Mauritius. According to Baron d'Unienville, salted fish, and rope made of coconut fibre were also exported, and sea slugs to the Far East, where they were a sought-after delicacy among the Chinese.8

There was good profit in the extraction of coconut oil which was used for a variety of purposes including lamps, cooking and soap. In the 1790's France was again at war with Britain and Mauritius found itself increasingly cut off from longer distance trade by the British blockade, leading among other things to a steep rise in oil prices. It is therefore not surprising that other businessmen from Mauritius began to follow Lapotaire's example and to set up their own establishments in Diego Garcia, as well as in other islands of the Chagos Archipelago. On Diego Garcia two brothers, Paul and Aimé Cayeux established themselves at East Point and Minni Minni.

While Lapotaire and the Cayeux seem to have had no problems in dividing the island between them, in the early 1800s they united against two newcomers, Messrs Blévec and Chepé, whom they accused of wasteful exploitation of the coconuts. However, in 1809 the French Captain General of Mauritius, De Caen, settled the dispute by assigning eastern parts of the island to Blévec and Chepé, while forbidding the manufacture of oil in Diego Garcia on the grounds that this would attract British raids. Readiness to accept lepers sent from Mauritius was a condition of the concessions.

But French rule in the Indian Ocean was about to be snuffed out at its heart. Exasperated by French privateer attacks on British shipping, a British expeditionary force from India captured Rodrigues and Reunion and finally Mauritius itself. The capitulation signed on 3 December 1810 marked 'the surrender of the Isle of France (Mauritius) and all its dependencies (including the Chagos) to the arms of His Britannic Majesty'. The Treaty of Paris signed in May 1814 formally ceded 'the Isle of France and all its dependencies . . . to the dominions of the British Crown'. The Chagos Archipelago has remained British territory ever since.

Although the formal period of French rule on Diego Garcia was quite short, by the time it ended the pattern of a plantation society based on exploitation of the coconut, which was to last more than another century and a half, was well established. A contemporary Dutch print of East Point dating from 1819 is the first known depiction of the settlement.9 It was probably made by a naval officer called Verhuell who was a survivor of the crew of the Dutch warship Admiral Evertsen, which was carrying home from Java spices, some 'boxes with curiosities' for the King of the Netherlands, senior officials of the Dutch East India Company and an admiral. The ship foundered off Diego Garcia on 9 April 1819 and the 340-strong crew were rescued by the American brig Pickering, a vessel of 154 tons from Plymouth, Massachusetts, 10 which is shown at anchor in the print. Two hundred of the rescued sailors spent many weeks on the island before another ship arrived to take them off.

The Dutch print shows manually driven copra mills, simple buildings and huts, loin-clothed slaves carrying between them a turtle, fish and baskets, and overdressed Europeans promenading with walking sticks. Dogs (one appears in the print), cats, pigs, poultry, bees, new plants and vegetables would have been introduced by this point. Rats had also been inadvertently introduced from visiting ships at an early stage and soon became a menace to bird life, which had not previously experienced predators.

The population in 1826 was 275, made up of 6 Europeans, only one of whom was female; 14 freemen, four of whom were female, and 9 were children; 218 slaves, of whom 17 were female and 13 children; and 37 lepers, 5 of whom were female and 2 were children. ¹¹ Most of the slaves would have been brought from Mozambique and Madagascar either directly or through Mauritius and Seychelles. As a lingua franca they would soon have adopted Creole, a dialect of French with African overtones, whose use was universal in France's tropical possessions and is still spoken by Mauritians working in Diego Garcia today.

In the tiny society of the islands and far from assistance in Mauritius, it does not seem from contemporary accounts that the overseers actively mistreated the slaves. The historian Charles Pridham, who visited the island soon after the abolition of slavery, noted that their set tasks involving the collection and preparation of coconuts were relatively light and their rations of rice and rum could be supplemented by what they could catch or raise for themselves. According to d'Unienville, the latter included fish caught at night by torchlight, birds knocked from their perches by long sticks, cipaye crabs, and of course coconuts. As elsewhere in slave societies the considerable imbalance between the sexes and the lack of a religious or moral framework gave rise to considerable promiscuity. Their overseers seem to have provided little better example. As Pridham priggishly remarked, 'Frenchmen when removed from the public eye, have a strong tendency to degenerate into savages'.12

$\overline{\mathrm{VI}}$

Abolition of Slavery

By specially in an age of laissez-faire or self-regulation, the new British administration in Mauritius might have been content to leave the planters to their own devices in far off Diego Garcia had it not been for the issue of slavery. The slave trade in the British Empire had been abolished in 1807. Sir Robert Farquhar, the first British Governor of Mauritius and its dependencies, made it clear to the new subjects of the Crown in a proclamation of 1815 that 'no doubt should exist that Acts of Parliament for the abolition of the Trade in Slaves extend to every, even the most remote and minute portion, of the Possession, Dominions and Dependencies of His Majesty's Government'. Complete abolition of slavery was already in the wind because of pressure from public opinion in Britain.

Nevertheless, despite the attentions of the Royal Navy, slaving to the islands directly from the East African coast probably persisted surreptitiously for some years. At the time of emancipation in the mid-1830s, there were still 33 slaves in Diego Garcia declared as having been born in either Mozambique or Madagascar.

It was unrest on the island because of problems between the planters, the slaves and the lepers (who were still being sent there) which led to the appointment of the first British official, a Mr Le Camus, in Diego Garcia in 1824. Le Camus was also charged with managing the anchorage at Diego Garcia and establishing a quarantine station for seafarers with infectious diseases on one of the islands at the mouth of the lagoon. For his services over a five-year period, Le Camus was granted the concession formerly held by Lapotaire, from whom he bought slaves, stock and buildings.

As in the rest of the British Empire the institution of slavery was formally abolished in Mauritius and its dependencies in August 1834. For a six-year transitional period, so that both masters and slaves could get used to the new situation, the ex-slaves were apprenticed to their former masters under various safeguards. The Act of Parliament ending slavery laid down that Governors of Colonies should appoint Special Commissioners with the powers of Justices of the Peace to implement its provisions. The remoteness of the Indian Ocean dependencies posed special difficulties for the emancipation process but the authorities in Mauritius showed great conscientiousness. A report to the Colonial Office in London in 1835 assured the latter that 'all that can be done to carry into effect the provisions of the Abolition Act as far as circumstances will possibly admit' was being done.

Mr George Harrison, designated as Assistant Protector of Slaves, visited the Chagos islands, including Diego Garcia, to supervise emancipation of the former slaves in 1835. There was a follow-up visit by Special Justice Charles Anderson in 1838 in the brig HMS Leveret. His instructions before departure pointed out that as the islands could be visited only occasionally, and his stay would be limited, his object was:

to acquire information with a view to ulterior improvement if required rather than temporary exercise of authority. You will explain to apprentices in the presence of their masters and overseers their positions under the Slavery Abolition Act... the work they are expected to do... the treatment they have a right to expect... and the nature and quantity of their provisions.³

Anderson was obviously a zealous person. He not only produced a highly critical report of conditions in Diego Garcia, which he described as 'decidedly inferior to those of labourers on the other islands I have visited',⁴ but also exceeded his instructions by intervening actively and ordering the reduction of the daily set tasks of the labourers which he regarded as too severe. He found that the food, consisting mainly of rice, and the clothing provided were unsatisfactory. He described the physical state of the labourers as deplorable, with many of them old, infirm or diseased, with several bad cases of leprosy. There was also a deplorable – a word Anderson obviously liked – deficiency of hospital accommodation and an entire want of medical aid.

On the positive side, Anderson found that the labour involved in coconut plantations was of a much milder nature than on the sugar plantations of Mauritius. Crime was also uncommon, which he attributed to the absence of strong liquor.

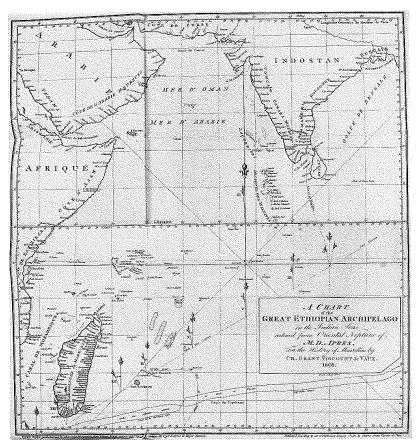

Anderson recommended that the proprietors of the plantations resident in Mauritius, who still included Monsieur Cayeux, 'ought to be compelled to make good the past deficiencies to their fullest extent and that other means should be adopted to prevent the repetition of such wilful neglect'. However, the Governor decided more judiciously that while he 'cannot but regret that the Act is not fully complied with... yet taking into consideration the locality, the precarious nature and infrequency of communications, he did not feel disposed to visit on the masters the whole penalties for breaches of the law.'6

At the time of Anderson's visit there were 135 apprentices, that is, freed slaves, on Diego Garcia. The three estates at East Point, Point Marianne and Minni Minni produced between them 36,000 veltes (a velte is about $\frac{8}{4}$ gallons or nearly 8 litres) of coconut oil annually. Anderson also noted that the island was much resorted to by whalers and vessels bound from England to India for supplies of water, firewood, pork and poultry.

The main difference after final emancipation in 1840, was that the now free labourers made a contract with their new employers in return for wages. Apart from this, life on the islands continued much as before. As Pridham remarked in 1845, 'the slaves on the Chagos Group are now free, that is to say nominally, though perhaps very little change would be found in their condition'. Unlike in Mauritius, where the abolition of slavery led to the increasing recruitment of indentured labour from India to work the sugar plantations, the workers in the islands had effectively nowhere else to go and no other occupation to turn to.

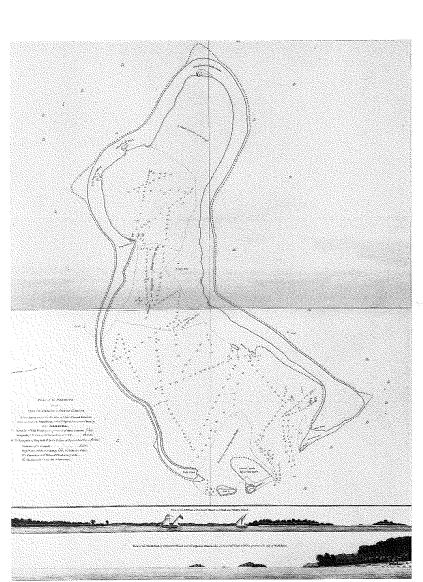

Late eighteenth-century map of the Indian Ocean – 'Neptune Oriental' – by Apres de Mannevillette. (India Office Collection, British Library)

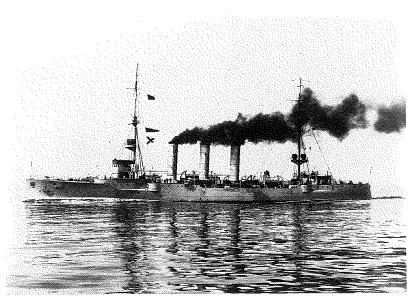

La Fontaine's map of Diego Garcia, published in 1784. (India Office Collection, British Library)

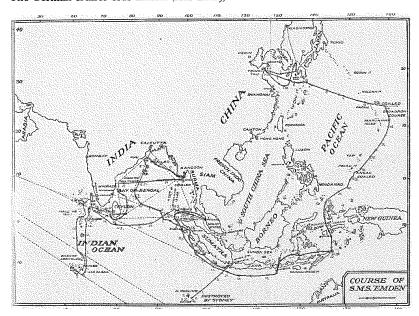

Captain Forrest's map of Diego Garcia, published in 1786.

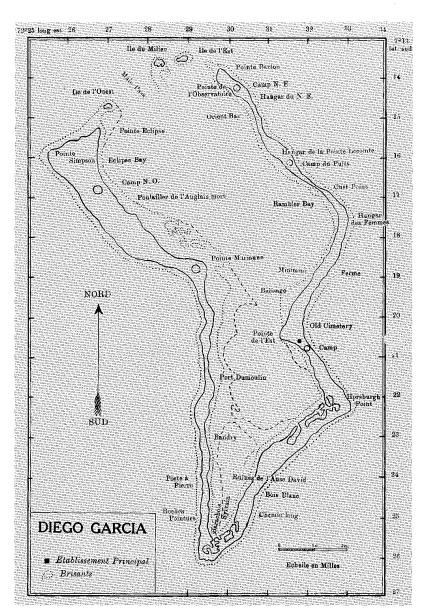

Lieutenant Archibald Blair's map of Diego Garcia, published in 1787. (India Office Collection, British Library)

The German cruiser SMS Emden. (MOD Library)

Dussercle's map of Diego Garcia in 1934. (From Archipel de Chagos: en mission by R. Dussercle)

Father Dussercle (seated left with beard) with British military party on Diego Garcia, 1942. (Fred Barnett – seated next to Dussercle with dog)

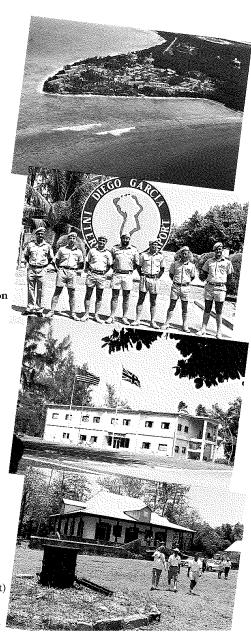

General view of the Downtown area. (NSF Fotolab, Diego Garcia)

BIOT Customs and Immigration officers at the airport.
(NSF Fotolab, Diego Garcia)

Two flags outside the headquarters building. (NSF Fotolab, Diego Garcia)

HRH Prince Edward (in hat) with Commissioner Harris (left) Inspecting old oil grinder at East Point, October 1992.
(NSF Fotolab, Diego Garcia)

VII

The Oil Island

fter emancipation had been implemented, direct British intervention in the affairs of the islands was limited for another quarter of a century. Subject to occasional inspections by captains of visiting Royal Navy ships and Special Commissioners, the islands were run effectively as private estates. The owners of the concessions, or jouissances in French, which was still the language in general use, were invariably absentees based in Mauritius.

Two significant developments during this period were the change in the system of tenure and the amalgamation of the plantations. From 1865 the holders of the concessions were able to transform them into permanent holdings against payment based on estimates of the amount of oil produced. In 1883 the three separate existing plantations on Diego Garcia at East Point, Minni Minni and Point Marianne were merged into the 'Société Huilière de Diégo et Péros' (the Diego and Peros Oil Company), which continued to run them, along with those in the outer islands, until 1962.

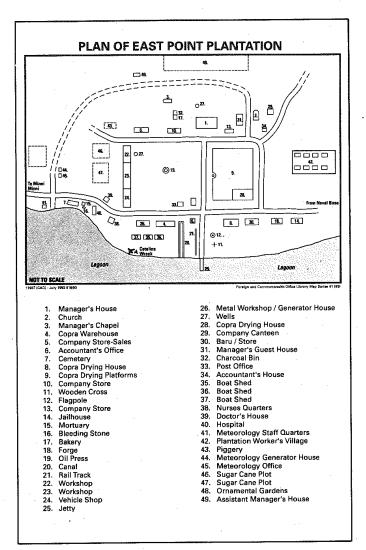

The running of the plantation was in the hands of an administrateur, or manager, assisted by a number of undermanagers. These were normally whites from Mauritius. Much of the supervision of the labourers recruited from Mauritius, Madagascar and Mozambique was left to black commandeurs or overseers. Occasionally there was an administrator who by his personality and energy stood out from the run of the mill. One such was James Spurs who ran East Point Plantation as a benevolent despot in the 1870s, among other things showing concern for conservation by forbidding the killing of seabirds, turtles and land crabs.

By the lights of the time, and it should be remembered that slavery persisted in the USA until 1864 and in Brazil until 1888, the management seems to have been reasonably enlightened and humane and the life of the labourers tolerable. Typical wages were 40 dollars a month for an undermanager, 10–14 dollars for an overseer, 5 dollars for craftsmen such as blacksmiths, 4 dollars for field-hands and 3 dollars for the women who shelled the coconuts. The workers were expected to put in a couple of hours of voluntary work on Sunday mornings, known as the corvée, to clean up the settlement area and tend the animals.

Huts in the 'camp' for accommodation, and basic rations, were provided. Rations consisted typically of $12^{1}/_{2}$ lbs of rice a week, Ilb of salt a month, and 'as gratification' a glass of rum or 'calou' a day 'drunk at the tub as in Her Majesty's Navy.' and an ounce of tobacco a week. Women with babies were entitled to a bottle of coconut oil a week. The labourers supplemented these rations by raising pigs and chickens and by cultivating fruit and vegetables in gardens enclosed to protect them from the depredations of donkeys and crabs. Fish also varied the diet. Such was the abundance of fish that it was said by a visiting official that 'the inhabitants can literally walk into the water and in a few minutes get a supply as would be a banquet for many of a far superior class in Mauritius'.²

There were company shops at each of the plantations, selling basic items such as kettles, pans, hooks and needles and small luxuries such as wine, coffee and eau-de-cologne. There was free, if basic, medical care provided for the treatment of the sick and injured. A stock of medicines was dispensed by a medical attendant whose qualifications seem to

Plan of East Point Plantation

(Charles Borman and Foreign and Commonwealth Office Library)

List of Prices at which Arti Minimini-Estate, Dieg retail prices of the sam	go Garcia,	, toge	ether with the Articles.		Price in Mau- ritius.	Remaks.
Sugar per lb. Coffe do. Soffe do. Salt Pork do. Salt Pork do. Soap per bar of 2½ lbs. Wine per bottle Liqueurs do. Conjon bleu per piece Coutil per aune Paliacats each Grey Calico per piece. White Calico do. Patna each Cooured handkerchiefs each Thread per bobbin Buttons per dozen Needles do. Thimbles each Straw hats (Seychelles) each Felt hats each Spoons do. Forks do. Plates do. Common round dishes each Marmites each Marmites each Marmites each Marmites each Tobacco per stick each Vermouth per bottle. Fish Hooks large each Do. small do. Tin pots each Tin mugs each Padlocks Grease per lb. Graton do.	0 121 0 0 40 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	$ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $ $	Made on the Island. Do. do. 24 yards. 100 yards.

List of articles for sale at Diego Garcia Plantation shop, 1875.

malingering and too much strong liquor.

The population of Diego Garcia fluctuated between 350 and 550 during this period, with additional labour being imported as necessary. The birthrate on the islands was low. There remained a great imbalance between the sexes with women rarely constituting more than 20 per cent. Visitors frequently commented on this, attributing 'the sad state of morality prevailing to the inequality of the members of the sexes. Marriage is unknown and all the women appear to live in a state of concubinage.'3

Occasional though they were, the visits to Diego Garcia by British officials, either Special Commissioners such as Commander E. Hardinge of HMS Persian or, from 1864, by District Magistrates, such as J. H. Ackroyd and E. Pakenham Brooks, were not perfunctory efforts. Their standard directive from the Governor of Mauritius was threefold: to ensure that no one had been brought to the island against his or her own will, that no one was being kept there against his or her will, and that no one was being treated with cruelty or oppression or illegally detained. They probed with surprising intrusiveness into the island's affairs and their painstaking reports give fascinating glimpses of life on the island. They clearly saw it as their duty to guard against tyrannous behaviour on behalf of the management, which could all too easily have sprung up. They were not slow to upbraid and punish any such manifestations. Pakenham Brooks, who paid a visit as Special Magistrate in 1875, handed out sizable fines both to an under-manager at Point Marianne for striking a labourer and to James Spurs, the Manager at East Point, for unjustifiably imprisoning three labourers without sufficient cause. The management at Point Marianne and Minni Minni were also instructed to provide sick-bays for their workforce. Prices and weights and measures in the Company's shops were carefully checked and the labourers' accommodation, the hospital and the jail measured to ensure that they fulfilled minimum specifications.

The labourers were not slow in coming forward with complaints against their employers which mainly related to rations and hours of work. This was not always to their advantage. In one case, a labourer was fined for bringing a frivolous and unfounded complaint. There were also disputes between the labourers to adjudicate, usually relating to petty thefts and assaults but occasionally involving suicide and murder. Pakenham Brooks had to investigate one such 'atrocious crime' committed by Janvier, a 'Malagash', that is, a native of Madagascar, who apparently acted as some sort of voodoo doctor. According to the allegations he had 'bewitched' a pregnant woman called Laure, and in presiding at her delivery succeeded not only in killing the unfortunate woman but her twin babies as well. Pakenham Brooks went so far as to exhume the body but the state of decomposition was too advanced. The accused and witnesses were sent to Port Louis for the trial, where it is interesting to note that the Magistrate found Janvier not guilty.

Various attempts were made in the mid-nineteenth century to diversify the economy by introducing new crops and livestock. Maize or Indian corn, cotton, tobacco and citrus trees were tried and found to grow well. Captain Robert Moresby of the Indian Navy had planted breadfruit trees from Ceylon in 1837, which still survive at East Point. His survey of Diego Garcia incidentally produced charts which remained in use for a century and led to the naming of two promentories on the island after two of his officers, Lieutenants Simpson and Cust. Cattle, goats and sheep were also brought in for a while. Donkeys, introduced to drive the copra-grinding mills, became a permanent feature of the island from the 1840s. However, none of the agricultural experiments was pursued, probably because the well-established exploitation of the coconut, which now began to be cultivated systematically, continued to provide a steady and reliable income. In 1864, for revenue purposes, the estate at East Point was assessed as producing 51,000 gallons of coconut oil, Point Marianne 30,000 gallons, and Minni Minni 18,000 gallons.

Gilbert Bourne, who visited Diego Garcia a few years later under the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society, gave a comprehensive account of the process of extracting the oil:

Each palm will bear an abundance of coconuts for four or five years in succession, after which it remains comparatively unfruitful for another three years or more. The nuts when ripe fall on the ground, whence they are gathered by parties of men sent out in boats for the purpose. The daily task of each labourer is to collect, husk and deliver at the habitation 350 coconuts per diem. This is performed in a surprisingly short space of time when the nuts have not to be carried far by boat. Each party of men is in charge of a commander or sarang, who measures out a piece of ground on which each labourer is to work. The labourer collects the required number of coconuts into a heap, and then sticking a short broad-bladed spear into the ground, he takes each coconut, spits it upon the spear, and in a couple of wrenches has stripped off the husk and thrown the nut on one side.

On their arrival at the habitation the nuts are counted on the beach, and delivered to the women whose duty it is to break them and extract the kernel. The daily task of each woman is to break 1300 coconuts in the day, but I am told that they are able to break as many as 2500 in ten hours. The kernels, which are now known as copra, are then exposed to the sun in heaps, to allow an incipient fermentation setting in, but are carefully protected from the rain by a sort of pent-house on wheels, which can be run over the heaps at a minute's notice. After an exposure of two or three days, 250lbs of copra are delivered to each mill, this being the amount which each mill-labourer is required to grind daily; from it about 30 gallons of oil are produced. The mills used are of a most primitive pattern. The body of the mill is a hollow cylinder of hard wood, in which an upright beam of the same material is made to rotate, the motive power being supplied by three or four donkeys harnessed to a long horizontal beam, which is connected to the upright by a chain, and is weighted at the far end by two or three large lumps of coral. The copra is put in at the top of the cylinder, and the oil escapes by a hole at the bottom. The oil is merely strained through cloths and allowed to settle for a few days, after which it is run off into large vats, and is ready to be collected in casks and shipped for export. All the oil is exported to Mauritius by the oil company's ship, which calls three times a year at Diego Garcia.⁴

46 Peak of Limuria

So well known were the Chagos for their principal product that they became known as the 'Oil Islands'. The middle of the century must have been a prosperous one for the coconut oil industry. Several of the most substantial buildings surviving in the East Point Plantation have the date 1864 inscribed on them. At that time on the other side of the world, the American Civil War was raging.

VIII

The Coaling Station Interlude

he 1880s saw an intrusion of the outside world into Diego Garcia unparalleled until the establishment of the permanent naval facilities in the 1970s. The introduction of steam ships, which increasingly replaced the old sailing ships from the 1860s, gave rise to the need to establish strategically placed coaling stations along their routes. The newly constructed Suez Canal opened in 1869. For the routes to Australia and the Far East, Diego Garcia in the centre of the Indian Ocean seemed ideally situated. As Lionel Cox, Acting Procurator-General of Mauritius, noted:

the advantages of Diego Garcia as a coaling station are now evidently well recognised... There is little doubt that situated as this is on the straight line between the entrance to the Red Sea and Cape Leeuwin (on the South west Coast of Australia), and possessing a good harbour, it will become more and more important.¹

In 1882 the Orient and Pacific Steam Navigation Company relocated its coaling station for the Australia run from Aden to Diego Garcia. Messrs Lund and Company also established itself. Traffic built up and by the second half of 1883 there were coaling visits by 34 large steamers as well as by two Royal Navy warships. Lund and Company, whose agent was George Worsell, kept its coal on hulks off East Point and ashore there. The coal was sold for £2 10 shillings a ton and was hauled by labourers hired from the plantation.

The Orient Company appointed James Spurs, the former manager of East Point, as its permanent agent. He, with characteristic energy, set about bringing in the latest technology for its operations. The Company's coal was kept mostly on hulks, initially off Minni Minni and later in the lee of Barton Point, accounting for the name Orient Bay, but some also on shore at East Point. To transfer the coal to the visiting ships 12 iron lighters were brought in sections and assembled on the spot by artisans from Greece and England. A 35 horse-power tug was used to pull the lighters and the coal was hoisted into the ship by special steam appliances. Spurs based himself on East Island and his work force on Middle Island which was leased to the Orient Company. The remains of the buildings, wells and some of the equipment can still be seen on these islands. The latter included 'a large condensing apparatus which will furnish a sufficient supply of wholesome distilled, filtered and aerated water for the use of the manager and labourers."2

The need for safe navigation of the lagoon by ships calling to coal led to the carrying out of an accurate and detailed survey in 1885 by Captain the Honourable E. P. Vereker, in HMS Rambler, after which the bay north of Minni Minni is named. There was also a plan to place lighthouses at Horsburgh Point and West Island. This was never implemented, though temporary lights on posts were rigged up.

Labour proved a problem. Initially 40 Somalis were brought from Port Said but they proved unreliable and troublesome, and were sent back. They were replaced by labour from Mauritius who did not prove entirely satisfactory either, and there was an abortive project to recruit Chinese instead. Imported labour seems to have been behind a near insurrection in 1883 described by Bourne when the residence of the manager at East Point, Mr Leconte, was besieged by a

Luckily for him they were as cowardly as they were insolent, and he was able to keep them at bay by presenting a revolver, until he had succeeded in reducing them to a more reasonable state of mind.³

The crews and passengers of the visiting ships, carrying such diverse elements as migrants to Australia and Moslem Javanese pilgrims on their way to Mecca, also contributed to the Wild West atmosphere on Diego Garcia in the 1880s. Those on board the ships were not meant to disembark, for quarantine reasons, but this instruction was often ignored, causing havoc ashore. In February 1884 for example, Captain Raymond of the Windsor Castle, while in a drunken fit landed at East Point with 16 men with loaded guns; had the Union Jack hoisted on the top of a tree in front of the manager's house; paraded his men; had a volley fired at the house (fortunately unoccupied), patrolled about, informed the manager that he had taken possession of the island in the name of the British Government and appointed the Manager Mr Leconte in writing as Lieutenant Governor.⁴

The plantation workers too became infected with the general air of indiscipline. They were induced on board the ships and administered strong drink. There were attempts to desert, some of them successful. Two labourers stowed away on an Orient Company steamer and got as far as Port Said in Egypt.

Visiting British officials noted the deterioration in law and order with concern and were not themselves immune from its manifestations. The memorably named Mr Ivanoff Dupont was exasperated by the lack of respect shown him by the labourers of the Orient Company on Middle Island but, especially as some of those concerned were said to be armed, decided that discretion was the better part of valour. He reported somewhat plaintively:

the attitude of these men was impertinent and provoking to the extreme, and they would have met with severe punishment had I the means of enforcing my judgement. But I had not the assistance of policemen, which I would have asked for before leaving Mauritius had I known the state of insubordination in which I found some of the labourers of the Orient Company, and I considered it wiser to let them go unpunished.⁵

As a result of Dupont's report, the authorities in Mauritius concluded there was a need for an officer stationed in Diego Garcia 'who will make all, high or low, feel that they are living under the authority of the Queen and that differences are not to be adjusted by means of sticks and knives and revolvers'. 6 In response to the unprecedented threats to law and order it was decided in 1885 to set up a police post at Minni Minni at the surprisingly large contemporary cost of £1000 and with a sizable complement of an inspector, a Mr V. A. Butler, sergeant and six constables. The inspector's request for a steam launch was however turned down by the Colonial Secretary on the grounds of expense. Indeed the cost of the police operation and the disinclination of the Imperial Government, the authorities in Mauritius and the companies operating in the island to pay for it led to the withdrawal of the police presence in 1888. Although Special Constables were appointed as needed, it was not until 1973 that regular British policemen were reintroduced to Diego Garcia.

In any case, the use of the island as a coaling station did not last beyond the end of the decade. The introduction of larger ships with a longer range rendered the use of Diego Garcia superfluous. In 1888 a visiting official, Mr A. Boucherat, reported that:

it does not seem at all certain that Lund's coaling company will continue its operations at Diego Garcia. The Orient Company no longer have their coaling station on East Island. The Agent has left for Colombo, having sold the greater part of the stock.7

What happened to any remains of the coal stocks is unclear. Perhaps some of it litters the floor of the lagoon.

After this shortlived brush with the developing modern world, the island returned to its sleepy existence as a plantation economy. Developments of local importance included the erection of a chapel at East Point in 1895, and the building of a light railway, whose remains can still be seen, to carry produce to the new jetty. More significantly, in the early 1900s coconut oil gave way to copra as the main product. This was partly because oil was falling into disuse as a means of lighting and partly because of the introduction of new and more efficient techniques to dry copra using a combination of solar power and furnaces fed by husks of coconuts.

Partir C'est Mourir un Peu: Life Between the Wars

n the 1930s and early 1940s a French Roman Catholic priest Father Roger Dussercle, a native of Normandy, paid a number of visits to the Chagos which he described in several books which he had published at his own expense in Mauritius. Photographs taken by a British soldier Sergeant Barnett during the Second World War show Dussercle as bluff, well-built, with a black bushy beard and sporting a pithhelmet. He was sent by the Archbishop Leen of Port Louis to minister to, as the Archbishop put it, 'those poor souls who have till now been more or less abandoned'. Writing in 1846, Pridham had described the spiritual state of the inhabitants as follows: 'there exists no means of instruction among these poor people, either religious or secular; they had scarcely an idea of a Supreme Being." Other nineteenthcentury visitors frequently made similar observations. Forty years after Pridham, Bourne observed: 'no priest is resident on the island, nor is there any arrangement for religious or other education.'2 As Pridham had commented, 'Here then is a field, however small or obscure, for some missionary.'8

Previous pastoral visits to the islands seem to have been few and far between before Dussercle's mission. The first recorded is by the intrepid Bishop Vincent, the Anglican Bishop of Mauritius, who made the difficult voyage to the Chagos in 1859. He found there 'a good proportion of Protestants', including some who could repeat the Lord's Prayer and the Creed in English, and he carried out several baptisms. The Bishop thought the islands 'a most promising field of labour'.4 There were at least two visits by Roman Catholic priests in 1875 and 1884. It is doubtful whether the nuances of denominations made much sense to the islanders, although one of Dussercle's aims was to eliminate Protestantism from the island, a goal foiled by the stubbornness of one particular woman who resisted all his blandishments to convert.

Setting sail from Port Louis in the 380-ton three-masted barque the Diego in November 1933, Father Dussercle took 15 days to reach the islands. His arrival, as he stepped ashore from the motor boat Marshal Foch, caused, like all visits from the outside, a great stir. He found a community and a way of life in many respects little changed from earlier accounts written in the nineteenth century. About 60 per cent of the population were now 'children of the islands' or Ilois, who had been born and bred there. They wore a 'national dress' of striped material, patterned like that of mattress covers, and spoke a Creole similar to that of Mauritius. Dussercle describes them as like big children, simple and amenable. Their diet consisted of rice, pork, chicken and fish, with wine and tobacco as simple luxuries. With all their immediate needs taken care of, they were, according to Dussercle, 'the happiest people in the world from the material point of view'.5

Dussercle described his pastoral duties in lyrical terms. He took the children through their catechism under the shade of a giant takamaka tree at Point Marianne, and on the beach at East Point in order to catch the breeze. He administered First Communion to young and old confirmants. He celebrated Christmas midnight mass under the stars at an altar decorated with palm fronds and garlands of flowers which was set up near the jetty at East Point. Rich, strong island voices sang familiar carols such as 'Come all ye faithful' and 'Midnight, Christians'. Dussercle preached good sermons in Creole, drawing on his deep familiarity with the islanders' language and folk stories. He warned of the danger of death which came suddenly 'like a thief at the gate', or like 'brother hare', and which, if not prepared for, could lead to an eternity in hell, stewing in hot spice and salt. After the service the entire island population processed round the settlement from lagoon-side to ocean-side.

However, there were what Dussercle regarded as persistent moral problems, especially a deplorable tendency for couples to live together without benefit of formal marriage. The local description of this practice was to be 'married from behind the kitchen'. Dussercle said that in that case these were the 'Devil's kitchens'. He spent much of his visits to the island trying to persuade couples to regularise their situations but with only limited success. It may be that the women, who were still in a minority, found it an advantage not to be bound to one man. Apart from this, it was, as before, the labour recruited from outside who were seen by Dussercle as a disruptive influence, possibly because they were less inclined to accept the paternalistic system run by the Oil Company.

As before, copra was exported three or four times a year to Mauritius for processing. But some coconut oil was still produced for local use by primitive mills driven by donkey-power. Although some people lived at Point Marianne and Minni Minni, all copra processing had been concentrated at East Point. The set-up at East Point was typical of the other 'Oil Islands', with a manager's residence or château, a chapel, which was built in its present form during this period after the existing one was flattened by a tree in a storm in October 1932, a shop, copra drying sheds, an oil mill, boatsheds, a sail-maker's shed, a workshop, hospital and jail. All these buildings can still be seen at the East Point Plantation site. The Manager's private chapel behind the Plantation House was reconsecrated by Dussercle in 1933, as a stone set in the wall proclaims. The jail contained four cells. During Dussercle's second visit, three of these were occupied by two men, who had killed a donkey to use its skin for a drum, and a young woman who had been cheeky to a supervisor.

A typical labourer's hut was divided into rooms by partitions made of coconut fronds. In the sleeping quarters were straw mattresses, raised above the ground on short stilts. Tattered clothes were scattered on the floor or hung up by strings. The living room was plastered with picture postcards and greeting cards, often with representations of couples in amorous poses. On cheap shelves were knick-knacks, decorative plates and occasionally a cheap and scratchy gramophone. Finally, there were drums for use in dancing, which was presumably what the inhabitants of the jail had in mind for the wretched donkey's skin.

Sports days and picnics were part of island life when it came to holidays and other celebrations. Dussercle records a Christmas afternoon of donkey races, sack races, bobbing for pieces of bread on strings, tug of war and swimming competitions. Dances were also held to the music of accordions, mouth organs and a sort of one-stringed harp. A dance which gave Dussercle particularly grave cause for concern was that typical of the islands, the Séga. No doubt because of the Mozambican origin of many of the islanders, this dance seems to have come from central Mozambique, where a similar dance exists to this day.6 It was regarded by Dussercle and other European visitors as a throwback to African roots and too wild and abandoned for civilized tastes, accompanied by wild drumming, stamping of feet and suggestive movements as well as generous infusions of rum. The dance, held around a fire on a beach or in a clearing, went on for several hours and became increasingly frenzied and reportedly often ended in fornication. The islanders were very attached to the dance. An attempt by a manager in the Salomons to ban Séga in 1937 led to an insurrection. A more decorous version of the dance is still performed in Mauritius.

The Séga was not the only African survival which caused Dussercle concern. Distinctly non-Christian death ceremonies, intended to ensure that the ghost would not haunt the living, continued to be practised. Reports of these had cropped up before. In October 1886 a certain Louis Fidèle had been imprisoned for 'practising witchcraft in the Cemetery'. Dussercle described these practices as 'savage, barbarous and often bestial ... such as one would only expect to find in the middle of Africa'. According to him the rites, which went on for eight days after the death, involved 'orgies, disgusting talk, witchcraft, casting spells, hellish invocations, devilish incantations, lascivious dancing, immoral getups, frenetic leaping off coconut trees on to the roofs of huts, and all accompanied by revolting acts committed on the corpse'.6 Having given this lurid description Dussercle said that he was not prepared to give more detail in order not to shock normal sensibilities!

Dussercle made the Chagos his special field of labour and, despite suffering shipwreck with the Diego on Eagle Island in June 1935, continued to serve the inhabitants of Diego Garcia through periodic visits up to and during the Second World War. He also ministered to the military garrison stationed on Diego Garcia during the war and presided at the funerals of those soldiers who are buried at Point Marianne cemetery.

Dussercle loved the islands and their people. As he quoted on his departure, 'Partir c'est mourir un peu' (to leave is to die a little).⁷ Many have felt the same on leaving Diego for the last time.

XII

The End of an Era

ources of information about Diego Garcia become more vivid during the period between the end of the Second World War and the final closure of the plantations in 1971. In addition to written accounts, there are now numerous photographs and even a colour movie film. As a result we can form a clear view of life on the island as the plantation era drew to a close. Obviously the pattern of life had still changed little since the nineteenth century, an amazing and perhaps unique survival of 'Gone with the Wind' plantation life.

Sir Robert Scott was Governor of Mauritius and visited Diego Garcia as part of a wider tour of inspection of the 'Oil Islands' in October 1955. What might have been simply a routine chore by a senior Colonial Office official produced a minor literary masterpiece. Scott was clearly enchanted by the islands and some years later transformed the diary he had kept and the observations he had jotted down into Limuria, a masterly and beautifully written survey of their history and their then state.

Scott arrived at Diego Garcia in the corvette HMS Killisport. East Point Plantation was at the peak of its development, set in a crescent of lawns and flowering shrubs. Scott described East Point as having 'the look of a French coastal village, miraculously transferred whole to this shore',¹ with the manager's château, the chapel, white-washed buildings, thatched cottages and even lamp-standards all grouped around a village green. A substantial portion of the then 680 population of the island turned out on the pier to welcome him, waving Union Jacks and creating a fête-like atmosphere. The visit of the Governor was a major event.

According to Scott, for every human being there was at least a score of other creatures, chickens, ducks, dogs, cats, donkeys, horses, pigs. And for each creature there were thousands of flies, which could blanket a horse to the extent of transforming it into a piebald. The smell of drying copra was everywhere. As Scott observed:

the principal characteristic of Diego Garcia is a prodigal fecundity, with the useful forms of life continually under pressure from the useless. The vegetation thrusts, sprawls, creeps, intertwines and shoots upward and sideways.²

(This vegetable vigour is the bane of efforts currently under way to preserve the East Point Plantation in a recognisable form.) Among the trees acrobatic rats disported themselves like squirrels.

In Scott's day, there was a motorable track both up to Barton Point and round the bottom of the island. There were a number of hamlets scattered around both arms of the island with now forgotten names and even locations. To the north of Minni Minni were Balisage, Camp du Puits and North East Camp; between East Point and Point Marianne lay Barochois, Roches Pointes, and Port Dumoulin; and to the north of Point Marianne, Noroit. Scott describes the islanders as dour and hard-headed compared with those of the other 'Oil Islands'. Like their present-day successors in Diego Garcia, they played soccer with an obvious and noisy consciousness that the match was for real and in earnest.

There had been some diversification of production on the

But exploitation of the coconut continued to provide the staple crop. Seven thousand nuts were needed to produce 1 ton of copra which in turn produced 11 hundredweight of crude oil. The film referred to above was made by the Colonial Film Unit, probably during Scott's visit. In scenes remarkably reminiscent of Bourne's account a century before, it shows in colour what was essentially an eighteenthand nineteenth-century plantation society functioning in the middle of the twentieth century. The labourers are seen collecting fallen coconuts which they speared with cutlasses and tossed with great skill and rapidity into large baskets carried on their heads. As in Bourne's day the coconuts were then husked among the coconut groves on a stake-like device stuck in the ground. From there the nuts were taken by donkey and horsedrawn carts to East Point where women were waiting to break them into pieces with pestles and then, with the help of children, to chop them into even smaller bits. These were then spread out to dry on large concrete beds which, in the event of rain, could be covered in a matter of moments by corrugated-iron shelters on wheels. Finally, the copra was dried in hot-air chambers heated from below by burning coconut husks. Most of the dried copra was then exported by boat to Mauritius for the extraction of oil for cooking and soap. However, a small amount of oil for local needs was produced on the spot in a primitive mill composed of a beam in a large metal drum propelled by donkey power. These mills can still be seen at East Point. What was left over after the oil had been extracted was known as 'poonac' and was fed to pigs and poultry.

The same film also shows a weather balloon being released at the meteorological station at East Point, still a key element in particular for cyclone forecasting in that pre-satellite age. The film gives a glimpse of the range of physical types among the islanders, from African to Malagasy to Creole, as they went about their work, propelling punt-like craft in the lagoon with long poles, and hanging up octopuses to dry to provide a culinary feast.

Neither the islanders nor indeed Scott could have had any inkling that the plantation era was soon to end, although his book contains some prophetic remarks about the artificial nature of the small society on Diego Garcia and the uncertainty of its long-term viability. The imbalance in sexes, with women in a distinct minority, and a low birth-rate characteristic of marginal populations, persisted. The drift away from the island to the bright lights and wider prospects of Mauritius was quickening. The population fell by 50 per cent between 1952 and 1962. As a result, labour to help work the plantations had to be imported from the Seychelles. By the mid-1960s imported labour outnumbered those born in Diego Garcia by two to one. Previously in the history of the Chagos Group, other islands had been abandoned as a result of commercial decisions; Three Brothers in the 1850s and the Egmonts and Eagle Island as recently as the 1930s. The events soon to take place on Diego Garcia were therefore by no means unprecedented.

Dependent on a single major staple crop, the plantation economy on Diego Garcia was in any case vulnerable and its future doubtful. By the early 1960s, the copra industry was in serious decline world-wide. As Scott put it:

a population was drafted to the lesser Dependencies in the first place because there was work for it there. It moved from group to group as opportunities for paid work expanded and contracted. It was not a natural island society, and even today [1960], it shows little inclination to exploit the natural bounties of the island.³

Certainly no community could have survived the closure of the plantations. So even had the outside world not again projected itself into the islands, the long-term continuance of the way of life there must have been in doubt. History sadly shows a catalogue of such evacuations elsewhere in the world; St Kilda in the North Atlantic off the Scottish coast for example, and perhaps eventually Pitcairn in the Pacific.

Annex 137

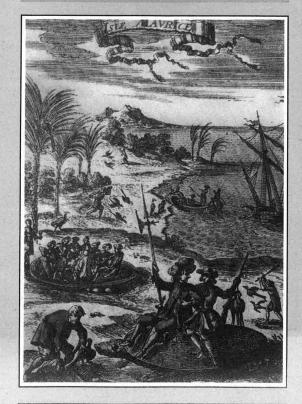

J. Addison & K. Hazareesingh, A New History of Mauritius (1993)

J. ADDISON & K. HAZAREESINGH

A NEW HISTORY OF

MAURITIUS

Revised Edition

EDITIONS DE L'OCEAN INDIEN

A NEW HISTORY OF MAURITIUS

John ADDISON and K. HAZAREESINGH

Revised Edition

EDITIONS DE L'OCEAN INDIEN

© J. Addison and K. Hazareesingh (1984)

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted, in any form or by any means, without permission.

Published in 1984 by

Macmillan Publishers
London and Basingstoke
Companies and representatives in Lagos, Zaria, Manzini, Nairobi, Singapore, Hong Kong, Delhi, Dublin, Auckland, Melbourne, Tokyo, New York, Washington, Dallas

ISBN 0 333 34026 4

Reprinted in Mauritius (1989) with the authorisation of Macmillan Publishers. 1st Reprint : Kin Keong Printing (1996)

Revised edition: 1993

Published by Editions de l'Océan Indien Stanley, Rose-Hill Mauritius

ISBN 99903-0-166-2

CHAPTER 1200

Introduction: geographical background and early exploration

Mauritius is a predominantly green island with a considerable area of rocky volcanic mountains. These run roughly from north-east to south-west and rise to a height of well over 2000 feet in the south. Some of the sharply rising peaks look much higher than this and the land in their vicinity is so steep and rocky that neither crops nor any other vegetation will grow there. The lower slopes of the mountains are covered with forests and grassland. Most of the rest of the island, nearly 40 per cent of its area, is today covered with sugar cane fields which give it its dominant soft green colour. The soil is fertile and water supplies are good; but over the years vast quantities of rocks and boulders have been moved to make way for sugar cultivation. Mauritius possesses almost nothing of value in the way of natural resources or raw materials. It lies in the path of destructive cyclones which periodically cause widespread devastation to crops and property.

Those who have visited the island over the years have often depicted it in glowing and idyllic terms. In 1629 Thomas Herbert, an English writer and one of the first Englishmen to visit Mauritius, described it as 'an island paradise', a phrase used today in many tourist advertisements. In the nineteenth century the American author Mark Twain once said that God made Mauritius first and then modelled Heaven on the island. The fact that it took so long for men and women to settle there in any significant numbers, however, suggests that it was more difficult to live there permanently than to pay a short visit as an early 'tourist' or member of a visiting ship's crew.

Today Mauritius is one of the world's most densely populated countries and its population is one of the world's most culturally mixed. Yet the island had no indigenous people and it is less than 400 years since the first of its inhabitants settled there. It is very isolated: 500 miles from Madagascar, over 1000 miles from the nearest point on the East African coast and 2000 miles from India. It is this isolation which partly explains why it remained uninhabited for so long.

The first people to attempt to settle in Mauritius were the Dutch in the seventeenth century. The history of Mauritius effectively begins with these Dutch settlers of the seventeenth century. Long before that date, nearly a thousand years before the birth of Christ, it is possible that Phoenician sailors, setting out from what is today the Gulf of Aqaba, may have sailed into the southern parts of the Indian Ocean and visited Mauritius. If they did, however, we have no records to confirm it. In the fourth and fifth centuries A.D. Polynesians may have visited the island in their canoes on their way to settle in Madagascar. Again, however, there is no proof that they did so.

Arab traders

It is necessary to move on to the end of the first millenium A.D. before we have reliable evidence that traders were active in the vicinity of Mauritius. Arab merchants certainly began trading with the East African coast as far south as Mozambique and the Comoro Islands well before 1000 A.D. By mingling with African peoples on that coast they built up a new culture and civilisation known as the Swahili culture. This was the product of the mixing of Arab and African people, their languages and their ways of life.

Arab and Swahili traders visited the Comoro Islands and Madagascar and from the evidence of early maps they also seem to have visited the Seychelles and the Mascarenes. These two groups of islands are marked on medieval Arab maps. Rodrigues is called Dina arabi, Mauritius is Dina mozare and Réunion is Dina margabim. None of these people attempted to settle on any of these islands. They were first and foremost traders and since the islands were all uninhabited, there were no possibilities for trading. Moreover it was dangerous for the Arab and Swahili sailors to venture regularly as far into the Indian Ocean as the Mascarene islands in their small ships, the triangular-sailed 'dhows' or 'sambouks'.

An Arab dhow

Eventually the Arabs controlled a rich trading empire stretching in a great arc around the shores of the Indian Ocean, from the East African coast to Indonesia via Arabia, Persia, India and Malaysia. In carrying on their trade with this empire they kept as close as possible to the main coastline, though they were aware of, and used, the steady seasonal monsoon winds for voyages across the Indian Ocean.

It was the desire of Christian Europe, for a combination of reasons, to attack and eventually take over this Muslim trading empire that led the European powers for the first time into the Indian Ocean. For the first Europeans, the Portuguese, it was, partly at least, a religious crusading spirit which lay behind their voyages of exploration and conquest in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The most powerful motive, however, which drove others to follow, was the prospect of profit from the valuable trade of the area.

Portuguese exploration and trade

In 1498 the Portuguese explorer Vasco da Gama rounded the Cape of Good Hope and entered the Indian Ocean. He called at some of the Arab-Swahili cities as he sailed northwards up the East African coast and from Malindi an Arab pilot showed him the way to Goa in India. In the next few years other Portuguese expeditions followed. The East African cities from Sofala, in modern Mozambique, to Mogadishu, near the Horn of Africa in modern Somalia, were taken over, if necessary by force. In 1510 the Portuguese captured Goa and in 1511 Malacca in Malaysia. The way to the Spice Islands and China lay open to them.

In East Africa they eventually abandoned the northern section of the coast and Mozambique became their main base. Their route to India was via the Mozambique Channel. It was known as the 'inner route'. Though their ships, whether the light 'caravels' or the heavier 'carracks', were more suited to voyages in the open oceans than the Arab 'dhows', the Portuguese followed the traditional monsoon routes to and from India which had been used by Arab sailors for centuries. The Portuguese were skilled navigators, many of them trained in the famous school of navigation founded by Prince Henry the Navigator at Sagres in the south-west of Portugal. Their captains charted the Indian Ocean. They 'discovered' Madagascar, the Comoros and the Seychelles within ten years of rounding the Cape. For a short time they attempted to establish a base on the Comoros but the islanders, who were staunch Muslims, were hostile and the Portuguese withdrew. Fernandez Pereira sighted Mauritius in 1507 and gave it the name of his ship, Cerne. The island and its near neighbours were given the name of the Mascarenes after another Portuguese captain, Pero Mascarenhas. The number of islands with Portuguese names in the area is an indication of the importance of the Portuguese contribution to the exploration of the Indian Ocean.

A Portuguese caravel of the fifteenth century

Dutch traders

In spite of this, the Portuguese showed no interest in colonising any of the small groups of islands. They soon had more than enough to do in merely holding on to the scattered bases which protected their new trade routes. Before 1600 the Dutch and the English had followed the Portuguese into the Indian Ocean. They both established East India Companies, the English in 1600 and the Dutch in 1602, to monopolise the trade of the two countries with India and the vast area between the Cape of Good Hope and Cape Horn. In 1598 a Dutch admiral, van Warwyck, called at Mauritius with a small expedition and took possession of the island in the name of the Dutch. They called it Mauritius in honour of Prince Maurice of Nassau, a member of the House of Orange and Stadtholder of Holland. At the time the Dutch were in rebellion against the Spanish and Portugal was ruled by the King of Spain. Portuguese ships and trade and Portuguese possessions were, therefore, targets for the Dutch ships in the Indian Ocean. Though they had claimed Mauritius as a Dutch possession, the Dutch made no attempt to settle or colonise the island for some years. In the meantime English, Dutch and, soon, French ships occasionally used the island as a port of call for their vessels. They were all interested in trade rather than territory at that time.

Maurice of Nassau, Prince of Orange 1567-1625

During the first half of the seventeenth century the Dutch built up an unchallenged supremacy in Indonesia and the Spice Islands. Their rivals, the English and the Portuguese, were forced to recognise this Dutch supremacy, and the islands now making the state of Indonesia became known as the Dutch East Indies. The main Dutch base was established in Batavia in Java in 1619. The English and the Portuguese, driven out of this area, continued to trade alongside the Dutch in India. The route to India followed by the Dutch and the English passed close to the Mascarene islands. This route was developed after 1611 and became known as the 'great route'. As a result the number of ships calling at Mauritius increased and they soon included French as well as Dutch and English ships. They took on supplies of food and fresh water. Occasionally they repaired their vessels. The island had plentiful supplies of timber, including ebony. Trees were often felled and the valuable cargo was taken off. European commercial activity in the Indian Ocean was rapidly building up and the rivalry and competition between the four main powers was increasing. Although they were all primarily interested in trade, this was a period when it was normal for each power to try to establish a monopoly of trade with a certain area. It was obvious that each power needed to establish and maintain bases if its merchants' trading rights were to be protected.

Suggestions for further work

- Find out more about Portuguese and Arab ships of the period. In what ways were the Portuguese and other European ships superior to those of the Arab sailors of the period?
 Who was Maurice of Nassau and for what
- Who was Maurice of Nassau and for what reasons did he became famous as a leader of the Dutch?
- 3 Mark on a map of the Indian Ocean the main trading places occupied by the Portuguese in the early sixteenth century. Make a list of the main items of trade carried by merchants in the Indian Ocean at this time.
- 4 Make sure you understand the meaning of the following words: indigenous and millenium (page 1), crusading (page 2), monopoly and Stadtholder (page 3).

CHAPTER 1520

From oligarchy and colonial status to democracy and independence

Dr Seewoosagur Ramgoolam: early political career

For nearly a decade before this process began, a new figure had been emerging on the political scene as a champion of the oppressed Indian community and a leading member of the Labour Party. This was Dr Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, who returned to Mauritius in 1935 after fourteen years in Britain where he had completed his training as a doctor. Whilst in Britain he had served a useful political apprenticeship. He became a member of the Fabian Society and was, for a time, the secretary of the London branch of the Indian National Congress. In 1931, at the time of the Round Table Conference, he Mahatma Gandhi, Rabindranath Tagore and Srinivasa Sastri. He had made the acquaintance of several socialist politicians, including George Lansbury and Arthur Creech Jones, who became the Labour Party's spokesman on colonial affairs and, unofficially, a representative of colonial peoples and their interests. Dr Ramgoolam's return to Mauritius coincided with preparations for the centenary celebrations of the beginning of Indian immigration. He contributed an article to the Indian Centenary Book, published to mark the occasion. In it he wrote of the need to end 'the social cruelties rampant in our society'.

He knew that this would take a long time and would mean a long hard struggle against powerful vested interests. He was realistic about the patient groundwork that would be needed to influence public opinion and make the Indian workers aware of their political rights and responsibilities. With the help of socialist friends he established a daily newspaper, Advance. On Sundays he regularly visited Indian workers in their villages and began their political education. Slowly he built up support amongst the workers and earned the respect of the authorities. He was elected a member of the Port Louis Municipal Council.

Not long after this, in November 1940, he was nominated by the governor, Sir Bede Clifford, to replace one of the two Indians on the Council of Government who represented the interests of small planters and workers. His appointment was a break with tradition, for no one with such radical views had previously been nominated to the Council. His appointment did not mean that he had been won over to the establishment. He made it clear at once that he wanted genuine social reform which would benefit the workers. In his first speech in the Council he demanded that workers should be given the right to form themselves into trade unions and to take strike action.

In 1942 Sir Bede Clifford was replaced as governor by Sir Donald Mackenzie-Kennedy. Increasingly Dr Ramgoolam found himself out of sympathy with the new governor's approach and policies. He decided that his only course was to join the opposition so that he would be free to campaign openly for such causes as the extension of the franchise to the workers. When Mackenzie-Kennedy put forward his first constitutional proposals in October 1946, they did not go far enough for socialist leaders in Mauritius, for the franchise qualifications would still have excluded the mass of the people and left power in the hands of the whites. B. Bissoondoyal organised demonstrations against the proposals in Port Louis.

One of the most effective of these took the form of boycotting for the first time the 'Last Races' in 1947. Race meetings in Port Louis were organised by the Turf Club, an exclusive club whose membership at that time was restricted to Franco-Mauritians. The workers obtained a special leave on that day to attend the races. However, this gave the Franco-Mauritians an opportunity to look down on the labourers and their way of life and the special day was dubbed in Creole 'les courses Malbar' which carried a pejorative meaning. Bissoon-doyal campaigned against attending the races on that day and his move met with complete success. As from that year that particular race meeting no longer enjoyed popular support and, perforce, the appellation was dropped.

Dr Ramgoolam, who became Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam in June 1965

Dr Ramgoolam, with the support of men like Emmanuel Anquetil and Renganaden Seeneevassen, continued to press for a wider extension of the right to vote. Their cause was helped by a number of developments. The Labour Party had come to power in Britain in the first post-war general election. The war itself had brought a revolution in public opinion all over the world on issues like colonialism, self-determination and human freedoms and rights. It was becoming increasingly difficult for colonial powers such as Britain to ignore the mounting demands for freedom from foreign domination coming from rising nationalist movements in Asia and Africa. Lastly but by no means least in its impact on Mauritius, India gained her independence in 1947.

It did not take long for Britain's post-war Labour Government, elected in 1945 and faced with these pressures, to reach a decision in principle to work towards the granting of selfgovernment and independence to all Britain's colonial territories. Once taken, this decision was maintained as a fundamental strand in Britain's policy towards her colonial territories. Subsequent British governments in the 1950s and 1960s, whether Labour or Conservative, continued with its gradual implementation. Alongside the pressures from nationalist and independence movements it was a major factor in bringing about the decolonisation of all Britain's colonial territories between 1947 and the late 1960s. The only alternative to such a policy would have been to resist, by force, the nationalist movements which began to emerge and gain momentum everywhere soon after the end of the Second World War. This would have been contrary to Britain's commitment to democratic principles. Equally important, it would have been unacceptably costly both financially and in terms of human resources and lives.

Mauritius was a part of Britain's colonial empire. The pressures there from nationalist movements were small in comparison with those in other larger territories. Nevertheless Governor Mackenzie-Kennedy was under pressure both from Britain, from the outside world and from inside Mauritius to move beyond his 1946 proposals for constitutional reform. In a letter to Creech Jones, who was now himself Colonial Secretary in the Labour Government, he admitted that his earlier proposals would no longer be acceptable in the atmosphere of 1948. Nevertheless both the Governor and the Colonial Secretary believed that it was too soon to move to universal suffrage. A commission appointed to make new proposals recommended in 1947 that the vote should be extended to anyone able to read and write simple sentences in any language used in Mauritius. This went far beyond the previous suggestion that the vote should be restricted to those holding the Primary Leaving Certificate. Anyone who had served in the armed forces should also qualify for the vote.

The Mackenzie-Kennedy Constitution 1947

The new proposals were accepted by the Colonial Office and were the basis for the election held in 1948. This was a real landmark in the constitutional history of Mauritius. In the previous election held in 1936 there had been 11,427 registered voters. In 1948 the number had risen to 71,236. Nearly two-fifths of the adult population could now vote. For the first time in the island's history the electorate included a significant number of workers. The governor presided over a Legislative Council consisting of nineteen elected, twelve nominated and three official members. For the first time the elected members in the Council outnumbered the nominated and official members. The island was divided into five electoral districts. Six members represented Plaines Wilhems and Rivière Noire; four represented Port Louis; and three members represented each of the districts of Moka-Flacq, Grand Port-Savanne and Pamplemousses-Rivière du Rempart.

The election of 1948

In the election of 1948, twelve of those returned to the Legislative Council were members of the Labour Party and these included several Indo-Mauritians. The struggle for the effective transfer of power from the old oligarchy to new men had really begun. Dr Ramgoolam and his colleagues, amongst the new men, made it clear that this was only the beginning. They had new objectives for the immediate future; and within the next decade they achieved most of them. These included the introduction of universal suffrage; an increase in the number of elected members in the Legislative Council; and the establishment of the principle that ministers should be responsible to the elected council.

These achievements were made in the face of opposition from the conservative elements in the country, who organised themselves after the election and fought a strong rearguard action to try to retain their old position of privilege as long as possible. They made as much as they could of the alleged danger of 'communalism': that is the danger that politics and political parties would develop and operate round the sectional interests of the different communities that made up the multiracial society of Mauritius. There was, it was claimed, evidence that the voting in the 1948 election had followed a communal pattern in that eleven candidates had been elected largely on Hindu votes in Arral districts, eight by Creoles and one by Europeans. It is, however, not surprising that, with the extension of the franchise, the different groups should vote for candidates who they felt would support their own interests; and indeed this was the traditional pattern of voting when power was in the hands of the Franco-Mauritians. After the election, Dr Ramgoolam and others who genuinely wanted to encourage national unity and play down communalism tried to broaden the base of the Labour Party by attracting support from the different communities, parti cularly the non-European community. The main opposition to further change after 1948 was led by Jules Koenig and his Franco-Mauritian party, the Ralliement Mauricien or Parti Mauricien. They raised the bogey of Hindu domination, and until the next election they still held political power in Mauritius because they had the support of the nominated and official members of the Council.

The election of 1953

The election of 1953 brought genuine democracy a step nearer. The Labour Party increased its share of the elected seats to fourteen; but this was not enough to give the party an overall majority. The conservatives were still supported by most of the nominated and official members. Soon after the election the Labour Party newspaper, Advance, complained bitterly that in exercising his right to choose the nominated members, the governor had flouted the electors' wishes. Instead of reflecting the preference the electors had shown for Labour candidates he had chosen men who would prolong the political domination of the Franco-Mauritians. Further change was needed before the voice of the people in elections could become really effective. Dr Ramgoolam and the Labour Party demanded three main types of change: firstly, universal suffrage; secondly, a further increase in the number of elected members in the Legislative Council; and thirdly, the introduction of ministerial responsibility.

In 1953 the Labour Party managed to persuade the Legislative Council to pass a resolution calling for an extension of the franchise. Talks followed in London and the outcome was the offer of a new constitution in February 1956. It was proposed that the number of elected members of the Council should be increased to twenty-five; that universal suffrage should be introduced and that seven of the twelve members of the Executive Council should be chosen from the legislature. However, the second proposal was linked with another which made it unacceptable to the Labour Party; this was that elections should be held under a system of proportional representation. The Labour Party objected to proportional representation because they feared that in a multi-racial society such as that in Mauritius it would encourage people to vote in their communal They also feared that it could undermine the strength and unity of the party.

The emergence of new parties and the election of 1959

In the face of this opposition the proposal of proportional representation was dropped. The details of the electoral system were to be worked out by an electoral commission under the chairmanship of Trustram Eve. The commission reported in 1958 and recommended an increase in the number of elected members to forty. On this basis the 1959 election was held. Before the election a number of changes had taken place in the pattern of political parties in Mauritius. The main opposition party, the Ralliement Mauricien, had taken a new name: the Parti Mauricien Social Démocrate (PMSD). It had done this largely because it realised that, in order to have a future, it must attract more support from the non-white population, particularly from the Creoles.

The Muslims had formed the Muslim Committee of Action (MCA), the Comité d'Action Musulmane (CAM). Its leader, Sir Abdool Razack Mohamed, had represented Muslim opinion at the London constitutional talks in 1955. At the time he was a member of the Ralliement Mauricien. The MCA was formed in 1958 when the Muslims realised that they were merely being used by the Europeans as allies against the Labour Party.

A fourth party, the Independent Forward Bloc (IFB), was also founded in 1958. It stood for the energetic revival of Indian culture and the consequent rejection of political systems based on Western culture.

The leading part in the founding of the IFB was played by Sookdeo Bissoondoyal, brother of Basudeo Bissoondoyal who had influenced his political thinking. Sookdeo Bissoondoyal had turned from school teaching to politics in 1948. In the election of that year he was elected to the Legislative Council as one of the members for the constituency of Grand Port/ Savanne and one of the group of twelve Labour Party members. He also served as a member of the Executive Committee, but from 1953 he became increasingly critical of the Labour Party, believing that it had swerved from its original objective, namely the promotion of the ordinary working people's interests, and had forgotten its socialist aims. In 1957 he called for a boycott of the visit of Princess Margaret to Mauritius as a protest against corruption in the administration. It was during one of several terms of imprisonment in 1957 that he decided to form the IFB. Although he did not always agree with the policies of the Labour Party, Sookdeo Bissoondoyal did not hesitate to ally with it to seek the independence of Mauritius.

In spite of the existence of these two parties which were bound to attract some of the Indian votes, the Labour Party's fortunes reached a peak in the 1959 election. Of the forty elected seats, the party gained twentyfour. The IFB won six seats, the MCA five. Jules Koenig's PMSD won only three seats; and the remaining two went to Independent candidates.

One of the three PMSD seats was won by Gaëtan Duval, a young lawyer with a flamboyant personality, who was later to lead the party in succession to Jules Koenig. As a result of its decisive victory in this election the Labour Party was in a strong position to press for an early realisation of its final objectives: self-government and independence.

The 1961 Constitutional Conference

A constitutional conference at which all the Mauritian political parties were represented was held in London in June 1961. It soon became obvious that there was a serious rift between the PMSD and all the other parties. The PMSD did not want independence; the other parties did. The PMSD favoured some form of integration or association with Britain. The difference of opinion was easily explained. The PMSD, as the party representing Creoles and the Franco-Mauritian minority, was afraid of independence and of the political dominance of Indo-Mauritians which they believed would follow. Its fears were similar to those expressed by parties representing minority groups in other colonial territories, especially in Africa. As the date of independence came nearer, such fears became

The PMSD claimed that most Mauritians were not yet ready to assume the responsibility of running their own affairs. This again was an argument that had been heard, and continued to be heard, from settler groups in African territories like Kenva and Northern and Southern Rhodesia. The PMSD argued that, if independence was inevitable, it should come slowly and with adequate safeguards for the minority groups. In Mauritius, as in other colonial territories, the British showed sympathy with these arguments.

Two stages to Independence

The PMSD was outnumbered, however, by the Labour Party and its allies who favoured as quick a transition to self-government and independence as possible. The PMSD representatives withdrew from the conference before any decisions were reached. It was agreed that selfgovernment should be reached in two stages. In the first stage, effected in 1962, Ramgoolam took the title of Chief Minister. The governor was to seek his advice on all ministerial appointments and on the question of the duration and date of dissolution of the Legislative Assembly. Dr Ramgoolam decided to speed up the transition to the second stage by bringing forward the date of the election from 1964 to 1963.

Mauritians demonstrate at the constitutional talks in London, 1965

The election of 1963

In this election the Labour Party suffered a check. They won only nineteen seats out of forty and thus lost their overall majority, but they remained easily the largest party. The PMSD made some recovery with eight seats. The IFB had seven seats, the MCA four and the Independents two. The PMSD had benefited from the attractive personality of Gaëtan Duval. He was a colourful figure who had entered the legislature at the previous election and was to succeed Koenig as leader of the party in 1966.

In consultation with the Colonial Office, Ramgoolam formed an all-party coalition government after the election. Both the British Government and Ramgoolam were anxious to reassure the electorate and all sections of the community that their interests would not be overlooked. The second stage of progress towards self-government could now be effected. In March 1964 Dr Ramgoolam became Premier and the Executive Council became a council of ministers responsible to the Legislature. The coalition ministry proved to be a fragile one. The difference of opinion between the PMSD on the one hand and the Labour Party and its allies on the other persisted.

Constitutional Conference of 1965

Once again in 1965 all parties were represented in constitutional talks in London with the Colonial Secretary. Labour and its allies pressed for early independence. The PMSD put forward a scheme for 'associated status' with Britain, under which certain matters, including defence, foreign affairs and some constitutional decisions would have been kept under British control. They also asked that no final decision should be taken on the future of Mauritius before a referendum was held.

At the Constitutional Conference in London

Mr Anthony Greenwood, the Colonial Secretary, and Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, Premier of Mauritius

the British negotiators seemed reluctant to agree to an early move towards independence and showed sympathy with, and a readiness to listen to, the proposals of the PMSD. The prospects of Mauritius being granted independence as the MLP wished seemed to be threatened. This British attitude, however, was probably adopted as a means of persuading Sir Seewoosagur and the MLP to agree to the transfer to Britain of the Chagos Islands, as the price of a British grant of independence. If this was the case, the strategy worked. The MLP agreed not to raise objections to the transfer of the Chagos group to Britain as part of the British Indian Ocean Territories and to the evacuation of their inhabitants to Mauritius.

Other considerations, however, certainly influenced the final outcome. Sir Seewoosagur's reputation for moderation and tolerance and his long-standing connections with old Labour politicians in Britain were crucial. He was prepared to offer guarantees to the minorities including the appointment of an ombudsman¹, Ombudsman: an official first employed in Scandinavian countries and more recently in some other European countries to act as an arbiter between an ordinary citizen and government in cases where a citizen feels himself to be a victim of some form of injustice or discrimination.

as proposed by Sookdeo Bissoondoyal, who would not be a Mauritian. Finally, with some misgivings but no doubt with African precedents in mind, the decision was taken that independence should be granted, provided a further election showed a clear demand for independence from the Mauritian people. It was to be granted, however, under a new electoral system designed to ensure the adequate representation of all minority groups. The end of 1966 was suggested as a possible date for independence after a six-month period of self-government. The Colonial Secretary ruled out both the PMSD's suggestion of a referendum and of a form of association with Britain. This was partly on the grounds that both did not conform to current British constitutional practice. They were, of course, though this was not said, peculiarly French.

The new electoral system

The final advance to independence was delayed by difficulties in reaching agreement on the form of the new electoral system. The PMSD made the most of these disagreements. An electoral commission, the Barnwell Commission, arrived in Mauritius early in 1966. Its recommendations were complicated and were felt to be too favourable to the urban electorate. Ramgoolam feared that the system would produce splinter groups and make stable government difficult. John Stonehouse, the Under Secretary for the Colonies, arrived in Mauritius to resolve the crisis. In the end the following arrangements were made. Mauritius was divided into twenty constituencies, each represented by three members. The island of Rodrigues was to form a two-member constituency. Eight seats would not be contested in the initial voting. They would be held in reserve and allocated to the eight best losers from the four groups which were judged to be inadequately represented after the main election. The main purpose of this 'corrective machinery' was to ensure adequate representation for the minority groups.

The election of 1967

The 'independence' election was finally held under this complicated system in August 1967. It was to take place under the scrutiny of observers from the Commonwealth, who would pass judgement on its fairness. Three parties, Labour, the MCA and the IFB, fought the election as the 'Independence Party'. The PMSD, now led by Duval, campaigned on the platform of something less than complete independence. The central issue was, therefore, clear-cut and the electorate's decision was equally decisive. The 'Independence Party' won thirty-nine seats shared as follows: Labour twenty-four, MCA four and IFB eleven. They polled 54.8 per cent of the votes. The PMSD won twenty-three seats with 43 per cent of the votes. The Commonwealth observers reported that, with few reservations, they were satisfied that the elections had been conducted fairly and with a minimum of violence. The very small number of spoiled ballot papers seemed to show that the great majority of the electors had understood the complicated electoral system. The final stage of the exercise, the allocation of the eight reserved seats, awarded an equal share to the government and opposition parties.

Self-government and independence

At last the way lay open for a rapid advance to independence. Mauritius became self-governing on 12 August 1967, immediately after the election. At the first meeting of the new Legislative Assembly on 22 August 1967, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam put down for debate the resolution 'That this Assembly requests Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom to take the necessary steps to give effect, as soon as practicable this year, to the desire of the people of Mauritius to accede to Independence within the Commonwealth of Nations and that Mauritius be admitted to membership of the Commonwealth on the attainment of Independence.'

The resolution was passed and the British Government fixed 12 March 1968 as Independence Day. During the debate Sir Seewoosagur spoke hopefully of the country's future:

We are meeting today on an historic and solemn occasion. By our decision today, Sir, we shall put Mauritius on the path of her destiny. It is a day of joy for all patriotic men and women, for on this day we are taking the formal step which will confer on our people freedom and bring them into their heritage...

Independence celebrations 1968

With Independence there will come among the people of this country a sense of regeneration and there will arise in the hearts of our fellow countrymen a fervour and a determination to go forward and build for themselves and for future generations a strong and happy Mauritius . . .

Let us resolve that in our determination to build a better future for ourselves and our children we shall all be inspired by the loftiest principles of patriotism and love for our island home.

We have striven for many years now to create a new sense of unity out of our rich diversity and in the words of the poet let it be said for the glory of those who are fortunate to live at this hour:

'Bliss was it in that dawn to be alive.'

Such sentiments are expected of political leaders on these occasions; but what really mattered was the extent to which the hopes and ideals were realised in the future. It is time to examine how Mauritius has fared since her 'day of destiny'.

Suggestions for revision

The main concern of this chapter is the story of the struggle for, and the main steps towards, independence in Mauritius. You should know:

- a) the main stages and landmarks on the road to independence, such as the new Constitution of 1948, the Constitutional Conference of 1961, and the elections of 1948, 1953, 1959, 1963 and 1967;
- the names of and the difference between, the main political parties that emerged during this period, for example, the Ralliement Maurician (later the PMSD), the MCA and the IFB;
- c) the part played by, and the ideas of, leading politicians and officials such as Dr Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, Gaëtan Duval, Jules Koenig, Sir Donald Mackenzie-Kennedy and the Bissoondoyal brothers.

Suggestions for further work

- Once again, it would be interesting to do some 'oral' research with the help of older people in your family or your friends' families. Try to talk to people who had different views about whether it was best for Mauritius to become independent as soon as possible after the election of 1967 or whether it would have been better to have a longer period of self-government, as a preparation for complete independence.
- 2 Make sure you know the meaning of the following words: franchise (page 86), suffrage (page 88), proportional representation (page 89) and coalition (page 91).

Annex 138 Antonio Cassese, Self-determination of peoples: A legal reappraisal (1995)

Self-determination of peoples

A legal reappraisal

ANTONIO CASSESE

RECEIVED Law Library

SEP 2 7 1995

Uniy. of Wisc. Madison, WI 53706

A GROTIUS PUBLICATION

Published by the Press Syndicate of the University of Cambridge The Pitt Building, Trumpington Street, Cambridge CB2 1RP 40 West 20th Street, New York, NY 10011-4211, USA 10 Stamford Road, Oakleigh, Melbourne 3166, Australia

© Cambridge University Press 1995

First published 1995

Printed in Great Britain at the University Press, Cambridge

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

Library of Congress cataloguing in publication data

Cassese, Antonio.

Self-determination of peoples: a legal reappraisal /

Antonio Cassese

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.
ISBN 0 521 48187 2 (hc)
1. Self-determination, National. I. Title.
JX4054.C32 1995
341.26 – dc20 94–32490 CIP

ISBN 0 521 48187 2 hardback

Visidil well belly to while

3

Treaty law

The United Nations Charter

During the Second World War, as early as 1941, the US and the UK proclaimed self-determination as one of the objectives to be attained and put into practice at the end of the conflict. The Atlantic Charter drafted by President F. D. Roosevelt and Winston Churchill, and made public on 14 August 1941, proclaimed self-determination as a general standard governing territorial changes, as well as a principle concerning the free choice of rulers in every sovereign State (internal self-determination). However, Churchill hastened to place a restrictive interpretation on the Atlantic Charter: on 9 September 1941 he clearly stated to the House of Commons that the principle of self-determination proclaimed in the Charter did not apply to colonial peoples (in particular, to India, Burma, and other parts of the British Empire) but only aimed at restoring 'the sovereignty, self-government and national life of the States and nations of Europe under the Nazi yoke', besides providing for 'any alterations in the territorial boundaries which may have to be made'.²

^{&#}x27;Second, they [the two drafters of the Declaration] desire to see no territorial changes that do not accord with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned; third, they respect the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live; and they wish to see sovereign rights and self-government restored to those who have been forcibly deprived of them.' Text in J. A. S. Grenville, The Major International Treaties: 1914–1973 – A History and Guide with Texts, London 1974, 198 ff

² Parliamentary Debates, Fifth Series, vol. 374, House of Commons, Official Report, eighth vol. of Session 1940–41, 68–69. Churchill's statement is mentioned by E. R. Stettinius, Jr, Roosevelt and the Russians – The Yalta Conference, Garden City, New York 1949, 244 ff. See also R. C. Hula, 'National Self-Determination Reconsidered', 10 Social Research,

Self-determination: a legal standard

In 1944, representatives of the US, the UK, the Soviet Union, and China entered into secret and informal negotiations with the aim of setting the foundations for a world organization. They emerged from the talks at Dumbarton Oaks with several proposals for a UN Charter. However, despite the fact that the Allies had embraced the principle of self-determination in several policy documents adopted between 1941 and 1944,³ it did not appear anywhere in the draft Charter, which however included a provision, although somewhat weak, on human rights.⁴ It seemed that the UN Charter was destined, like the League of Nations Covenant, to be silent with regard to the rights of peoples.

By the end of April 1945, when the United Nations Conference on International Organization met in San Francisco, the Four Powers had, however, reconsidered the issue at the insistence of the USSR.⁵ Thus, among the amendments renegotiated and presented in San Francisco was a provision stating that the Organization aimed 'to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace'.⁶ Although the Four Powers had not devised an effective means for the use and expansion of the principle, they had at least identified self-determination as a major objective of the new world organization.

In the relevant body of the San Francisco Conference (Committee I of Commission I) several States approved of the new provision, the Philippines, Egypt, the Ukraine, Iran, Syria, and Yugoslavia among 1943, 1–21. On the Atlantic Charter and self-determination, see generally G. Decker, Das Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Nationen, 177–86; K. J. Partsch, 'Fundamental Principles of Human Rights: Self-Determination, Equality and Non-Discrimination', in K. Vasak (cd.), The International Dimensions of Human Rights, vol. I, Paris 1982, 64–5.

³ For a discussion of these documents, which include the Atlantic Charter, see in particular Brownlie, 'An Essay in the History of the Principle of Self-Determination', 96–8. See also A. Cassese, 'Political Self-Determination — Old Concepts and New Developments', in A. Cassese (ed.), U.N. Law — Fundamental Rights: Two Topics in International Law, Alphen aan der Rijn 1979, 161, note 2.

For the text of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, see Postwar Foreign Policy Preparation 1939–1945, Department of State Publication 3580, Washington, DC, Government Printing Office, 1949, 611 ff.

On the role of the Soviet Union in insisting on the proclamation of the right to self-determination, see R.B. Russel, A History of the United Nations Charter, Washington 1958, 62 ff., 810; G. Starushenko, The Principle of National Self-Determination in Soviet Foreign Policy, 142–7; Brownlie, 'An Essay in the History', 98.

⁶ See UNCIO, vol. VI, 1945, 296.

Treaty law

them.⁷ However, not all of the States were amenable to the idea that self-determination ought to be included in the Charter. Some, most notably Belgium, were in fact very critical. The Belgian representative, the distinguished international lawyer H. Rolin, issued a brief memorandum containing two major criticisms, both focusing on the provision's departure from the traditional State-oriented approach. He first asserted that the provision referring to self-determination had been founded on 'confusion'; and he pointed out that 'one speaks generally of the equality of States' not of peoples. His second argument was:

It would be dangerous to put forth the peoples' right of self-determination as a basis for the friendly relations between the nations. This would open the door to inadmissible interventions if, as seems probable, one wishes to take inspiration from the peoples' right of self-determination in the action of the Organization and not in the relations between the peoples.⁸

After stressing that the world was still far from full self-determination, the Belgian delegate raised several important concerns. Specifically, he wondered whether in the case where a national minority in a given country claimed the right to self-determination, the Organization would be expected to step in and other States would feel duty-bound to intervene on the strength of the concept of 'friendly relations'. Rolin then proposed that the entire provision be withdrawn.⁹

It would seem that the Belgian delegate did not take into account self-determination as an anti-colonial principle. He only perceived it as a criterion for protecting nationalities or minorities but even from this angle he dismissed it. In its place, Belgium put forward counter-proposals aimed at strengthening the protection of human rights¹⁰ but later withdrew them.

Other States also expressed doubts about the proposed Charter provision, mostly out of fear that a provision on self-determination would foster civil strife and secessionist movements. Venezuela voiced concern. Il Colombia formally declared:

If it [self-determination] means self-government, the right of a country to provide its own government, yes, we would certainly like it to be included; but if it were to Yee the microfilmed minutes (unpublished) of the debates of the First Committee of the First Commission of the San Francisco Conference, 14–15 May and 1 and 11 June, 1945, Library of the Palais des Nations, Geneva [hereinafter Debates].

⁸ UNCIO, vol. VI, 300.

⁹ See Debates, 14 May (afternoon session), 12 and 14.

¹⁰ Debates, 14 May, 13. See also UNCIO, vol. VI, 640.

¹¹ Debates, 15 May (morning session), 14.

Self-determination: a legal standard

be interpreted, on the other hand, as connoting a withdrawal, the right of withdrawal or seeession, then we should regard that as tantamount to international anarchy, and we should not desire that it should be included in the text of the Charter. 12

Fomenting secessionist movements was not, however, the only fear. The potential misuse of the principle of self-determination was also raised. For example, Egypt, making a veiled reference to Germany and Italy, observed that the principle lent itself to manipulation. Politicians could easily invoke the principle – as did Hitler – to justify military invasions and annexations. This led the Syrian delegate to point out that the principle of self-determination contemplates free expression; if a people is unable to express its genuine will, self-determination cannot be considered to have been achieved. 13

Subsequently, the Committee responsible for the drafting of the relevant provision agreed on four points. First, 'this principle corresponded closely to the will and desires of peoples everywhere and should be clearly enunciated in the Chapter [of the UN Charter]'. ¹⁴ Second, 'the principle conformed to the purposes of the Charter only insofar as it implied the right of self-government of peoples and not the right of secession'. ¹⁵ Third, it was agreed that the principle of self-determination 'as one whole extends as a general basic conception to a possible amalgamation of nationalities if they so freely choose'. ¹⁶ Fourth, it was agreed that 'an essential element of the principle [of self-determination] is free and genuine expression of the will of the people, which avoids cases of the alleged expression of the popular will, such as those used for their own ends by Germany and Italy in later years'. ¹⁷

This last passage might be construed to mean that the framers of the Charter – intent on emphasizing that many authoritarian governments which claim the support of the 'popular will' do not in fact rule with the 'free and genuine' will of the people – considered the realization of self-determination to be coterminous with 'freedom of political expression and from authoritarian government'. However, a careful examination of the unpublished minutes of the debates that led to the adoption of the passage ¹² Debates, 15 May, 20 (my italics).

Debates, 14 May, 24 ff. (Egypt); 15 May (morning session), 12 (Syria).

¹⁴ See UNCIO, vol. VI, 296.

¹⁵ Ibid. The French text was as follows: 'On a déclaré que ce principe n'était compatible avec les buts de la Charte que dans la mesure où il impliquait, pour les peuples, le droit de s'administrer eux-mêmes, mais non pas le droit de sécession', ibid., 298.

¹⁶ Ibid., 704.

¹⁷ UNCIO, vol. VI, 455.

Treaty law

quoted warns against such a conclusion. The preparatory work suggests that the Wilsonian dream of representative governments for all was not contemplated. The emphasis on the need for a 'genuine' choice was only intended to stress that where a people is afforded the right to express its views, it must truly be free to do so.¹⁸

The final text of UN Charter does not confine itself to the political 'rhetoric' of self-determination of the League of Nations' Covenant (the name of the new Organization also includes the word 'Nations', and the preamble starts with the well-known, rather hypocritical and misleading sentence 'We the peoples of the United Nations . . . '). The UN Charter goes beyond that and includes Article 1(2), which provides that one of the purposes of the United Nations is:

to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace.¹⁹

The lively debate on self-determination and the Syrian Rapporteur's report to the Commission²⁰ suggest that four main features characterize the concept eventually proclaimed in Article 1(2).²¹

¹⁸ See Cassese, 'Political Self-determination', 139 and notes 5 and 6.

¹⁹ See also Articles 55 and 56 of the UN Charter. Article 55 provides that: 'With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote: (a) higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development; (b) solutions of international economic, social, health, and related problems; and international cultural and educational co-operation; and (c) universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.' Article 56 provides that: 'All Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55.'

²⁰ UNCIO, vol. VI, 455 and 714 ff.

On Articles 1(2), 55-6, 73 and 76, in addition to the classic commentaries on the UN Charter, see, among others, S. Calogeropoulos-Stratis, Le droit des peuples à disposer d'euxmêmes, 108-15, 263-5; Guilhaudis, Le droit des peuples à disposer d'euxmêmes, 108-15, 263-5; Guilhaudis, Le droit des peuples à disposer d'euxmêmes, 168-73; K. Doehring, 'Das Selbsthestimmungsrecht der deutschen Nation', in Recht und Staat im sozialen Wandeln. Fest. für H. U. Scupin, Berlin 1983, 555-60; Thürer, 'Das Selbsthestimmungsrecht der Völker. Ein Ueberblick', 118-19; D. Thürer, 'Self-Determination' in Encyclopedia, vol. VIII, 1985 at 471-2; F. Lattanzi, 'Autodeterminazione dei popoli', in Digesto delle Discipline Pubblicistiche, vol. II, Turin 1987, 5-9; G. Arangio-Ruiz, 'Autodeterminazione (diritto dei popoli alla)', in Enciclopedia Guiridica, vol. IV, Rome 1988, 2-3; E. Gayim, The Principle of Self-Determination - A Study of its Historical and Contemporary Legal Evolution, Oslo 1990, 21-6; M. Bedjaoui, in J. P. Cot and A. Pellet (eds.), La Charte des Nations Unies, 2nd edn, Paris 1991, 1070-83; K. J. Partsch

Self-determination: a legal standard

First, States were unable positively to define self-determination. The concept of self-determination upheld in the Charter can only be negatively inferred from the debate preceding the adoption of Article 1(2). Selfdetermination did not mean (a) the right of a minority or an ethnic or national group to secede from a sovereign country; (b) the right of a colonial people to achieve political independence; for these peoples selfdetermination could only mean 'self-government' (this conclusion can be drawn from the clear agreement reached when drafting the provision to the effect that self-determination only meant 'self-government' and also from the fact that Article 76 of the UN Charter, laying down the basic objectives of the trusteeship system, contemplated 'their progressive development towards self-government or independence'; a systematic interpretation of the Charter would thus warrant the conclusion that, by implication, 'self-government' did not mean 'independence'); (c) the right of the people of a sovereign State freely to choose its rulers through regular, democratic and free elections; for these peoples also selfdetermination only meant 'self-government'; (d) the right of two or more nations belonging either to a sovereign country or two sovereign countries to merge; this right is ruled out by the ban on secession (plainly, the right at issue would imply that nations belonging to one or more States could secede, in order to achieve the 'possible amalgamation of nationalities' referred to by the Syrian Rapporteur).22

It follows that the principle enshrined in the UN Charter boils down to very little; it is only a principle suggesting that States should grant self-government as much as possible to the communities over which they exercise jurisdiction.²³

^{&#}x27;Selbstbestimmung' in R. Wolfrum (ed.), Handbuch der Vereinten Nationen, Munich 1991, 745–52; K. Dochring, in B. Simma (ed.), Charta der Vereinten Nationen – Ein Kommentar, Munich 1991, 15–32; B. Driessen, A Concept of Nation in International Law, The Hague 1992, 118–24.

²² Consequently, the reference to 'amalgamation' can only be taken to mean the merger of two sovereign countries based on the same nationality (think, for instance, of the unification of the two German States, which actually took place in recent wears).

²³ Cf. UNCIO, vol. VI, 296. The Charter's other provisions, Chapters XII and XIII and Article 73 in particular, support the thesis that Article 1(2) enshrined the moderate version of self-determination. Chapters XII and XIII ensured that there was no radical break with the colonial system by providing for an international trusteesno system. Article 73 provided for colonial power rule the so-called 'non-self-governing territories'. Article 76 imposed upon the colonial powers the rather vague obligation 'to develop self-government' in the non-self-governing territories. Article 76, part of the trusteeship programme, was more pointed; 'the basic objectives' of the trusteeship system included,

Treaty law

So much for the notion of self-determination. As for the second feature of the principle in the UN Charter, it should be stressed that Article 1(2) merely laid down one of many lofty goals of the Organization. The threat to State interests was thus minimized.

The third feature of the principle is that self-determination, conceived of as a postulate deeply rooted in the concept of the equal rights of peoples or, as explained by the Philippine delegate, in the 'equality of races', ²⁴ was considered to be a means of furthering the development of friendly relations among States: it would foster universal peace. This last qualifier, a fortiori, limited the power of the principle. Since self-determination was not considered to have a value independent of its use as an instrument of peace, it could easily be set aside when its fulfilment raised the possibility of conflicts between States.

Fourthly, since self-determination was envisaged primarily as a programme or aim of the Organization, and since the UN Charter neither defined self-determination precisely nor distinguished between 'external' and 'internal' self-determination, the Charter did not impose direct and immediate legal obligations on Member States in this area (the obligation laid down in Article 56 of the Charter is very loose and in any case does not impose the taking of direct and specific action by each Member State of the UN).

In spite of all these limitations and shortcomings, the fact remains that this was the first time that self-determination had been laid down in a multilateral treaty – a treaty, one should add, that had been conceived of as one of the major pieces of legislation of the new world community. Thus, the adoption of the UN Charter marks an important turning-point; it signals the maturing of the political postulate of self-determination into a legal standard of behaviour. In 1945 this legal standard was primarily intended to guide the action of the Organization. Over the years Member States of the UN gradually turned that standard into a precept that was also directly binding on States.

in addition to 'self-government', 'independence'. Thus, although the level of self-government afforded was to be 'appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, and as may be provided by the terms of each trusteeship agreement', Chapter XIII actually afforded peoples greater rights than Article 1(2) (the general provision on self-determination) — or at least offered a limited class of dependent peoples greater rights.

24 UNCIO, vol. VI, 704.

Customary rules: external self-determination particular the right of peoples under foreign domination. Thirdly, the situation of the black populations of Southern Rhodesia and South Africa prompted the same majority of States to frame this situation as a question of the (internal) self-determination of the black population. As it was unthinkable – on account of Western opposition – for treaty rules to be agreed upon on these matters, the best way out was found in the gradual evolution of general standards. One of the advantages of these standards was that their relatively slow formation and their necessarily flexible content would make them more palatable to the West.

It follows from the above remarks that although in the next pages I shall primarily concentrate on UN practice and pronouncements of individual States for the purpose of ascertaining the content and import of general rules, this does in no way imply that treaty rules are excluded from the picture. It is only for the sake of clarity and a more precise exposition, that treaty rules and their implementation will not be mentioned again from this different angle – that is, qua part and parcel of the customary process.

The role of UN Resolutions in the crystallization of customary rules

A second caveat is necessary. The problem area we are discussing shows a distinct feature: although customary rules have resulted from the usual combination of usus and opinio juris, these two elements have not played the normal role that can be discerned in other - less political and more technical - areas of international relations. In these other areas, the first element that normally emerges is the repetition of conduct by an increasing number of States, accompanied at some stage by the belief that this conduct is not only dictated by practical (economic, military, political) reasons, but is also imposed by some sort of legal command. By contrast, in the case of self-determination - as in similar highly sensitive areas fraught with ideological and political dissension - the first push to the emergence of general standards has been given by the political will of the majority of Member States of the UN, which has then coalesced in the form of General Assembly resolutions. Strictly speaking, these resolutions are neither opinio juris nor usus. Rather they constitute the major factor triggering (a) the taking of a legal stand by many Member States of the UN (which thereby express their legal view on the matter)3 and (b)

³ In the Nicaragua case the International Court of Justice pointed out that 'opinio juris may, though with all due caution, be deduced from, inter alia, . . . the attitude of States towards certain General Assembly resolutions, and particularly resolution 2625(XXV) [on the gradual adoption by these States of attitudes consistent with the resolutions.

Self-determination: a legal standard

It follows that, when discussing customary international law in the area of self-determination, special emphasis will be placed here on two UN Documents: the 1960 Declaration Granting Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples⁴ and the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in Accordance with the Charter of the UN.⁵ The former, in conjunction with the UN Charter, contributed to the gradual transformation of the 'principle' of self-determination into a legal right for non-self-governing peoples. The latter was instrumental in crystallizing a growing consensus concerning the extension of self-determination to other areas. Both are vital in developing an understanding of how general international law regulates self-determination.

These two documents, however, should not be looked at per se, but within the general context of their adoption. In other words, they are significant in that their elaboration prompted Member States of the UN to express their views and take a stand on self-determination. The pronouncements of States before, during, and after the adoption of the two Declarations, in conjunction with the actual behaviour of States in international dealings, constitute important elements of State practice. Together with statements made by individual States in other fora (for instance, declarations of government representatives in national parliaments) and rulings of international courts, they make up the bulk of usus and opinio juris in the matter.

For the sake of clarity, I shall analyse the formation of customary law in the area of 'external' and 'internal' self-determination⁶ separately.

Friendly Relations]'. The Court went on to state the following: 'The effect of consent to the text of such resolutions cannot be understood as merely that of a "reiteration or elucidation" of the treaty commitment undertaken in the Charter. On the contrary, it may be understood as an acceptance of the validity of the rule or set of rules declared by the resolution by themselves' (ICJ, Reports 1986, 99–100, para. 188).

GA Resolution 1514(XV), 14 December 1960. GA Resolution 2625(XXV), 24 October 1970.

⁶ This distinction can already be found in W. Wengler, 'Le droit à la libre disposition des peuples comme principe de droit international', 10 Revue hellénique de droit international, 1957, 27, and W. Wengler, Völkerrecht, vol. II, Berlin 1964, 1032–3. It has been taken up by various authors, including A. V. Lombardi, Bärgerkrieg und Völkerrecht, Berlin 1976, 181, 335–9, 341–2. It would seem that A. Verdross and B. Simma, Universelles Völkerrecht, 3rd edn, Berlin 1984, at 320, erroneously attributed the distinction to Lombardi's work cited above.

have been limited by the perceived need to safeguard territorial integrity and political unity.

Before analysing the manner in which the practice of the United Nations evolved, it should be emphasized that the legal regulation just mentioned manifested three major flaws.

Firstly, the internal self-determination of colonial peoples was totally disregarded, that is, their right freely to choose their form of government, their rulers, etc. Their liberation from colonial rule, in order to achieve independence (or association or integration with another State) was what was seen as important. Admittedly, it would have been historically difficult and, in practice, complicated to provide for free and democratic political elections so as to ensure respect for pluralistic democracy in those territories. The fact remains however that no attention was paid to this 'internal' dimension of self-determination.

Secondly, the norms that gradually evolved eventually gave pride of place to the territorial integrity of colonial territories, thus ruling out the possibility for ethnic groups that constituted a 'colonial people' freely to choose their international status. The resultant self-determination was therefore rather truncated in this second respect.

Thirdly, it was taken for granted that whenever it appeared that the people of a colonial territory wished to opt for independence, it was not necessary to establish this wish by means of a plebiscite or a referendum. In other words, it was felt that the wish for independence – however manifested or ascertained – did not need to be verified by resorting to the means that the practical implementation of self-determination normally required.

THE ACTUAL IMPLEMENTATION OF THE STANDARDS

An overview of UN practice with regard to colonial situations

The UN record in the field of decolonization is impressive. 15 According to a 1979 report prepared for the UN by Héctor Gros Espiell, the then

On the role of self-determination in the process of decolonization, and the UN practice in this matter, see in particular: C. Eagleton, 'Excesses of Self-Determination', 31 FA, 1952–3, 592 ff., and 'Self-Determination in the United Nations', 47 AJIL, 1953, 88 ff.; R. Emerson, Self-Determination Revisited in the Era of Decolonization, Cambridge, Mass. 1964, 25 ff.; J. Kunz, 'The Principle of Self-Determination of Peoples, Particularly in the Practice of the United Nations', in K. Rabl (cd.), Inhalt, Wesen und gegenwärtige praktische Bedeutung des Selbstbestimmungsrechts der Völker, Munich 1964, 137–70; M. K. Nawaz, 'The Meaning and Range of the Principle of Self-Determination', 82 Duke Law

Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights, seventy territories achieved independence between 1945 and 1979. In only a limited number of cases was the right of self-determination exercised and independence not achieved. In the years following the publication of Gros Espiell's report, several territories included in his list of twenty-eight situations still to be resolved achieved independence. Others on the list, South Africa and the territories occupied by Israel in particular, do not, it is submitted, come within the purview of 'colonial situations' included within the report. Thus, at present, there are approximately a dozen 'situations' still outstanding and Journal, 1965, 82 ff.; D. W. Bowett, 'Self-Determination and Political Rights in the Developing Countries', 60 Proceedings ASIL, 1966, 129-35; R. Emerson, 'Self-Determination', ibid., 135-41; W. B. Ofuatey-Kodjoe, Self-Determination in International Law: Towards a Definition of the Principle, PhD thesis, Columbia University 1970, 245-74; U. Umozurike, Self-Determination in International Law, Hamden, Conn. 1972; A. Rigo Sureda, The Evolution of the Right of Self-Determination: A Study of the United Nations Practice, Leiden, 1973; T. M. Franck and P. Hoffman, 'The Right of Self-Determination in Very Small Places', 8 NYUJILP, 1976, 331 ff.; W. Ofuatey-Kodjoc, The Principle of Self-Determination in International Law, New York 1977, 97–147; J. F. Engers, 'From Sacred Trust to Self-Determination', 24 NILR, 1977, 85 ff.; J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, Oxford 1979, 89 ff.; anon., 'The Decolonization of Belize: Self-Determination v. Territorial Integrity', 22 Virginia Journal of International Law 1982, 849 ff.; Pomerance, Self-Determination in Law and Practice, 1982, 9-36; J. Charpentier, 'Autodétermination et décolonisation', in Mélanges C. Chaumont, Paris 1984, 117-33; O. Kimminich, 'Die Renaissance des Selbstbestimmungsrechts nach dern Ende des Kolonialismus', Fest. für B. Meissner, Berlin 1985, 601 ff., M. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa, Oxford 1986, 92-144; Z. Drnas de Clément, 'El derecho de libre determinacion de los pueblos: colonialismo formal, Neocolonialismo, colonialismo interno', 3 Anuario Argentino de Derecho Internacional, 1987-9, especially 214 ff.; Bennouna, 'Tiers Monde tet autodétermination', in Le droit à l'autodétermination, 83-94; Lombardi, Bürgerkrieg und Völkerrecht, 189 ff.; Blay, 'Self-Determination versus Territorial Integrity in Decolonization', 441 ff.; T. M. Franck, The Power of Legitimacy among Nations, New York and Oxford 1990, 160 ff.

¹⁶ H. Gros Espiell, Special Rapporteur, Implementation of United Nations Resolutions Relating to the Right of Peoples under Colonial and Alien Domination to Self-Determination, Study for the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights, United Nations, New York, 1980. Text originally issued under the symbol E/CN.4/Sub.2/405 (vols. I and II).

West Irian became part of Indonesia; Ifni was incorporated into Morocco; the Mariana Islands became a free associated state with the US; and Niue achieved 'self-government in free association' with New Zealand.

¹⁸ South Rhodesia, now called Zimbabwe; Belize; Brunei; Saint Christopher and Nevis; Saint Lucia; Saint Vincent and the Grenadines; and most recently, Namibia (however, as we shall see, to some extent the question of Namibia is not only a colonial question, but also an issue of foreign illegal occupation).

one case, that of East Timor (annexed by Indonesia in 1975), which was settled with total disregard for UN pronouncements and without UN approval.

Among the remaining situations, three stand out in particular, they being indicative of the inherent difficulties in resolving self-determination claims and the predicament the UN faces in the field: Gibraltar, the Falklands/Malvinas, and Western Sahara.

To what extent has the United Nations taken notice of the freely expressed will of colonial peoples?

The United Nations' practice has to a great extent upheld and applied the standards which have been referred to above. However, it has placed a liberal interpretation on them, in two respects.

Firstly the World Organization has sought to emphasize the requirement that self-determination should always be based on the freely expressed will of peoples. Accordingly, since 1954 the United Nations has organized, and often supervised, elections or plebiscites in non-self-governing territories, before their accession to independence or their association or integration with other countries. ¹⁹ Mention can be made of the plebiscites or elections held in the British Togoland Trust Territory in 1956, ²⁰ French Togoland in 1958, ²¹ the British Northern Cameroons

A plebiscite was held in British Togoland in May 1956 (upon the recommendation of the UN GA Res. 944(X) of 15 December 1955). The population voted in favour of the union of their territory with an independent Gold Coast (the other option being the separation of Togoland under British administration and continuance of a trusteeship pending a decision as regards independence). See UN Ybk, 1956, 368 ff.

²¹ By virtue of Res. 1182(XII) the UN General Assembly accepted the invitation of the government of Togoland to supervise elections, which were held on 27 April 1958. On

¹⁹ See M. Merle, 'Les plébiscites organisés par les Nations Unies', AFDI, 1961, 425-44. See also H. S. Johnson, Self-Determination within the Community of Nations, Leiden 1967, 59-98. It is interesting to note that in 1952 the US delegate in the UN Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) criticized the practice of UN supervised plebiscites. In a statement of 31 July 1952, commenting on a draft resolution, he pointed out the following: "The United States feels that the paragraph [of the draft resolution] unduly restricts the methods by which the wishes of non-self-governing people may be ascertained in the future by placing virtually sole reliance upon the UN supervised plebiscite. The adoption of the U.N. Charter does not require all nations to conduct all their foreign affairs through the United Nations; other means of international dealings have distinct advantages. Similarly, in the dealings between an administering country and the non-self-governing people, these people themselves may desire direct methods of contact which may not always be associated with the United Nations. For example, the United States recently arranged to determine the wishes of the people of Puerto Rico, Alaska and Hawaii, without a U.N. plebiscite' (30 Dept. St. Bul., 1952, at 270) in 1959²² and the British Southern Cameroons in 1961,²³ Rwanda-Urundi in 1961,²⁴ Western Samoa in 1962,²⁵ the Cook Islands in 1965,²⁶ Equatorial Guinea in 1968,²⁷ Papua-New Guinea in 1972,²⁸ the New Zealand Territory of Niue in 1974,²⁹ the Ellice Islands in 1974 (the voters decided to become a separate territory under the name of Tuvalu),³⁰ the

- 23 October 1958 the Chamber of Deputies of Togoland voted in favour of independence. See UN Ybk, 1958, 355 ff.
- 22 On 13 May 1959 the UN GA decided, by virtue of Res. 1350(XIII) to hold separate plebiscites under UN supervision in Northern and Southern Cameroons (under British administration). A plebiscite was held in Northern Cameroons on 7 November 1959 and people chose to postpone a decision (the alternative being that of joining Nigeria immediately). Arrangements were made for another referendum to be held in 1961. See UN Vbk. 1959, 361
- ²³ UN supervised plebiscites were held in the two territories on 11 and 12 February 1961. Northern Cameroons decided to join Nigeria, Southern Cameroon decided to join the Republic of Cameroun. The results were later endorsed by the UN GA by virtue of Res.1608(XV) of 21 April 1961. See UN Ybk, 1961, 494 ff.
- 24 The future of the monarchy in Rwanda was submitted to a UN supervised referendum (UN GA Res. 1580(XV)). The referendum was held in Rwanda on 25 September 1961 alongside the general elections. People voted against the monarchy and consequently a republic was proclaimed. See UN Ybk, 1961, 484 ff.
- ²⁵ A plebiscite was held on 9 May 1961 in order to ascertain the wishes of the inhabitants concerning their future (UN GA Res. 1569(XV) of 18 December 1960). The constitution adopted by the Constitutional Convention on 28 October 1960 was endorsed and it was decided that Western Samoa would become an independent State on the basis of that same constitution on 1 January 1962. See UN Ybk, 1961, 495 ff.
- ²⁶ On 18 February 1965 the UN GA (Res. 2005(XIX)) authorized the Secretary-General to appoint a UN representative to supervise general elections, which were held on the Cook Islands on 21 April 1965. See UN Ybk, 1965, 570 ff.
- ²⁷ A UN supervised referendum on the question of independence was held in Equatorial Guinea on 11 August 1968. The mission stayed on to supervise general elections, which were held on 22 and 29 September. See UN Ybk, 1968, 741.
- ²⁸ By virtue of Res. 2156(XXXVIII) of 18 June 1971 the Trusteeship Council decided to send a visiting mission to Papua-New Guinea to observe the elections to the House of Assembly. The mission visited the country from 15 February to 17 March 1972. See UN Ybk, 1972, 522.
- ²⁹ A referendum on self-determination was held in Niue in September 1974. The administering authority, New Zealand, invited the UN to send observers. The vote was in favour of self-government in free association with New Zealand. The results were endorsed by the G.A. by virtue of Res. 3285(XXIX) of 13 December 1974. See UN Ybk, 1974, 792 ff.
- 30 On 12 November 1974 a UN visiting mission was sent to Ellice Island at the request of the United Kingdom, to supervise a referendum on separation from the Gilbert islands. Ellice islanders voted in favour of separation. By virtue of Res. 3288(XXIX) of 13 December 1974 the GA expressed their appreciation of the mission's work. See UN Ybk, 1974, 791.

Northern Marianas in 1975,³¹ and the French Comores Islands in 1974 and 1976.³² Only in few cases did the UN fail to organize such plebiscites or elections. According to a distinguished commentator,³³ the cases of Gibraltar, West Irian, and Western Sahara stand out in this respect.

Secondly, in at least two cases (Rwanda-Urundi and the British Cameroons) the United Nations did not give primacy to the principle of territorial integrity. In the case of Rwanda-Urundi (a Belgian-administered territory) between 1959 and 1962 the United Nations overcame strong resistance to the splitting of the territory on the part of many African States, which were convinced that the best future for the territory lay in the evolution of a single, united and composite State'. As UN visiting missions had found compelling evidence of a strong feeling among the population that the separate personalities of Rwanda and Burundi should be respected, the Organization set up and supervised free elections from which the will of the two peoples to separate became apparent. In 1962, the General Assembly, by Resolution 1746(XVI) thus agreed to let Rwanda and Burundi 'emerge as two independent and sovereign States'. In the case of the British Cameroons, the United Nations' visiting mission concluded that the people of the Northern Cameroons preferred integration into Nigeria to political independence as a sovereign State. As for the inhabitants of Southern Cameroons (also under British administration), it was not clear whether they wished independence or integration into Cameroun (a former French colony). The United Nations therefore decided to call for separate UN-supervised plebiscites. The result was that the people of the Northern Cameroons opted for union with Nigeria and those of the Southern Cameroons voted for integration with Cameroun. In this case too, the United Nations was thus instrumental in making the principle of self-determination prevail over that of territorial integrity.

This practice should not, however, be overemphasized. The first of the two trends referred to above merely shows that the UN endeavoured, as far as possible, to meet the basic requirements of the principle of self-determination. It is not clear, however, whether the States concerned regarded themselves as legally bound to hold a referendum or a plebiscite in each case of decolonization. As for the second of the trends above mentioned, it should be underlined that the two territories at issue were even at the time of colonization distinct and separate in many respects. We are therefore confronted here with cases where the setting up of one independent State would have been blatantly contrary to the history and wishes of the populations concerned. The practice followed by the UN in these two cases cannot however be transposed to other instances, such as that of a colonial people consisting of various ethnic groups artificially welded together by the colonial Power. Indeed in these cases, the United Nations did not inquire as to the possible wishes of the various groups but simply endorsed the achievement of independence by the colonial territory.

³¹ By virtue of Res. 2160(XLII) of 4 June 1975 the Trusteeship Council decided to send a visiting mission to observe the plebiscite in the Mariana Islands district of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. See UN Ybk, 1975, 744.

³² Plebiscites were held in the Comoro Islands in 1974 and in 1976. In 1974 the three main islands (Anjouan, Grande Comore, and Moheli) opted for independence, whereas the majority in Mayotte rejected independence. A special referendum was again held concerning Mayotte in 1976 and the vast majority voted in favour of remaining with France. See 22 AFDI, 1976, 964–7; D. Rouzić, 'Note', in 103 Journal de Droit International, 1976, 392–405. For the reactions to the referendum in Mayotte in the General Assembly and Security Council, see Pomerance, Self-Determination in Law and Practice, 30–1.

³³ T. M. Franck, 'The Stealing of the Sahara', 70 AJIL, 1976, 700 ff.

Cases where the principle of self-determination was blatantly set aside Against this background of a fairly consistent implementation of self-determination in the colonial sphere, some instances of a gross disregard for the principle stand out; (i) India's annexation of the Portuguese enclaves within its territory of Goa, Damao and Din, in 1961; (ii) the annexation of West Irian by Indonesia in 1969; (iii) the occupation and subsequent annexation of East Timor by Indonesia in 1975. This last case will be the subject of closer scrutiny in Chapter 9 (pp. 223–30). Therefore, only the first two cases will be dealt with here. (Some commentators add to this list the territories of

On a few occasions, in discussions before the UN Human Rights Committee on the British periodic reports on the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the British government has reported on measures taken to respect self-determination. Thus, in 1991, answering questions on self-determination in Hong Kong, the British delegate pointed out that: 'Following the signing of the Joint Declaration in 1984, an Assessment

³⁴ As is well known, under the Treaty of Nanking of 1842 and the Convention of Peking of 1860, Hong Kong islands and a part of the Kowloon Peninsula were ceded to Great Britain in perpetuity. The rest of the territory (the New Territories plus the rest of Kowloon) comprising 92 per cent of the total land area was leased to Great Britain for ninety-nine years under a third Treaty, the Convention of Peking executed in 1898. The Chinese government has consistently argued that the whole of Hong Kong is Chinese territory and that the aforementioned treaties were unequal. Recently, negotiations commenced between the two governments concerning the whole area (the 8 per cent of Hong Kong's land area would not be viable without the New Territories, which contain most of the territory's agriculture and industry, its power stations, airport and container port). In 1984 the two governments signed a Joint Declaration whereby Hong Kong would revert to China in 1997.

Hong Kong³⁴ and Macao,³⁵ but this inclusion may be questionable, in view of the historical particularities of the territories; in any case, in the face of the lukewarm attitude taken by the UN,³⁶ it would seem that, at least in the case of Hong Kong, the two parties concerned have attached importance to the wishes of the population.)³⁷

With regard to the three enclaves of Goa, Damao, and Din,38 Portugal

Office had been established to evaluate the views of the people of Hong Kong, who were found to be largely in favour of the text. The Basic Law Drafting Committee consisted of 59 members, 23 of whom were from Hong Kong, and a Basic Law Consultative Committee, consisting exclusively of Hong Kong representatives, had been set up to determine public opinion in the Territory with regard to the draft Basic Law. The Hong Kong Government had issued a statement to the effect that it welcomed the intensive consultations which China had conducted with the people of Hong Kong during the drafting process and that efforts had been made to take account of the concerns expressed by Hong Kong during the consultation process' (see Report of the Human Rights Committee to the General Assembly, 1991, UN Doc. A/46/40, para. 367; see also paras. 354, 368–9). The issue had already been discussed in 1988 (see Report of the Human Rights Committee to the General Assembly, 1989, UN Doc. A/44/40, paras. 143, 152–4).

33 As for Macao, which will be returned by Portugal to China in 1999, see, inter alia, the discussion in 1990 on the Portuguese periodic report on the UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, before the Human Rights Committee: Report of the Human Rights Committee to the General Assembly, 1990, vol. I, UN Doc. A/45/40, paras. 124, 126.

- ³⁶ It is worth recalling that in 1972 the United Nations, at the request of China, decided that Hong Kong and Macao and dependencies were 'part of Chinese territory occupied' respectively 'by the British and Portuguese authorities' and consequently must be removed from the list of non-self-governing Territories (see UN Ybk, 1972, 543, where mention is made of the Chinese request of 8 March 1972 and the subsequent decision of the Committee of 24). See also the endorsement by the General Assembly, in Resolution 2908(XXVII) (ibid., 550-1; and cf. 625), which has the consequence that the exercise of reversionary rights by China will be carried out without any consultation of the population concerned. This position is accounted for by the political and military importance of China and the consequent fear, by other countries, that China might reclaim the territories in question by resort to force, without being checked by the UN Security Council. However, the particularities of the case that may have warranted the setting aside of self-determination include at least two important elements: (i) the population of the territory has remained to a very large extent Chinese; (ii) the transfer of the two territories to Great Britain was effected on the basis of a Treaty that provided for a lease and not a cession proper.
- 37 See below, Chapter 12.
- On the question of Goa, sec in particular Q. Wright, 'The Goa Incident', 56 AJIL, 1962, 617 ff; I. Brownlie, International Law and the Use of Force by States, Oxford 1964, 349, 379–83; Higgins, The Development of International Law, Through the Political Organs of the United Nations, London 1963, 187–8; Blay, 'Self-Determination v. Territorial Integrity', 466–7; J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, cit., 112–13; R. C. A. White, 'Self-Determination: Time for a Re-Assessment?', 28 NILR, 1981, 158; Emerson, Self-Determination Revisited in the Era of Decolonization 19–24; Rigo Sureda, The Evolution of the Right of Self-Determination, 172–7, 329–32; M. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa, cit., 151.

was slow to put in motion the process of decolonization but India decided not to wait for a plebiscite or referendum and so invaded this territory on 12–13 December 1961. When the UN Security Council met at the request of Portugal, India, supported by Liberia, asserted that its armed action was justified because Portugal had no sovereign right over non-self-governing territories in Asia, its occupation of those territories was illegal, and furthermore 'the people of Goa are as much Indians as people of any other part of India'.³⁹ This view was rejected by some members of the Security Council, namely the US, the UK, France, Turkey, and China, who all put forward various arguments mainly related to the illegal use of force (but the US also mentioned, in passing, the principle of self-determination).⁴⁰ Two other States, namely Chile and Ecuador, also criticised the stand taken by India but explicitly referred to self-determination. Thus, the Chilean delegate pointed out the following:

In the present case, we think the parties should take into consideration the wishes of the inhabitants of Goa, Damao and Din. There is no doubt whatsoever that the Portuguese possessions in India are historical vestiges of a colonial past... Neither historical possessions [by Portugal] nor violent possessions [by India] should prevail, but the freely expressed wishes of the inhabitants of the disputed territories.⁴¹

The United Arab Republic (as it then was) and Ceylon also relied on self-determination but their conclusion was different to that of Chile and Ecuador. According to them, since the people of the enclaves had not been allowed by Portugal to exercise their right to self-determination, India's resort to force did not amount to an act of aggression.⁴²

The formal outcome of this situation is well known. A draft resolution submitted by France, Turkey, the UK, and the US, which, among other things, referred in its preamble to the principle of self-determination as laid down in Article 1(2) of the UN Charter, was not adopted because of a negative vote cast by the USSR.⁴³ The Indian annexation of the three Portuguese enclaves, although briefly challenged in the Security Council, was thus endorsed de facto by the world community, without the slightest regard being paid to the wishes of the population concerned.

³⁹ SCOR, 987th Meeting, para. 46; 988th Meeting, para. 77. As for the position of Liberia, see SCOR, 987th Meeting, paras. 93-5.

⁴⁰ The US stated among other things: 'The U.S. stand on the colonial question is that we wholeheartedly believe in progress, in self-government and in self-determination for colonial peoples' (SCOR, 988th Meeting, para. 90).

⁴¹ SCOR, 988th Meeting, para. 30.

⁴² SCOR, 987th Meeting, para. 125. 43 See UN Ybk, 1961, 131.

Let us now turn to the question of West Irian (West New Guinea).44 In 1954 Indonesia, which had achieved independence in 1949, asked the UN General Assembly to discuss the question of the status of the territory. According to Indonesia, West Irian had always been an integral part of Indonesia, and must therefore be returned to this State. The Netherlands, supported by other Western countries (Australia, Belgium, Colombia, France, and New Zealand) contended that the Dutch administration of West Irian constituted a peaceful attempt to create conditions for the self-determination of the population; in its view, the interests of the non-self-governing people concerned should prevail above all else. 45 Other States, including Brazil, El Salvador, Pakistan, Peru, and Uruguay, after voicing their opposition to colonialism in all its forms, considered that the General Assembly should adopt a resolution stressing the importance, not of bilateral negotiations between the two States concerned but rather of the attainment of self-determination by the people of West Irian. 46 However, by reason of the lack of agreement no resolution was adopted. In subsequent years the parties reiterated their positions, The Netherlands insisting that the question of sovereignty over the territory was to be ultimately resolved by the inhabitants themselves and Indonesia seeking instead a negotiated settlement between the two States.⁴⁷

On this question, see in particular Emerson, Self-Determination Revisited, 53–62; H. von Mangoldt, 'Die West-Irian Frage und das Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker', 313 Zeit., 1971, 197–245; Rigo Sureda, The Evolution of the Right of Self-Determination, 143–51; Blay, 'Self-Determination versus Territorial Integrity', 450–2, as well as the writings by T.M. Franck and M. Pomerance quoted below (notes 58 and 59).

⁴⁵ UN Ybk, 1954, 57–8.

⁴⁶ Ibid., 58.

⁴⁷ See UN Ybk, 1955, 61–2; UN Ybk, 1956, 125–7; UN Ybk, 1957, 76–9. The position of the two parties was clearly restated in 1957. As is recorded in the UN Ybk, 1957 (at 77), the Indonesian stand was as follows: 'Instead of the United Nations being allowed to serve as an instrument for reconciling the differences between the two States, numerous pretexts were being invoked to prevent a peaceful settlement, notably the principle of "self-determination". The Indonesian representative found it curious that certain powers which had proclaimed their adherence to the principle of reunification of divided States were conducting a movement exactly in reverse of that principle with respect to West Irian. Indonesia was fighting against the amputation of West Irian from the rest of Indonesia and for the principle of reunification and national unity. Any thought of splitting Indonesia into several smaller States was illusory. If Indonesia were to disintegrate and if the present democratic character of the State were to come to an end and be replaced by a different political system, it would not be a development designed to increase the stability or ensure the peace and security of South-East Asia.'

The Dutch stand was as follows (ibid., 77–8): The representative of the Netherlands summed up the basic position of his Government as follows: (1) The Netherlands, in

The situation remained as stated until 1961, when the question was once again brought before the General Assembly. In this forum the parties underlined their positions: The Netherlands insisted on the principle of self-determination and Indonesia on the principle of negotiation between the two States. It should be noted, in this respect, that the Dutch proposal to consult the population concerned offered a wide range of options: independence, integration into Indonesia, association with the other part of New Guinea or other islands in the Pacific region. Western States sided with The Netherlands while Indonesia mustered the support of socialist and developing countries. However, the basic disagreement existing among States once again made it impossible for a resolution to be adopted. Western the support of socialist and developing countries.

Subsequently, an agreement was reached by the two States on 15 August 1962; under this agreement The Netherlands would transfer the administration of the territory to a United Nations Temporary Executive Authority (UNTEA), established by, and under the jurisdiction of, the Secretary-General, who would appoint a UN Administrator to lead it. The Administrator would have the discretion to transfer all or part of the administration of the territory to Indonesia at any time after 1 May 1963. The inhabitants of West Irian were to exercise their right of self-accordance with Chapter XI of the United Nations Charter, was responsible for the administration of Netherlands New Guinea and was fulfilling its obligations under Article 73. (2) If the Netherlands were to agree to transfer the territory to Indonesia without first ascertaining the wishes of the inhabitants, it would be forsaking its duty to them and to the United Nations. (3) The Netherlands had solemnly promised the territory's inhabitants that they would be granted the opportunity to decide their own political future as soon as they were able to express their will on this. (4) In the absence of such a decision, the Netherlands could not and would not comply with any Indonesian demands for the annexation of the territory. Nor would it enter into any negotiations about its future status.... The Netherlands representative further stated that Indonesia was not really advocating negotiations with the Netherlands so as to reach a solution by common consent which would take the wishes of the territory's inhabitants into account. On the contrary, it was urging the General Assembly to advocate negotiations on the basis of two assumptions: (1) that Netherlands New Guinea was legally part of Indonesia and illegally occupied by the Netherlands, and (2) that the territory should be transferred to Indonesia without its population being previously consulted.

The Netherlands, he added, was willing to have the first assumption tested by the International Court of Justice. The second assumption, he thought, was a denial of the right of self-determination and thus contrary to the Charter.'

48 See UN Doc. A/4954, of 4 November 1961 (letter from the Dutch representative to the President of the UN General Assembly).

⁴⁹ UN Ybk, 1961, 51-7.

determination before the end of 1969 and to decide whether they wished to remain with Indonesia or to sever their ties with it.50 As far as the procedure for establishing the wishes of the inhabitants was concerned, the agreement provided that the act of self-determination was to be held 'in accordance with international practice' and with the participation of 'all adults, male and female, not foreign nationals'. The agreement also referred to the Indonesian system of musjawarah, a traditional method of consultation consisting in reaching 'a decision based on discussion, understanding and knowledge of a problem';51 however, resort to this system was only provided for with respect to the preliminary issue of the 'procedures and appropriate methods' to be followed in the 'act of self-determination'. The General Assembly approved the treaty by virtue of Resolution 1752(XVII) of 21 September 1962. Control of the territory was eventually handed over to Indonesia after 1 May 1963. In 1969 an 'act of free choice' was held, in accordance with GA Resolution 1752(XVII); the population opted for Indonesia and the General Assembly took note of this choice in its Resolution 2504(XXIV) of 19 November 1969.

In spite of this 'act of free choice', the integration of West Irian into Indonesia amounted to a substantial denial of self-determination. First, the choice provided for in the bilateral agreement of 1962 was limited to 'whether they wished to remain with Indonesia' and 'whether they wished to sever their ties with Indonesia'. No reference was made to the possible alternatives in case the vote was in favour of leaving Indonesia.⁵² Second, the criteria for establishing whether a territory ceased to be non-selfgoverning, listed in GA Resolutions 742(VIII) and 1541(XV) were not met by the bilateral agreement of 1962, as was pointed out by Rigo Sureda;53 consequently, 'the attitude taken by the General Assembly can be assumed to mean that West Irian was regarded as an "integral part" of Indonesia and, therefore, that there was no need for it to go through the process indicated by the General Assembly to achieve self-determination'. 54 Third, the method of consultation was that of the musjawarah system, which undoubtedly did not meet the requirements set forth by the General Assembly. Fourth, no real and direct consultation of the population was made; the 'consultation' was indirect, in that Regional Councils (enlarged by three classes of representatives: regional, organizational, and tribal)

⁵⁰ UN Ybk, 1962, 124-7.

⁵¹ See below, note 55.

⁵² Cf. Rigo Surcda, The Evolution of the Right of Self-Determination, 232.

⁵³ Ibid., 151. ⁵⁴ Ibid., 151.

were called upon to decide which of the options to accept.⁵⁵ Fifth, by reason of the reduction of UN personnel (due to budget cuts by The Netherlands and Indonesia and to the inability of the Indonesian authorities to provide the UN mission with adequate housing in the capital city of West Irian), the UN staff were unable properly to supervise the elections for the consultative assemblies.⁵⁶ Sixth, the Indonesian authorities put strong pressure on the population of West Irian in order to secure support for integration into Indonesia.⁵⁷

55 The Indonesian authorities refused to accept the suggestions for consultation made by the UN Representative. According to his report, in November 1968, at a meeting with Indonesian authorities, 'I pointed out that, in my capacity as United Nations Representative, I could suggest no other method for this delicate political exercise than the democratic, orthodox and universally accepted method of "one man, one vote" However, while maintaining firmly my conviction that the people of West Irian might be given as ample and as complete an opportunity as possible to express their opinion, I recognized that the geographical and human realities in the territory required the application of a realistic criterion. I therefore suggested that the system of "one man, one vote" should be used in the urban areas, where the communications and transportation, the comparatively advanced cultural level of the population and the availability of adequate administrative facilities made it possible, and that this might be complemented by collective consultations in the less accessible and less advanced areas of the interior. A mixed system of that type would have the merit of being the best possible in the circumstances and would enable the Indonesian Government and the United Nations to state that the orthodox and perfect method of 'one man, one vote' had been used in the act of free choice to the maximum extent compatible with reality. I added that the staff of my mission would be ready to co-operate in the preparations for the exercise and in the registration of the voters and the tabulation of the results. The modalities of the collective consultations in the areas where that system would be applied would have to be the subject of future discussions' (Report of the [UN] Secretary-General Concerning the Act of Self-Determination in West Irian, 24 General Assembly, Agenda Item 98, UN Doc. A/7723, 6 November 1969, 29 (para. 82).

The response of the Indonesian government, given in February 1969, was that its 'intention was to consult the representative councils in order to obtain their approval for implementing the act of free choice through the eight representative councils, which would be enlarged to form consultative assemblies where each member would represent approximately 750 inhabitants. The consultative assemblies would not reach a decision through voting but through musjawarah which, as explained at that meeting, consisted in reaching a "decision based on discussion, understanding and knowledge of a problem".

This meant that the Government still intended to apply the consultation (musjawarah) method of decision through representatives of the people but, in contradistinction to the ideas expressed on 1 October . . . it planned to carry out the act of free choice not through one body of 200 representatives but consecutively through eight consultative assemblies, comprising some 1,025 representatives' (ibid., 30, paras 84–5).

⁵⁶ Ibid., 312.

⁵⁷ Cf. Report of the [UN] Secretary-General Regarding the Act of Self-Determination in West Irian, 54–6, 70. As the UN Representatives pointed out: I regret to have to express my reservation regarding the implementation of article XXII of the Agreement, relating to "the rights, including the rights of free speech, freedom of movement and of assembly,

The critical comments that have been made concerning this pseudo-choice – which, as shown above, actually proved to be a charade and a substantive betrayal of the principle of self-determination – by such authors as Pomerance⁵⁸ and Franck⁵⁹ are fully justified, as are the views put forth by the Dutch delegate to the General Assembly in 1962,⁶⁰ which were rightly referred to by Franck as 'an eloquent epitaph to self-determination'.⁶¹

Three outstanding situations

Three situations still await a proper solution based on respect for the will of the population concerned: Western Sahara, Gibraltar, and the Falklands/Malvinas. Since the first two will be discussed at some length in Chapter 9, only the third case will be briefly dealt with here. Nevertheless, in so doing, reference will be made, if somewhat briefly, to the Gibraltar question, with which that of the Falklands/Malvinas has some common elements.⁶²

It is indeed interesting at the outset to note these common features. Both the Falklands/Malvinas and Gibraltar have been under British control for more than 150 years, the former since 1833, as a result of military occupation, and the latter since 1713, as a result of a treaty of cession with Spain subsequent to its occupation in 1704 by the United Kingdom. Both of the inhabitants of the area". In spite of my constant efforts, this important provision was not fully implemented and the Administration exercised at all times a tight political control over the population' (ibid., 70, para. 251).

⁵⁸ M. Pomerance, 'Methods of Self-Determination and the Argument of "Primitiveness", 12 CYIL, 1974, 65; Pomerance, Self-Determination in Law and Practice, 26, 32–5.

⁵⁹ T. M. Franck, Nation against Nation, New York and Oxford 1985, 76–81.

Government regrets that in this instance no effective remedy was to be found against the use of force, contrary to the obligations of the States under the Charter of the United Nations. As a result, the Netherlands was faced with the choice between fighting in self-defense or resigning itself to transfer of the territory to Indonesia without a previous expression of the will of the population. War would have meant exposing the Papuans and their country to death and destruction and many Dutchmen and Indonesians to the horrors of combat – without even providing a sensible solution to the problem. And so, with a heavy heart, the Netherlands Government decided to agree to the transfer of the territory to Indonesia on the best conditions obtainable for the Papuan population' (GAOR, XVII, 1127th Pl. Mtg., 21 September 1961, 51).

61 Ibid., 81.

⁶² On the question of Gibraltar and Falklands/Malvinas, see in particular Blay, 'Self-Determination v. Territorial Integrity', 463–5 and the bibliography quoted there. See also M. Iovane, 'Le Falkland/Malvinas: autodeterminazione o colonizzazione?', in N. Ronzitti (ed.), La questione delle Falkland/Malvinas nel diritto internazionale, Milan 1984, 85–122; R. Dolzer, 'Falkland Islands (Malvinas)', 12 Encyclopedia, 1990, 103–8.

are a considerable geographical distance from the administering country. Furthermore, the inhabitants of both the Falklands/Malvinas and Gibraltar are essentially of 'colonial' (i.e. British) stock (although the present inhabitants of Gibraltar are of a less homogeneous origin, since many of them are also descended from Spaniards or other groups who have moved to Gibraltar over the years). Finally, in both cases the 'contiguous' country – Argentina in the case of the Falklands/Malvinas, Spain in the case of Gibraltar – claims a reversionary title to sovereignty over the territory in question.

As is well known, an armed conflict broke out in the Falklands/Malvinas in 1982, when Argentina attempted to take the islands by force. At the end of the war, Britain, having won a decisive victory, reaffirmed her right to the islands. The self-determination issue, however, remains unresolved. Argentina's claims – based on the reversion of territorial sovereignty, contiguity, and anti-colonialism – remain in fundamental opposition to Britain's claim to title resulting from conquest, the continuing display of territorial sovereignty, and self-determination. 63

In general, the UN's failures in the Falklands/Malvinas, Gibraltar, and the Western Sahara, and in the other situations still pending, are rooted more in the intricacies of each situation than in the principle of self-determination itself. In some cases the composition of the population and the existence of conflicting claims of sovereign States make the actual implementation of self-determination impracticable. However, the existence of the right demands that those in power take into account the wishes or the interests of the territory's population when a solution is finally worked out. Therefore, despite the present impracticability of the principle in question, it retains a potential role. In other cases, the intractability of the problem is rooted in overriding economic and strategic interests.

However, regardless of the UN's failures - stemming, to some extent, from the non-existence of a UN enforcement mechanism - one point

For a reasoned statement on the official British stand on the question of the Falklands/Malvinas and the role of self-determination, see 53 BYIL, 1982, 367 ff. See also 61 BYIL, 1990, 507. It should be noted that in 1991, when discussing in the UN Human Rights Committee the 3rd British Periodic Report on the implementation of the UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the British delegate pointed out the following: '[T]he people of the Falkland Islands expressed their views in regular elections and . . . there was no doubt that their wish was to remain under British sovereignty. Since the 1990 agreement between the United Kingdom and Argentina, the two Governments had been able to agree on a number of issues relating to activities in the Islands and in the South Atlantic region in general' (Report of the Human Rights Committee to the G.A., 1991, UN Doc. A/46/40, para. 366).

needs to be emphasized: in each case the UN has pursued the most logical and realistic course of action. The UN must be credited with promoting negotiations between the States claiming title to the Falklands/Malvinas and Gibraltar. Its insistence that all negotiations fully recognize the wishes and interests of the populations concerned is to be welcomed. In addition, it seems difficult to criticize the UN's hesitancy to resolve outstanding differences by merely resorting to the traditional means of implementing self-determination (referendums and plebiscites) in the cases of the Falklands/Malvinas and Gibraltar. Since the British – rightly or wrongly have for a long time maintained policies designed to keep the two territories in the hands of British people and to exclude Argentinians and Spaniards respectively, perhaps one should not reject out of hand the argument that in the Falklands/Malvinas and Gibraltar cases one ought in principle to take account of the interests and concerns of the 'contiguous' State as well.

Be that as it may, by reaffirming the principle of self-determination as the basic standard of conduct while at the same time calling for direct negotiations between all parties concerned, the UN has assumed an active and important role in the field of self-determination (see, on this matter, my comments in Chapter 8).

THE PRONOUNCEMENTS OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

The legal regulation of the self-determination of colonial peoples was authoritatively stated by the ICJ, first in its Advisory Opinion on Namibia, ⁶⁴ of 1971 and then in the Advisory Opinion on Western Sahara, of 1975. In the latter Opinion the Court actually placed an interpretation on the existing standards that broadened the purport and impact of self-determination. After mentioning the GA Resolution 1514(XV), the Court pointed out that:

The above provisions, in particular paragraph 2 [defining self-determination], thus confirm and emphasize that the application of the right of self-determination requires a free and genuine expression of the will of the peoples concerned.⁶⁵

The Court then went on to quote two other resolutions of the General Assembly, namely Resolution 1541 (XV), that has been discussed above and the 1970 Declaration on Friendly Relations (Resolution 2625(XXV)). It then concluded as follows:

⁶⁴ See above, p. 72 note 12. 65 ICJ, Reports 1975, 32, para. 55.

does not seem that the pronouncements of States and the international practice in this matter have hardened into a specific customary rule to the effect that the population concerned must always be enabled to express its free and genuine will as to whether or not to be transferred to another country (to use the language of the Atlantic Charter, this would be a rule providing that no 'territorial changes' are permissible 'that do not accord with the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned'). Nor, on the other hand, does a rule exist stating that the people's views are irrelevant or should not be sought. Here the principle at hand comes into play and requires that no cession or transfer should be carried out if the population concerned is not in agreement (see below, pp. 189–90). St

Self-determination as imposing obligations towards the whole international community and as part of jus cogens

Two distinguishing features of the law on self-determination should now be emphasized, which are indicative, at the legal level, of the overriding importance self-determination has now acquired in the world community.

⁵⁶ However, some national Constitutions lay down the principle. Mention can be made, for example, of the French Constitution of 1958, Art. 53(3) which provides that 'Nulle cession, nul échange, nulle adjonction de territoire n'est valable sans le consentement des populations intéressées' (this provision takes up Art. 27(2) of the 1946 French Constitution). Art. 53(3) was applied by the 'Conseil Constitutionnel' with regard to the Comoros Islands in 1975 (see J.C. Mestre, 'L'indivisibilité de la République française et l'exercise du droit à l'autodétermination', RDP, 1976, 431–62; L. Favoreu, 'La décision du 30 décembre 1975 dans l'affaire des Comores', ibid., 537–81).

In spite of the joint working and interplay of the principle and the rules on self-determination, the fact remains that the international regulation of this matter is far from satisfactory. In this connection, it is fitting to recall the wise remarks set out in 1958 by W. Wengler: 'Plus on étudie donc le principe de la libre disposition des peuples jusque dans les détails de son application pratique, plus il paraît nécessaire de le complèter par d'autres règles du droit international. Il faut des garanties internationales pour la liberté des plébiscites. Si la population du territoire, qui est choisie comme base d'un plébiscite, n'est pas d'opinion unanime et si une majorité l'emporte sur une minorité, le droit de disposer d'elle-même exercé par la collectivité doit être complété par le droit d'opinon et par une protection efficace internationale de la minorité. La libre disposition des peuples exige aussi une réglementation internationale des migrations, basée sur la liberté de mouvements de l'individu, l'interdiction de priver un homme de son foyer, et l'interdiction des manipulations gouvernementales destinées à changer la composition de la population d'un territoire. Il faut surtout réprimer l'abus du droit de la libre disposition par la population habitant un territoire contenant des richesses naturelles nécessaires à l'humanité entière' ('Le droit de libre disposition des peuples', 38-9).

First, the obligations flowing from the principle and rules on self-determination are erga omnes, that is, they belong to that class of international legal obligations which are not 'bilateral' or reciprocal, but arise in favour of all members of the international community. As is well known, following the celebrated dictum of the ICJ in the Barcelona Traction case, ⁵⁸ there is now a firm distinction between two sets of international legal obligations: (a) those which (i) only arise as between pairs of States and (ii) are reciprocal or 'synallagmatic' in kind, in that their fulfilment by each State is conditioned by that of the other State, and (b) the obligations which (i) are incumbent on a State towards all the other members of the international community, (ii) must be fulfilled regardless of the behaviour of other States in the same field, and (iii) give rise to a claim for their execution that accrues to any other member of the international community. ⁵⁹

There can be no gainsaying that the set of norms on self-determination, to which attention has been drawn above, imposes obligations erga omnes. This proposition is supported by the fact that both within and outside the United Nations States have consistently taken the view that (a) self-determination must be respected by any State (be it a colonial State or a Power occupying a foreign territory or a State denying a racial group equal access to government), (b) it must be respected regardless of whether or not third States, finding themselves in the same situation, comply with the norms on self-determination and (c) any other international subject is entitled to demand respect for self-determination. However, we shall see below (pp. 147–58) that in actual practice States have only seldom made use of their right to demand compliance with international standards on self-determination by a given State.

Let us now turn to the question of jus cogens. According to a number of commentators, ⁶⁰ self-determination has now become a peremptory norm ⁵⁸ ICJ, Reports 1970, 32.

On obligations erga omnes, see: J. Juste Ruiz, 'Las obligaciones erga omnes en Derecho internacional público', Estudios de derecho internacional - Homengie al Profesor Migia de La Muela, vol. I, Madrid 1979, 219 ff.; P. Weil, 'Towards Relative Normativity in International Law?' 77 AJIL, 1983, 413 ff.; J. Frowein, 'Die Verpflichtungen erga omnes in Völkerrecht und ihre Durchsetzung', Fest. H. Mosler, Berlin, Heidelberg, and New York 1983, 241 ff.; P. Picone, 'Obblighi reciproci e obbligazioni erga omnes degli Stati nel campo della protezione internazionale dell'ambiente marino dall'inquinamento', in V. Starace (cd.), Diritto internazionale e protezione dell'ambiente marino, 1983, 15 ff.

⁶⁰ See Brownlie, Principles of Public International Law, 513, 515; H. Bokor-Szegő, 'The International Legal Content of the Right of Self-Determination as Reflected by the

of international law from which no derogation is admissible by means of a treaty or any similar international transaction. These authors, however, do not provide any element of State practice or opinio juris in support of their view.

Two issues should be discussed in this respect. Firstly, on what basis can it be contended that self-determination belongs to the body of international peremptory norms? Secondly, given the distinction outlined above between a principle proper of self-determination and a set of specific customary rules, which of them can be said to be part of jus cogens?

As far as the first issue is concerned, the legal basis for the transformation of self-determination into jus cogens cannot of course be found in views – however authoritative – put forward by persons acting in their individual capacity. I am referring to the well-known separate opinion of Judge Ammoun in the Barcelona Traction case, ⁶¹ to the opinion of some members of the International Law Commission, ⁶² as well as the views expressed in the UN Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, ⁶³ and, more recently, in the UN International Disintegration of the Colonial System', in Questions of International Law, Budapest 1966, 39–41; H. Gross-Espiell, 'Self-Determination and Jus Cogens', in A. Cassese (ed.), United Nations. Fundamental Rights, Alphen aan den Rijn1979, 167; Ermacora, 'The Protection of Minorities before the United Nations', 325; E. Klein, 'Vereinte Nationen und Selbstbestimmungsrecht', in D. Blumenwitz and B. Meissner (eds.), Das Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker und die deutsche Frage, Cologne 1984, 121; Shaw, Tille to Territory in Africa, 91; A. Kiss, 'The Peoples' Right to Self-determination', at 174; N. Quoc Dinh, P. Daillier, and A. Pellet, Droit international public, 4th edn, Paris 1992, 490; A. Pellet, 'The Destruction of Troy Will Not Take Place', in Playfair, International Law and the Administration of Occupied Territories, 184; J. A. Frowein, 'Self-Determination as Limit to Obligations under International Law', in Tomuschat, Modern Law of Self-Determination, 218–21. Cf. also Cassese, International Law in a Divided World, 136.

By far the most extensive treatment of this issue can be found in L. Hannikainen, Peremptory Norms (jus cogens) in International Law, Helsinki 1988, 357–424. This author concludes that 'all States are under the peremptory obligation: (1) not to forcibly subject alien peoples to a colonial-type domination; (2) not to keep alien peoples by forcible or deceitful means under a colonial-type domination; and (3) not to exploit the natural resources of those alien territories, which are under their colonial-type domination, to the serious detriment of the people of those territories' (at 421).

That self-determination has become part of jus cogens is denied by Calogeropoulos-Stratis, Le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, 269–71; Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, at 81; Pomerance, Self-Determination in Law and Practice, 70–2; and B. Driessen, A Concept of Nation in International Law, 60–1, at note 57.

61 ICJ, Reports 1970, 304, 312.

62 See, e.g., Yearbook of the ILC, 1963, vol. II, 199.

63 In 1978, in reporting to the UN Human Rights Commission on the work of the Sub-Commission (a body consisting of experts acting in a personal capacity), T. van Boven, Director of the UN Division of Human Rights, stated that: 'The view had been Law Commission by the Special Rapporteur on State Responsibility, G. Arangio-Ruiz.⁶⁴ These views cannot be held to reflect State practice, although they are highly indicative of the new trends emerging in the international community and may contribute, and have indeed contributed, to the evolution of State practice. More weight should of course be attributed to statements made by State organs (it should be noted, in passing, that in the absence of State practice proper, for the purpose of classifying an international rule as belonging to jus cogens, the opinio juris of States as to the legal standing of that rule may prove sufficient).⁶⁵

In this respect, reference can be made to the pronouncements of various States in the UN General Assembly on the occasion of a discussion on the Draft Articles on the Law of Treaties in 1963,66 at the Vienna Conference on the Law of Treaties in 1968–9,67 as well as in the General Assembly in 1970, on the occasion of the discussion on the Declaration on Friendly widely expressed in the Sub-Commission that the principle of self-determination had the character of jus cogens — a peremptory norm of international law' (UN Doc. E/CN.4/SR 1431, at 3, para. 6). The same view was expressed in the Human Rights Commission by the representative of the PLO (ibid., 1437, at 8, para. 26), but it is doubtful whether it can be equated to that of a State, for the purpose of the formation of international practice.

64 G. Arangio-Ruiz, Fourth Report on State Responsibility, UN Doc. A/CN.4/444/Add. 1

(25 May 1992), at 31 (para. 91).

Recently, it has been authoritatively held by C. Dominicé ('Le grand retour du droit naturel en droit des gens', Mélanges J.-M. Grossen, Basle and Frankfurt am Main 1992, especially 401–9; cf. also J. Verhoeven, 'Le droit, le juge et la violence', RGDIP 1987, 1205) that some general precepts based upon elhical values, and in particular those precepts which belong to jus cogens, can acquire the status of legally binding rules or even peremptory norms of international law without the confirmation by any State practice proper, provided the element of opinio juris is present.

66 See GAOR, XXIst Session, VIth Committee, 905th Meeting.

67 See the statements of the delegates of the USSR (United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties, First Session, 1968, Official Records, 294, para. 3), Sierra Leone (ibid., 300, para. 9), Ghana (ibid., 301, para. 16), Cyprus (ibid., 306, para. 69), Poland (United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties, Second Session, 1969, Official Records 99, para. 71), Byelorussia (ibid., 105, para. 48). See also the statements of those delegates who affirmed that all the principles laid down in Art. 1 (or Arts. 1 and 2) of the UN Charter belong to jus cogens: Poland (United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties, First Session, Official Records, 302, para. 35; see also Second Session, Official Records, 99, para 70), Romania (First Session, Official Records, 312, para. 55), Czechoslovakia (ibid., 318, para. 25), Ecuador (Second Session, Official Records, 96, para. 35), Cuba (ibid., 97, para. 42), Ukraine (ibid., 100, para. 75), the USSR (ibid., 104, para. 41).

Relations.⁶⁸ Reference can also be made to the submissions made in 1975 before the ICJ both by a Western State (Spain) and by Algeria and Morocco (this last State asserted, however, that only the 'principle of decolonization' – of which self-determination is only one of the possible methods of implementation – has the status of jus cogens).⁶⁹

The problem with these pronouncements is that they mostly emanate from two groups of States: that is, the developing and 'socialist' States (as they were then called) but not from Western countries. Thus, in the UN General Assembly a view favourable to regarding self-determination as jus cogens was taken by Ukraine, Czechoslovakia, the USSR, Peru and Pakistan, Iraq, Ethiopia, and Trinidad and Tobago while at the Vienna Conference a similar view was expressed by the USSR, Sierra Leone, Ghana, Cyprus, Byelorussia, and Poland. As for Western countries, it would seem that only Greece in 1970,70 Spain,71 and Italy in 197572 are on record as upholding the view at issue. However, an important statement by the US should also be mentioned. It was made in 1979 by the Legal Adviser to the US State Department in a memorandum submitted to the then Acting Secretary of State Warren Christopher. In this document the Legal Adviser stated that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan was contrary to Article 2(4) of the UN Charter as well as to the principle of selfdetermination of peoples, to which that provision referred. As Article 2(4)

⁶⁹ See, e.g., the Memorial of the Spanish Government to the ICJ in the Western Sahara case, ICJ, Pleadings. Oral Arguments. Documents, Western Sahara, vol. I, 206–8; the oral statement of Mr Bedjaoui, counsel for Algeria, ibid., vol. IV, 497–500 and vol. V, 319–20; and the oral statement of Mr Vedel, counsel for Morocco, ibid., vol. V, 179–80.

⁶⁸ See the statements of Iraq (GAOR, 25th Session, Sixth Committee, A/C.6/SR.1180, para. 6), Ethiopia (ibid., 1182, para. 49) and Trinidad and Tobago (ibid., 1183, para. 5). A contrary view was taken by Hungary (ibid., 1179, para. 35: "The Declaration would not have the status of a treaty and could not be considered jus cogens").

⁷⁰ In 1970, in the UN General Assembly, on the occasion of the debate on the Declaration on Friendly Relations, the Greek delegate stated that "The Declaration would constitute an important contribution to the safeguarding of international peace and security, and the consensus reached on the text of the seven principles furnished greatly needed clarification of the content of the related jus cogens provisions of the Charter' (GAOR, 25th Session, VIth Committee, A/C.6/SR.1181, para. 31).

⁷¹ See above, note 69.

⁷² In 1975, Prof. G. Sperduti, in his capacity as Italian delegate to the UN Human Rights Committee stated that 'The right of peoples to self-determination was not just one of the fundamental principles of the new world order. It could also be classified in a new category of international legal rules recently stated and still in the course of codification. The principle might be reckoned among those which came under the head of jus cogens. If it was thus classified, it would have very important repercussions and the two Special Rapporteurs appointed by the Sub-Commission should try to study the problem from that standpoint too' (UN Doc. E/CN.4/SR.1300, 91).

was to be regarded as a peremptory norm of international law, the Treaty of 1978 between Afghanistan and the USSR, to the extent that it would support the Soviet intervention, was to be regarded as null and void as being in conflict with jus cogens.73 No doubt this was a very skilful and subtle way of elevating self-determination - albeit in an indirect and roundabout way – to the rank of jus cogens. It can be contended that a more straightforward way of relying on self-determination would consist in arguing that any invasion of a foreign territory such as that of Afghanistan amounts to the breach of two distinct and closely intertwined peremptory norms: the one prohibiting any unauthorized use of force and the norm on the right of peoples to self-determination. The US adverted instead to self-determination only insofar as it is referred to in Article 2(4). Nevertheless, whichever of these two views is regarded as the more correct, the fact remains that the US statement constitutes an important contribution to the consolidation of self-determination as a norm of jus cogens.

One should also mention that in its Opinion no. l, of 11 January 1992, the 'Arbitration Committee' set up by the EC 'Conference on Yugoslavia' held that 'the peremptory norms of general international law and, in particular, respect for the fundamental rights of the individuals and the rights of peoples and minorities, are binding on all the parties to the ⁷³ It is worth quoting the relevant passages of this important pronouncement by the US authorities: '1. By the terms of Article 2(4) of the UN Charter, the USSR is bound "to refrain in its international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations". Among those Purposes are "respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples" (Article 1(2)). The use of Soviet troops forcibly to depose one ruler and substitute another clearly is a use of force against the political independence of Afghanistan; and it just as clearly contravenes the principle of Afghanistan's equal international rights and the self-determination of the Afghan people . . . 3. No treaty between the USSR and Afghanistan can overcome these Charter obligations of the USSR. Article 103 of the Charter provides: "In the event of conflict between the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the present Charter and their obligations under any other international agreement, their obligations under the present Charter shall prevail." 4. Nor is it clear that the treaty between the USSR and Afghanistan, concluded in 1978 between the revolutionary Taraki Government and the USSR, is valid. If it actually does lend itself to support of Soviet intervention of the type in question in Afghanistan, it would be void under contemporary principles of international law, since it would conflict with what the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties describes as a "peremptory norm of general international law" (Article 53), namely, that contained in Article 2(4) of the Charter. While agreement on precisely what are the peremptory norms of international law is not broad, there is universal agreement that the exemplary illustration of a peremptory norm is Article 2(4)' (in 74 AJIL, 1980, 418 ff.).

succession [to Yugoslavia]'.⁷⁴ Although this ruling, restated in Opinion no. 9, of 4 July 1992,⁷⁵ may be regarded as too sweeping and in addition emanates from a body consisting of individuals and not of States, it is nevertheless indicative of the increasingly strong movement among Western countries towards jus cogens.⁷⁶

The criticism may, however, be made that these elements of Western State practice are too few and far between to signal a consistent and generalized attitude. If this view is accepted, one could adopt the following line of reasoning. It is well known that for a norm of jus cogens to have developed the 'acceptance and recognition' of 'the international community of States as a whole' is required (ex Article 53 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, which in this respect can be regarded as part of customary law).77 The lack of support by an important segment of the world community might therefore lead to the conclusion that selfdetermination has not acquired the rank and force of jus cogens. Arguably, however, for a norm of jus cogens to evolve, it is not always necessary for all States to say in so many words that they consider that norm as existing. Although such formal 'labelling' proves important and in some cases indispensable, there may be instances where the upgrading of a rule to jus cogens may result implicitly from the attitude taken by States in their international dealings and in collective fora. Self-determination is a case in point. Undisputedly Western countries have stated time and again that self-determination is one of the fundamental principles of the world community; they have consequently agreed to such international instruments as the 1970 UN Declaration on Friendly Relations and the 1975 Helsinki Final Act; they have also insisted on the universality of self-determination, thereby showing that they intend to assign to selfdetermination a scope and impact extending far beyond the meaning advocated by the developing and the then socialist countries. By the same token, Western countries, except for France, have eventually accepted the formation of jus cogens as a class of 'special' international norms.78 It would

⁷⁴ For the text of the Opinion, see 3 EJIL, 1992, 182-3.

⁷⁵ For the text, see 4 EJIL, 1993, at 89.

⁷⁶ In addition and generally speaking, one should not underevaluate, as an element of international practice, the arbitral award in the Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal case (Détermination de la frontière maritime) of 31 July 1989; the Tribunal implicitly regarded self-determination as a peremptory norm of international law (see 94 RGDIP 1990, 234–5).

⁷⁷ See Cassese, International Law in a Divided World, 175-9.

⁷⁸ See also the dictum of the International Court of Justice in the Nicaragua case (ICJ, Reports 1986, 100-1, para. 190).

therefore seem appropriate, in this case, to rely upon a syllogism: (i) Western countries have accepted jus cogens; (ii) they regard the principle of self-determination as fundamental and universal in international relations; (iii) they consequently may be assumed to consider self-determination as non-derogable on the part of States. It is submitted that resort to this 'syllogistic reasoning' is warranted in this case (but possibly not in others) because of the exceptional wealth of pronouncements by Western States on the fundamental importance of self-determination in its various versions that have become accepted at the normative level.

The aforementioned reasoning can therefore make up for the lack, among Western countries, of widespread explicit support for considering self-determination as a part of jus cogens. Consequently, the conclusion is justified that self-determination constitutes a peremptory norm of international law. This view, it should be added, is warranted even though so far no case has been raised in the appropriate fora of the world community of a possible conflict of a treaty with jus cogens (the case of East Timor, as we shall see, has been brought by Portugal before the ICJ as an instance of State responsibility because the lack of the necessary procedural requirements has prevented Portugal from raising the question of the possible nullity of the treaty in question).

Let us now turn to the second issue raised above, namely the question of whether the peremptory nature of self-determination is a quality attaching to the aforementioned general principle or to the various customary rules specifying and elaborating this principle. Given the close link and indeed complementarity of the principle and the rules, it would be artificial and improper to attribute a different legal force to each of the two classes of standards. Furthermore, it is no coincidence that whenever States have referred to self-determination as belonging to jus cogens, they have not specified either the areas of application of self-determination, the means or methods of its implementation, or the permissible outcome of self-determination. States have generically adverted to the 'principle' (lato sensu) or, more simply, to self-determination. It follows that the whole cluster of legal standards (the general principle and the customary rules) on self-determination should be regarded as belonging to the body of peremptory norms.

Cable "HICOMIND" Louis

भारतीय उच्चायोग

पोर्टलूई-मारीशस

HIGH COMMISSION OF INDIA

PORT LOUIS - MAURITIUS

No. POR/162/1/97

Telex: 4523 HICOMIN - IW Fax 230 / 208-6859

Phone 208-3775/6

09 May 1997

of India High Commission presents compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, International and Regional Cooperation, Government of the Republic of Mauritius, and has the honour to reproduce herewith extracts relating to Chagos Archipelago from the Declaration adopted by the 12th Ministerial Conference of Movement of Non-Aligned Countries held in New Delhi on April 7-8, 1997.

"133. The Ministers reiterated the support of the Non-Aligned Movement for the sovereignty of Mauritius over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, and called on the former colonial power to pursue the dialogue with the Government of Mauritius for the early return of the Archipelago. In this respect, they noted with satisfaction the initiation of certain confidence-building measures by the two parties."

The High Commission of India avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, International and Regional Cooperation, Government of the Republic of Mauritius, the assurances of its highest consideration.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, International and Regional Cooperation, Government of the Republic of Mauritius,

ORGANISATION DE L'UNITE AFRICAINE

P.O Box 3243, Addis Ababa - ETHIOPIA

Tulunkana 351 1 617700

Fax 251 1 517844

Reference: CD/DOC/14/18.00

The General Secretariat of the Organization of African Unity presents its compliments to the Ministries of Foreign Affairs/External Relations of all the Member States and has the honour to draw their attention to and inadvertent typing error in Paragraph 3 of the English and Portuguese versions of Decision AHG/Dec.159(XXXVI) on Chagos Archipelago, adopted by the 36th Ordinary Session of the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government, held from 10 to 12 July 2000 in Lome, Togo.

Paragraph 3 of this Decision must read in English and Portuguese as stated in the respective copies attached hereto as follows:

"URGES the UK Government to immediately enter into direct and constructive dialogue with Mauritius so as to enable the early return of the Chagos Archipelago to the sovereignty of Mauritius."

The French and Arabic texts, being correct, remain unchanged.

The General Secretarint apologizes this typing error and avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Ministries of Foreign Affairs/External Relations of all the Member States the asserance of its highest consideration

Addis Ababa, 3 October 2000

vo. Ministries of Foreign Affairs/External Relations of all Member States

cc: Embassics of all OAU Member States
Addis Aluba

MECHANIA MANAGEMENT SENS

MOS FID U

DECISION ON CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO

Assembly:

- EXPRESSES CONCERN that the Chagos Archipelago was unilaterally and illegally excised by the colonial power from Mauritius prior to its independence in violation of UN Resolution 1514;
- NOTES WITH DISMAY that the bilateral talks between Mauritius and UK on this matter has not yet yielded any significant progress;
- 3. URGES the UK Government to immediately enter into direct and constructive dialogue with Mauritius so as to enable the early return of the Chagos Archipelago to the sovereignty of Mauritius

Annex 141
Letter from the Minister of Foreign Affairs and Regional Cooperation, Republic of Mauritius, to the Secretary of State for Foreign & Commonwealth Affairs, United Kingdom (21 Dec. 2000)

Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Regional Co-operation Republic of Mauritius

The Minister

21st December 2000

H.E. Mr. R. Cook Secretary of State Foreign & Commonwealth Office London SW1A 2AG ENGLAND

Your Excellency

May I thank you for your letter dated 6th December 2000 which was delivered by hand to me in Port Louis on 20th December 2000. I have taken note of its contents.

I wish to express my appreciation for the full, forceful and frank discussions I had with your officials in Gaborone as well as with your colleague, Minister Peter Hain. I am sure they have briefed you fully.

While going through your letter I have noticed some significant departures from the position that Her Majesty's Government has taken in the past.

For the sake of the record I am mindful of the fact that your Government had taken the position that the Chagos Archipelago would be ceded to Mauritius when it was no longer needed for the defence of the West.

It appears that you are now modifying this stand by including new elements.

Mauritius does not subscribe to your "willingness to cede the islands of the Chagos Archipelago subject to the requirement of International Law"

We note also that there is no strategic or defence impediment for the return of those persons of Mauritian origin who were living on the Chagos Archipelago to what you term the "outer islands".

As you are aware, Mauritius has officially announced that we have no objection to the continued presence of the US military base on Diego Garcia and we have informed the United States that there is no risk with regard to their security of tenure on the island.

Mauritius considers that the time has come to engage in constructive negotiations with a view to working out the modalities for an early return of sovereignty on the Chagos Archipelago to Mauritius.

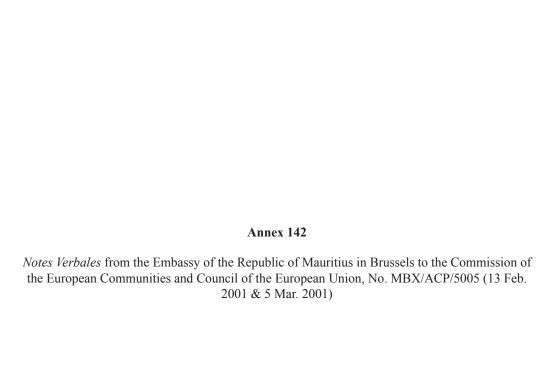

Mauritius and the United Kingdom enjoy excellent bilateral relations and we are sure that we will be able to find a way round this dispute in a friendly and constructive atmosphere.

Yours sincerely

A. K. Gayan

Minister of Foreign Affairs

& Regional Cooperation

AMFAISSADE DE MAURICE

32 2 7344021

Ambassy of the Republic of Mauritius

Our Reference: MBX/ACP/5005

The Embassy of the Republic of Mauritius presents its compliments to the Commission of the European Communities – Protocol – and, with reference to the Proposal of the Commission for a Council Decision on the association of the Overseas Countries and Territories with the European Community, has the honour to state the position of the Government of Mauritius regarding the inclusion of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, (the so-called British Indian Ocean Territory) as follows:

The Government of Mauritius reaffirms in the most unequivocal terms that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, has always been and is an integral part of the State of Mauritius. Mauritius has never recognised the so-called British Indian Ocean Territory.

The Government of Mauritius strongly rejects the inclusion of the so-called British Indian Ocean Territory in the list of Overseas Countries and Territories of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in the Proposal of the Commission of the European Communities dated 15 November 2000 (bearing reference COM (2000) 732 Final) for a Council Decision on the association of the overseas countries and territories with the European Community.

The Commission of the European Communities is, therefore, hereby requested to delete the so-called British Indian Ocean Territory as an Overseas Country and/or Territory (OCT) of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland from the Annex to the Proposal contained in document COM (2000) 732 Final.

The Embassy of the Republic of Mauritius would be grateful to the Commission of the European Communities to kindly acknowledge receipt of this Note Verbale.

The Embassy of the Republic of Mauritius avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Commission of the Republic of Communities – Protocol - the assurances of its highest consideration.

Brussels, 13 February 2001

COMMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES PROTOCOL
RUE DE LA LOI 200
B-1049 BRUSSELS

68, Rue des Bollandistes - 1040 Bruxelles - Tél. 02.733.99.88/89 - Fax 02.734.40.21

Ambassy of the Republic of Mauritius

Our Reference: MBX/ACP/5005

The Embassy of the Republic of Mauritius presents its compliments to the Council of the European Union – Protocol Directorate General – and, with reference to the Proposal of the Commission for a Council Decision on the association of the Overseas Countries and Territories with the European Community, has the honour to state the position of the Government of Mauritius regarding the inclusion of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, (the so-called British Indian Ocean Territory) as follows:

The Government of Mauritius reaffirms in the most unequivocal terms that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, has always been and is an integral part of the State of Mauritius. Mauritius has never recognised the so-called British Indian Ocean Territory.

The Government of Mauritius strongly rejects the inclusion of the so-called British Indian Ocean Territory in the list of Overseas Countries and Territories of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in the Proposal of the Commission of the European Communities dated 15 November 2000 (bearing reference COM (2000) 732 Final) for a Council Decision on the association of the overseas countries and territories with the European Community.

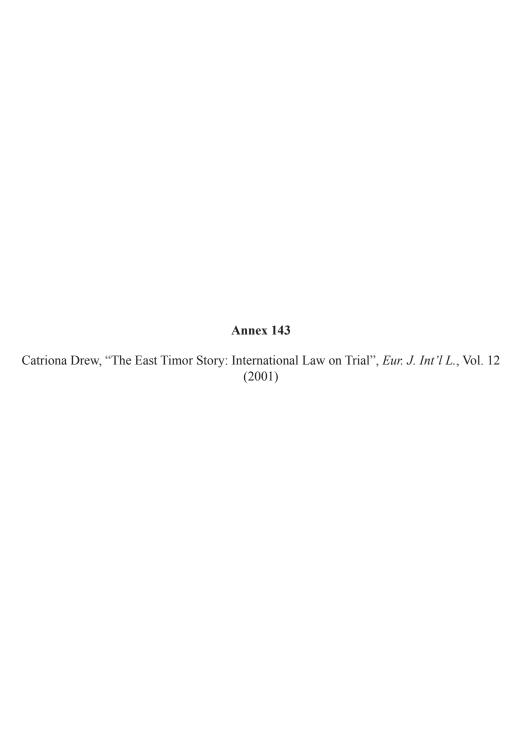

The Council of the European Union is, therefore, hereby requested to delete the so-called British Indian Ocean Territory as an Overseas Country and/or Territory (OCT) of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland from the Annex to the Proposal contained in document COM (2000) 732 Final.

The Embassy of the Republic of Mauritius would be grateful to the Council of the European Union to kindly acknowledge receipt of this Note Verbale.

The Embassy of the Republic of Mauritius avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Council of the European Union - Protocol Directorate General - the assurances of its highest consideration. OF THE RE-

Brussels, 05 March 2001

COUNCIL OF THE EUROPEAN UNION PROTOCOL DIRECTORATE GENERAL RUE DE LA LOI 175
B-1048 BRUSSELS

The East Timor Story: International Law on Trial

Catriona Drew*

Abstract

This article considers the story of East Timor in the light of the international legal rules on self-determination. It is argued that such an analysis is both timely and necessary. For more than 20 years, international lawyers have brought the force of international legal norms to bear upon the 'Question of East Timor'. This article aims to do the reverse: to bring the force of the East Timorese debacle to bear upon international law. Following on from the Introduction, the argument proceeds in three parts. Part 2 considers the legal basis for East Timor's right of self-determination. Part 3 argues that, contrary to its populist characterization as excessively indeterminate, the right of self-determination has a discernible core content which confers on beneficiary peoples, such as the East Timorese, two distinct sets of entitlements: self-determination as process, and self-determination as substance. Finally, having established the basic legal framework, Part 4 compares two moments of high-level institutional engagement with (the two aspects of) East Timor's self-determination entitlement: the case brought by Portugal against Australia before the ICJ in 1995; and the UN-sponsored 'popular consultation' of August 1999. It is argued that the institutional shift from the ICJ to the UN was also characterized by a shift from formalism to pragmatism, and that both institutions failed to uphold the international legal rights of the East Timorese.

* School of Law. University of Glasgow. This is a revised and expanded version of a paper presented at Suffolk Law School, Boston, at the annual dinner of Boston-based international lawyers in October 1999. I benefited greatly from the questions and discussion of the participants. Most of the research was completed while I was a Visiting Fellow at the Human Rights Program, Harvard Law School, 1999/2000. This was a collegiate and challenging environment and I would like to thank all my colleagues at the Human Rights Program as well as elsewhere in the Law School: Abjagil Abrash, Yishai Blank, Deborah Cass, Susan Culhane, Rosalind Dixon, Daniela Dohmes-Ockenfels, Michael Ikhariale, Shawqi Issa, Catherine Le Magueresse, Zachary Lomo, Dominic McGoldrick, Moria Paz, Mindy Roseman, Peter Rosenblum, Alvaro Santos, Hani Sayed, Leslie Sebba, Susan Sessler, Gerry Simpson, Christine Soh, Dori Spivak, K. Sritharan, Henry Steiner, Anje Van-Berckelaer and Yosuke Yotoriyama. I would also like to acknowledge a more general debt to David Kennedy's inspirational international law class (1999/2000) which greatly influenced the writing of this article. Particular thanks to John Saul Marco for research assistance, and to Nathaniel Berman, Graeme Laurie and Iain Scobbie for comments and encouragement.

It is, by now, a familiar pattern: egregious human rights violations . . . an assertion of international authority . . . a solution of sorts . . . demands for those responsible for atrocities to be brought to account under international law. For East Timor — like Bosnia before it — the closing stages of its self-determination struggle are likely to be played out against the backdrop of formal or informal 'trials': of individuals at the hands of some newly established ad hoc tribunal¹ or truth and reconciliation commission;² of complicit *states*³ at the bar of world opinion. East Timor shall have its independence, and the international community shall have its culprits.⁴ Or so, one

While there have been calls for the Security Council to establish an ICTY/ICTR-style International Criminal Tribunal (see e.g. Amnesty International, 'Letter to UN Secretary-General on East Timor Commission of Inquiry', 30 September 1999 or, more recently, CAFOD et al., Justice for East Timor, 13 $\label{eq:continuous} \textit{June 2001}, the Secretary-General and the Security Council early on favoured allowing Indonesia to 'do$ a credible and transparent job of holding people accountable for their crimes'. See the UN Secretary-General's 'Briefing Report', 29 February 2000. See also 'Letter from the President of the Security Council, Arnoldo Manuel Listre, to the Secretary-General', 18 February 2000, S/2000 137; 'United Nations-Indonesia Accord on Judicial Cooperation in East Timor', 5 April 2000. On 24 April 2001, President Wahid issued a decree establishing an Indonesian ad hoc tribunal to deal with gross human rights abuses committed in the aftermath of the popular consultation on 30 August 1999. In East Timor itself, the Serious Crimes Investigation Unit has begun prosecuting two categories of crimes committed in the September 1999 violence: serious crimes under the Indonesian penal code and crimes against humanity. For details, see 'Report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (for the Period 27 July 2000 to 16 January 2001)', S/2001/42, 16 January 2001, para. 24. On the problems of pursuing a large number of trials in the context of 'transitional' countries such as East Timor, and the proposal to try only 'serious crimes', see Hayner and van Zyl, 'The Challenge of Reconciliation in East Timor', in Report on a Mission to East Timor June 18-28 2000 on Behalf of the Human Rights Office of UNTAET, July 2000 (on file with author)

- Por details of the National Council of Timorese Resistance (CNRT) early proposal for a 'Commission for Reception and National Reconcillation', see Hayner and van Zyl, supra note 1. On 13 December 2000, the East Timor Transitional Cabinet agreed to establish a 'Truth, Reception and Reconcillation Commission', with a mandate to facilitate the reintegration of returning refugees. document human rights abuses since 1975 and promote community reconciliation by dealing with low-level offences committed in 1999. See 'Report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (for the Period 27 July 2000 to 16 January 2001)', 8/2001/42, 16 January 2001, para, 26.
- For criticism of the role of the Western powers (Australia, the United States and the United Kingdom), see Budiardjo, 'A Global Failure of Human Rights in East Timor', in a special issue of the Human Rights Law Review, edited by E. Hedman, entitled 'East Timor in Transition: Sovereignty, Self-Determination and Human Rights', 4 Human Rights Law Review (1999) 20. Yet revisionist histories are already in the writing, For example, Australia has been praised for 'its leading role... in transforming the fortunes and prospects of East Timor'. UN Secretary-General, 'Briefing to the Security Council', New York, 29 February 2000.
- ⁴ Curiously, the international community appears to be interested mainly in pursuing investigations into the violence of 1999 and not the widely documented human rights atrocities of the earlier period since the Indonesian occupation began in 1975. See 'Report of the United Nations International Commission of Inquiry on East Timor' (A/54/726-8/2000/59). Similarly, the 'Report of the Commission to Investigate Violations of Human Rights' established by the Indonesian National Commission for Human Rights deals with the period from January 1999 to the immediate aftermath of the ballot. It is unclear why the genocidal policies of the Indonesians in the earlier period of the occupation should continue to attract immunity. This point was brought to my attention by students at Northeastern Law School during a panel discussion on East Timor in October 1999. In East Timor itself, however, the proposed 'Truth, Reception and Reconciliation Commission' is to have a mandate to create a record of human rights abuses since 1975. For discussions of early proposals to backdate investigations, see Hayner and van Zyl. supra note 1.

imagines, the rest of the story will go. Of course, what is suppressed in this Hollywood ending — the triumph of right (self-determination) over might (the Indonesian army), of law over brute politics — is any suggestion that, in revisiting earlier chapters of the East Timor story, international law itself — its doctrines, its institutions — may be cast in a leading role as one of the 'bad guys'.

1 A Formal Analysis of the Right of Self-Determination: Dispensing with Two Preliminary Objections

Before turning to my substantive arguments, it is perhaps necessary to make a pre-emptive strike on what I anticipate are two likely objections to any proposal to embark on a formal analysis of the East Timor Story in the light of the international law of self-determination. First, there could be the 'indeterminacy' objection. According to this —now standard —critique, the right of self-determination is simply one of the most normatively confused and indeterminate principles in the canon of international legal doctrine. 5 Moreover, as commentators have shown, 6 traditionally it was formal legal analysis that was deployed to deny, rather than endorse, the existence of a legal right of self-determination. 7 To adopt a formalist posture in favour of the right of self-determination may thus appear positively oxymoronic.

A second — perhaps more compelling — objection might be on the grounds of political redundancy. The recent history of East Timor is well known. Son 30 August 1999, in a United Nations-sponsored 'popular consultation', the people of East Timor voted overwhelmingly to reject the Indonesian offer of 'special autonomy' in favour of a United Nations-supervised transition to independent statehood. From then on, events moved apace. On 15 September 1999, the Security Council authorised the establishment of a multinational force (INTERFET) with a mandate to restore peace

See e.g. Cass, 'Rethinking Self-Determination: A Critical Analysis of Current International Law Theories', 18 Syracuse Journal of International Law and Commerce (1992) 21: Koskenniemi, 'National Self-Determination Today: Problems of Legal Theory and Practice', 43 International Law and Comparative Law Quarterly (1994) 241.

Berman, 'Sovereignty in Abeyance: Self-Determination and International Law', 7 Wisconsin International Law Journal (1988) 51, at 61–62.

See e.g. Fitzmaurice, "The Future of Public International Law and the International Legal System in the Circumstances of Today", in Institut de Droit International, Evolution et Perspectives du Droit International (1973) 196, at 233, discussed in Berman, supra note 6.

For background, see the UN's excellent website, www.un.org/peace/etimor/etimor.htm. For critical reflections in the lead-up to the ballot, see the collection of papers in Hedman, supra note 3.

⁹ 78.5 per cent. For discussion, see Part 4 below.

and security in East Timor.¹⁰ On 15 October 1999, the Indonesian People's Consultative Assembly repealed the infamous law of July 1976 under which East Timor had been annexed.¹¹ paving the way for the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET) to assume control of the territory.¹² And by November 1999, the last of the Indonesian troops had, finally, left East Timor.

In short, is not the 'Question of East Timor' passé?¹³ Self-determination has 'happened'. It is no longer interesting. To be sure, the actual process of exercising self-determination encountered some regrettable 'operational' difficulties.¹⁴ But these were due to the unpredictable excesses of disgruntled militias and 'rogue' members of the Indonesian security forces. As such, they lie firmly beyond the remit of the international lawyer. Today, there are simply far more pressing and exciting issues to engage the Timor-minded legal scholar. Should there be war crimes trials or a truth commission? How best can we foster Timorese civil society based on the rule of law and human rights?¹⁵ Or what precisely is the legal status of East Timor during the United Nations-administered transitional phase?

- This was 'requested' by Indonesia on 12 September 1999 and authorized by Security Council Resolution 1264 (1999), 15 September 1999. Security Council Resolution 1264 is thus an interesting hybrid. In the preamble, the Security Council welcomes Indonesia's readiness to accept an 'international peacekeeping force', yet paragraph 3 makes clear that the establishment of the multinational force is more accurately characterized as a (non-consensual) Chapter VII peace-enforcement action rather than (consensual) peacekeeping. The Australian-led multinational force was deployed on 20 September 1999. It finally handed over to UNTAET peacekeeping troops on 22 February 2000.
- 10 October 1999. This was pursuant to Article 6 of the Agreement Between the Republic of Indonesia and the Portuguese Republic on the Question of East Timor (hereinafter the 'General Agreement'), A/53/951, Annex 1 of the 'Report of the Secretary-General', S/1999/513 (the Agreement is produced in Hedman, supra note 3; and is available on the UN website, www.un.org/peace/etimor/etimor.htm). Article 6 of the General Agreement provides: 'If the Secretary-General determines, on the basis of the result of the popular consultation and in accordance with this Agreement, that the proposed constitutional framework for special autonomy is not acceptable to the East Timorese people, the Government of Indonesia shall take the constitutional steps necessary to terminate its links with East Timor thus restoring under Indonesian law the status East Timor held prior to 17 July 1976. The decision of the Indonesian People's Consultative Assembly to repeal the law was welcomed in Security Council Resolution 1272 (1999), 25 October 1999 and in General Assembly Resolution A/54/194, 15 December 1999. For the background to the 1976 law, see e.g., Clark, 'The 'Decolonization' of East Timor and the United Nations Norms on Self-Determination and Aggression', in CIR and IPJET (International Platform of Jurists for East Timor), International Law and the Question of East Timor (1995) 65, at 69–73.
- ¹² UNTAET was established by the Security Council on 25 October 1999. Security Council Resolution 1272 (1999), 25 October 1999. Its initial mandate was to January 2001. On 31 January 2001, the Security Council decided to extend the current mandate of UNTAET until 21 January 2002. Security Council Resolution 1338 (2001), 31 January 2001.
- This is certainly the view of the General Assembly which decided to conclude its consideration of the agenda item "The Question of East Timor" and include a new agenda item entitled "The Situation in East Timor During its Transition to Independence". General Assembly Resolution A/54/194, 15 December 1999, para 3. The question has, of course, been more famously asked of the right of self-determination in general. See Sinha, 'Is Self-Determination Passé?', 12 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law (1973) 260.
- 14 See Part 4 below.
- In November 1999, ECOSOC requested the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to prepare a comprehensive programme of technical cooperation in human rights focusing on capacitybuilding and reconciliation.

It is the premise of this article, however, that neither the 'indeterminacy' nor the 'politically redundant' objection is well founded. First, by way of a formalist defence, it will be shown that, contrary to its populist characterization as excessively indeterminate, the right of self-determination has a discernible core content which provides a normative yardstick against which to measure the international community's treatment of East Timor's legal claim.

Secondly, it is submitted that, far from being passé, a formal analysis of the East Timor Story in the light of the international legal rules on self-determination is both timely and necessary. For more than 20 years, following in the pioneering footsteps of scholars such as Thomas Franck¹⁶ and Roger Clark,¹⁷ international lawyers¹⁸ have brought the force of international legal norms to bear upon the 'Question of East Timor'.¹⁹ This article aims to do the reverse: to bring the force of the East Timorese debacle to bear upon international law. In other words, I wish to resist the appeal of the imminent, cast a retrospective eye, and explore what, if anything, the unhappy—genocidal²⁰ — story of East Timor has to tell us about the 'moral hygiene'²¹ of the international law of self-determination.

Following on from the introduction, the argument will proceed in three parts. In Part 2, I will consider the legal basis for East Timor's right of self-determination and argue that this should be characterised as a case of decolonization. The applicable legal rules are thus readily identifiable as those that emerged during the decolonization practice of the United Nations. In Part 3, I will confront the 'indeterminacy objection' and argue that, contrary to conventional accounts, the right of self-determination has a discernible core content which confers on beneficiary peoples such as the East Timorese two distinct sets of entitlements: self-determination as process, and self-determination as substance. Finally, having established the basic legal framework, in Part 4, I will compare two moments of high-level institutional engagement with (the two aspects of) East Timor's self-determination entitlement: the case brought by Portugal against Australia before the International Court of Justice to 1995; and the United Nations-sponsored 'popular consultation' of August 1999. It will be argued that the institutional shift from the International Court of Justice to the UN was also characterized by a shift from formalism to pragmatism, and that Franck and Hoffman, "The Right of Self-Determination in Very Small Places', 8 New York Journal of International Law and Policy (1975–1976) 331.

The seminal article is Clark, "The Decolonization" of East Timor and the United Nations Norms on Self-Determination and Aggression', 7 Yale Journal of World Public Order (1980–1981) 2.

For example, the International Platform of Jurists for East Timor (IPJET) founded in 1991 by Pedro Pinto Leite has organized a number of international law conferences and published two edited collections: CIIR/IPJET, International Law and the Question of East Timor, supra note 11; and IPJET, The East Timor Problem and the Role of Europe (1998).

For a sceptical account of such efforts in the context of IPJET, see Kennedy, 'An Autumn Weekend: An Essay on Law and Everyday Life', in D. Danielson and K. Engle (eds), After Identity: A Reader in Law and Culture (1995) 191.

²⁰ See e.g. M. Jardine, Genocide in Paradise (1999).

²¹ The phrase is David Kennedy's, Lectures (1999).

both institutions — the formalist International Court of Justice, the pragmatic United Nations — failed to uphold the international legal rights of the East Timorese.

2 East Timor's Right to Self-Determination: Decolonization in a Secessionist Era

As has been established elsewhere,²² the existence of East Timor's right to self-determination under international law is unassailable. As a Portuguese colony from 1856²³ and a UN-designated non-self-governing territory since 1960, East Timor qualified under the 'first phase' right of self-determination, which emerged during the decolonization period of the 1960s.²⁴ Neither the (unlawful) Indonesian invasion in December 1975, nor its subsequent (unlawful) annexation,²⁵ could dislodge East Timor's vested entitlement. Thus, as affirmed by the International Court of Justice in 1995,²⁶ despite its de facto transition from Portuguese colony to Indonesian province, East Timor remained, de jure, a non-self-governing territory²⁷ with the right of self-determination under the law applicable to decolonization.²⁸

But, if it can readily be established that the legal basis for East Timor's right of self-determination lay in its relations with Portugal (colonialism) rather than with ²² See e.g. Clark, supra note 17; Franck and Hoffman, supra note 16; and A. Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples: A Legal Reappraisal (1995) 223–230.

On the history of Portuguese colonialism in East Timor, see generally J.G. Taylor, Indonesia's Forgotten War: The Hidden History of East Timor (1995) 1–15.

See e.g. General Assembly Resolution 1514 (XV) 1960. The Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples'; United Nations General Assembly Resolution 1541 (XV) 1960. Principles which should guide Members in determining whether or not an obligation exists to transmit the information called for under Article 73(e) of the Charter'. See further Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia/South West Africa Notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 276 (1970), ICJ Reports (1971) 31.

²⁵ For discussion of the background to the 'Act of Integration', see e.g. Clark, supra note 17; Taylor, supra note 23, at 73–74.

²⁶ Case Concerning East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), ICJ Reports (1995) 103, paras 31 and 37. It should be noted that the Court restricts itself to affirming that 'for both parties the territory of East Timor remains a non-self-governing territory and its people has the right of self-determination' (emphasis added): ibid. The Court itself does not make an independent finding.

²⁷ Ibid

The ICJ in its Advisory Opinion on Namibia held that: "The subsequent development of international law in regard to non-self-governing territories as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations made the principle of self-determination applicable to all of them." Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia/South West Africa Notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 276 (1970). ICI Reports (1971) at para. 52.

Indonesia (secession), ²⁹ the question remains: why does it matter? What purpose does it serve to establish that East Timor was a case of decolonization in a secessionist era? It is submitted that establishing the correct legal basis for East Timor's right of self-determination is no mere academic exercise, but rather entails three practical consequences. In the first place, as recent events in Kosovo³⁰ and Chechnya³¹ demonstrate, the existence of any legal right of secession under international law—even in situations involving gross human rights abuse³² — remains highly contentious. Meagre doctrinal development in favour of a limited right of secession³³ has manifestly not been matched by any corresponding shift in state practice. Accordingly, had the East Timorese based their claim on a purported right of secession triggered by, say, Indonesian human rights abuse, they may have faced the initial obstacle that such a right does not in fact exist. Secondly, establishing colonialism as the correct legal basis should have allowed the international community and third states to emphasize the sui generis nature of the East Timorese claim as a means of countering domestic Indonesian fears/accusations that allowing East Timor to

This point is also dealt with by Gerry Simpson. See Simpson, "The Politics of Self-Determination in the Case Concerning East Timor", in CIIR/IPJET, International Law and the Question of East Timor, supra note 11, at 258.

The Security Council resolutions on Kosovo consistently affirmed the territorial integrity of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. See e.g. Security Council Resolution 1160 (1998), 31 March 1998, especially para. 5; Security Council Resolution 1244 (1999), 10 June 1999. The resolutions call for 'substantial autonomy', and 'meaningful self-administration' rather than, say, 'secession' or 'meaningful self-determination' (which would require an exercise of free choice including the option of independent statehood; see below). But compare the Report of the Independent International Commission on Kosovo, October 2000. This concludes that 'the Security Council Resolution's commitment to FRY sovereignty and Kosovo autonomy may not be incompatible in theory but they have become incompatible in practice', and recommends that Kosovo be granted 'conditional independence'. The Commission's report, 'Report of the Independent Commission on Kosovo', can be found at www.kosovocommission.org.

³¹ See e.g. 'Statement by the High Commissioner for Human Rights on the Situation in Chechnya, Russian Federation', HR/99/104, 16 November 1999.

For the thesis that secession should be available as a remedy of last resort for gross human rights abuse, see e.g. L.C. Buchheit, Secession: The Legitimacy of Self-Determination (1978). For an early statement of this possibility in the context of the Aaland Island question, see League of Nations. Report Presented to the Council of the League by the Commission of Rapporteurs', Council Doc. B7/21/68/106, 16 April 1921, at 28.

³³ United Nations General Assembly Resolution 2625 (XXV) 1970, 'Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation Among States in Accordance with Charter of the United Nations', has been interpreted by commentators as providing a possible legal basis for a right of secession. See e.g. White, 'Self-Determination: Time for a Reassessment', 28 Netherlands International Law Review (1981) 161. This interpretation has, however, found only limited doctrinal support. See the obiter statements in Katangese Peoples' Congress v. Zaire, Communication No. 75/92, 3 International Human Rights Reports (1996) at 136, para. 6; Reference Re Secession of Quebec, Supreme Court of Canada reproduced in (1998) 37 ILM 1340, para. 134; and Part 9, 'The Future Status of Kosovo', of 'Report of the Independent Commission', supra note 30, at www.kosovocommission.org/reports/13-future.html.

exercise its right of self-determination would lead inexorably to the break up of the Indonesian State. 34

Finally, and perhaps more crucially for present purposes, it is only in the colonial context that there exists a sufficient level of international consensus on the rules governing the exercise of the right of self-determination to protect the East Timorese against the indeterminacy objection outlined earlier. Beyond colonialism, the right of self-determination is plagued by an excess of indeterminacy both in terms of scope and content. By contrast, the rules relating to the exercise of the right of self-determination in the colonial context are — as we shall see — relatively settled. Identifying colonialism as the proper basis for East Timorese self-determination is thus important because it precludes the argument that the right of self-determination is so indeterminate that it provides no meaningful, normative yardstick against which to measure the international community's treatment of the East Timorese claim.

3 The Content of East Timor's Right of Self-Determination

As observed by an international meeting of experts in 1989, the contemporary debate in international law is no longer about the existence of the right of self-determination but about its content. ³⁵ The point appears to be amply borne out if we consider that, in contemporary political discourse, self-determination is variously invoked to mean: independent statehood, autonomy, negotiations, limited self-government, land rights, self-management, and democratic governance (to name but a few). For the East Timorese, however, it is unlikely that this caricature of the right of self-determination as meaning all things to all peoples bears scrutiny. While the post-colonial dialogue unquestionably labours under a high degree of normative confusion, a review of international practice in the decolonization period reveals that the rules relating to the exercise of self-determination by a non-self-governing territory — such as East Timor — are both determinate and discernible. In elucidating this content, it is useful to distinguish between two core sets of entitlements: self-determination as process, and self-determination as substance.

A Self-Determination as Process

If we consider the standard definition of self-determination in international law, it is clear that it is depicted as the right of a people to a particular process: the right of all peoples freely to 'determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development'. ³⁶ Thus the most fundamental right conferred on a people by virtue of the right of self-determination is the right of a people freely to determine the destiny of its territory. Its essence is free choice.³⁷ Early resolutions, such as the historic United Nations General Assembly Resolution 1514 on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,³⁸ which stressed objective outcomes (independent statehood)³⁹ rather than subjective process (free and genuine expression of the will of the people)⁴⁰ were thus hastily superseded.

³⁴ Similarly, West Irian is a sui generis case based on a flawed decolonization process. On the failure of the United Nations to ensure a proper act of self-determination in West Irian, see e.g. R. Sureda, The Evolution of the Right of Self-Determination (1973) 143–151; Cassese, supra note 22, at 82–86.

³⁵ UNESCO International Meeting of Experts on the Further Study of the Concept of the Rights of Peoples (1989) para. 19.

General Assembly Resolution 1514 (XV) 1960, at para. 2.

What is striking, however, about the international legal definition of self-determination is how little it tells us about its operational content. Self-determination is depicted as a right to a process — the right of a people freely to choose — yet questions abound as to the procedures to be adopted. What exactly amounts to a free choice? How is the 'free choice' to be ascertained? In the context of assessing the international community's treatment of the East Timorese self-determination entitlement, these questions take on a specific guise: does self-determination require a referendum to be held? If so, how widely must the self-determination options be framed? And must they include the option of independent statehood?

Of course, these questions are nothing new. It was precisely such problems of process that dogged United Nations debates over the decolonization of the Western Sahara in 1974–1975 and led the General Assembly to request an Advisory Opinion from the International Court of Justice. ⁴¹ Indeed, it was the need to assist the General Assembly in determining the process of self-determination in the Western Sahara that was central to the ICJ's decision to comply with the request for an Advisory Opinion.

This point has long been neglected. According to the standard account, ⁴² the General Assembly's request for an Advisory Opinion on the legal status of the Western Sahara at the time of its colonization ⁴³ presented the International Court of Justice with a potential stand-off between the historic rights of States on the one hand (Morocco and Mauritania) and a people's right to self-determination on the other (the Western Sahara). Indeed, the Opinion is much vaunted for its pithy pronouncements on the alleged triumph of peoples' rights over states' rights in this normative zero-sum game. ⁴⁴ But a closer reading of the judgment reveals that, on the Court's own ³⁷ See e.g. Western Sahara Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports (1975) 12, paras 55 and 59; and infra.

³⁸ General Assembly Resolution 1514 (XV) 1960.

³⁹ Ibid, at para. 5. Its sister resolution, United Nations General Assembly Resolution 1541 (XV) 1960, also implicitly favours independent statehood as an outcome. Thus, although it provides that self-determination can be achieved by three means — independent statehood, free association or integration — it is procedurally weighted in favour of independent statehood.

⁴⁰ General Assembly Resolution 2625 (XXV) 1970; and Western Sahara Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports (1975) 12, para. 55. For discussion of this point, see generally Cassese, supra note 22, at 89.

See General Assembly Resolution 3292 (XXIX), 13 December 1974, at para. 3. For discussion of the background to this resolution, see Western Sahara Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports (1975) 12, paras 60–69.
 See e.g. Cassese, surra note 22, at 214–218.

The General Assembly requested an Advisory Opinion on the following two questions: 'I. Was Western Sahara (Rio de Oro and Sakiet El Hamra) at the time of colonization by Spain a territory belonging to no one (terra nullius)? If the answer to the first question is in the negative, II. What were the legal ties between this territory and the Kingdom of Morocco and the Mauritanian entity?'

For example, Judge Dillard famously stated that: 'It is for the people to determine the destiny of the territory and not the territory the destiny of the people.' See Separate Opinion of Judge Dillard, at 122.

interpretation, what was at issue in the decolonization of the Western Sahara was not so much a choice between the historic rights of third states versus the self-determination of peoples but, rather, a choice as to the procedures to be adopted in the self-determination process. Ascertaining the existence of historic ties between Western Sahara, and Morocco and the Mauritanian entity was relevant only to the extent that such ties would inform — not supplant — that self-determination process.

This becomes evident if we consider the fate of the Spanish objection that the Court should refuse the General Assembly's request for an Advisory Opinion on the grounds that it lacked object and purpose. Spain argued that, as the United Nations had already determined the method of decolonization applicable to the Western Sahara (a consultation of the indigenous population by means of a referendum), the questions posed by the General Assembly were irrelevant, and any answer by the Court would be to no practical effect.⁴⁵

In dispensing with the Spanish objection, the Court agreed that the decolonization process to be accelerated in the Western Sahara (as envisaged by the General Assembly) was to be based on the right of self-determination: 'the right of the population of Western Sahara to determine their future political status by their own freely expressed will.'46 Significantly, it also concluded that the right of selfdetermination was thus 'not affected' by the General Assembly's request for an Advisory Opinion, but, rather, constituted 'a basic assumption of the questions put to the Court'. 47 However, the Court nevertheless went on to reject Spanish claims that the application of the right of self-determination to the decolonization process in the Western Sahara rendered the two questions in the Advisory Opinion without object and purpose. 48 The right of self-determination, said the Court, leaves a 'measure of discretion' to the General Assembly as to the 'forms and procedures' by which it is to be realized. 49 'Various possibilities' exist with respect to 'consultations between the interested States' and the 'procedures and guarantees' required for ensuring the free expression of the will of a people. 50 The function of an Advisory Opinion on the nature of historic ties between the Western Sahara and Morocco and the Mauritanian entity would thus be to assist the General Assembly in determining the procedures to be adopted in the self-determination process.51

- Western Sahara Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports (1975) 12, at para. 48.
- 46 Ibid, at para. 70.
- ⁴⁷ Ibid. The Court's conclusion that it had 'not found ties of such a nature as might affect the application of Resolution 1514 (XV) in the decolonization of Western Sahara and, in particular, of the principle of self-determination through the free and genuine expression of the will of the people of the Territory' must be read in the light of these earlier findings that the right of self-determination was not prejudiced by the request for the Advisory Opinion. Ibid, at paras 162 and 70.
- 48 Ibid, at paras 71–73.
- 49 See ibid, at para, 71.
- 50 Ibid, at para. 72. See further Separate Opinion of Judge Dillard, at 122.
- Western Sahara Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports (1975) 12, at para. 72. That a finding of the existence of historic ties might, for example, inform the wording of the referendum question was recognized as a possibility by Morocco in the oral pleadings (Hearing, 26 June 1975). See the statements from Moroccan counsel quoted in the Separate Opinion of Judge Singh, at 79. For further discussion of this point, see Separate Opinion of Judge Dillard, at 122.

For present purposes of elucidating the content of the right of self-determination under international law, two points bear emphasis here. First, in concluding that the decolonization process in the Western Sahara was to be based on 'the right of the population of Western Sahara to determine their future political status by their own freely expressed will', ⁵² it is clear that the Court conceived of the right of self-determination exclusively in terms of a right to a process. Thus, it famously defined the principle of self-determination as 'the need to pay regard to the freely expressed will of peoples'. ⁵³ Similarly, the Separate Opinions reveal an overwhelming judicial consensus that it is the freely expressed will of the people that constitutes the 'basic pillar' of the right of self-determination.

Secondly, while the Advisory Opinion is unequivocal that the right of self-determination requires the freely expressed will of the people, it is less illuminating on the crucial question of how that free will is to be ascertained. Indeed, as we have seen, in dispensing with the Spanish objection, the Court made it clear that the question of how to realize the right of self-determination was to be left open as a matter within the discretion of the General Assembly. 54

It is clear, however, that the Court did not intend the General Assembly's discretion to be unfettered. In the first place, any 'forms and procedures' adopted must be such as to ensure 'a free and genuine expression'⁵⁵ of the will of the people. Secondly, the Court expressly endorsed certain provisions of General Assembly Resolution 1541⁵⁶ —i.e., 'informed and democratic processes' — as giving effect to the 'essential feature' of the right of self-determination.⁵⁷ Finally, the Court expressly stipulated that 'consulting the inhabitants' was a 'requirement' of self-determination with which the General Assembly had dispensed only where 'a certain population did not constitute a "people" entitled to self-determination' or where it was deemed 'totally unnecessary, in view of special circumstances'. ⁵⁸

In short, taking the Opinion as a whole, it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that, in the absence of special circumstances, the free choice of a people must be ascertained

Western Sahara Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports (1975) 12, at para. 70.

³³ Ibid, at para. 59. See also Ibid, at para. 55: 'the application of the right of self-determination requires a free and genuine expression of the will of the peoples concerned.'

⁵⁴ Ibid, at para. 71.

⁵⁵ Ibid, at para. 55.

⁵⁶ General Assembly Resolution 1541 (XV) 1960, Principles VII and IX.

Western Sahara Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports (1975) 12, at para. 57.

Mid. at para. 59. The Court did not elaborate on the meaning of 'special circumstances', but in his Separate Opinion Vice-President Ammoun gave as a prime example of 'special circumstances' the 'legitimate struggle for liberation from foreign domination'. See Separate Opinion of Judge Ammoun, at 99. For Judge Singh, 'the principle of self-determination could be dispensed with only if the free expression of the will of the people was found to be axiomatic in the sense that the result was known to be a foregone conclusion or that consultations had already taken place in some form or that special features of the case rendered it unnecessary'. Separate Opinion of Judge Singh, at 81.

through 'informed and democratic processes' such as a referendum or a plebiscite. ⁵⁹ Moreover, while Judge Dillard expressly rejected Spanish arguments that the right of self-determination necessarily requires the option of independent statehood. ⁶⁰ surely all that this means is that what amounts to a 'free choice' is not to be universally predetermined but rather must be judged according to the particular political desires of the particular people. ⁶¹ Nonetheless, there is a substantial body of United Nations practice in the decolonization period that favours independent statehood as the preferred self-determination option. ⁶² And in the particular context of East Timor, where a liberation movement enjoying the support of the majority of its people had been engaged in a 25-year struggle for independent statehood, it seems incontrovertible that the test of 'free choice' could only be satisfied where that referendum or plebiscite offered independent statehood 'as a legal possibility'. ⁶³

B Self-determination as Substance

From a self-determination perspective, it is worth emphasizing that in the Western Sahara Advisory Opinion, the ICJ was faced exclusively with questions over process: first, relating to decolonization (to be based on self-determination); and, secondly, self-determination (to be based on a free choice of the population of the Western

- But compare, Separate Opinion of Judge Dillard, at 122–123. Since 1954, there has been a substantial United Nations practice of organizing or supervising self-determination referenda and plebiscites in the decolonization context. For a comprehensive list of UN activities, see Cassees, supra note 22, at 76–78. More recent self-determination practice outside the colonial context also favours the referendum as a means of ascertaining the free will of the people. The Badinter Arbitration Committee, for example, initially refused Bosnia-Hercegovina's application for recognition as a state, instead recommending a 'referendum of all the citizens of [Bosnia-Hercegovina] without distinction, carried out under international supervision'. See Conference on Yugoslavia, Arbitration Commission, 'Opinion No. 4 on International Recognition of the Socialist Republic of Bosnia-Hercegovina by the European Community and its Member States', (1992) 31 ILM 1501, at 1503. Similarly, in 1991, the provisional government of Eritrea decided to delay issuing a declaration of statehood until a referendum on independence had been held.
- 60 Judge Dillard, at 122–123.
- On the contrary, it may be suggested that self-determination is satisfied by a free choice not by a particular consequence of that choice or a particular method of exercising it.' Ibid., at 123.
- ⁶² For a list of relevant practice, see H.G. Espiel, 'The Right of Self-Determination: Implementation of United Nations Resolutions' (Special Rapporteur of the Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities), E/CN.4/Sub.2/405/Rev.1, paras 253 and 256.
- 69 In French Togoland in 1957, the General Assembly refused to endorse the outcome of a referendum where the referendum question had not included the option of independent statehood. Cf. Southern Camerouns. See Sureda, supra note 34, at 51 and 304–306. That the right of self-determination should include the option of independent statehood where a people has been involved in a liberation struggle has been affirmed by the General Assembly which expressly endorsed the right of the Palestinians to self-determination 'without excluding the option of a State'. General Assembly Resolution A/Res./53/136, 9 December 1998. In 1999, the European Union went further and affirmed the right of the Palestinians to self-determination 'including the option of a State'. Declaration of the European Union Summit, Berlin, 25 March 1999. Compare the Declaration of the European Union, Cardiff, 16 June 1998. Early resolutions on East Timor also refer to 'self-determination and independence'. See e.g. General Assembly Resolution 32/34, 28 November 1977.

Sahara). It is hardly surprising then that the (soon-to-be-textbook) definitional legacy of the Western Sahara Advisory Opinion should also depict self-determination exclusively in terms of a process: the right of a people to a free choice over its political and territorial destiny.

Yet, whatever the Court's definitional emphasis on self-determination as process, it should be obvious that the right to a process does not exhaust the content of the right of self-determination under international law. To confer on a people a right of 'free choice' in the absence of more substantive entitlements — to territory, natural resources, etc. — would simply be meaningless. Clearly, the right of self-determination cannot be exercised in a substantive vacuum.

This is both implicit and explicit in the law. For example, implicit in any recognition of a people's right to self-determination is recognition of the legitimacy of that people's claim to a particular territory and/or set of resources. ⁶⁴ Despite its textbook characterization as part of human rights law, the law of self-determination has always been bound up more with notions of sovereignty and title to territory than what we traditionally consider to be 'human rights'. More explicitly, the various international instruments make specific provision for additional substantive entitlements beyond the basic right of a people to exercise a free choice. And, while its normative contours are yet to be definitively settled, the following can be deduced as a non-exhaustive list of the substantive entitlements conferred on a people by virtue of the law of self-determination in the decolonization context: (a) the right to exist — demographically and territorially — as a people; ⁶⁵ (b) the right to territorial integrity; ⁶⁶ (c) the right to permanent sovereignty over natural resources; ⁶⁷ (d) the right to cultural integrity and development; ⁶⁸ and (e) the right to economic and social development. ⁶⁹

4 East Timor's Right of Self-Determination: Institutional Engagement

It has thus far been established that, far from being excessively indeterminate, the right of self-determination has a discernible core content which confers two distinct

- 4 It is this collective and ancestral attachment to the land that is often deemed to distinguish 'peoples' from 'minorities', and self-determination from minority rights. See e.g. Brilmayer, 'Secession and Self-Determination: A Territorial Interpretation', 16 Yale Journal of International Law (1991) 177, especially at 120.
- 65 This would include the right not to be expelled from the land and not to be demographically manipulated through, say, the implantation of settlers. For a development of this argument, see Drew, 'Self-Determination, Population Transfer and the Middle East Peace Accords', in S. Bowen (ed.), Human Rights, Self-Determination and Political Change in the Occupied Palestinian Territories (1997) 119, at 133.
- ⁶⁶ General Assembly Resolution 1514 (XV) 1960, para. 6.
- ⁶⁷ General Assembly Resolution 1803 (XVI) 1962; Article 1(2) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1966 (ICCPR) and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights 1966 (ICESCR); United Nations Council for Namibia, Decree on the Natural Resources of Namibia, (1974) 13 ILM 1513; Australia–Republic of Nauru, Settlement of the Case in the International Court of Justice Concerning Certain Phosphates Lands in Nauru, 20 August 1993, (1993) 32 ILM 1471.
- 68 Universal Declaration of the Rights of Peoples, Algiers, July 1976, Articles 2, 9, 13, 14 and 15.
- $^{69}\,\,$ This is expressly included in the standard definition of the right to self-determination.

sets of entitlements: self-determination as process and self-determination as substance. Thus, as a colonial people, the East Timorese were entitled, not only to a particular process (one that embodied a free choice over their political and territorial destiny), but—pending that process—a number of additional substantive rights (e.g. the right to territorial integrity, demographic integrity, natural resources etc.).⁷⁰

Now, usefully for pedagogical purposes — though not, as it turned out, for the East Timorese — both aspects of the East Timorese self-determination entitlement encountered high-level institutional engagement: self-determination as substance (natural resources) in the case brought by Portugal against Australia to the International Court of Justice in 1995; self-determination as process in the United Nations-sponsored 'popular consultation' of August 1999. In considering each of these institutional moments by turn, it will be shown that, contrary to popular perception, there was as much a failure to implement the legal rules on self-determination in the United Nations-run popular consultation as in the ill-fated Portuguese application to the International Court of Justice. From a self-determination perspective, an excavation of 'what-went-wrong' in relation to both aspects of the East Timorese self-determination entitlement — in these two distinct institutional settings — reveals deficiencies in the structure of the international legal order with ramifications for the law of peoples²¹ that extend beyond the territorial — or moral — boundaries of East Timor.

A Self-Determination as Substance: The International Court of Justice and the Case Concerning East Timor

The first moment of institutional engagement to be considered is a highly legalistic one — the Case Concerning East Timor (Portugal v. Australia) before the International Court of Justice in 1995. The background is well known. In 1989. Australia entered into a treaty with Indonesia — the Timor Gap Treaty — for the purpose of jointly exploring and exploiting the hydrocarbon resources of an area of East Timor continental shelf lying between East Timor and Australia (the Timor Gap). Portugal, in its capacity as continuing Administering Power (as recognized by some rather dated United Nations resolutions — brought an action against Australia — deleging

- On the relationship between process and substance pending the realization of self-determination, see Drew, 'The East Timor Popular Consultation: Self-Determination Denied', in Hedman, supra note 3, at 5-6.
- I use this term to denote the body of international law applicable to peoples rather than, say, states, individuals or international organizations. Compare e.g. J. Rawls, The Law of Peoples (1999).
- ⁷² Case Concerning East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), ICJ Reports (1995) 103.
- 73 See the various essays dedicated to discussing the background and prognosis of the East Timor case in CIIR/IPJET, International Law and the Question of East Timor, supra note 11.
- Australia/Indonesia Treaty on the Zone of Cooperation in an Area Between the Indonesian Province of East Timor and Northern Australia of 11 December 1989, (1990) 29 ILM 469.
- ⁷⁵ See e.g. General Assembly Resolution 3485 (XXX), 12 December 1975; and Security Council Resolution 384 (1975), 22 December 1975. For discussion, see Case Concerning East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), ICJ Reports (1995) 103, para. 15.
- No action could be brought against Indonesia as it had not accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice.

inter alia a breach both of its own rights as the Administering Power and the rights of the East Timorese people — namely, to self-determination and permanent sovereignty over natural resources. The outcome was as predictable⁷⁷ as it was disappointing. The case was dismissed on jurisdictional grounds.⁷⁸ The Court held — implicitly applying the Monetary Gold doctrine⁷⁹ — that it could not entertain the case 'in the absence of the consent of Indonesia', as any determination as to the legality of Australia's conduct would require a prior determination regarding the conduct of a third party not before the Court — Indonesia.⁸⁰

The decision has been the subject of much subsequent discourse and criticism. ⁸¹ Elsewhere, ⁸² for example, it has been argued that the 'configuration' of the East Timor case was clearly distinguishable from that of Monetary Gold Removed from Rome and that the ICJ erred in departing from its earlier jurisprudence in the Phosphates Lands case. ⁸³ There is no intention to re-engage in the jurisdictional niceties of the Monetary Gold debate here. Rather, it is my intention to revisit the case from a self-determination perspective — beyond the narrow, statist, jurisdictional framework of the judgment — with a view to assessing what, in its wider aspects, the case reveals about the state of the international law of peoples.

$1\ \ {\it The Elevation of Self-Determination as \ Process \ Over Self-Determination \ as \ Substance}$

The first issue highlighted by the case, of concern to the self-determination enthusiast, is the tendency to elevate self-determination as process over self-determination as substance. Consider, for example, the Australian arguments on the merits. In response to the Portuguese claim that, by negotiating and concluding the Timor Gap Treaty, Australia had infringed the rights of the East Timorese to self-determination, Australia argued that its conclusion and implementation did not:

hinder any act of self-determination of the people of East Timor \dots Whatever the choice made, the conclusion of the Treaty does not prevent the exercise at some later date of the right of the

- Farly warning of the potential procedural bar to the Portuguese case was given by Iain Scobbie at the IPJET conference in Lisbon in 1991. See Scobbie, "The East Timor Case: The Implications of Procedure for Litigation Strategy', 9 Oil and Gas Law and Taxation Review (1991) 273; and Scobbie, "The Presence of an Absent Third: Procedural Aspects of the East Timor Case', in CIIR/IPJET, International Law and the Question of East Timor, supra note 11, at 223.
- Case Concerning East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), ICJ Reports (1995) 103, para. 28.
- Monetary Gold Removed from Rome in 1943 (Italy v. France, United Kingdom, and United States of America), ICJ Reports (1954) 19. For discussion of this doctrine and the argument that this conclusion could have been avoided see Scobbie and Drew, 'Self-Determination Undetermined: The Case of East Timor', 9 Leiden Journal of International Law (1996) 185, at 195–207.
- 80 Indonesia had not lodged an application to intervene under Article 62 of the ICJ Statute.
- 81 See e.g. Chinkin, 'The East Timor Case (Portugal v. Australia)', 45 International and Comparative Law Quarterly (1996) 712, at 724–725; and Scobbie and Drew, supra note 79.
- Scobbie and Drew, supra note 79, at 195–197.
- 83 Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru (Nauru v. Australia), ICJ Reports (1992) 240. For a discussion, see Scobbie and Drew, supra note 79, at 207–208.

people of East Timor freely to choose their future political status in accordance with arrangements approved by the UN. 84

In other words, as exploiting oil resources presented no obvious impediment to the process of exercising a future free choice, Australia had breached none of its international duties in relation to East Timor's right of self-determination.

This argument is clearly misconceived. It portrays self-determination as no more than a one-off right of a people to participate in a process — a free, political choice — and ignores its core content of substantive entitlements (in this instance, the right of the Timorese to their oil). As Higgins argued in the oral pleadings, the effect of the Australian argument would be to empty the right of self-determination of any meaningful content. Scheduler, once it is recognized that self-determination entails substantive entitlements beyond the basic right to exercise a free choice, arguments that rely on such an artificial separation of process from substance are rendered logically untenable.

Now, it could, of course, be countered that the Australian arguments tell us more about the litigation strategy of a particular respondent state than they do about any general trend in the international practice relating to the law of peoples. A wider review of state practice, however, reveals that the tendency to see self-determination as process as exhaustive of the legal content of the right of self-determination is confined neither to Australian courtroom posturing nor to East Timor. For example, Israeli settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which strike at the very core of the Palestinian self-determination entitlement — territory, resources, demography — are routinely debated in institutional fora without any recourse to the law on self-determination. Instead, Israeli settlement activity has been variously characterized as contrary to the Fourth Geneva Convention, 86 individual human rights 87 and the all-important peace process. 88

It is my contention that the institutional failure to characterize settlements as a violation of the Palestinian right of self-determination belies a general misconception of self-determination as a right to a process devoid of substantive content. The consequences for the discourse on the peace process are manifest. Once the right of

- Australian Counter Memorial, para. 374. Australia further argued that 'a State can only breach the obligation to respect the right of a people to self-determination if its conduct prevents or hinders the exercise of the people of a non-self-governing territory of their right freely to determine their political status. Ibid. at para. 375.
- Judge Higgins refers to this as 'legal deconstructionism'. See R. Higgins, Final Oral Argument, CR 95/13.
 See e.g. Security Council Resolution 452 (1979), 20 July 1979; Security Council Resolution 465 (1980), 1 March 1980; General Assembly Resolution A/Res/ES-10/6; United Nations International Meeting on the Convening of the Conference on Measures to Enforce the Fourth Geneva Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory Including Jerusalem, Cairo, 14 and 15 June 1999, http://domino.un.org/UNSIPAL.
- 87 See e.g. Commission on Human Rights Resolution E/CN4/Res./2000/8, 17 April 2000. For state practice, see e.g. the view of the United Kingdom at UKMIL, 59 British Yearbook of International Law (1988) 574–575; UKMIL, 64 British Yearbook of International Law (1993) 724.
- For numerous views of states to this effect, see e.g. Security Council debates. "The Situation in the Occupied Arab Territories", 30 June 1998; S/PV 3900, 30 June 1998; General Assembly Resolution 53/55, 3 December 1998; and the European Union Declaration, Brussels, 22 May 2000.

self-determination has been conceptually stripped of its core entitlements to territory and resources, it becomes possible — for states, institutions and commentators alike — to assert both the inalienable, jus cogens character of the Palestinian right to self-determination, and declare the future of Israeli settlements as a matter for political negotiation; ⁸⁹ to affirm the primacy of the right of self-determination, including the option of a state, and envisage a future for Israeli settlements on the West Bank. ⁹⁰

Viewed in this contemporary light, how then as international lawyers do we respond to the Australian argument that the East Timorese right of self-determination emerged unscathed from the negotiation and conclusion of a treaty dedicated to the exploration and exploitation of East Timorese oil? Do we dismiss it as the courtroom strategy of a creative litigation team charged with representing a miscreant state? Or do we acknowledge that it reflects a more general trend in contemporary practice that unduly and selectively elevates self-determination as process over self-determination as substance, with deleterious consequences for the territory and resources of peoples from East Timor to the West Bank?

2 The Elevation of the Substantive Rights of Peoples over the Procedural Rights of Peoples

A second issue highlighted by the East Timor case concerns the relationship between the substantive rights of peoples and procedural rights of access (for peoples). ⁹¹ As noted earlier, the decision to dismiss the East Timor case on jurisdictional grounds has drawn criticism from many quarters. Christine Chinkin, for example, has argued, rightly, that the outcome of the case reveals an inherent structural bias in the international law system that favours procedural requirements over substantive principles—i.e. the procedural rights of absent third states over the substantive rights of peoples. ⁹² I want to take this analysis one step further and argue that from a self-determination perspective the case highlights a second structural bias in the international system: the elevation of substantive rights of peoples over procedural rights of peoples. Thus, while on a normative level, the right of self-determination has been declared by the International Court of Justice to be an obligation erga omnes. ⁹³ and is

See For an astonishing example of this, see e.g. Special Rapporteur Felber, 'Report on the Human Rights Situation in the Occupied Palestinian Territories Occupied Since 1967', E/CN.4/1995, 19 December 1994.

⁹⁰ See e.g. Cassese, 'The Israel-PLO Agreement and Self-Determination', 4 European Journal of International Law (1993) 564, at 569.

⁹¹ It should be stressed at the outset that here I am using the terms 'substantive' and 'procedural' to distinguish substantive legal principle from procedural rights such as locus standi. This is not to be confused with my earlier characterization of the content of the right of self-determination as comprising two distinct elements: self-determination as process and self-determination as substance. I am grateful to Thomas Franck for pointing out the potential for terminological confusion here.

⁹² Chinkin, supra note 81, at 724–725.

⁹³ Case Concerning East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), ICJ Reports (1995) 103, para. 29.

frequently cited as a candidate for the elusive jus cogens status, 94 when it comes to issues of enforcement or procedural rights of access, the law on self-determination remains resolutely impoverished. 95

Now it may, of course, simply be regarded as trite to point out that the East Timorese did not themselves have standing under the ICJ Statute to bring their case to the International Court of Justice: that behind the case of Portugal v. Australia there was the shadow case of the East Timorese People v. the Republic of Indonesia. But, as international lawyers, are our critical faculties bound by the non-precedential injunctions of the ICJ Statute?96 How then do we regard Portugal's efforts to frame a case about East Timor in terms of its own — and vicarious — interests? Do we applaud the legal creativity of the Portuguese litigation team while admiring the sheer chutzpah of a state with a dubious colonial past? Or do we lament the strictures of an international legal order that make resort to such legal acrobatics necessary? In his separate opinion, Judge Vereshchetin argues that the East Timorese people constituted an equally absent 'third party'. 97 Do we muse on the irony that in this particular case the rights of an absent state (Indonesia) were upheld while those of the absent people (the East Timorese) remained per force beyond the jurisdictional reach of the Court? Or does it remind us that peoples have perennially been absent from the cases bearing their names — from South West Africa to the Western Sahara?98

Perhaps we console ourselves that the explanation for the procedural exclusion of peoples lies in international law's statist past as reflected in the (now outdated) 1945 Statute of the International Court of Justice. But what then of other ostensibly non-statist institutions? The current spate of litigation against Turkey in the European Court of Human Rights arising out of the systematic persecution of the Kurdish people⁹⁹ demonstrates the limitations of litigating violations of peoples' rights through the prism of a human rights convention dedicated solely to the protection of the individual. On the standard account, the omission of a substantive provision on

- The jus cogens nature of self-determination was not argued by Portugal in the East Timor case, as this would have inevitably called into question the validity of the Timor Gap Treaty thus (property triggering the application of the Monetary Gold doctrine. Article 53 of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. For the view that self-determination has attained jus cogens status, see e.g. Espiel, supra note 62, at paras 70–87; and Commission on Human Rights, Resolution E/CN.4/RES/2000/4, 7 April 2000.
- 95 For the opposite view, that procedural rights of peoples (participation and process) are elevated over substantive rights in the context of the indigenous debate, see Tennant, 'Indigenous Peoples, International Institutions, and the International Legal Literature 1945–1993', 16 Human Rights Quarterly (1994) 1, at 45–55.
- 96 Article 59 of the ICJ Statute 1945.
- Oase Concerning East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), ICJ Reports (1995) 103, Judge Vereshchetin, Separate Opinion, at 135.
- Thus, even in Advisory Opinions, the directly affected people the Sahrawi were excluded from the Court whereas even the most indirectly affected states were eligible to take part in the oral proceedings. See the Letter from the Registrar, 25 March 1975. In the end. Morocco, Mauritania, Zaire, Algeria and Spain elected to be represented in the oral proceedings before the Court.
- ⁹⁹ For a critical account of Western inaction in the face of 'ethnic cleansing' against the Kurds in Turkey, see N. Chomsky, The New Military Humanism: Lessons from Kosovo (1999) 51–63.

peoples' rights in early human rights instruments such as the European Convention on Human Rights, has been remedied in later, third generation provisions such as the pivotal Article 1—on self-determination of peoples—in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. 100 Yet, the ill-fated attempts of representatives of indigenous peoples—the Grand Captain of the Mikmaq 101 and the Chief of the Lubicom Lake Band 102 —to bring claims against Canada under the Optional Protocol in respect of alleged violations of Article 1, remind us that the absence of an effective procedural mechanism for peoples to enforce the substantive right of self-determination is as much a feature of (third generation) human rights instruments 103 as of the (statist) International Court of Justice.

Alternatively, if responsibility for the procedural exclusion of peoples from international fora lies as much with our human rights present as with our statist past, perhaps we seek comfort in the prospect of an inevitably more people-inclusive future. On this reasoning, just as the substantive law of self-determination of peoples made its pilgrim's progress from political postulate to legal super-norm. ¹⁰⁴ so too, with time, our international legal structures can be reformed to accommodate, procedurally, the claims of peoples. All we need is more — and better — law. ¹⁰⁵ In Katangese Peoples' Congress v. Zaire ¹⁰⁶ for example, a communication submitted by a representative of a people (the President of the Katangese Peoples' Congress) alleging a denial of self-determination under Article 20(1) of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights ¹⁰⁷ was received and considered (albeit negatively) by the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights. ¹⁰⁸ Could not the procedure of the African Commission be mobilized in support of a more general reform project?

Yet the critical scholarship of Nathaniel Berman teaches us to treat with caution the view of history as the inexorable march of legal progress. ¹⁰⁹ In his body of work on ¹⁰⁰ Article 1 of the ICCPR, For commentary, see D. McGoldrick, 'Commentary on Article 1', in The Law of the Covenant (2002 forthcoming).

¹⁰¹ Communication No. 78/1980, in Selected Decisions of the Human Rights Committee under the Optional Protocol, vol. 2, October 1982–April 1988, at 23.

Ominayak v. Canada, Communication No. 167/1984, Views of the Human Rights Committee, 26 March 1990, UN Doc. CCPR/C/38/D 167/1984 (1990).

¹⁰³ For criticism, see e.g. Turpell, 'Indigenous Peoples' Rights of Political Participation and Self-Determination: Recent International Legal Developments and the Continuing Struggle for Recognition', 25 Cornell International Law Journal (1992) 579, at 583–590.

¹⁰⁴ A. Cristescu, The Right to Self-Determination: Historical and Current Development on the Basis of United Nations Instruments (1981) 17–24.

¹⁰⁵ Kennedy, supra note 21.

Ketinges, sapra note 21.

Katangese Peoples' Congress v. Zaire, Communication No. 75/92, supra note 33.

Article 20(1) of the African Charter of Human and Peoples' Rights 1981.

¹⁰⁸ Rules of Procedure of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, 6 October 1995, at www.oau-oua.org/oau_info/rules.htm. The Commission considered that there were no violations under the African Charter.

¹⁰⁹ Contesting the 'progress narrative' is a characteristic of the so-called 'New Approaches to International Law' (NAIL) stream of international legal scholarship. Cass, 'Navigating the New Stream: Recent Critical Legal Scholarship in International Law', 65 Nordic Journal of International Law (1996) 337. For a critique of 'history as progress' see e.g. Kennedy, 'The Disciplines of International Law and Policy', 12 Leiden Journal of International Law (1999) 9, at 91–101.

the legal history of nationalism,¹¹⁰ Berman demonstrates the perennial ambivalence with which the international community has engaged the nationalist passions of peoples.¹¹¹ On this account, it is surely worth recalling that the system of minority protection under the League of Nations was criticized *inter alia*¹¹² for its failure to provide locus standi to minority groups both at the Council of the League of Nations¹¹³ and at the Permanent Court of International Justice.¹¹⁴ Viewed in this historical light, how then do we regard the procedural exclusion of peoples such as the East Timorese from international law fora such as the ICJ²¹¹ Is it merely an oversight on the part of an international legal order otherwise dedicated to building a normative law of peoples? Or does it reflect a more deep-rooted ambivalence¹¹⁶ about the place of

- ¹¹⁰ See e.g. Berman, 'Modernism, Nationalism and the Rhetoric of Reconstruction', 4 Yale Journal of Law and Humanities (1992) 351; Berman, "But the Alternative is Despair": European Nationalism and the Modernist Renewal of International Law', 106 Harvard Law Review (1993) 1792; Berman, 'Between Alliance and Localisation: Nationalism and the New Oscillationism', 26 New York University Journal of International Law and Politics (1994) 449; and Berman, "The International Law of Nationalism: Group Identity and Legal History', in D. Wippman (ed.), International Law and Ethnic Conflict (1998) 25.
- ¹¹¹ Berman, 'Perilous Ambivalence: Nationalist Desire, Legal Autonomy, and the Limits of the Interwar Framework', 33 Harvard Journal of International Law (1992) 353.
- 112 The view of the minorities states was of course the opposite: that the League system had conceded 'too much to minority groups'. I.L. Claude. National Minorities (1955) 33.
- Although the League established procedures to allow minority groups to petition the Council directly, this was of no legal effect unless endorsed by a member of the League Council. See Tittoni Report of 2.2 October 1920, Report 1, League of Nations Official Journal 8, 9 (1920). For an explanation of the decision not to accord locus standi, see Report of the Committee Instituted by the Council Resolution of 7 March 1929. League of Nations Official Journal Spec. Supp. (1929) 73. An important exception was the Geneva Convention Concerning Upper Silesia 1922. For discussion, see Berman. "But the Alternative is Despair", supra note 110, at 1897.
- A draft Article of the Polish Treaty, proposed by Lord Robert Cecil in 1919, which would have allowed Polish national minorities a direct right of appeal to the Permanent Court of International Justice, was rejected by the UK and France. See J. Robinson, O. Karback et al., Were the Minorities Treaties a Failure? (1943) 135–138. See also, on this point, Berman, "But the Alternative is Despair", supra note 110, at 1860, especially note 295; and P. Thornberry, International Law and the Rights of Minorities (1991) 38–54.
- An important exception is of course the Working Group on Indigenous Populations established by ECOSOC Resolution 1982/34, 7 May 1982. For discussion, see Maivan Clech Lam, 'Making Room for Peoples at the United Nations: Thoughts Provoked by Indigenous Claims for Self-Determination by Nations', 25 Cornell International Law Journal (1992) 603, at 619–620. It was precisely this lack of institutional access for peoples generally in the international system that led to the founding of the Unrepresented Peoples' Organization (UNPO) in 1991. See http://www.unpo.org.
- Berman, 'Modernism, Nationalism and the Rhetoric of Reconstruction', supra note 110. This is also reflected in the proposal of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to exclude questions relating to the right of self-determination from the individual right to submit communications under the proposed draft optional protocol to the International Covenant on Economic Social and Cultural Rights. It was stated that this could involve a 'grave danger of the procedure being misused'. 'Report of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to the Commission on Human Rights on a Draft Optional Protocol for the Consideration of Communications in Relation to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', Annex to E/CN.4/1997/105, 18 December 1996, para. 24. Chris Tennant's argument, that in the context of indigenous rights the opposite is true and there is a prioritization of procedural rights participation and process over substantive rights (i.e. no recognized right to self-determination), merely confirms the existence of the ambivalence. Tennant, supra note 95.

nationalist claims in international law that has survived ostensible 'progress' at both doctrinal and institutional levels: from minority rights, to peoples' rights; and from the paternalistic League of Nations, to the more 'enlightened' United Nations?

B Self-Determination as Process: The United Nations and the August 1999 Popular Consultation

The second institutional encounter I wish to consider is between East Timor's right to self-determination as process, and the United Nations-sponsored popular consultation of August 1999. ¹¹⁷ This may seem a strange choice of moment for critical scrutiny. If the encounter with the International Court of Justice was widely hailed as a disappointment, the popular consultation has been generally celebrated as the implementation of East Timor's long overdue right of self-determination. ¹¹⁸ On this, now standard, account the image of the East Timorese turning out in their droves to vote at United Nations polling stations in the face of threats from marauding militias ¹¹⁹ and Indonesian security forces bears testimony to the tenacity, not only of the East Timorese people, but of the international community faced with a suppression of the 'irrepressible' ¹²⁰ right of self-determination.

Yet for the self-determination formalist, the United Nations chapter of the East Timor Story is as troubling as its judicial counterpart. Questions abound. Why did the East Timorese require to be tenacious? Why were there 'marauding militias' and illegally occupying Indonesian security forces? In the era of the much-vaunted right of democratic governance¹²¹ are not votes — especially United Nations-sponsored one — supposed to be conducted in an atmosphere which is 'free and fair'? And given the presence of marauding militias and the Indonesian army, why did the United Nations deploy a civilian mission and not, for example, a military peace-keeping force?

1 The Background to the New York Accords

For international lawyers, the background to the August 1999 popular consultation should be well known. Since July 1983, ¹²² the good offices function of the United Nations Secretary-General had been deployed — to little avail — to assist Portugal and Indonesia to find an 'acceptable solution' to the Question of East Timor.

- ¹¹⁷ I have argued elsewhere, in advance of the popular consultation, that the proposed arrangements failed to accord with international law. Drew, supra note 70.
- Portugal, for example, stated that the New York Accords met Portugal's objectives by recognizing the right of self-determination of the Bast Timorese. See Note Verbale. 2 June 1999 from Charge d'affaires of the Permanent Mission of Portugal to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, A/54/121, 3 June 1999.
- On the deleterious effects of the militia campaign of intimidation from January 1999 to August 1999, see e.g. 'Question of East Timor, Progress Report of the Secretary-General', A/54/654, 13 December 1999, paras 18–20.
- ¹²⁰ Case Concerning East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), ICJ Reports (1995) 103, para. 29.
- Franck, 'The Emerging Right to Democratic Governance', 86 American Journal of International Law (1992)
- The General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to initiate consultation with all parties directly concerned with a view to exploring avenues for achieving a comprehensive settlement of the problem. See General Assembly Resolution 37/30, 23 November 1982.

With the fall of General Suharto in Indonesia in May 1998, ¹²³ negotiations intensified, ¹²⁴ and in October 1998 the United Nations Secretary-General presented Indonesia and Portugal with a detailed draft constitutional framework for 'wideranging autonomy' in East Timor within the Republic of Indonesia. ¹²⁵ Dispute over the autonomy plan centred less on the constitutional details than on whether East Timor's autonomy within Indonesia would constitute a final status (the Indonesian position) or an interim status pending a future act of self-determination by the East Timorese people (the Portuguese and East Timor leadership position). ¹²⁶

The deadlock was resolved when — in an astonishing turnaround — on 27 January 1999, President Habibie announced that, if the people of East Timor declined the Indonesian offer of autonomy, Indonesia would be prepared to 'let East Timor go'. ¹²⁷ It was this Habibie-led¹²⁸ volte face in Indonesian policy that paved the way for the conclusion of the historic New York Accords of 5 May 1999 between Portugal, Indonesia and the United Nations. ¹²⁹

2 The Structure of the New York Accords

Hailed by the United Nations Secretary-General as providing an historic opportunity for a 'just, comprehensive and internationally acceptable solution to the question of East Timor', ¹³⁰ the New York Accords comprised three separate agreements. First, the General Agreement, ¹³¹ between Portugal and Indonesia, set forth the lynchpin principle: to request the United Nations Secretary-General to conduct a 'popular consultation' to ascertain whether the East Timorese people would accept or reject a constitutional framework for autonomy ¹³² within the Republic of Indonesia. To assist in this task, the Secretary-General was requested to establish an 'appropriate' United Nations Assistance Mission for East Timor (UNAMET). ¹³³ UNAMET was duly established by the Security Council on 11 June 1999. ¹³⁴

The two supplementary agreements were tripartite — between Portugal, Indonesia and the United Nations — and dealt with the modalities for the popular consultation ¹²³ Suharto was forced to resign on 21 May 1998. On the economic and political background to the resignation, see Taylor, 'Indonesia and the Transition in East Timor', in Hedman, supra note 3, at 13.

¹²⁴ In June 1998, President Habibie offered a 'special status' to East Timor within the Republic of Indonesia. This was rejected by Bishop Belo and Xanana Gusmao. See Taylor, supra note 123, at 15.

For background, see 'Question of East Timor, Progress Report', supra note 119, at para. 3.

¹²⁶ Ibid, at para. 2.

^{127 &#}x27;Sudden Impact', Far Eastern Economic Review, 11 February 1999, at 19; Taylor, supra note 123; 'Question of East Timor, Progress Report', supra note 119, at para. 4.

On the background to Habibie's decision, see Taylor, supra note 123, at 16.

¹²⁹ For further details on the steps leading to the signing ceremony in New York, see 'Question of East Timor, Progress Report', supra note 119, at paras 5–9.

¹³⁰ Report of the Secretary-General, 'The Question of East Timor', S/1995/513, 5 May 1999, para. 1.

¹³¹ General Agreement, supra note 11.

¹³² Ibid, Article 1. The Constitutional Framework was appended to the General Agreement.

¹³³ Ibid, Article 2.

 $^{^{\}rm 134}$ Security Council Resolution 1246 (1999), 11 June 1999, para. 1.

(the 'Modalities Agreement'¹³⁵) and the security arrangements (the 'Security Agreement'¹³⁶). The Modalities Agreement regulated such operational issues as the date of the ballot, the question to be put to the voters, voter entitlement, the timetable for the consultation process and so forth.¹³⁷ The Security Agreement crucially laid down a second lynchpin principle: that a 'secure environment devoid of violence or other forms of intimidation is a prerequisite for the holding of a fair and free ballot'.¹³⁸ Curiously, however, given their penchant for human rights abuses against the East Timorese, responsibility for ensuring the security environment was assigned, not to the United Nations, but to the 'appropriate' Indonesian security authorities.¹³⁹

3 The New York Accords: Legal Rights or Pragmatic Compromise?

It is my contention that with the shift from the ICJ to the UN — from self-determination as substance, to self-determination as process — the East Timor Story took, what David Kennedy might call, an 'anti-formalist turn' ¹⁴⁰ — from legal formalism to institutional pragmatism. This becomes clear if we contest two standard assumptions that underpin discussion/analysis of the popular consultation and the violence that erupted in the wake of the announcement of the pro-independence results on 3 September 1999: first, that the popular consultation amounted to an exercise of the right of self-determination in accordance with the rules of international law; secondly, that the violence of September/October was aberrational and arose only in violation — rather than as a predictable consequence — of the New York Accords.

4 The New York Accords and the Right to Free Choice

We have seen that the 'essential feature' of self-determination as process is the right of a people to exercise a free choice. Thus, in order to be certified 'self-determination-compliant' it must be shown that the New York Accords met the test of providing the Agreement Regarding the Modalities for the Popular Consultation of the East Timorese Through a Direct Ballot (Modalities Agreement), A/53/951, Annex II of the Report of the Secretary-General, S/1999/513, supra note 11.

¹³⁶ East Timor Popular Consultation Agreement Regarding Security (Security Agreement) A/53/951, Annex III of the Report of the Secretary-General, S/1999/513, supra note 11.

For discussion, see Secretary-General Report, S/1999/531, para. 4.

¹³⁸ Security Agreement, Article 1.

¹³⁹ Article 1 of the Security Agreement provided, inter alia, that responsibility for the security environment 'as well as for the general maintenance of law and order rests with the appropriate Indonesian security authorities. The absolute neutrality of the TNI [the Indonesian armed forces] and the Indonesian Police is essential in this regard.' Article 3 of the General Agreement, supra note 11, provided that: The Government of Indonesia will be responsible for maintaining peace and security in East Timor in order to ensure that the popular consultation is carried out in a fair and peaceful way in an atmosphere free of intimidation, violence or interference from any side' (emphasis added). Part G of the Modalities Agreement provided that 'the Indonesian authorities will ensure a secure environment for a free and fair popular consultation and will be responsible for the security of the United Nations personnel'.

¹⁴⁰ Kennedy, supra note 21.

people of East Timor with a true free choice as required by international law. And, while the precise meaning of 'free choice' is not expressly defined, it seems obvious that in order to be meaningful the designation 'free' must relate to both the range of choices offered and the conditions under which the choice was to be exercised.

(a) The range of choices: the ballot question

The question of the range of choices has been touched on earlier. We have seen that General Assembly Resolution 1541^{141} provides for three weighted options: independent statehood, free association, or integration with an independent state. The 1970 Declaration Concerning Friendly Relations 142 reiterates these three options and adds a fourth: 'or the emergence into any other political status freely determined by a people'. 143 By contrast, on any reasonable interpretation, the question put to the East Timorese people seems unduly circumscribed and weighted in favour of one particular option: autonomy. As provided by the Modalities Agreement, 144 the question put to the East Timorese voters on 30 August 1999 was:

Do you accept the proposed special autonomy for East Timor within the Unitary State of the Republic of Indonesia? ACCEPT

ΩĐ

Do you reject the proposed special autonomy for East Timor, leading to East Timor's separation from Indonesia? REJECT

Thus, rather than present the East Timorese with a range of positive choices in neutral terms — say, integration with Indonesia, autonomy within Indonesia or independent statehood — the ballot question effectively offered a single choice — autonomy — on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. Independent statehood was not offered as a positive option in its own right, but rather put in a cameo appearance as 'East Timor's separation from Indonesia', and as a negative consequence of rejecting 'special autonomy'.

But perhaps it will be objected that this line of argument is excessively formalistic. It cannot seriously be suggested that the East Timorese were unaware of the true self-determination options on offer: the Republic of Indonesia (integration) v. the Republic of East Timor (independence). UNAMET ran a faultless electoral educational programme¹⁴⁵ and the East Timorese themselves clearly grasped the point and voted in their droves. Yet, as international lawyers, how do we view the United Nations Secretary-General's decision to sign up to an agreement where a 'popular consultation' on 'special autonomy' displaced the traditional 'referendum' on 'self-¹⁴¹ United Nations General Assembly Resolution 1541 (XV) 1960. Resolution 1541 is expressly recalled in the preamble of Security Council Resolution 1236 (1999), 7 May 1999.

United Nations General Assembly Resolution 2625 (XXV) 1970.

¹⁴³ Ibid.

 $^{^{144}\,}$ Modalities Agreement, Part B.

¹⁴⁵ On UNAMET public information activities in advance of the ballot, see e.g. UN Secretary-General Report, Question of East Timor, S/1999/803, 20 July 1999, para. 8. On 12 October 2000, UNAMET was (deservedly) awarded the Elie Wiesel Ethics Award for its role in facilitating the popular consultation.

determination', ¹⁴⁶ and where the positive desire for independent statehood of the vast majority of East Timorese was expressed in the negative language of rejection? Are we pragmatic in the face of realpolitik? Do we point out that the actual wording of the ballot question isn't what is important, that for Indonesia a 'popular consultation' was the only politically palatable option, and that in any event it all came right in the end? Or do we at least acknowledge that self-determination is about process, not outcomes, and that in signing up to the New York Accords the United Nations departed from its own decolonization practice, which, as we have seen, favours independent statehood as a self-determination option?

(b) The conditions for the choice: the security environment

But even if we accept that, while the language may have been disappointing, the ballot question put to the East Timorese on 30 August 1999 nonetheless offered a range of political options sufficient to constitute a 'free choice' under international law (though we would have to agree that those East Timorese who favoured the status quo—full integration without autonomy—were effectively disenfranchised) the New York Accords manifestly failed at the second free choice hurdle: the conditions under which that choice was to be exercised.

It is axiomatic that the exercise of a free choice through a referendum or a plebiscite requires conditions conducive to a fair and free vote. 147 And, prima facie, this is recognized by the New York Accords. As we have seen, Article 1 of the Security Agreement provided that the prerequisite for holding a 'fair and free ballot' was a 'secure environment devoid of violence or other forms of intimidation'. 148 The task of vouchsafing that secure environment fell to the United Nations Secretary-General. Thus Article 3 of the Security Agreement provided that, prior to the start of registration of voters, the Secretary-General shall 'ascertain, based on the objective evaluation of the United Nations mission, that the necessary security situation exists for the peaceful implementation of the consultation process'. 149 Guidance as to what exactly would constitute 'the necessary security situation' was provided in the accompanying Secretary-General's report:

the bringing of armed civilian groups under strict control and the prompt arrest and prosecution of those who incite or threaten to use violence, a ban on rallies by armed groups while ensuring the freedom of association and expression of all political forces and tendencies, the redeployment of Indonesian military forces and the immediate institution of a process of laying down of arms by all armed groups to be completed well in advance of the holding of the ballet 150

¹⁴⁶ In her study of the inter-war plebiscites, Sarah Wambaugh draws a distinction between 'popular consultations' and the 'regular plebiscite'. See S. Wambaugh, Plebiscites Since the World War (1933) Preface and Appendix.

¹⁴⁷ See e.g. Security Council Resolution 628 (1989), 16 January 1989, in relation to Namibia.

¹⁴⁸ Security Agreement, Article 1.

¹⁴⁹ Ibid, Article 3.

¹⁵⁰ Report of the Secretary-General, The Question of East Timor. S/1999/513, supra note 11, para. 6. UNAMET was also mandated to monitor 'the fairness of the political environment' and to ensure 'the freedom of all political and other non-governmental organizations to carry out their activities'. Security Council Resolution 1246 (1999) 11 June 1999, para. 4.

The ballot was originally scheduled for Sunday 8 August 1999.¹⁵¹ However, on 22 June. following reports of widespread intimidation and violence against proindependence supporters by pro-integration militias, the Secretary-General rightly determined that the 'necessary security situation' did not exist and postponed the start of the registration process for three weeks.¹⁵² Indonesia and Portugal agreed to a two-week postponement of the ballot.¹⁵³ On 14 July 1999, following reports of further militia violence and intimidation, including a series of attacks against UNAMET convoys and personnel, the Secretary-General again determined that he was unable to attest to the necessary security situation.¹⁵⁴ But this time, 'undeterred by the intimidation', he decided that the registration process should nevertheless begin.¹⁵⁵ Finally, on 28 July 1999, the Secretary-General informed the Security Council that the date of the consultation had been postponed to 30 August 1999.¹⁵⁶ No subsequent determination that the 'necessary security situation' existed was ever made.

But if, for the Secretary-General, the thorny political question 157 in the lead-up to the ballot was whether the security situation on the ground measured up to Article 1 of the Security Agreement (and, if not, whether to go ahead anyway), for the self-determination formalist the question is whether the security arrangements in the Accords measured up to what is required by international law. In other words, did the terms of the New York Accords provide for conditions conducive to an exercise of a free choice? And it is my contention, as argued in advance of the ballot, 158 that the ¹⁵¹ Modalities Agreement, Part A. This was later moved to Saturday, 7 August 1999 at the behest of the Indonesians.

¹⁵² Report of the Secretary-General Question of East Timor, S/1999/705, 22 June 1999, paras 12 and 19; 'Question of East Timor, Progress Report', supra note 119, at para. 21.

¹⁵³ Ibid, at para. 20.

¹⁵⁴ See Letter to Security Council. 14 July 1999, S/1999/788. For details of the various attacks against UNAMET, see 'Question of East Timor, Progress Report', supra note 119, at para. 21.

Secretary-General Report. Question of East Timor. S/1999/788. Registration began on 16 July 1999. See UN Secretary-General Report. Question of East Timor. S/1999/803. 20 July 1999. para. 1. The Secretary-General states that the decision to commence registration was based on 'positive assurances' by the Indonesians that the security situation would improve. Did. at para. 25. On 26 July 1999, the Secretary-General again wrote to the Security Council: 'The security conditions remained inadequate with ongoing intimidation by armed militia groups... and the inability of tens of thousands of internally displaced persons to return to their homes in safety. Further action to bring armed groups under control is essential.' But he nonetheless took the decision to continue with the registration of voters. See Letter Dated 26 July 1999 from the Secretary-General Addressed to the President of the Security Council. S/1999/822. 26 July 1999.

¹⁵⁶ See Letter Dated 28 July 1999 from Secretary-General Addressed to the President of the Security Council, S/1999/830, 28 July 1999, As a consequence, the Security Council authorized a one-month extension of UNAMET's mandate until 30 September 1999. Security Council Resolution 1257 (1999), 3 August 1999.

The Secretary-General made explicit the dilemma: "The prospect of achieving greater security through delaying the process or indeed halting it had to be weighed carefully against the risk of depriving the people of East Timor of the historic opportunity afforded by the Agreements. It was by no means certain that should the timetable shift by too great a margin the consultation would be held at all." Question of East Timor, Progress Report, supra note 119, at para. 24.

¹⁵⁸ Drew, supra note 70.

Accords' injunction that there be an environment 'devoid of intimidation' was always going to be thwarted, not only by the external situation on the ground — the marauding militias, the Indonesian military — but also by two failings integral to the Agreements.

First, there was no obligation on Indonesia to with draw 160 — or even to redeploy its military forces in the lead-up to the ballot. Although Indonesian troop redeployment was listed by the Secretary-General as one of the main elements of the 'necessary security situation' 161 any corresponding treaty provision in the New York Accords is conspicuous only by its absence. That the 'neutralization' of a territory — including the removal of the armed forces of the former power — is an essential condition for a free vote has long been established in international practice — from the League of Nations supervised plebiscites of the inter-war period¹⁶² to the more recent decolonization practice of the United Nations. As regards the latter, for example, the UN settlement plan for Namibia 163 provided for a reduction in South African Defence Forces (SADF) to 1,500 troops (who were to be confined to base), and the withdrawal of SADF troops began seven months ahead of the elections. 164 Similarly, MINURSO's mandate in Western Sahara includes verifying Moroccan troop reduction and monitoring the confinement of Moroccan and POLISARIO troops to designated areas ahead of the self-determination referendum. 165 By contrast, in East Timor, Indonesia retained a military presence of an estimated 18,000 troops throughout the period of the popular consultation.166

The second failing of the New York Accords was that there was no provision for the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping force to ensure security and monitor the vote. Rather, as we have seen, Article 1 of the Security Agreement, paradoxically, assigned responsibility for the security situation to the 'appropriate Indonesian ¹⁵⁹ Security Agreement, Article 1.

A recommendation for withdrawal of 'some' Indonesian forces from East Timor in the period leading up to the consultation was rejected by Indonesia. See 'Question of East Timor, Progress Report', supra note 119, at para. 11.

Report of the Secretary-General, The Question of East Timor, S/1999/513, supra note 11, para. 6.

Thus Wambaugh wrote of the inter-war plebiscites that: It is ... a great advance that in all European plebiscites ... the principle of neutralization was so far recognized that in every case the troops of the former owner were evacuated and an international commission was established to administer the plebiscite, with complete power over the administration of the area. Wambaugh, supra note 146, at 443. Even before the Second World War. Wambaugh reports that troop evacuation — though not the neutral commission — had become established practice in conducting plebiscites. Ibid, at 444. See also for discussion, Berman. Modernism, Nationalism and the Rhetoric of Reconstruction', supra note 110.

 $^{^{163}\,}$ Approved in Security Council Resolution 435 (1978), 29 September 1978.

^{164 26} UN Chronicle (June 1989) 12.

¹⁶⁵ Similarly, MINURSO's mandate in the Western Sahara includes verifying Moroccan troop reduction and monitoring the confinement of Moroccan and POLISARIO troops to designated areas ahead of the referendum. MINURSO's mandate was most recently extended in Security Council Resolution 1349 (2001), 27 April 2001.

According to Xanana Gusmao. 12 battalions of Indonesian troops entered East Timor from West Timor in the aftermath of the announcement of the vote in favour of independence. Report of the Security Council Mission to Jakarta and Dili 8–12 September 1999, S/1999/976, para. 3. Phased Indonesian troop withdrawal began only after the deployment of INTERFET on 20 September 1999.

authorities'. This is simply unfathomable. ¹⁶⁷ As a matter of historical record, the Indonesian military's penchant for human rights abuse against the East Timorese had been matched only by its flagrantly pro-integrationist agenda. Although official confirmation ¹⁶⁸ was lacking at the time of concluding the New York Accords, there was nonetheless a wealth of evidence ¹⁶⁹ to support the claims of East Timorese and other observers ¹⁷⁰ that the Indonesian military was responsible for the pro-integration militias, which, from January 1999, had been wreaking such havoc in the territory. In short — as borne out by the direct involvement of the Indonesian military and police in the September 1999 violence ¹⁷¹ — to assert the need for a security environment devoid of intimidation and violence, and then to assign responsibility for securing that environment to Indonesia, was positively oxymoronic. ¹⁷²

Moreover, again it is out of step with United Nations practice in self-determination situations involving military occupation and armed conflict, which favours the deployment of a United Nations peacekeeping force to monitor the ballot. ¹⁷³ In Namibia, for example, UNTAG included a 4,900-strong military contingent with a mandate inter alia to monitor the reduction of SADF, disarm militias and monitor the confinement of arms and ammunition. ¹⁷⁴ It is simply unimaginable that the United Nations would have agreed to hold elections in Namibia in the absence of a

- 167 The explanation given by the Secretary-General was that Indonesia made it clear that 'it could not accept any dilution of its overall responsibility for security'. See 'Question of East Timor, Progress Report', supra note 119, at para, 11.
- The Security Council Mission that was deployed in the immediate aftermath of the September 1999 violence reported that it was in no doubt that 'large elements' of Indonesian military and police authorities 'had been complicit in organizing and supporting the action of the militias'. Report of the Security Council Mission to Jakarta and Dill 8–12 September 1999, 8/1999/976, para. 3. See also KPP-HAM's report which reveals the existence of a cable sent on 5 May 1999 (the day of the signing of the New York Accords) by the Deputy Chief of Staff of ABRI, Brigadier-General Jhoni Lumintang, instructing the commander of the regional military command in Bali to be prepared to take repressive measures if the decision went in favour of independence, and to prepare for the evacuation of the population. For discussion of this and other documentary evidence collected by Komnas HAM, see Tapol, the Indonesian Human Rights Campaign, 'Ending the Cycle of Impunity: Can the East Timor Investigations Pave the Way?', 24 January 2000.
- See generally Hedman, 'The Rise of the Paramilitaries: Violence and the Vote in East Timor', in Hedman, supra note 3, at 26. See also Report of the Secretary-General, S/1999/595, 22 May 1999, para. 23.
- ¹⁷⁰ See e.g. Amnesty International, 'Paramilitary Attacks Jeopardize East Timor's Future', ASA 21/26/99, 16 April 1999; Amnesty International, 'East Timor: ABRI Must Stop the Paramilitary Units', ASA 21/30/99, 17 April 1999. In June 1999, the Far Eastern Economic Review revealed the contents of a letter classified as 'very secret' in which the head of a militia requested the local military commander to 'release' 530 million rupah (US$71,000) for the purchase of 100 automatic rifles. Far Eastern Economic Review, 24 June 1999.
- Report of the Security Council Mission to Jakarta and Dili 8–12 September 1999, para. 3.
- 172 Drew, supra note 70.
- 173 See e.g. Security Council Resolution 435 (1978), 29 September 1978, establishing UNTAG to oversee the Namibian independence process and Security Council Resolution 690 (1991), 29 April 1991 establishing MINURSO to administer the — much postponed — Western Sahara referendum. Even outside the decolonization context, there is a growing practice of United Nations deployment of peacekeeping missions to monitor elections.
- 174 For details, see 43 Yearbook of the United Nations (1989) 789.

peacekeeping force — far less to assign the principal security role to the 'appropriate' South African security authorities. Was there a principled basis for distinguishing the situation in East Timor?

As international lawyers, how then do we respond to the news that the United Nations signed up to an agreement that was per se inimical to a free vote 'devoid of intimidation and violence'? Perhaps we focus on what actually happened: 98.6 per cent of registered East Timorese¹⁷⁵ turned out to vote and the day itself was relatively violence-free. 176 Are we post facto pragmatists who applaud 177 the bravery of the East Timorese who - like the United Nations Secretary-General - were clearly 'undeterred by the intimidation'? 178 Or do we reflect that given the consequences of a vote in favour of special autonomy within Indonesia — the removal of East Timor from the list of non-self-governing territories, its deletion from the international agenda¹⁷⁹ — it was simply unacceptable that a United Nations-sponsored ballot should be conducted under less than optimal conditions? The outcome of the vote was 78.5 per cent in favour of rejecting autonomy. 180 Do we celebrate the proindependence result, relieved that in the end there was no doubt that it reflected the 'genuine free expression of the will' 181 of the East Timorese people? Or, do we remind ourselves once again that self-determination is about process not outcomes, and that, in any event, to focus exclusively on the ballot result as the one 'happy ending' to the East Timor Story is distorting as it diverts attention away from the other —less happy - outcomes¹⁸² on the ground. The violence that erupted on 3 September 1999 had been predicted by human rights groups and by the East Timorese as the inevitable consequence of the United Nations failure to secure Indonesian troop withdrawal or ¹⁷⁶ While there was no widespread violence, two East Timorese UNAMET staff members were killed by pro-integration militias.

^{175 446.953.}

¹⁷⁷ 'I congratulate the people of East Timor . . . for the perseverance and courage they have shown, particularly in the face of large-scale intimidation and violence that characterized the decisive final stages of the process. 'Secretary-General. 'Question of East Timor, Progress Report', supra note 119, at para. 47.
¹⁷⁸ Letter to Security Council of 14 July 1999, S/1999/788.

¹⁷⁹ According to Article 5 of the General Agreement, supra note 11, in the event that the Secretary-General had determined that the East Timorese had voted for special autonomy: 'the Government of Portugal shall initiate within the United Nations the procedures necessary for the removal of East Timor from the List of Non-Self-Governing Territories of the General Assembly and the deletion of the question of East Timor from the agendas of the Security Council and the General Assembly:

^{180 344,580; 21.5} per cent voted for autonomy.

This is the test laid down for self-determination by the ICJ in the Western Sahara Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports (1975) 12. For the East Timor popular consultation, an Independent Electoral Commission (consisting of 'three eminent jurists with extensive experience in the field of electoral processes') was established to observe the entire consultation process. After a judicial review following complaints of irregularities, it concluded that 'the popular consultation had been procedurally fair and in accordance with the New York Agreements and consequently provided an accurate reflection of the will of the people of East Timor'. See 'Question of East Timor'. See 'Question of East Timor'. See 'Question of East Timor'.

¹⁸² It is estimated that 250,000 refugees fled to West Timor. For further details of the 'humanitarian catastrophe' that resulted from the September 1999 violence, see 'Report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor'. 2/2000/53. 26 January 2000, paras 29–39.

deploy peacekeepers.¹⁸³ The death of East Timorese and UNAMET personnel, the wholesale destruction of villages and towns, and the 'humanitarian catastrophe' of 250,000 East Timorese refugees are directly attributable to these failings of the New York Accords

5 From Formalism to Pragmatism: Dispensing with Two Possible Defences

It can thus be seen that the New York Accords failed to provide for a free choice sufficient to comply with the international legal rules on self-determination as process. ¹⁸⁴ As such, contrary to the standard account, it is my contention that they are more accurately viewed as a product of pragmatic compromise rather than any principled application of the rules on self-determination of peoples. ¹⁸⁵ Yet perhaps as international lawyers we will only be comforted to learn that the East Timor Accords represented an abdication rather than an application of the international legal rules. Once it is established that the institutional move from the International Court of Justice to the United Nations was characterized by a shift from (legal) formalism to (more political?) pragmatism, could it not be argued that the burden of responsibility for 'what-went-wrong' also shifts — from law onto, say, politics? On this analysis, the New York Accords could be seen, not so much as a failure of law, but rather a failure to implement law.

One can imagine the following line of argument could be marshalled by international lawyers in defence of our discipline: the failure of the UN and Portugal to ensure Indonesian troop withdrawal or the deployment of United Nations peacekeeping troops under the terms of the New York Accords as required by law, was due to a lack of political will on the part of Indonesia and/or powerful/influential states¹⁸⁶ who were in a position to bring pressure to bear upon Indonesia. Similarly, the Security Council's eventual decision to deploy a multilateral force in accordance with international law (with Indonesian consent) was due to a change in the political will of Indonesia and/or those same key states (in turn, of course, brought about by the September violence and its extensive media coverage¹⁸⁷). Ergo, international law was no more than an innocent bystander at the Timorese slaughter. ¹⁸⁸

In short, does not establishing that in the United Nations chapter of the East Timor Story there was a failure to comply with the rules on self-determination as process,

- 183 The United Nations Secretary-General has stated that the United Nations anticipated 'some difficulties, some violence' but not the 'total and wanton destruction of everything in sight'. See the interview with Kofi Annan in Far Eastern Economic Review, 24 February 2000, at 25.
- Notwithstanding the references in the New York Accords which 'recall' General Assembly Resolutions 1514 (XV) 1960, 1541 (XV) 1960, 2625 (XXV) 1970 and other resolutions affirming East Timor's right of self-determination
- 185 Compare Note Verbale, 2 June 1999 from Charge d'Affaires of the Permanent Mission of Portugal to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General. A/54/121. 3 June 1999.
- 186 For example, the United States, the United Kingdom and Australia. On the historical failure of these states in relation to East Timor see Budiardjo, supra note 3.
- What Kennedy terms 'the CNN effect': Kennedy, supra note 21.
- 188 Por the view that East Timor had been a failure of politics rather than law, see Bowring, 'Self-Determination and the Jurisprudence of the International Court of Justice', in CIIR/IPJET, supra note 11, at 151.

merely serve to absolve international law of any responsibility for the catastrophic consequences of non-compliance?

Yet, even if we accept the existence of a discernible law/politics distinction. ¹⁸⁹ it is unclear why the acts (or omissions) of the United Nations Secretary-General or Portugal acting in its capacity as Administering Power under Chapter XI of the United Nations Charter should be characterized as 'political' rather than 'legal' if the purpose is to remove the responsibility of the international legal order. To paraphrase Berman, politics cannot always give international law its alibi. ¹⁹⁰ Rather, it is my contention that the failure to adhere to the strict letter of the law in the New York Accords should be viewed, not so much as some aberrational departure from international law, but as part of an unacknowledged trend within contemporary practice, which (selectively) favours pragmatic negotiation over formal legal entitlement — the all-important peace process over self-determination as process.

From the Middle East to the Western Sahara, peace processes are much in vogue. As the New York Accords demonstrate, however, for a people struggling for the right of self-determination the onset of a peace process may be paradoxical. On the one hand, the peace process may work hand in hand with the international legal principles, leading to the implementation of the legal rules on self-determination. On the other hand, the peace process may be invoked to trump rather than translate the legal framework. 191 Thus, once a peace process is in train, reliance by a people on formal legal entitlements may seem contrary to its pragmatic spirit, which tends to disavow predetermined outcomes in favour of negotiated settlement. Similarly, the peace process may serve to treat the parties as legal — and moral — equivalents, ignoring prior illegalities as much as prior entitlements. For example, since the signing of the Israel/Palestinian Declaration of Principles in 1993, 192 the Security Council has repeatedly failed to adopt resolutions on issues such as Israeli settlement activity, on the basis that this would be to prejudge issues reserved for the final status negotiations. 193 Similarly, Security Council resolutions endorsing the East Timor peace process in advance of the August 1999 popular consultation significantly omitted earlier injunctions in favour of East Timorese self-determination and ¹⁸⁹ For the contrary view, see e.g. Koskenniemi, "The Politics of International Law", 1 European Journal of International Law (1990) 1.

¹⁹⁰ Berman, 'In the Wake of Empire', 14 American University International Law Review (1999) 1515, at 1537 and 1545.

After signing the Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government, (1993) 32 II.M 1525–1546, in 1993, Israel has consistently argued that the settlements are permitted — not as a matter of international law — but under the terms of the Declaration of Principles. See e.g. General Assembly Plenary Tenth Emergency Special Session, G/A 9399, 17 March 1998.

¹⁹² Declaration of Principles, supra note 191.

The final status issues are defined in Article V of the Declaration of Principles, supra note 191. The failure of the Security Council to act in the face of ongoing Israeli settlement activity prompted the General Assembly in 1997 to exercise its powers under the Uniting for Peace Resolution 377 (V), 3 November 1950, and convene an emergency session to examine and adopt a resolution calling for a Conference of the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 to be held on 15 July 1999, A/RES/ES-10/6, 9 February 1999, para. 6. This contrasts sharply with the General Assembly's post-1982 neglect of the question of East Timor.

Indonesian troop withdrawal. 194 The failure of the United Nations to comply with the international legal rules in the New York Accords thus flags up an issue of more general concern to the self-determination formalist: the potential for conflict between the commitment to a 'peace process' and the formal rules of international law. 195

Alternatively, however, perhaps among international lawyers, there are others who would view the departure from formal legal rules in the New York Accords as cause for celebration rather than consolation. Have we not already seen from the Case Concerning East Timor that the formal legal rules and structures are inhospitable to the claims of peoples struggling for the implementation of the legal right of self-determination? On this analysis, the adoption of a flexible, more pragmatic approach to nationalist conflict could be seen, not so much as a violation of peoples' rights, but rather as a welcome or necessary corrective to the statist strictures of the formal international legal order. ¹⁹⁶

But, whatever the limitations of the existing legal structures, the moral of the East Timor Story is that the 'pragmatic' may be every bit as statist and procedurally exclusive of peoples as the 'formal'. Notably, there was no direct participation of the East Timorese leadership in the UN-sponsored peace process. 197 The signature of Xanana Gusmao or any other representative of the East Timorese people on the New York Accords is conspicuous only by its absence. 198 By contrast, Indonesia — the ¹⁹⁴ Compare e.g. Security Council Resolution 384 (1975), 22 December 1975; and Security Council Resolution 1236 (1999), 7 May 1999.

¹⁹⁵ This tension was also evident in the breakdown of the Israel/Palestinian negotiations at the Camp David summit in July 2000.

¹⁹⁶ Brilmayer, "The Institutional and Instrumental Value of Nationalism", in Wippman, supra note 110, at 58.

For details of the negotiations leading to the New York Accords, see 'Question of East Timor, Progress Report', supra note 119, at paras 2-13. Prior to January 1999, 'consultations' with the East Timorese $leadership \ took\ place\ \textit{outside}\ the\ framework\ of\ the\ tripartite\ 'negotiations'\ between\ the\ UN,\ Indonesia\ and$ Portugal. According to the Secretary-General's own account of events, the UN intensified its consultations with East Timorese leaders, including Xanana Gusmao in October 1998. But the historical record is silent as to consultations with the East Timorese in the lead-up to the May Accords following the Indonesian change in policy in January 1999. Rather, talks were between Foreign Minister Gama of $Portugal, Foreign\ Minister\ A latas\ of\ Indonesia\ and\ the\ UN\ Secretary-General.\ See\ generally\ `Question\ of\ Constraints' and\ Constraints' and\$ East Timor, Progress Report', supra note 119, at paras 3 and 6-9. The East Timorese leadership was not present at the signing ceremony in New York on 5 May 1999. The feeling of exclusion on the part of the East Timorese leadership was reflected in a number of public statements in the lead-up to the signing of the New York Accords. For example, in March 1999, in a radio interview, Ramos Horta, the exiled Nobel $Laure ate, openly \ questioned \ 'how \ it \ was \ possible \ to \ carry \ out \ an \ open \ and \ democratic \ direct \ consultation$ where the Indonesian Army is still on the ground'. He went further in a press conference in Hong Kong: 'I will publicly oppose it, denounce it, if the UN, the international community, wants to impose a vote on the future of the country with Indonesian troops on the ground.' These and statements to similar effect by $Bishop\ Belo\ are\ quoted\ in\ Merson,\ 'Reversing\ the\ Tide'\ (student\ research\ paper,\ School\ of\ Law,\ University\ paper,\ No.$ of Glasgow, 1999, on file with the author). Allegations of exclusion of the East Timorese leadership have persisted during the United Nations Transitional phase. See Xanana Gusmao, Letter of Resignation as President of East Timor's National Council, 28 March 2001.

¹⁹⁸⁶ Compare e.g. Agreement Between the Kingdom of Morocco and the Frente Popular para la Liberacion de Saguia el-Hamra y de Rio de Oro; Settlement Plan for the Western Sahara approved by Security Council Resolutions 658 (1990) of 27 June 1990 and 690 (1991) 21 April 1991. See also the Israel/Palestinian Declaration of Principles, supra note 191.

UN-designated aggressor state with its illegitimate interests in the fate of East Timor — was directly represented. ¹⁹⁹ With the institutional shift from the International Court of Justice to the United Nations, — from self-determination as substance to self-determination as process, from formalism to pragmatism — how ironic that the 'presence of the absent third' ²⁰⁰ (the East Timorese people) should continue to cast its shadow.

5 Conclusion

What then does East Timor have to tell us about the 'moral hygiene' 201 of international law? Its story is not a happy one. Since the beginning of the Indonesian occupation in 1975, an estimated 200,000 of its people have died. At time of writing, approximately 100,000 refugees remain stranded in Indonesian refugee camps in West Timor, 202 and Indonesian-backed militias continue to operate in the camps. 203 Such was the level of destruction in the aftermath of the popular consultation 204 that it

- Thus preambular paragraph 6 of the General Agreement, supra note 11, notes the Portuguese position that an 'autonomy regime should be transitional not requiring recognition of Indonesian sovereignty over East Timor or the removal of East Timor from the list of Non-Self-Governing Territories of the General Assembly pending a final decision on the status of East Timor by the East Timorese people through an act of self-determination under United Nations auspices'. But, clearly, Article 5 of the General Agreement, supra note 11, endorsed the Indonesian position that autonomy was to be implemented as an 'end selution'.
- ²⁰⁰ Scobbie, "The Presence of the Absent Third: Procedural Aspects of the East Timor Case', in CIIR/IPJET, International Law and the Question of East Timor, supra note 11, at 223.
- 201 Kennedy, supra note 21.
- On 6—7 June 2001. Indonesia held a two-day registration exercise in which all refugees in the camps in West Timor were offered the choice between repatriation to Bast Timor and permanent resettlement in Indonesia. According to the Indonesians, 98.02 per cent of the refugees voted for permanent resettlement in Indonesia. Given the presence of the Indonesian military and pro-Indonesian militias in the camps in West Timor, however, this result cannot safely be regarded as reflecting the free will of the Bast Timorese refugees. For an expression of concern regarding the effect of militia activity on East Timorese refugees, see Security Council Resolution 1338 (2001), 31 January 2001.
- In September 2000, following the murder of three UN personnel by militias operating in the camps in West Timor, the Security Council adopted a resolution 'insisting' that Indonesia take immediate steps to disarm and disband the militias, and calling on Indonesia to take immediate measures to allow the repatriation of refugees to East Timor. Security Council Resolution 1319 (2000), 8 September 2000, For an update on the humanitarian and political situation in both East Timor and West Timor, see Report of the Security Council Mission to East Timor and Indonesia, 9–17 November 2000, S/2000/105. See also e.g. Report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor, S/2000/738; Statement of the President of the Security Council, 3 August 2000, S/PRST/2000/26; Security Council Resolution 1272 (1999). 25 October 1999. In January 2001, the Security Council again underlined the need for UNTAET 'to respond robustly to the militia threat in East Timor'. Security Council Resolution 1338 (2001), 31 January 2001.
- ²⁰⁴ For a bleak picture of life in East Timor six months after the popular consultation, see e.g. Mayman, 'Fighting for Survival', Far Eastern Economic Review, 24 February 2000, at 34.

was always anticipated it would take at least two years before East Timor would at last be able to assert full independence.²⁰⁵

I have dealt with only two institutional moments in the struggle to protect and implement the East Timorese right of self-determination under international law. In the International Court of Justice it failed because of law — too much procedural law for states and not enough procedural law for peoples. With the institutional shift to the United Nations, East Timorese rights were not implemented due to a failure to comply with law — the international legal rules on self-determination as process — and a willingness to subsume legal entitlements to the vagaries of institutional pragmatism and the much vaunted peace process.

If decolonization is the normative high point of the law on self-determination, what future for an international law of peoples?

 $^{^{205}}$ August 2001 was the original target date for independence but at time of writing the timetable is under review and there is currently no agreed date (though elections for a Constituent Assembly are scheduled for 30 August 2001). In January 2001, UNTAET's initial mandate (to January 2001) was extended to 31 $\,$ January 2002. See Security Council Resolution 1338 (2001), 31 January 2001, at para. 2. Indeed, the Secretary-General has been consistent in warning against arbitrary timetables for independence. In February 2000, he instructed his Special Representative to draw up criteria in consultation with the Timorese leadership to determine when 'The East Timorese are ready to assume full control of their $destiny'. He \ added, however, that 'they \ and \ we \ must be \ patient, for that \ moment \ is \ still \ some \ way \ of f'. See$ 'Briefing to the Security Council', 29 February 2000. The very existence of such criteria signals an implicit return to the ideology of the trusteeship in the UN Charter. See e.g. 'Report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor', S/2000/53, 26 January 2000, at para. 41, which states: 'A key objective is to ensure that the East Timorese themselves become the major stakeholders in their own system of governance and public administration, first by intensive consultation through NCC and district advisory councils, and then through early and progressive development of their capacity to carry out all necessary functions' (emphasis added). Similarly, in May 2001, the Secretary-General comments: 'East Timor has continued to make progress on the path to independence. Nevertheless, a great deal remains to be done until that objective is reached and more will need to be accomplished thereafter to ensure that the new State can exist on its own ... I would favour a prudent approach, which seeks to safeguard the international community's considerable investment in East Timor's future.' See 'Interim Report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor', S/2001/436, 2 May 2001. Such statements are at odds with the more radical injunctions of the 'Colonial Declaration', which, for example, states that: 'Inadequacy of political preparedness shall not be used as a pretext for delaying independence.' General Assembly Resolution 1514 (1960) (the 'Colonial Declaration'), at para, 5,

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS Seventy-fourth Ordinary Session/ Ninth Ordinary Session of the AEC 5 – 8 July, 2001 Lusaka, ZAMBIA

CM/ Dec.1-46 (LXXIV)

DECISIONS ADOPTED BY THE
SEVENTY-FOURTH ORDINARY SESSION
OF THE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

DECISION ON THE CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO INCLUDING DIEGO GARCIA

Council:

- REITERATES its unflinching support to the Government of Mauritius in its endeavours and efforts to restore its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, which forms an integral part of the territory of Mauritius and CALLS UPON the United Kingdom to put an end to its continued unlawful occupation of the Chagos Archipelago and to return it to Mauritius thereby completing the process of decolonization;
- FURTHER EXHORTS the United Kingdom authorities not to take any steps or measures likely to adversely impact on the sovereignty of Mauritius;
- ENJOINS the international community to support the legitimate claim of Mauritius and extend all assistance possible to it to secure the return of the Chagos Archipelago to its jurisdiction thereby enabling it to exercise its rightful sovereign responsibilities on the totality of its territory.

Annex 145 David Raic, Statehood and the Law of Self-Determination (2002)

Statehood and the Law of Self-Determination

Statehood and the Law of Self-Determination

PROEFSCHRIFT

ter verkrijging
van de graad van Doctor aan de Universiteit Leiden, op gezag van de Rector Magificus Dr. D.D. Breimer, hoogleraar in de faculteit der Wiskunde en Natuurwetenschappen, en die der Geneeskunde, volgens besluit van het College voor Promoties te verdedigen op woensdag 19 juni 2002 klokke 15.15 uur

door

David Raič

geboren te 's-Gravenhage in 1967

Commission, the Commission of Rapporteurs, held that

[t]his principle [of self-determination] is not, properly speaking a rule of international law and the League of Nations has not entered it in its Covenant [...]. It is a principle of justice and of liberty, expressed by a vague and general formula which has given rise to most varied interpretations and differences of opinion [...]. Is it possible to admit as an absolute rule that a minority of the population of a State, which is definitely constituted and perfectly capable of fulfilling its duties as such, has the right of separating itself from her in order to be incorporated in another State or to declare its independence? The answer can only be in the negative. To concede to minorities, either of language or religion, or to any fractions of a population the right of withdrawing from the community to which they belong, because it is their wish or their good pleasure would be to destroy order and stability within States and to inaugurate anarchy in international life; it would be to uphold a theory incompatible with the very idea of the State as a territorial and political unity [...]. The separation of a minority from the State of which it forms part and its incorporation in another State can only be considered as an altogether exceptional solution, a last resort when the State lacks either the will or the power to enact and apply just and effective guarantees.1

The Commission of Rapporteurs eventually considered that the culture of the inhabitants of the Aaland Islands, who were qualified as a 'minority' rather than a 'people', could be effectively preserved and protected through autonomy arrangements under Finnish sovereignty. Only if the State would clearly fail to meet these safeguards, separation (of the Islands) would be an option pursuant to a plebiscite in the Aaland Islands.

It is thus beyond a doubt that in the aftermath of World War I self-determination did not develop into a rule of international customary law. It was only after the establishment of the United Nations that this development took shape, initially in the context of decolonization. This development will now be addressed.

§ 3.4. The United Nations and decolonization

§ 3.4.1. The liberation of colonial peoples and territories: towards a right of self-determination

Although self-determination was proclaimed by the United States and the United Kingdom during World War II in the Atlantic Charter, ¹²⁰ it was mainly Raic, D.. Statehood and the law of self-determination, BRILL, 2002. ProQuest Ebook Central, http://ebookcentral.proquest.com/filb/soas-ebooks/detail.action?docID=253561.

Created from soas-ebooks on 2018-01-09 23:56:00.

Copyright © 2002. BRILL. All rights reserved

^{119.} Report of the Commission of Rapporteurs, LN Doc. B7.21/68/106, 1921, pp. 22-23.

^{120.} President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill stated that "they desire to see no territorial changes that do not accord with the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned" and that "they respect the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live; and wish to see sovereign rights and self-government restored to those who have been because of Soviet pressure that self-determination was included in the Charter of the United Nations. ¹²¹ The principle of self-determination is referred to twice in the Charter. Article 1(2) mentions as one of the purposes and principles of the United Nations

[t]o develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace.

The second reference to self-determination is in Article 55(c), which is included in Chapter IX on "International economic and social cooperation". Despite the fact that self-determination in the Charter is referred to 'only' as a "principle" and not as a legal right, its appearance in a conventional instrument establishing an international organization which would be open to universal membership was a very important step in the evolution of self-determination into a positive right under international law.

Although self-determination was not explicitly mentioned, the principle underlies Chapter XI ("Declaration Regarding Non-Self-Governing Territories") and Chapter XII ("International Trusteeship System") of the Charter, 124 of which Chapter XII may be seen as the substitute of the League's Mandate System and having essentially similar purposes. 125 Chapter XI, on the other forcibly deprived of them." L.M. Goodrich and E. Hambro, CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS, COMMENTARY AND DOCUMENTS, 1946, pp. 305-306. The Atlantic Charter was subscribed to in the Declaration by United Nations of 1 January 1942 which was signed by 26 States. See Goodrich and Hambro, id., at pp. 306-307. See also M.M. Whiteman, DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL LAW, Vol. 5, 1965, p. 44.

^{121.} Cassese, Self-Determination, pp. 37-43. I. Brownlie, An Essay in the History of the Principle of Self-Determination, Grotius Society Papers, 1968, p. 90; R.B. Russel, A HISTORY OF THE UNITED NATIONS CHARTER, 1958.

^{122.} Article 55 reads: "[w]ith a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote: [...] (c) universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms [...]".

^{123.} It is remarkable that the English and French versions of the Charter do not coincide in this respect. The French text speaks of "le principe de l'égalité de droits des peuples et leur droit à disposer d'eux mêmes", see Chartre des Nations Unies, Paris Impremerie nationale, Ministrère des Affaires Etrangères, 26 May 1945 (emphasis added).

^{124.} Pomerance, supra note 46, at p. 9; A. Cristescu, The Historical and Current Development of the Right to Self-Determination, Study Prepared by the Special Rapporteur, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/404 (Vol. 1), 3 July 1978, p. 8; D. Bowett, Problems of Self-Determination and Political Rights in Developing Countries, PASIL, 1966, p. 134. See also Art. 1(3) ICCPR.

^{125.} Under Article 73, United Nations members administering "territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government" undertook "to develop self-government, to take due account of the political aspirations of the peoples, and to assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions, according to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and their varying stages of advancement". Article 76 states that "the basic objectives of the trusteeship system [...] shall be [...] to promote [...] progressive hand, laid down a rather new regime on Non-Self-Governing Territories which were referred to as "territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government". In this way, the scope of application of the notion of self-determination was substantially expanded in comparison to the League era.

Opinions differ as to what the drafters had in mind when the concept of self-determination was included in the Charter. As was stated above, before the drafting of the Charter the notion of self-determination could be identified in the Atlantic Charter in the context of the free choice of rulers and territorial changes. However, the language used in the Atlantic Charter is not found in the Charter of the United Nations. With regard to Articles 1 and 55, it has been suggested that "in each the context was clearly the rights of the peoples of one state to be protected from interference by other states or governments. It is revisionism to ignore the coupling of 'self-determination' with 'equal rights' – and it was the equal rights of states that was being provided for, not of individuals". ¹²⁶

However true this may be, it is clear that the Charter did not define the content of the principle of self-determination and the same applies with respect to the term 'peoples'. It was therefore only through the adoption of numerous resolutions in the following years, in particular by the General Assembly, that some insights were given into the content and the subject of the 'right', although this practice was primarily confined to the context of decolonization.

After the establishment of the United Nations, the Soviet Union and its communist allies continued to demand decolonization by the Western imperialist States in accordance with communist theory. ¹²⁷ In that effort they were, of course, supported by the Afro-Asian States. Because, although not expressly mentioned, the principle of self-determination was most prominently present in the context of Chapters XI and XII of the Charter, these Chapters formed the background for the evolution of self-determination from a principle into a positive legal right in the field of decolonization in the first two decades development towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned [...]".

^{126.} R. Higgins, Postmodern Tribalism and the Right to Secession, Comments, in: Brölmann et al. (Eds.), supra note 5, p. 29, at p. 29 (emphasis in original). The phrase "equal rights" may indeed be regarded as a normative substitute for 'equality of states'. See also Goodrich and Hambro, supra note 120, at p. 61. But it may also be argued from the perspective that World War II had been fought against an ideology of conquest and racial superiority, that it has a broader meaning in that it also refers to the inherent equality of peoples (whether or not organized as States) and the respective rights recognized to them. See, e.g., Dissenting Opinion Judge Kreca, Genocide case, ICJ Rep. 1996, p. 595, at p. 737.

^{127.} Musgrave, supra note 30, at p. 93. And see p. 184 ff. supra.

after the establishment of the United Nations. There is a considerable amount of literature on this topic. ¹²⁸ The discussion will therefore be limited to those issues and developments which, for this study at least, cast light on the status, content and scope of self-determination under international law.

Until 1960, the General Assembly adopted a series of resolutions in which much effort was devoted to asserting its authority with regard to Non-Self-Governing Territories listed by the colonial powers as Territories on which information had to be transmitted to the Secretary-General in accordance with Article 73(e) of the Charter. The common characteristic of these territories was that they corresponded to the somewhat classical notion of a colonial territory. The common characteristic of these territories was that they corresponded to the somewhat classical notion of a colonial territory.

Both Chapter XI and XII provided for a gradual development of Non-Self-Governing Territories towards self-government, or, in the case of Trust Territories, towards independence "as may be appropriate". But in the early 1950s, this policy of progressive and gradual development towards increased self-government was put under pressure more and more by the General Assembly. 131 Eventually the Assembly set aside the policy of gradual develop-^{128.} See, e.g., M.A. Ajomo, International Law, the United Nations, and Decolonization, in: ESSAYS IN HONOUR OF JUDGE TASLIM OLAWALE ELIAS, Vol. 1, 1992, p. 77; F. Abdulah, The Right to Decolonization, in: M. Bedjaoui (Ed.), INTERNATIONAL LAW: ACHIEVEMENTS AND PROSPECTS, 1991, pp. 1205-1218; J.D. Hargreaves, DECOLONIZATION IN AFRICA, 1988; F. Ansprenger, THE DISSOLUTION OF THE COLONIAL EMPIRES, 1989; See also Cassese, SELF-DETERMINATION, p. 74, n. 15, and the references mentioned there.

^{129.} See, e.g., UN Doc. A/Res/334 (IV), 2 Dec. 1949. Seventy-four Territories constituting territories under Article 73 of the Charter were listed in UN Doc. A/Res/66 (I), 14 Dec. 1946, which was the result of a reply by the member States to an invitation by the Secretary-General to give their opinion with regard to the factors that should be taken into account in determining whether or not a territory constituted a NSGT. See UN Docs. A/47, 29 June 1946, and A/47, Ann. I to VIII and Add. 1 and Add. 2. In 1946, the following countries were recognized as colonial powers: Australia, Belgium, Denmark, France, New Zealand, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom, and the United States. Abdulah, supra note 128, at p. 1206, n. 3. In 1960, four Spanish and nine Portuguese territories were added to the list by the Assembly and in 1962 Southern Rhodesia was added by the Assembly despite efforts by both the government of Portugal and the United Kingdom to prevent these territories from being listed. See UN Docs. A/Res/1542 (XV), 15 Dec. 1960 (Portugese territories), and A/Res/1747 (XVI), 28 June 1962 (Southern Rhodesia).

^{130.} The classical, that is the nineteenth century notion of a colony, which was still very much the same in 1945, was narrowly understood as a territory not geographically located in the metropolitan area of the parent State, lawfully incorporated into the parent State's territory, inhabited by a native population that is ethnically distinct from the population in the metropolitan area and the relationship of which is one of domination by the parent State. See R. Ranjeva, Peoples and Liberation Movements, in: Bedjaoui (Ed.), supra note 128, p. 101, at p. 103; A. Blackmann, Decolonization, EPIL, Vol. 10, 1987, p. 75; OPPENHEIM'S INT'L LAW, p. 281.

^{131.} Cf. UN Doc. A/Res/637 (VII) of 16 Dec. 1952, entitled "The right of peoples and nations to self-determination". The Resolution states in its final operative paragraph: "States Members of the United Nations responsible for the administration of Non-Self-Governing and Trust Territories shall take practical steps, pending the realization of the right of self-determination and in preparation thereof, to ensure the direct participation of the indigenous populations in the legislative and executive organs of government of those Territories, and to prepare them for the prewar framework of international law which drew a sharp distinction between Europeans or people of European descent and non-Europeans: only the former were unquestionably entitled to sovereign statehood. The latter were assumed not to be qualified at least prima facie, and the burden of proof was on them to justify it in terms of standards defined by Western civilization.¹³³

What caused this radical shift of opinion? A number of influential factors can be mentioned. A first important factor was the emergence of an anti-discrimination doctrine taking place at both the international and national level. Whereas the Mandate System marked the "beginning of systematic international intrusion into the workings of colonialism", ¹³⁴ widespread attack upon the very existence of the colonial system had gathered momentum by the end of World War II. ¹³⁵ To some extent this development parallelled national developments. In that respect one may think of the revolution in the United States during which formal racial discrimination was abolished in the course of the 1950s, which culminated in the 1964 Civil Rights Act. ¹³⁶ Secondly, the slow progress of Non-Self-Governing Territories towards self-government was undoubtedly an important reason for the change. ¹³⁷ As early as 1949, France, the United Kingdom and the United States ceased the transmission of information under Article 73 with regard to a substantial amount of territories listed in General Assembly Resolution 66 (I). ¹³⁸ In addition, when Spain and complete self-government or independence" (emphasis added).

Sopyright © 2002. BRILL. All rights reserved

^{132.} See UN Doc. A/Res/1514, supra note 2, Para. 5. In this respect compare the following statement by the representative of Saudi Arabia during the debates preceding the adoption of Resolution 1514. With reference to a number of African colonies he stated: "the argument has often been adduced that these peoples are now under tutelage and that their economic and social advancement requires that such tutelage should continue for some time. Well this is an antiquated argument not worthy of the spirit of the day [...]. These peoples have been under the tutelage for decades and some of them for ages. How long should we wait for this weary ordea! – for this painful trial – for this bitter experiment [...]? If the past tutelage has not been able, thus far, to raise these people from dependence to independence, then the tutelage is a failure, and the United Nations should put an end to this failure". See UN GAOR 15th Sess., (Part I), Plenary mtgs., Vol. 2, 27 Oct. – 20 Dec. 1960, p. 1017 (paras. 118-119).

R.H. Jackson, QUASI-STATES: SOVEREIGNTY, INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS, AND THE THIRD WORLD, 1990, p. 16.

I.L. Claude, Jr., SWORDS INTO PLOWSHARES: THE PROBLEMS AND PROGRESS OF INTERNA-TIONAL ORGANIZATION, 1964, p. 3.

^{135.} Id., at p. 329.

^{136.} Jackson, supra note 133, at p. 74.

^{137.} By 1959, ten of the seventy-two Territories listed in Resolution 66 (I) (supra note 129) had become independent.

^{138.} Id.

Portugal were admitted to the United Nations in 1955, these States denied that they administered territories in the sense of Article 73 of the Charter. ¹³⁹ A third factor, closely linked with the former, is that no territories were voluntarily placed under the Trusteeship System pursuant to Article 77(1)(c) of the United Nations Charter. ¹⁴⁰ Finally, the continued insistence on decolonization by the Soviet Union, East-European States and Afro-Asian countries in particular, was of essential importance. ¹⁴¹ The latter, while increasing their numerical strength in the United Nations, launched a major diplomatic offensive in the Bandung Conference which was held in 1955 and which declared that "colonialism in all its manifestations is an evil which should speedily be brought to an end". ¹⁴²

The much celebrated Resolution 1514 (the 'Declaration on Decolonization') adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1960, ¹⁴³ one of the main objectives of which is "the necessity of bringing to a speedy and unconditional end colonialism in all its forms and manifestations", is without a doubt the clearest expression of the revolutionary change of policy with respect to Non-Self-Governing Territories and Trust Territories. The title of the resolution is revealing: "Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples". ¹⁴⁴ The categorical character of the resolution features throughout its text:

- The subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a denial of fundamental human rights, is contrary to the Charter of the United Nations and is an impediment to the promotion of world peace and co-operation.
- 2. All peoples have the right to self-determination; by virtue of that right they freely determine their political status [...].
- 3. Inadequacy of political, economic, social or educational preparedness should never serve as a pretext for delaying independence.
- 4. All armed action or repressive measures of all kinds directed against dependent peoples shall cease in order to enable them to exercise peacefully and freely their right to complete independence [...].
- 5. Immediate steps shall be taken, in Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories or all other territories which have not yet attained independence, to transfer all powers to the peoples of those territories, without any conditions or reservations, in accordance with their freely expressed will and desire, without any ^{139.} Abdulah, supra note 128, at pp. 1206-1207.

^{140.} J.L. Kunz, Chapter XI of the United Nations Charter in Action, AJIL, Vol. 48, 1954, p. 103, at pp. 106-107; Falkowski, supra note 8, at p. 226.

^{141.} See D.A. Kay, The Politics of Decolonization, The New Nations and the United Nations Political Process, International Organization, Vol. 21, 1967, p. 786; Cassese, SELF-DETERMINATION, p. 71

^{142.} S.M. Finger and G. Singh, Self-Determination: A United Nations Perspective, in: Alexander and Friedlander (Eds.), supra note 89, p. 333, at p. 335.

^{143.} Resolution 1514, supra note 2, (vote: 89 to 0, with 9 abstentions).

^{144.} Id. (emphasis added).

One day later, the General Assembly adopted Resolution 1541. ¹⁴⁶ Principle VI mentions three results on the basis of which it could be said that a Non-Self-Governing Territory had reached a full measure of self-government:

- (a) Emergence as a sovereign independent State;
- (b) Free association with an independent State; or
- (c) Integration with an independent State.

Although the concepts are discussed in more detail in the following chapters, at this point it must be noted that this mode of implementation ¹⁴⁷ of self-determination through the realization of any of the three options mentioned, is often referred to as external self-determination, because it generally denotes the determination of the international status of a territory and a people, as opposed to internal self-determination, which generally refers to the relationship between the government of a State and the people of that State. ¹⁴⁸

Principles VII and IX of Resolution 1541 emphasize that 'free association' should be the result of a "free and voluntary choice by the peoples of the territory concerned" and 'integration' should be based on "the freely expressed wishes of the territory's peoples". Both provisions refer to impartial democratic processes as the technique for determining the will of the people. 149

In view of the vast amount of dependent territories which became independent after 1960, the 1960 resolutions and in particular Resolution 1514 must be considered as catalytic agents for the dismantling of the dependency system and the liberation of colonial peoples.

^{145.} Id. (emphasis added).

^{146.} UN Doc. A/Res/1541 (XV), 15 Dec. 1960.

^{147.} Pomerance, supra note 46, at p. 37; O. Kimmenich, A Federal Right of Self-Determination?, in: C. Tomuschat (Ed.), MODERN LAW OF SELF-DETERMINATION, 1993, p. 83, at p. 88. See also UN Doc. A/Res/2625, supra note 3, Principle V, Para. 4.

^{148.} This distinction is often made in the context of self-determination, but not always in a consistent manner. Cassese claims that Wengler was probably one of the first to use the distinction. See Cassese, SELF-DETERMINATION, p. 70, n. 6, referring to W. Wengler, Le Droit à la Libre Disposition des Peuples Comme Principe de Droit International, Revue Héllénique de Droit International, Vol. 10, 1957, p. 27. However, the distinction already appears in the Report on the First Part of the Seventh Session of the General Assembly (Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs Publication No. 32, The Hague, 1953), which was written (in Dutch) by the Dutch representative in the Third Committee, Beaufort. See also P.J. Kuyper and P.J.G. Kapteyn, A Colonial Power as Champion of Self-Determination: Netherlands State Practice in the Period 1945-1975, in: H.F. van Panhuys et al. (Eds.), INTERNATIONAL LAW IN THE NETHERLANDS, Vol. 3, 1980, p. 149, at p. 184. See further Chapter 6, infra.

^{149.} It should be noted, however, that the formula of "freely expressed will" as the basis for a legitimate exercise of self-determination is also referred to in operative Paragraph 5 of Resolution 1514 with respect to "complete independence". See further p. 212 ff.

§ 3.4.2. The subject of the right of self-determination and the principle of territorial integrity

Although the Charter refers to self-determination of "peoples", and Resolution 1514 proclaims that "all peoples" have the right to self-determination, an analysis of United Nations practice until the mid-1960s reveals that it was mainly the decolonization aspect of self-determination which was developed during that period. That is to say, the actual application of the right to self-determination by the United Nations was mainly confined to colonial peoples and territories. The self-determination is to self-determination by the United Nations was mainly confined to colonial peoples and territories.

As was affirmed by the International Court of Justice in the Namibia case, self-determination developed into a right for Trust Territories. ¹⁵² But the development was not limited to these territories. The Court continued by stating that the subsequent development of international law in regard to non-self-governing territories [...] made the principle of self-determination applicable to all of them ¹⁵³

An indication of what constitutes a Non-Self-Governing Territory as the subject of the right to self-determination was given in Resolution 1541 which defines a Non-Self-Governing Territory in Principle IV as a "territory which is geographically separate and is distinct ethnically and/or culturally from the country administering it". Reference is often made to this phrasing as the 'salt ^{150.} As has been argued in Chapter 4, the South African Apartheid system cannot, strictly speaking, be regarded as a colonial situation in the sense of Resolution 1541, but as a 'colonial type' situation. The case is therefore more properly treated as a situation concerning the denial of internal self-determination.

^{151.} In the 1950s Belgium challenged the restrictive interpretation of the subject of self-determination. The delegation pointed out that the Charter did not prohibit 'colonialism' but Non-Self-Governing Territories. It was maintained that "a number of States were administering within their own frontiers territories which were not governed by the ordinary law; territories with well-defined limits, inhabited by homogeneous peoples differing from the rest of the population in race, language and culture. These populations were disfranchised; they took no part in national life; they did not enjoy self-government in any sense of the word". The Belgian delegation stressed therefore that it was not clear why these territories should not be qualified as NSGT in the sense of Chapter XI of the Charter. Thus, the Belgian thesis expanded the scope of applicability of self-determination beyond the classical definition of colonies. The thesis was not accepted, however. It was pointed out that at San Francisco, Article 73 was not considered to apply to groups within established States. See UN GAOR, 8th Sess., Fourth Comm., 326th mtg., paras. 60-69 (esp. para. 62); UNCIO, Summary Report of the 11th mtg. of Comm. II/4, Doc. 712, II/4/30, 31 May 1945, pp. 2-3. See also Rigo Sureda, supra note 15, at pp. 103-104; Thornberry, supra note 16, at pp. 873-875.

^{152.} Namibia case, supra note 106, at p. 31.

^{153.} Id.

water barrier' or 'salt water' theory. ¹⁵⁴ Principle IV is supplemented by Principle V which lays down possible additional criteria for the determination of a Non-Self-Governing Territory which may be placed under the more general heading of 'political subordination'. Thus with the requirement that territories must be 'geographically separate', the application of the provision on Non-Self-Governing Territories was effectively limited to "overseas colonial countries and peoples ruled by alien whites". ¹⁵⁵ Indeed, it should be noted that the rather strict definition set down in Resolution 1541 proceeded from the basic principle that "[t]he authors of the Charter of the United Nations had in mind that Chapter XI should be applicable to territories which were then known to be of a colonial type", ¹⁵⁶ although Chapter XI leaves room for Non-Self-Governing Territories created after 1945. ¹⁵⁷

United Nations decolonization practice was almost entirely along the lines of the 'salt water barrier'. Thus, the identified subject or holder of the right of self-determination during this period of history was – in addition to Trust Territories – a territory, as the International Court noted, "under a colonial régime". 158 It should be noted that this development meant a rejection of the position that only States could be subjects of international law. Indeed, it was explicitly recognized, or, in other words 'positivized', that in addition to States, a certain group of people could be, and actually was, the direct holder of a right under international law. 159

Resolution 1514 of the General Assembly stipulates in Paragraph 6 that

[a]ny attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations. ¹⁶⁰

The practice of the United Nations suggests that this provision regarding the principle of territorial integrity in the context of decolonization is a reflection of international customary law, or at least of United Nations law. Four remarks should be made in this respect. Firstly, neither the General Assembly Resolution ^{154.} See, e.g., Rigo Sureda, supra note 15, at p. 105.

R. Emerson, Self-Determination, PASIL, Vol. 60, 1966, p. 135, at p. 138; Falkowski, supra note 8, at p. 226.

^{156.} Resolution 1541, Principle I (emphasis added).

^{157.} Cf. Art. 73 of the Charter: "Members of the United Nations which have or assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government [...]" (emphasis added). See also Crawford, CREATION OF STATES, pp. 94, 358-560.

^{158.} Namibia case, supra note 106, at p. 31.

See pp. 14-16, supra. See also H. Bokor-Szegö, NEW STATES AND INTERNATIONAL LAW, 1970, pp. 39-43.

^{160.} UN Doc A/Res/1514, supra note 2, Para 6.

nor subsequent state practice in the field of decolonization should be interpreted in a way that the title of the metropolitan State to the colonial territory became illegal or void ab initio. 161 What it did mean was that a positive legal rule was developed which held that colonial powers were under an obligation to decolonize in accordance with the wishes of the inhabitants of the colonial territory. In those cases where, in violation of this obligation, metropolitan States did not transfer sovereignty to the authorities of the colonial territory, the right of self-determination of the colonial territory prevailed over any claim by the metropolitan State to the maintenance of its sovereignty over the colonial territory. 162 Therefore, no violation of the principle of territorial integrity occurred when a colonial territory chose to dissolve the bonds with the metropolitan State without the latter's consent. Secondly, the principle of territorial integrity meant that third States (including Trustees) were under an obligation to respect the territorial integrity of the colonial territory. 163 Thirdly, in practice the right of self-determination was interpreted in the light of the principle of territorial integrity, which meant that the fragmentation of the colonial territory before the realization of independence (or integration or association) as a result of secession by a segment of the colonial population was not accepted by the United Nations and the international community at large. 164 Finally, after the accession to independence, the governments of the new States did invoke the principle of territorial integrity against secessionist demands by minority groups within that State. This, however, concerns the question of the existence or non-existence of a right of unilateral secession in the post-colonial era and will therefore be discussed in Chapter 7.

It will be noted that in the context of decolonization, the result of the interpretation of the right of self-determination in the light of the principle of territorial integrity was that a 'people' as the holder of the right of self-

^{161.} The Charter of the United Nations does not regard the existence of colonies or colonial regimes as being in violation of international law. See also OPPENHEIM'S INT'L LAW, p. 282.

^{162.} Cf., e.g., the cases of Algeria and Guinea-Bissau which were discussed in Chapter 4, Sections 2.2.1.(a) and 2.2.1.(b), respectively, supra. See also K.N. Blay, Self-Determination Versus Territorial Integrity in Decolonization Revisited, Indian JIL, Vol. 25, 1985, p. 386; H. Hannum, Rethinking Self-Determination, Va. JIL, Vol. 34, 1993, p. 1, at p. 32.

^{163.} Hence the rejection by the United Nations of the South African's attempt to fragment Namibia by creating a number of 'bantustans' in the territory. See UN Doc. S/Res/ 264, 20 March 1969; UN Doc. S/Res/301, 20 Oct. 1971; UN Doc. S/Res/366, 17 Dec. 1974; UN Doc. S/Res/385, 30 Jan. 1976. And see UN Doc. A/Res/2372 (XXII), 12 June 1968; UN Doc. A/Res/2403 (XXIII), 16 Dec. 1968; UN Doc. A/Res/31/146, 20 Dec. 1976. See also Dugard, RECOGNITION, p. 122.

^{164.} See also R. Higgins, THE DEVELOPMENT OF INTERNATIONAL LAW THROUGH THE POLITICAL ORGANS OF THE UNITED NATIONS, 1963, p. 104; Blay, supra note 162, at pp. 389-391; Pomerance, supra note 46, at pp. 18-19; Cassese, SELF-DETERMINATION, p. 72. Sometimes, the principle of territorial integrity has been equated erroneously with the principle of utipossidetis. The point is discussed in Chapter 6, Section 6, infra.

In sum, the right of self-determination, which in this context has been referred to as "a right to decolonization", 166 was applied to all inhabitants of a colonial territory and not to minority groups or segments of the population within that territory. Obviously, this (United Nations) policy was predicated on the fear of territorial fragmentation and international destabilisation in view of the often complex ethnic structure of the territories in question. Therefore, as a general rule, self-determination had to be granted to Trust Territories and Non-Self-Governing Territories as a whole. But exceptions were accepted. The United Nations' insistence on the preservation of the territorial integrity of a dependent or colonial territory did not form a bar to partition, but only if that was the clear wish of the majority of all inhabitants of the territory in question. For instance, in the case of the Non-Self-Governing Territory of the Gilbert and Ellice Islands, the Assembly first agreed to an administrative division of the colonial territory and subsequently approved the partition of the colony as a result of the express wishes of the inhabitants of the Ellice Islands, which became the State of Tuvalu. 167 Furthermore, mention should be made of the separation of Ruanda-Urundi in two separate States, Rwanda and Burundi, 168 and the division by Britain of the British Cameroons into a southern and northern region, of which the former acceded to Cameroon and the latter to ^{165.} Pomerance, supra note 46, at p. 18; Hannum, supra note 82, at p. 36; Thornberry, supra note 16, at p. 872; Falkowski, supra note 8, at p. 226 ("[i]n the overwhelming majority of cases the United Nations has not applied the international trust provisions to 'peoples' but has applied it to 'colonial units'"). Cf also J.P. Humphrey, The International Law of Human Rights in the Middle Twentieth Century, in: M. Bos (Ed.), THE PRESENT STATE OF INTERNATIONAL LAW, 1973, p. 75, at p. 103 (according to Humphrey the United Nations had adopted the questionable position that although "all peoples have the right of self-determination, only colonial countries are peoples" (emphasis added)).

Copyright © 2002. BRILL. All rights reserved

^{166.} See Abdulah, supra note 128.

^{167.} See UN Doc. A/Res/32/407, 28 Nov. 1977. Arguably, another example is found in the partition of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, also called the Central African Federation, which was formed at the initiative of the British in 1953. It was composed of the self-governing British colony of Southern Rhodesia, and the territories of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland. The Africans, fearing continued domination by the white minority, demonstrated (1960-1961) against the Federation, and in 1962 there was a strong movement for its dissolution, particularly from the new African-dominated regime in Northern Rhodesia. The British at first tried to keep the Federation intact, but finally realized that this was impossible. Britain approved a gradual process towards secession and independence of Nyasaland beginning on 1 February 1963. The Federation was dissolved on 31 December 1963. Nyasaland became independent as Malawi on 6 July 1964 and Northern Rhodesia as Zambia on 24 October 1964. See, generally, L.J. Butler, Britain, the United States and the Demise of the Central African Federation, 1959-63, in: K. Fedorowich and M. Thomas (Eds.), INTERNATIONAL DIPLOMACY AND COLONIAL RETREAT, 2001, p. 131.

^{168.} See UN Doc. A/Res/1746 (XVI), 27 June 1962. The General Assembly initially aimed at preventing the separation of the Trust Territory. See, e.g., UN Doc. A/Res/1743 (XVI), 23 Feb. 1962.

Nigeria.¹⁶⁹ Another example is formed by the division of the 'strategic' Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands in 1978 with the agreement of the inhabitants and the Trusteeship Council.¹⁷⁰ Four separate entities were created, three of which became independent States, namely the Federated States of Micronesia, Palau and the Marshall Islands, and one – the Northern Mariana Islands – came to be associated with the United States.¹⁷¹

§ 3.4.3. Implementation and legal status of self-determination

The first point that needs to be examined is what specific territorial status chosen by the inhabitants of a dependent territory (or their representatives) in their exercise of self-determination was considered to be an actual realization of the right of self-determination. As was stated by Pomerance

[i]n innumerable [...] resolutions of the General Assembly, self-determination has been bracketed together with independence - so much that it is popularly ^{169.} See UN Doc. A/Res/63 (I), 13 Dec. 1946. Another case worthy of mention is the approved partition of the Palestine Mandate into an Arab and a Jewish State by the General Assembly in 1947. See UN Doc. A/Res/181, 19 Nov. 1947. For a discussion of that partition, see T.G. Fraser, PARTITION IN IRELAND, INDIA AND PALESTINE, 1984.

^{170.} In this respect, the United States Permanent Representative to the United Nations stated: "[c]he United States regrets that the exercise of full self-determination by the peoples of the Territory has led to the decision to divide the Territory into more than one entity. However, both the United States and the Trusteeship Council are in agreement that it is ultimately for the Micronesians themselves to decide upon their political relations with one another. To take any other position, for example, that unity should be imposed upon the people of the Trust Territory, would make a mockery of the concept of self-determination as democratically conceived". See Letter from the Permanent Representative of the United States of America to the United Nations, addressed to the President of the Trusteeship Council, 25 Apr. 1979, quoted in: R.S. Clark, Self-Determination and Free Association; Should the United Nations Terminate the Pacific Islands Trust?, Harv. ILJ, Vol. 21, 1980, p. 1, at p. 81.

^{171.} Under Article 83 of the Charter, the Trust Territory was administered by the United States after 1947 as a 'security Trusteeship' the ultimate disposition of which was to be determined by the Security Council. In the period of 1979-1986, after the inhabitants had opted for the division of the Territory through plebiscites and referenda, the United States gradually transferred governmental functions. The Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia and Palau entered into a so-called Compact of Free Association with the United States, which entered into force on 21 October 1986, 3 November 1986 and 1 October 1994, respectively. On the same dates, these entities became independent States. See L.A. McKibben, The Political Relationship Between the United States and Pacific Islands Entities: The Path to Self-Government in the Northern Mariana Islands, Palau, and Guam, Harv. ILJ, Vol. 31, 1990, p. 257; Department of State United States of America, Trust Territory of Pacific Islands, 39th Annual Report, 1986; Clark, supra note 170. See also UN Doc. S/Res/956 (1994), 10 Nov. 1994; and see S.O. Roth, Assistant Secretary for East Asian and Pacific Affairs, US Department of State, Compacts of Free Association with the Marshall Islands, Federated States of Micronesia and Palau, Joint Oversight Hearing Before the Committee on Resources and Subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific of the Committee on International Relations, House of Representatives, 105th Congress, 2nd Sess., 1 Oct. 1998, Y 4.R 31/3:105-107, pp. 52-55.

Indeed, independence is mentioned in Resolution 1541 as one of three optional results of the implementation of self-determination, ¹⁷³ that is, in addition to integration and association. ¹⁷⁴

Another point is that Resolution 1514 states that the political status should be "freely" determined by a people.¹⁷⁵ This is clarified in Resolution 1541 which maintains that association should be the result of the free and voluntary choice by the peoples of the territory concerned expressed through informed democratic processes, 176

and that integration

should be the result of the freely expressed wishes of the territory's peoples acting with full knowledge of the change in their status, their wishes having been expressed through informed and democratic processes [...]. 177

This principle, which may be called the 'free choice principle', has been confirmed by the International Court of Justice in the Western Sahara case, ¹⁷⁸ where, on the basis of Resolution 1514 and its own statements in the Namibia case, the Court stated that "the application of the right to self-determination requires a free and genuine expression of the will of the people concerned". ¹⁷⁹ In practice, "the will of the people" meant the will of the majority of the ^{172.} Pomerance, supra note 46, at p. 25.

^{173.} Cf. also UN Doc. A/Res/2625, supra note 3, which states that "[t]he establishment of a sovereign and independent State, the free association or integration with an independent State or the emergence into any other political status freely determined by a people constitute modes of implementing the right of self-determination by that people".

^{174.} See also Separate Opinion Judge Dillard, Western Sahara case, Advisory Opinion, ICJ Rep. 1975, p. 13, at pp. 122-123 ('it may be suggested that self-determination is satisfied by a free choice, not by a particular consequence of that choice or a particular method of exercising it"); Pomerance, supra note 46, at pp. 25-28. And see UN Doc. A/Res/2625, supra note 3, which, under the heading of Principle V ("the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples"), repeats the wording of Resolution 1541 and adds "or the emergence into any other political status freely determined by a people". For a detailed discussion of Resolution 2625, see Chapter 6, infra.

^{175.} UN Doc. A/Res/1514, supra note 2, Para. 2.

^{176.} UN Doc. A/Res/1541, supra note 146, Principle VII.

^{177.} Id., Principle IX (b).

^{178.} Western Sahara case, supra note 174, at pp. 31-33.

^{179.} Id., at p. 32 (para. 56).

inhabitants of a colonial territory. ¹⁸⁰ And according to the Court in the Western Sahara case, only in those cases where a collectivity did not constitute a people for the purpose of decolonization or in cases where, for instance, the wishes of the people were so obvious as to render superfluous any act of consultation, this requirement could be dispensed with. ¹⁸¹

It must therefore be concluded that in the context of decolonization the element of 'free choice' was regarded by the United Nations as being of essential importance for a genuine exercise of self-determination, ¹⁸² that is, at least for those situations where self-determination would be implemented through association or integration. ¹⁸³ This was especially so when the selected option was union or association with the "former colonial parent", which was, as Pomerance observes, "viewed with a jaundiced eye and deemed to be inherently reversible, rather than final". ¹⁸⁴ In fact, it was more or less assumed that the exercise of self-determination by colonial populations would in most cases result in independence, as appears from the title of the Declaration on Decolonization itself. Hence the demand in Resolution 1541 for guarantees and specific procedures geared to establishing the wishes of the people in those cases where independence was apparently not preferred.

United Nations practice with respect to the principle of 'free choice' is practically uniform. Compliance with the principle was sought to be guaranteed through the organization and supervision of elections, referenda and/or ^{180.} Higgins, supra note 164, at p. 104; H. Gros Espiell, Implementation of United Nations Resolutions Relating to the Right of Peoples Under Colonial and Alien Domination to Self-Determination, Study Prepared by the Special Rapporteur, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/405 (Vol. 1), 20 June 1978, pp. 10-11.

^{181.} Western Sahara case, supra note 174, at p. 33 (para. 59); Pomerance, supra note 46, at p. 27. See also Declaration Judge Nagendra Singh, Western Sahara case, supra note 174, at p. 73.

^{182.} See also UN Doc. A/Res/54/90, 4 Feb. 2000 ("Resolution Adopted by the General Assembly on the Report of the Special Political and Decolonization Committee"). While recalling Resolution 1514, the General Assembly observes that "referendums, free and fair elections and other forms of popular consultation play an important role in ascertaining the wishes and aspirations of the people" and it recognizes "that all available options for self-determination of the Territories are valid as long as they are in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned [...]".

^{183.} As was stated by Judge Nagendra Singh: "the consultation of the people of the territory awaiting decolonization is an inescapable imperative whether the method followed on decolonization is integration or association or independence [...]. Thus even if integration of territory was demanded by an interested State, as in this case, it could not be had without ascertaining the freely expressed will of the people – the very sine qua non of all decolonization". Declaration Judge Nagendra Singh, Western Sahara case, supra note 174, at p. 81.

^{184.} Pomerance, supra note 46, at p. 25. She refers to the decision of the Cook Islands to maintain ties with New Zealand and the General Assembly's assurance that independence remained a future option. See UN Doc. A/Res/2064 (XX), 16 Dec. 1965. In that respect it will be noted that Resolution 1541 suggests that "free association" is open to subsequent revision.

Sopyright © 2002. BRILL. All rights reserved

^{185.} When, apparently, the population would opt for independence, the wishes of the people were normally to be established by the usual political processes of the territory, save for those special cases where it was considered necessary to make special arrangements as, for example, with regard to the Ellice Islands in 1974 where a referendum – leading to independence – was held in the presence of United Nations observers. See UN Doc. A/Res/3288 (XXIX), 13 Dec. 1974; UN GAOR, 29th Sess., Supp. No. 23 (A/9623/Rev.1), Ch. XXI, Ann.

^{186.} See Cassese, Self-Determination, pp. 76-78, and the examples given there. See also Oppenheim's Int'l Law, pp. 713-714. The fact that in some circumstances the principle of 'free choice' was not applied, does not detract from the general and universal character of the principle. For instance, a referendum was not held in Gibraltar, but this was premised on the fact that the inhabitants were not considered to constitute a people for the purpose of external self-determination. See UN Doc. A/Res/2353 (XXII), 19 Dec. 1967. Another example of a situation where the principle of 'one man, one vote' through the instrument of a referendum or plebiscite was not used is West Irian (West New Guinea), but here the decision to deviate from the general rule is highly debatable and thus criticized (cf. Cassese, SELF-DETERMINATION, p. 84: "this 'act of free choice' [...] amounted to a substantial denial of self-determination"). In this case the Secretary-General's representative in West Irian observed that "geographical and human realities in the territory required the application of a realistic criterion", which would be different from "the orthodox and universally adopted method of 'one man one vote'". Report of Mr. Ortiz Sanz, UN Doc. A/7723, 6 Nov. 1969, Ann. 1, p. 9, para. 82. Accordingly, the will of the people was established on the basis of the Indonesian musjawarah system ("a process in which decisions are reached by collective discussion and consensus rather than by individual votes"). Despite the fact that the Dutch government eventually did not object against the validity of the exercise of self-determination in West Irian (judging from the adoption of General Assembly Resolution 2504 (XXIV) of 19 Nov. 1969, which was co-sponsored by the Netherlands and which took note of the outcome of the 'act of free choice', acknowledged "with appreciation the fulfilment by the Secretary-General and his representative of the tasks entrusted to them under the Agreement of 15 August 1962"), it made clear that according to the Netherlands the standard for how to establish the will of a people for the purpose of exercising self-determination remained that of 'free choice' based on informed democratic processes based on universal adult suffrage, because this standard was in conformity with international practice. See Kuyper and Kapteyn, supra note 148, at pp. 198-199. During the debates in the General Assembly leading up to the adoption of Resolution 2504, which extended over three plenary sessions, several delegations expressed reservations regarding the procedures used, and questioned whether the people of West New Guinea had been allowed to exercise the right of self-determination. Cf. the statement by the Indian government, UN GAOR, 24th Plenary Sess., 1813th mtg., 19 Nov. 1969, para. 24 (the method of musjawarah is "appropriate for the special circumstances of West Irian but cannot under any circumstances be considered a precedent for the process of the exercise of the right of self-determination under completely different conditions in territories still under colonial domination"). See also W. Henderson, WEST NEW GUINEA, THE DISPUTE AND ITS SETTLEMENT, 1973, esp. pp. 226-240; Pomerance, supra note 46, at p. 33. It has been suggested that the majority stand in the General Assembly with regard to Resolution 2504 (XXIV) (vote: 84 to 0, with 30 abstentions) should be explained in the sense that West Irian was regarded by that majority as an integral part of Indonesia and that there was therefore no need to meet the required standards for exercising self-determination. See Rigo-Sureda, supra note 15, at p. 151.

^{187.} See Resolution 1514, supra note 2, Para. 5. See also the statement by Judge Nagendra Singh, supra note 184.

with (the Western view of) the principle of 'one man one vote'. ¹⁸⁸ However, in those cases where serious doubts existed as to the genuine expression of the wish for independence, additional safeguards were required. The situation of Southern Rhodesia under the Smith régime serves as a prime example. ¹⁸⁹ But, as was observed earlier, although 'free choice' was required, it is not clear whether or not the States concerned were of the opinion that they were under a legal obligation to ascertain "the will of the people" specifically through either a referendum or a plebiscite. ¹⁹⁰

It should be noted that although the technique by which the will of the ^{188.} Pomerance, supra note 46, at p. 32. See also Crawford, CREATION, pp. 101-102. For instance, an acceptable procedure of consultation with leaders of opinion and organizations took place in Bahrain pursuant to an agreement between Iran and the United Kingdom in 1970. The latter had been a protecting power and the former had claimed sovereignty. Under their agreement, a representative of the United Nations Secretary-General consulted representative leaders in Bahrain in the course of March - April 1970 and concluded in his report that "the Bahrainis [...] were virtually unanimous in wanting a fully independent sovereign State". See UN Doc. S/9772, 30 Apr. 1970, p. 11. The report was unanimously endorsed by the Security Council in Resolution 278. See UN Doc. S/Res/278 (1970), 11 May 1970. And see O. Schachter, The United Nations and Internal Conflict, in: K.V. Raman (Ed.), DISPUTE SETTLEMENT THROUGH THE UNITED NATIONS, 1977, pp. 301-364, at pp. 333-334; E. Gordon, Resolution of the Bahrain Dispute, AJIL, Vol. 65, 1971, pp. 560-568. Another example is formed by the case of Malaysia where it was deemed acceptable by the United Nations that the wish for independence was expressed by traditional authorities which enjoyed general support among the population. See T.E. Smith, THE BACKGROUND TO MALAYSIA, 1963, pp. 25-32.

^{189.} Reference can be made to the Security Council's determination of the invalidity of the proclamation of independence by the white minority régime in Southern Rhodesia in 1965 (UN Doc. S/Res/216, 12 Nov. 1965) and the Council's subsequent demand for "arrangements [...] for a peaceful and democratic transition to genuine majority rule and independence", which arrangements "include the holding of free and fair elections on the basis of universal adult suffrage under United Nations supervision" in order to "effect the genuine decolonization of the Territory [...]" (UN Doc. S/Res/423, 14 March 1978). See also, e.g., UN Doc. A/Res2138 (XXI), 22 Oct. 1966, Para. 2 ("reaffirming the obligation of the administering Power to transfer power to the people of Zimbabwe on the basis of universal adult suffrage, in accordance with the principle of 'one man, one vote'"); UN Doc. A/Res/2877, 20 Dec. 1971, Para. 2 ("no settlement which does not conform strictly to the principle of 'no independence before majority rule' on the basis of one man, one vote, will be acceptable"). The Lancaster House Agreement of 12 Dec. 1979 called for elections and a transition period under British rule. The Agreement was endorsed by the Security Council (UN Doc. S/Res/463, 2 Feb. 1980), which no longer demanded United Nations supervision of the elections, but which did require the United Kingdom to create conditions in Southern Rhodesia to ensure free, democratic and fair elections resulting in genuine majority rule, calling upon "all Member States to respect only the free and fair choice of the people of Zimbabwe" (Para. 9). Pre-independence elections were held from 27-29 February 1980 under the supervision of the British government and monitored by hundreds of observers of the OAU. The report of the OAU Observer Team concluded that under the prevailing circumstances, the elections were free and fair and reflected the will of the people. See OAU DOC. ECM/Res. 25 (XIII), adopted at the 13th Extraordinary Sess. in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 10-12 March 1980, Para. 1 (endorsing the outcome of the elections). Robert Mugabe's ZANU party (PF) won absolute majority and formed Zimbabwe's first representative government. The British government formally granted independence to Zimbabwe on 18 April 1980. On 26 August 1980, Zimbabwe was admitted to membership in the United Nations. As to the elaboration upon the Southern Rhodesian attempt to secede, see pp. 128-134, supra.

^{190.} Cassese, SELF-DETERMINATION, p. 79.

Copyright © 2002. BRILL. All rights reserved

The next point which needs to be addressed, is the legal status of selfdetermination in the context of decolonization. In Resolution 1514 the General Assembly refers without hesitation to self-determination as a right and not as a principle. Does that mean that the Assembly regarded self-determination as a right under international customary law at the time of the adoption of the Resolution? This may very well be the case. It must be recalled that, as early as 1952, the General Assembly adopted a number of resolutions under the title of "The right of peoples and nations to self-determination". In these resolutions it was stated that "the States Members of the United Nations shall recognize and promote the realization of the right of self-determination of peoples of Non-Self-Governing and Trust Territories who are under their administration". 192 And in 1953 the Assembly adopted a resolution containing factors which should be used by the Assembly as a guide in determining whether a territory is still or no longer within the scope Chapter XI of the Charter. The resolution declared that "each concrete case should be considered and decided upon in the light of the particular circumstances of that case and taking into account the right of self-determination of peoples". 193 In addition, Resolution 1188 (XII), adopted by the General Assembly in 1957, reaffirms in its first operative paragraph that those member States bearing responsibility "for the administration of Non-Self-Governing Territories shall promote the realization and facilitate the exercise of the right [of self-determination] by the ^{191.} That is not to say that the transfer of sovereignty by the colonial power would be approved by the United Nations with regard to any, that is, even an unrepresentative government of a previous dependent entity. Again, Southern Rhodesia could be mentioned as an example, in which case it was made clear by the Security Council that not only the outcome of the exercise of self-determination should be the result of a 'free choice', but also that only in the case of a 'majority' government genuine independence could be considered to be achieved. In general, the United Nations was concerned about whether the choice for independence, integration or association was a reflection of the will of the population of a dependent territory. Therefore, the demand for a genuine exercise of external self-determination should be distinguished from the issue of whether or not the United Nations required the future political and constitutional system of former colonies to be in conformity with the internal dimension of self-determination. Because immediate external self-determination of all dependent territories and peoples was considered to be of primary importance, no requirement of continued internal self-determination was formulated in this context. See also Crawford, CREATION OF STATES, pp. 219-220.

^{192.} UN Doc. A/Res/637 A-B-C, 16 Dec.1952.

^{193.} UN Doc. A/Res/742 (VIII), 27 Nov. 1953.

peoples of such Territories". ¹⁹⁴ If the terminology used in these resolutions is compared with the terminology used in Resolution 1514, it is clear that the latter is formulated in a much more mandatory manner by which the impression at least is created that the Resolution aims at expressing the applicable law. ¹⁹⁵ Moreover, the character of self-determination as a right under customary ^{194.} UN Doc. A/Res/1188 (XII), 11 Dec. 1957 (vote: 54 to 0, with 13 abstentions). Operative Paragraph 1 was voted on separately before the vote on the draft resolution as a whole. This Paragraph was adopted by 51 votes to 9, with 7 abstentions. The thirteen States abstaining from voting with respect to the draft resolution as a whole, included those States which voted against Para. 1 of the draft: the Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, the United Kingdom, Australia, Belgium, Canada, France and Italy (the remaining States abstaining from voting on the entire resolution were Denmark, Norway, Spain and Sweden). It has been suggested that if the principal colonial powers voted against or abstained from voting with regard to resolutions proclaiming self-determination as a right of peoples, it seems impossible to state that a rule of customary law had emerged at the relevant time. See R. Emerson, Self-Determination, AJIL, Vol. 65, 1971, p. 459, at p. 462. However, this conclusion must be rejected upon further analysis. As comes to the fore from the debates, for many (colonial) States the principal reason for voting against or abstaining from voting in 1957 was not so much the use of the term 'right' but the fact that according to these States self-determination was not confined to the populations of NSGT. See UN GAOR, 12th Sess., Third Comm., 821st mtg., 26 Nov. - 3 Dec. 1957: United Kingdom (pp. 303, para. 4 and 325, para. 62: "[the United Kingdom] had voted against operative paragraph 1, since even in independent States the principle of self-determination could be disregarded [...]"), France (p. 308, para. 13), the Netherlands (p. 313, para. 4), Canada (p. 319, para. 2: "the discussion has shown that the question of self-determination was not confined to situations relating to traditional colonialism"), New Zealand (p. 321, para. 21: "it had been suggested that self-determination was a practical question only in cases of NSGT's. Article 1 of the draft Covenants [on Human Rights] had however not been adopted on such premises. It could hardly be explained to a large segment of the world public, including the subjects of police States, that the right of self-determination was in their cases a kind of constitutional fiction. Such an interpretation would deprive the [draft] Covenants [on Human Rights] and the United Nations of all moral authority"), Australia (p. 322, para. 26), Belgium (p. 324, para. 54). Only the United Kingdom publicly questioned the existence of a legal right, but did not put forward this position in explaining its vote. This position was not supported by the other colonial powers and rejected publicly and outright by the vast majority of the non-colonial States, many of which referred to the draft International Covenant on Human Rights where selfdetermination was explicitly recognized as a right in draft Paragraph 1(1). As to the latter, see UN GAOR, 10th Sess., Ann., agenda item 28 (part I), Doc. A/3077, para. 77.

^{195.} Cf. Cristescu, supra note 124, p. 79 ("represents a legal and political formulation, by the international community, of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples"). It is an entirely different thing, however, to state that the resolution is an authoritative interpretation of the Charter. For this viewsee H. Waldock, General Course on Public International Law, HR, 1962 II, p. 5, at pp. 31-34; Brownlie, PRINCIPLES, p. 600. This view cannot be maintained, at least not in the sense that the entire resolution would be an authoritative interpretation of the Charter in view of such formulations as "immediate steps shall be taken to transfer all powers" to NSGT and "all other territories which have not yet attained independence" (emphasis added), which go well beyond that what is stated in the Charter. See also B. Roth, GOVERNMENTALILLEGITIMACY IN INTERNATIONAL LAW, 1999, pp. 208-209; Pomerance, supra note 46, at pp. 11-12; Crawford, CREATION, p. 90; Bokor-Szegő, supra note 159, at p. 29. In this respect it should be noted that the General Assembly does not have the power to adopt binding resolutions except for those resolutions adopted under the heading of a number of very specific provisions in the Charter. The resolutions normally have recommendatory force only. It is, however, generally accepted that the recommendatory resolutions may either reflect existing international customary law or influence the creation of a new international customary rule. In both cases the resolutions may be evidence of opinio juris. See, generally, B. Sloan, General international law appears to be reflected in the fact that some thirty Non-Self-Governing and Trust Territories ¹⁹⁶ achieved independence prior to the adoption of the Resolution on 14 December 1960. ¹⁹⁷ It therefore seems tenable that Resolution 1514 reflected an existing rule of customary law as far as a right of self-determination for colonial countries and peoples is concerned. ¹⁹⁸ In any event, it is beyond doubt that the right of self-determination in the sense of a right of Non-Self-Governing Territories and Trust Territories to choose either independence, association or integration developed into a rule of customary

Copyright © 2002. BRILL. All rights reserved

Assembly Resolution Revisited (Forty Years Later), BYIL, Vol. 58, 1987, p. 39. But see B. Cheng, United Nations Resolutions on Outer Space: Instant' International Customary Law, Indian JIL, Vol. 5, 1965, p. 23.

^{196.} Benin (1 Aug. 1960), Burkina Faso (5 Aug. 1960), Burma (4 Jan. 1948), Cambodia (9 Nov. 1953), Cameroon (1 Jan. 1960), Chad (11 Aug. 1960), Congo (15 Aug. 1960), Côte d'Ivoire (7 Aug. 1960), the Democratic Republic of Congo (15 Aug. 1960), Gabon (17 Aug. 1960), Ghana (6 March 1957), Guinea (28 Sept. 1958), India (15 Aug. 1947), Indonesia (17 Aug. 1945 proclaimed/27 Aug. 1949 devolution), Laos (19 July 1949), Libya (24 Dec. 1951), Madagascar (26 June 1960), Malaysia (21 Aug. 1957), Mali (20 June 1960), Mauritania (28 Nov. 1960), Morocco (2 March 1956), Niger (3 Aug. 1960), Nigeria (1 Oct. 1960), Philippines (4 July 1946), Senegal (20 June 1960), Somalia (1 July 1960), Sr. Lanka (4 Feb. 1948), Sudan (1 Jan. 1956), Togo (27 Apr. 1960), and Tunisia (20 March 1956).

^{197.} Between 1945 and 1957 some 700,000,000 people had seen their countries attain independence. Resolution 1514 refers explicitly to this development in its Preamble. This significant development was already observed and stressed by numerous delegations during the discussions leading to the adoption of Resolution 1188 (XII) in 1957, which was referred to above. See UN GAOR, 12th Sess., supra note 194, at pp. 299 (United States), 307 (Romania), 311 (Panama), 316 (Czechoslovakia). An interesting remark was made by the Netherlands with regard to the Indonesian quest for independence. Several years before the adoption of the 1960 resolutions, self-determination was at the core of the Dutch-Indonesian conflict in 1947-1949. In 1949, the Dutch government, after several efforts to crush the independence movement in Indonesia and in the context of the Round Table Conference which led to the formal transfer of sovereignty to the Republic of Indonesia, stated that "self-determination was an internationally recognized right which accrued to the people [of the Republic of Indonesia] irrespective of whether it had be laid down in an agreement or not". Kuyper and Kapteyn, supra note 148, at p. 166.

^{198.} Cf. OPPENHEIM'S INT'L LAW, p. 286, n. 17, stating that "the observations of the ICJ [in the Namibia case and the Western Sahara case] come close to attribution to the resolution the status of customary international law". See also Hannum, supra note 82, at pp. 33-34; Cristescu, supra note 124, at p. 79; Sloan, supra note 195, at pp. 99-100. During the discussions leading to the adoption of Resolution 1514 none of the delegations questioned the character of self-determination as a right for colonial countries and peoples. If the matter was referred to at all, it was to affirm the legal character of the right. See UN GAOR, 15th Sess., (Part I), Plenary mtgs., Vol. 2, 27 Oct. - 20 Dec. 1960: e.g., Ethiopia (928th mtg., p. 1022, para. 31); Poland (id., p. 1023, para. 50); United States (937th mtg., p. 1158, para. 19); France (945th mtg., p. 1259, para. 141). As in the case of Resolution 1188 which was discussed above, some States which abstained from voting explained their abstention by raising objections with regard to the fact that the resolution appeared to confine self-determination to colonial peoples (see, e.g., United States (947th mtg., p. 1283, paras. 143, 145)) or by objecting against the requirement of immediate transfer of sovereignty which would not be to the benefit of the peoples concerned (see, e.g., Australia (933th mtg., p. 1093, paras. 73, 83); United States (937th mtg., p. 1160, para. 29 and 947th mtg., p. 1283, para. 151); United Kingdom (925th mtg., pp. 983-986, paras. 32-62 and 947th mtg., p. 1275, para. 54)).

law in the course of the 1960s.¹⁹⁹ This is reflected in the numerous resolutions adopted both by the Security Council²⁰⁰ and by the General Assembly²⁰¹ affirming the existence of a right of self-determination, as well as in the dismantling of almost the entire dependency system in terms of Non-Self-Governing Territories and Trust Territories in the course of the 1960s and 1970s.

Yet another point which must be examined is whether or not the prohibition of the denial of self-determination for the inhabitants of dependent territories is to be qualified as a norm of jus cogens. In this respect, the categorical and absolute formulation in numerous resolutions of the General Assembly of the obligation of States responsible for colonies to end this colonial relationship is significant. Moreover, as has been discussed elsewhere in this study, 202 States have repeatedly emphasized the obligation to respect the right of self-determination as a fundamental premise for the maintenance of the international legal order. Furthermore, the fundamental character of the right of self-determination has been stressed with regard to the process of decolonization, and in that respect it has been explicitly qualified by States as a norm of jus cogens. 203 Although the International Court of Justice did not explicitly use the term jus cogens, it did stress the fundamental and special character of the norm in the East Timor case. The Court observed that the right of self-determination "is one of the essential principles of contemporary international ^{199.} Cf. Namibia case, supra note 106, at p. 31 (para. 52) ("the last fifty years [...] have brought important developments. These developments leave little doubt that the ultimate objective of the sacred trust was the self-determination and independence of the peoples concerned. In this domain, as elsewhere, the corpus iuris gentium has been considerably enriched [...]"). Cf. also the later remark by Judge Dillard, who concluded that "the pronouncements of the Court thus indicate that a norm of international law has emerged applicable to the decolonization of those non-self-governing territories which are under the aegis of the United Nations". Separate Opinion Judge Dillard, Western Sahara case, supra note 174, at pp. 121-122.

^{200.} See, e.g., UN Docs. S/Res/183, 11 Dec. 1963 and S/Res/218, 23 Nov. 1965 and the Security Council resolutions on Southern Rhodesia, (see p. 131, supra) and on the territories formerly under Portuguese administration (see UN Doc. S/Res/163, 9 June 1961; UN Doc. S/Res/180, 31 July 1963; UN Doc. S/Res/183, 11 Dec. 1963; UN Doc. S/Res/218, 23 Nov. 1965; UN Doc. S/Res/273, 9 Dec. 1969; UN Doc. S/Res/275, 22 Dec. 1969; UN Doc. S/Res/290, 8 Dec. 1970; UN Doc. S/Res/312, 4 Feb. 1972; UN Doc. S/Res/321, 23 Oct. 1972; UN Doc. S/Res/322, 22 Nov. 1972).

^{201.} See, e.g., UN Doc. A/Res/2037 (XX), 7 Dec. 1965; UN Doc. UN Doc. A/Res/2105 (XX), 20 Dec. 1965; UN Doc. A/Res/2189 (XXI), 13 Dec. 1966; UN Doc. A/Res/2326 (XXII), 16 Dec. 1967; UN Doc. A/Res/2465 (XXIII), 20 Dec. 1968; UN Doc. A/Res/2548, (XXIV), 11 Dec. 1969; UN Doc. A/Res/2708 (XXV), 14 Dec. 1970; UN Doc. A/Res/2878 (XXVI), 20 Dec. 1971; UN Doc. A/Res/2908 (XXVII), 2 Nov. 1972.

^{202.} See pp. 145-146, supra.

^{203.} See, e.g., Spain, Western Sahara case, ICJ Pleadings, Vol. I, pp. 206-208; Algeria, Western Sahara case, ICJ Pleadings, Vol. IV, pp. 497-500; Morocco, Western Sahara case, ICJ Pleadings, Vol. V, 179-80; Guinea-Bissau, Case Concerning the Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989, (Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal), ILR, Vol. 83, p. 1 at p. 24; Romania, UN Doc. A/AC.125/SR.70, 4 Dec. 1967, p. 4. And see the references given by Cassese, SELF-DETERMINATION, pp. 136-137, nn. 67-72.

law" and, furthermore, that "the assertion [by Portugal] that the right of peoples to self-determination, as it evolved from the Charter and from United Nations practice, has an erga omnes character, is irreproachable". In addition, the International Law Commission – with reference to, among others, the statements of the International Court of Justice in the East Timor case – has qualified the obligation of respect for the right of self-determination as jus cogens. Finally, there is considerable doctrinal support for the view that the prohibition of the denial of the right of (external) self-determination in the colonial context is jus cogens. For these reasons it is concluded that, at least, the prohibition of the denial of the right of (external) self-determination for colonial territories and peoples, or put differently, the prohibition of the maintenance or establishment of colonial domination, is a rule of customary international law having the character of jus cogens, and must consequently be respected erga omnes. The colonial domination is a rule of customary international law having the character of jus cogens, and must consequently be respected erga omnes.

In sum, after the establishment of the United Nations, self-determination was primarily applied as an anti-colonial concept. In most colonial situations it was clear that Wilson's idea of 'consent of the governed' could not be realized unless the colonial people were given the opportunity to choose their external political status. With the Soviet Union and its allies as its principal supporters on the one hand – essentially repeating Lenin's anti-colonial ideas – and the Afro-Asian States on the other, self-determination evolved into a positive legal right for the inhabitants of dependent territories, which entitled them to freely choose between independence, integration or association.

§ 3.4.4. Decolonization and statehood

What actually happened during the era of decolonization was a shift in the ^{204.} East Timor case, ICJ Rep. 1995, p. 90, at p. 102 (para. 29).

^{205.} Report of the ILC, 53rd sess., 23 Apr.-1 June and 2 July-10 Aug. 2001, UN GAOR, 56th sess., Supp. No. 10, A/56/10, ch. IV.E.2 (Commentaries to the Draft Articles on Responsibility of States for International Wrongful Acts Adopted by the Drafting Committee on Second Reading, UN Doc. A/CN.4/L.602/Rev.1, 26 July 2001), pp. 208, 284.

^{206.} See the literature mentioned at p. 147, note 258, supra. In addition, see M. Bedjaoui, Article 74, in: J.-P. Cot and A. Pellet (Eds.), LA CHARTE DES NATIONS UNIES, 1991, p. 1077, at pp. 1082-1083; Cassese, SELF-DETERMINATION, pp. 133-140; A. Goméz, Robledo, Le Jus Cogens International; Sa Nature, Ses Fonctions, HR, 1981 III, p. 17, pp. 172-185; Sloan, supra note 195, at p. 81; H. Gros Espiell, Self-Determination and Jus Cogens, in: A. Cassese (Ed.), UN LAW/FUNDAMENTALRIGHTS, TWO TOPICS IN INTERNATIONAL LAW, 1979, p. 167; H. Bokor-Szegő, The International Legal Content of the Right of Self-Determination as Reflected by the Disintegration of the Colonial System, in: QUESTIONS OF INTERNATIONAL LAW, 1966, p. 39. See also the references given by Judge Skubiszewski, East Timor case, supra note 204, at p. 266. But see Cristescu, subra note 124, at p. 80.

See also Separate Opinion Judge Ammoun, Barcelona Traction case, ICJ Rep. 1970, p. 4, at p. 304

At the Court at Buckingham Palace

THE 10th DAY OF JUNE 2004

PRESENT.

THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY IN COUNCIL

Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of all the powers in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:-

Citation and commencement

1. This Order may be cited as the British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004 and shall come into force forthwith.

Interpretation

- 2. (1) The Interpretation Act 1978(a) shall apply, with the necessary modifications, for the purpose of interpreting this Order, and otherwise in relation thereto, as it applies for the purpose of interpreting, and otherwise in relation to, Acts of Parliament.
 - (2) In this Order, unless the contrary intention appears-

"the Commissioner" means the Commissioner for the Territory and includes any person for the time being lawfully performing the functions of the office of Commissioner;

"the Gazette" means the Official Gazette of the Territory;

"the Territory" means the British Indian Ocean Territory specified in the Schedule.

Revocation

3. - (1) The British Indian Ocean Territory Orders 1976 to 1994(b) ("the existing Orders") are revoked.

⁽a) 1978 c.30.

⁽b) S.I. 1976/893; 1981 III, p.6524; see also the British Indian Ocean Territory (Amendment) Order 1994 made on 8th February 1994.

- (2) Without prejudice to the generality of sections 15,16 and 17 of the Interpretation Act 1978 (as applied by section 2(1) of this Order)-
 - (a) the revocation of the existing Orders does not affect the continuing operation of any law made, or having effect as if made, under the existing Orders and having effect as part of the law of the Territory immediately before the commencement of this Order; but any such law shall thereafter, without prejudice to its amendment or repeal by any authority competent in that behalf, have effect as if made under this Order and be construed with such modifications, adaptations, qualifications and exceptions as may be necessary to bring it into conformity with this Order;
 - (b) the revocation of the existing Orders does not affect the continuing validity of any appointment made, or having effect as if made, or other thing done, or having effect as if done, under the existing Orders and having effect immediately before the commencement of this Order; but any such appointment made or thing done shall, without prejudice to its revocation or variation by any authority competent in that behalf, continue to have effect thereafter as if made or done under this Order.

Establishment of office of Commissioner

- 4. (1) There shall be a Commissioner for the Territory who shall be appointed by Her Majesty by instructions given through a Secretary of State and who shall hold office during Her Majesty's pleasure.
- (2) During any period when the office of Commissioner is vacant or the holder thereof is for any reason unable to perform the functions of his office those functions shall, during Her Majesty's pleasure, be assumed and performed by such person as Her Majesty may designate in that behalf by instructions given through a Secretary of State.

Powers and duties of Commissioner

5. The Commissioner shall have such powers and duties as are conferred or imposed on him by or under this Order or any other law and such other functions as Her Majesty may from time to time be pleased to assign to him and, subject to the provisions of this Order and of any other law, shall do and execute all things that belong to his office according to such instructions, if any, as Her Majesty may from time to time see fit to give him.

Official stamp

6. There shall be an Official Stamp for the Territory which the Commissioner shall keep and use for stamping all such documents as may be required by any law to be stamped therewith.

Constitution of offices

- 7. The Commissioner, in Her Majesty's name and on Her Majesty's behalf, may constitute such offices for the Territory as may lawfully be constituted by Her Majesty and, subject to the provisions of any law for the time being in force in the Territory and to such instructions as may from time to time be given to him by Her Majesty through a Secretary of State, the Commissioner may likewise-
 - (a) make appointments, to be held during Her Majesty's pleasure, to any office so constituted; and

(b) terminate any such appointment, or dismiss any person so appointed or take such other disciplinary action in relation to him as the Commissioner may think fit.

Concurrent appointments

- 8. Whenever the substantive holder of any office constituted by or under this Order is on leave of absence pending relinquishment of his office-
 - (a) another person may be appointed substantively to that office; and
 - (b) that person shall, for the purposes of any functions attaching to that office, be deemed to be the sole holder of that office.

No right of abode in the Territory

- 9. (1) Whereas the Territory was constituted and is set aside to be available for the defence purposes of the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of the United States of America, no person has the right of abode in the Territory.
- (2) Accordingly, no person is entitled to enter or be present in the Territory except as authorised by or under this Order or any other law for the time being in force in the Territory.

Commissioner's powers to make laws

- 10. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Order, the Commissioner may make laws for the peace, order and good government of the Territory.
- (2) It is hereby declared, without prejudice to the generality of subsection (1) but for the avoidance of doubt, that, in the exercise of his powers under subsection (1), the Commissioner may make any such provision as he considers expedient for or in connection with the administration of the Territory, and no such provision shall be deemed to be invalid except to the extent that it is inconsistent with the status of the Territory as a British overseas territory or with this Order or with any other Order of Her Majesty in Council extending to the Territory or otherwise as provided by the Colonial Laws Validity Act 1865(a).
- (3) All laws made by the Commissioner in exercise of the powers conferred by subsection (1) shall be published in the Gazette in such manner as the Commissioner may direct.
- (4) Every law made by the Commissioner under subsection (1) shall come into force on the date on which it is published in accordance with subsection (3) unless it is provided, either in that law or in some other such law, that it shall come into operation on some other date, in which case it shall come into force on that other date.

Disallowance of laws

- 11. (1) Any law made by the Commissioner in exercise of the powers conferred on him by this Order may be disallowed by Her Majesty through a Secretary of State.
- (2) Whenever any law has been disallowed by Her Majesty, the Commissioner shall cause notice of the disallowance to be published in the Gazette in such manner as he may direct, and the law shall be annulled with effect from the date of that publication.

(3) Section 16(1) of the Interpretation Act 1978 shall apply to the annulment of a law under this section as it applies to the repeal of an Act of Parliament, save that a law repealed or amended by or in pursuance of the annulled law shall have effect as from the date of the annulment as if the annulled law had not been made.

Commissioner's powers of pardon, etc

- 12. The Commissioner may, in Her Majesty's name and on Her Majesty's behalf-
 - (a) grant to any person concerned in or convicted of any offence against the law of the Territory a pardon, free or subject to lawful conditions; or
 - (b) grant to any person a respite, either indefinite or for a specified period, of the execution of any sentence passed on that person for any such offence; or
 - (c) substitute a less severe form of punishment for any punishment imposed by any such sentence; or
 - (d) remit the whole or any part of any such sentence or of any penalty or forfeiture otherwise due to Her Majesty on account of any such offence.

Courts and judicial proceedings

- 13. (1) Without prejudice to the generality of section 3(2), all courts established for the Territory by or under a law made under the existing Orders and in existence immediately before the commencement of this Order shall continue in existence thereafter as if established by or under a law made under this Order.
- (2) All proceedings that, immediately before the commencement of this Order, are pending before any such court may be continued and concluded before that court thereafter.
- (3) Without prejudice to the generality of section 3(2), the provisions of any law in force in the Territory as from the commencement of this Order that relate to the enforcement of decisions of courts established for the Territory or to appeals from such decisions shall apply to such decisions given before the commencement of this Order in the same way as they apply to such decisions given thereafter.
- (4) The Supreme Court may, as the Chief Justice may direct, sit in the United Kingdom and there exercise all or any of its powers or jurisdiction in any civil or criminal proceedings.
- (5) Subject to subsection (6), the Chief Justice may make a direction under subsection (4) where it appears to him, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, that to do so would be in the interests of the proper and efficient administration of justice and would not impose an unfair burden on any party to the proceedings.
- (6) A direction under subsection (4) may be made at any stage of the proceedings or when it is sought to institute the proceedings and may be made on the application of any party to the proceedings or of any person who seeks to be or whom it is sought to make such a party or of the Chief Justice's own
- (7) Subject to any law made under section 10 (and without prejudice to the operation of section 3(2)), the Chief Justice may make rules of court for the purpose of regulating the practice and procedure of the Supreme Court with respect to the exercise of the Court's powers and jurisdiction in the United Kingdom.
- (8) Without prejudice to the operation of section 3(2), a sub-registry may be established in the United Kingdom for the filing, sealing and issue of such documents relating to proceedings in the Supreme Court (whether or not they are proceedings in which the Court exercises its powers and jurisdiction in the United Kingdom) as may be prescribed by rules of court made by the Chief Justice.

- (9) Anything done in the United Kingdom by virtue of subsections (4) to (8) shall have, and have only, the same validity and effect as if done in the Territory.
- (10) In this section, "the Supreme Court" means the Supreme Court of the Territory as established by or under a law made, or having effect as if made, under section 10 and "the Chief Justice" means the Judge (or, if there is more than one, the presiding Judge) of that Court.

Disposal of land

14. Subject to any law for the time being in force in the Territory and to any instructions given to the Commissioner by Her Majesty through a Secretary of State, the Commissioner, in Her Majesty's name and on Her Majesty's behalf, may make and execute grants and dispositions of any land or other immovable property within the Territory that may lawfully be granted or disposed of by Her Majesty.

Powers reserved to Her Majesty

- 15. (1) There is hereby reserved to Her Majesty full power to make laws for the peace, order and good government of the Territory, and it is hereby declared, without prejudice to the generality of that expression but for the avoidance of doubt, that-
 - (a) any law made by Her Majesty in the exercise of that power may make any such provision as Her Majesty considers expedient for or in connection with the administration of the Territory; and
 - (b) no such provision shall be deemed to be invalid except to the extent that it is inconsistent with the status of the Territory as a British overseas territory or otherwise as provided by the Colonial Laws Validity Act 1865.
- (2) Without prejudice to the generality of the power to make laws reserved to Her Majesty by subsection (1), any such law may make such provision as Her Majesty considers expedient for the purposes for which the Territory was constituted and is set aside, and accordingly and in particular, to give effect to section 9(1) and to secure compliance with section 9(2), including provision for the prohibition and punishment of unauthorised entry into, or unauthorised presence in, the Territory, for the prevention of such unauthorised entry and the removal from the Territory of persons whose presence in the Territory is unauthorised, and for empowering public officers to effect such prevention or, as the case may be, such removal (including by the use of such force as is reasonable in the circumstances).
 - (3) In this section-
 - (a) "public officer" means a person holding or acting in an office under the Government of the Territory; and
 - (b) for the avoidance of doubt, references in this section to the prevention of unauthorised entry into the Territory include references to the prevention of entry into the territorial sea of the Territory with a view to effecting such unauthorised entry and references to the removal from the Territory of persons whose presence there is unauthorised include references to the removal from the territorial sea of the Territory of persons who either have effected an unauthorised entry into the Territory or have entered the territorial sea with a view to effecting such an unauthorised entry.
- (4) There is hereby reserved to Her Majesty full power to amend or revoke this Order.

A K. Galloway

THE SCHEDULE

Section 2(2)

Diego Garcia

Three Brothers Islands

Egmont or Six Islands

Nelson or Legour Island

Peros Banhos

Eagle Islands

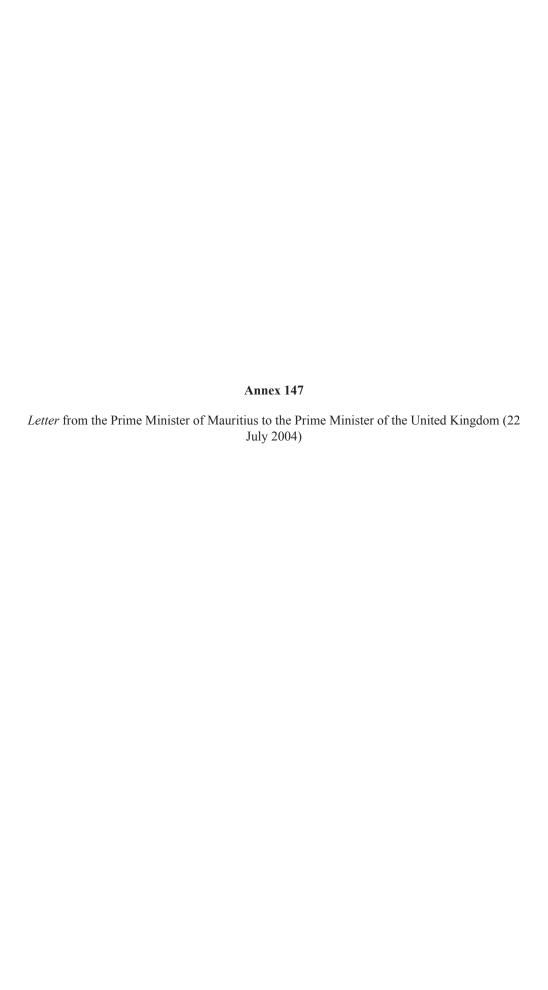

Salomon Islands

Danger Islands

EXPLANATORY NOTE

(This note is not part of the Order)

This Order makes new provision for the Constitution and administration of the British Indian Ocean Territory. $\ \ \, = \ \, (1-1)^{-1} \, (1-1)^{$

22 July 2004

Prime Minister,

I acknowledge receipt of your letter of 9 July by which you informed me that you were sorry your diary commitments have not allowed you so far to meet with me in London.

We have been following the debates in the House of Commons on the Diego Garcia base and the Chagos issue generally. We wish to remind you that whilst the existence of the base was challenged by many countries of the region during the Cold War, such is no longer the case now and we, in Mauritius, have made it clear on numerous occasions that we do not object to Diego Garcia's use as a military base in the larger interest of the security of the international community. I would wish to reiterate this to you.

I now take the liberty of raising a matter of crucial importance for Mauritius and the sixteen other ACP countries which are signatories to the ACP-EU Sugar Protocol.

We have noted with deep concern the Communication of the European commission to the EU Council of Ministers of Agriculture & Fisheries on the proposed reform of the EU Sugar Regime. We have been given to understand that, whilst acknowledging the need for reform, a number of delegations on the Council have commented on the schedule of the reform envisaged, the level and the stages proposed for reducing the intervention price for sugar, considering them to be too drastic. The proposals, if implemented tel quel would have a devastating effect on our vulnerable economies because they call for substantial price reductions implemented over a very short period. The severity of the proposals baffles us and we appeal for your support and intervention so that we can preserve a viable sugar industry in our countries.

Export earnings from sugar have underpinned our socio-economic development and have, through their stabilizing effect, enabled the upholding of the fundamental principles of democracy which your country and ours cherish.

..../

Reform in our countries is a difficult process, yet we have over the years worked on an ambitious reform programme to reduce costs of production and whance competitiveness. We still have a long way to go. The suddenness of the large coupled with the unpredictability of the 2008 review proposed would be with the unpredictability of the 2008 review proposed would be with the unpredictability of the 2008 review proposed would be written as the control of the 2008 review proposed would be written as the 2008 review proposed would

We therefore consider that the price reduction should be moderate and the timeframe for its application longer. Moreover, we believe that ACP countries should benefit from compensation through a dedicated budget line with sufficient funds enabling us to benefit from treatment similar to the one meted out to the outermost regions of the EU.

Our situation is very similar to that prevailing in these outermost regions of the EU, namely the Departments d'Outre Mer (DOM). And, it is no surprise that the Commission has all along recognized that the maintenance of a viable sugar sector in these regions is essential for socio-economic and environmental reasons. We understand that in view of the constraints of agriculture in the Departments d'Outre Mer, special treatment is envisaged which includes production-linked support.

We have ever since 1975 been a close ally of the EU and have been engaged in an exemplary North-South cooperation that has stood the test of time. We have always, through dialogue and understanding, been able to iron out our differences and moved ahead. Once again, we stand ready to embrace a meaningful dialogue with the Commission, the EU Member States and the European Parliament so as to safeguard this longstanding partnership. We are convinced that we can rely on your support and solidarity to ensure that our development programmes and our fight against poverty are not undermined.

Please accept, Prime Minister, the assurances of my highest consideration.

Paul Raymònd Bérenger, GCSK, GONM Prime Minister

HE Mr Tony Blair, MP
Prime Minister of the United Kingdom
Office of the Prime Minister
10, Downing Street
London
United Kingdom

Minister of Foreign Affairs, International Trade and Regional Co-operation Republic of Mauritius

22 October 2004

Rt Hon Jack Straw MP Sccretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs Foreign & Commonwealth Office LONDON

Dear Foreign Secretary,

I meant to write to you immediately upon my return following our meeting in London on 4^{th} October but my heavy schedule did not allow that.

I hasten to say that it was indeed a pleasure to meet with you and discuss issues of mutual interest. I have reported to Prime Minister Bérenger that our talks were held in a very cordial and frank manner.

As a follow-up to these discussions I await confirmation from you as to the projected meeting between our two Prime Ministers in the very near future.

I also look forward to hearing from you on the outcome of your discussions with the US with respect to the outer islands. I should like to reiterate that, from our perspective, we see no real or perceptible threat to security, having made it clear repeatedly that we have no problem whatsoever with the military and naval base on Diego Garcia.

As regards your proposal that we could envisage entering into a Treaty regarding the Chagos Archipelago, I should be pleased to receive your proposals so that we could have them studied here.

Finally, let me again say that this is a matter of utmost importance to us and we look forward to registering progress on this dossier.

J. Chitaree

No. 1197/28/8 19 April 2010

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade of the Republic of Mauritius presents its compliments to the General Secretariat of the Council of the European Union and has the honour to state as follows:

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius has noted with concern that the Chagos Archipelago (the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory"), including Diego Garcia, has been included in the list of Overseas Countries and Territories to which the provisions of Part Four of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (Lisbon Treaty) apply.

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius reiterates its position, as conveyed in the Ministry's Note (No. 1197/28) dated 21 July 2005 addressed to the General Secretariat, that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, has always been and is an integral part of the State of Mauritius as defined in the Constitution of the Republic of Mauritius. A copy of the Note is enclosed for ease of reference.

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius does not recognize the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory". The Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, was illegally excised from Mauritius by the British Government before granting independence in violation of the United Nations Charter and United Nations General Assembly Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960, 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, 2232 (XXI) of 20 December 1966 and 2357 (XXII) of 19 December 1967.

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius unreservedly rejects the inclusion of the Chagos Archipelago (the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory"), including Diego Garcia, in the list of Overseas Countries and Territories contained in Annex II to Part Four of the Lisbon Treaty.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade of the Republic of Mauritius avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the General Secretariat of the Council of the European Union the assurances of its highest consideration.

The General Secretariat of the Council of the European Union Rue de la Loi 175 B-1048 Brussels Belgium

cc. Delegation of the European Union in Mauritius

REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, INTERNATIONAL TRADE AND COOPERATION

No. 1197/28

21 July,2005

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, International Trade and Co-operation of the Republic of Mauritius presents its compliments to the Secretariat of the Council of the European Union and has the honour to refer to the inclusion of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia (the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory") in Annex II related to Title IV, Part III of the European Union Constitutional Treaty.

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius reiterates its position stated in the Note MBX/ACP/5005 dated 5 March 2001 from the Embassy of the Republic of Mauritius addressed to the Council of the European Union wherein it rejected the inclusion of the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory" in the list of Overseas Countries and Territories of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius reaffirms in the most unequivocal terms that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, has always been and is an integral part of the State of Mauritius as defined in the Constitution of the Republic of Mauritius.

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius does not recognise the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory" which was established by the unlawful excision in 1965 of the Chagos Archipelago from the territory of Mauritius, in breach of the Charter of the United Nations and of the United Nations General Assembly Declaration 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960, Resolution 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, and Resolution 2357 (XXII) of 19 December 1967.

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius unreservedly rejects the inclusion of the Chagos Archipelago including Diego Garcia (the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory") in Annex II related to Title IV, Part III of the European Union Constitutional Treaty.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, International Trade and Co-operation of the Republic of Mauritius avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Secretariat of the Council of the European Union the assurances of its highest consideration for the Council of the European Union the assurances of its highest consideration for the European Union the assurances of its highest consideration for the European Union the assurances of its highest consideration for the European Union the assurance of its highest consideration for the European Union the assurance of its highest consideration for the European Union the assurance of its highest consideration for the European Union the European Union

The Secretariat of the Council of the European Union Brussels Belgium

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

LEGAL CONSEQUENCES OF THE SEPARATION OF THE CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO FROM MAURITIUS IN 1965 (REQUEST FOR ADVISORY OPINION)

Written Statement of the Republic of Mauritius

VOLUME V

(Annexes 150-200)

1 March 2018

VOLUME V

ANNEXES

Annex 150	James Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law (2006)
Annex 151	David Vine, Island of Shame: The Secret History of the U.S. Military Base on Diego Garcia (2009)
Annex 152	Sadie Gray, "Giant Marine Park Plan for Chagos - Islanders may return to be environmental wardens", The Independent (9 Feb. 2009)
Annex 153	Note Verbale from the Mauritius Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the U.K. Foreign and Commonwealth Office, No. 1197/28 (10 Apr. 2009)
Annex 154	"U.S. embassy cables: Foreign Office does not regret evicting Chagos islanders", The Guardian (15 May 2009)
Annex 155	Africa-South America Summit, 2nd Summit, Declaration of Nueva Esparta (26-27 Sept. 2009)
Annex 156	Assembly of the African Union, 15th Ordinary Session, Decision on the Sovereignty of the Republic of Mauritius Over the Chagos Archipelago, Assembly/AU/Dec.331(XV) (27 July 2010)
Annex 157	I. Henry & S. Dickson, British Overseas Territory Law (2011)
Annex 158	Assembly of the African Union, 16th Ordinary Session, Resolution adopted at the 16th Ordinary Session, Assembly/AU/Res.1(XVI) (30-31 Jan. 2011)
Annex 159	Note Verbale from the Permanent Mission of the Republic of Mauritius to the United Nations Office and other International Organisations in Geneva to the Permanent Mission of Switzerland to the United Nations Office and other International Organisations in Geneva, No. 361/2011 MMG/HR/19 (28 Nov. 2011)

Annex 160	Stefan Oeter, "Self-Determination" in The Charter of the United Nations: A Commentary (Bruno Simma et al. eds., 2012)

Annex 161 National Assembly of Mauritius, Reply to Private Notice
Question (12 June 2012)

Annex 162 Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Member States of the Group of 77, Ministerial Declarations adopted at the Thirty-Sixth and Thirty-Seventh Annual Meetings of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Member States of the Group of 77 (28 Sept. 2012

Solemn Declaration on the 50th Anniversary of the OAU/AU,

U.K. Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Written Ministerial

Republic of Mauritius to the Embassy of the United States of America in Mauritius, No. 26/2014 (1197/28) (28 Mar. 2014)

& 26 Sept. 2013)

Annex 163 Africa-South America Summit, 3rd Summit, Malabo

Declaration (20-22 Feb. 2013)

Annex 164 Assembly of the African Union, 21st Ordinary Session, Assembly/AU/2(XXI)Rev.1 (26 May 2013)

Annex 165 Declaration on the Report of the Peace and Security Council on its Activities and the State of Peace and Security in Africa,

Annex 166 Republic of Mauritius, National Report of the Republic of Mauritius in view of the Third International Conference on Small Island Developing States (July 2013)

Annex 167

Assembly/AU/Decl.1(XXI) (26-27 May 2013)

Statement, "Update on the British Indian Ocean Territory Policy Review" (8 July 2013)

Annex 168 Note Verbale from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the

Annex 169 Chagos Marine Protected Area Arbitration (Mauritius v. United Kingdom), Hearing on Jurisdiction and the Merits, UNCLOS Annex VII Tribunal, Transcript (Day 1) (22 Apr. 2014)

Annex 170	Chagos Marine Protected Area Arbitration (Mauritius v.
	United Kingdom), Hearing on Jurisdiction and the Merits, UNCLOS Annex VII Tribunal, Transcript (Day 3) (24 Apr.
	2014)

Annex 171 Chagos Marine Protected Area Arbitration (Mauritius v. United Kingdom), Hearing on Jurisdiction and the Merits, UNCLOS Annex VII Tribunal, Transcript (Day 8) (5 May 2014)

Annex 172 Non-Aligned Movement, 17th Mid-Term Ministerial Meeting of the Non-Aligned Movement, Final Document: Chagos Archipelago (26-29 May 2014)

Annex 173 Group of 77 and China, Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Group of 77, Declaration: For a New World Order for Living Well (14-15 June 2014)

Annex 174

Annex 177

Annex 178

Annex 179

Annex 175

Assembly of the African Union, 25th Ordinary Session,

Resolution on Chagos Archipelago, Doc. EX.CL/901(XXVII), Assembly/AU/Rev.1(XXV) (14-15 June 2015)

Annex 176

Shabtai Rosenne, The Law and Practice of the International

Court, 1920-1996, Vol. II, Jurisdiction (1997)

(21 Jan. 2016)

Republic of Mauritius, Ministry of Finance & Economic Development, Mauritius in Figures (2016)

U.K. Foreign and Commonwealth Office, "BIOT Resettlement Policy Review: Summary of Responses to Public Consultation"

Group of 77 and China, 38th Annual Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, Ministerial Declaration (26 Sept. 2014)

African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States, Declaration of the 8th Summit of Heads of State and Government of the ACP Group of States: Port Moresby Declaration (31 May-1 June 2016)

Annex 180	United Kingdom, "British Indian Ocean Territory Ordinance No. 1 of 2016: An ordinance to make provision for the expenditure of public funds between 1 April 2016 and 31 March 2017" (30 June 2016)

Annex 181 Group of 77 and China, 14th Session, *Ministerial Declaration*of the Group of 77 and China on the occasion of UNCTAD
XIV, TD/507 (17-22 July 2016)

Annex 182 17th Summit of Heads of State and Government of the NonAligned Movement, Chagos Archipelago, No. NAM 2016/CoB/

DOC.1. Corr.1 (17-18 Sept. 2016)

Annex 183

Group of 77 and China, 40th Annual Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, Ministerial Declaration (23 Sept. 2016)

Annex 184

U.N. General Assembly, 71st Session, Agenda of the seventy-first session of the General Assembly, U.N. Doc. A/71/251 (16 Sept. 2016)

Annex 185

U.K. House of Lords, "Written Statement: Update on the British Indian Ocean Territory", No. HLWS257 (16 Nov. 2016)

Annex 186

Non-Aligned Movement, 17th Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Non-Aligned Movement, Final Document:

Chagos Archipelago (17-18 Sept. 2016)

African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States, 104th Session of the ACP Council of Ministers, Support for the Claim of Sovereignty of Mauritius over the Chagos Archipelago, Decision No. 7/CIV/16 (29-30 Nov. 2016)

Annex 188 Republic of Mauritius, Population and Vital Statistics (Jan.-June 2017) (2017)

Annex 187

Annex 189

Executive Council of the African Union, 30th Ordinary Session, Decision on the 2016 Annual Report of the Chairperson of the AU Commission, Doc. EX.CL/994(XXX) (27 Jan. 2017)

Annex 190	African Union, 28th Session, Resolution on Chagos Archipelago , Doc. EX.CL/994(XXX), Assembly/AU/Res.1 (XXVIII) (30-31 Jan. 2017)
Annex 191	Letter from H.E. Mr Jagdish Koonjul, Ambassador and

Permanent Representative of the Republic of Mauritius to the United Nations, to H.E. Mr Peter Thomson, President of the 71st session of the United Nations General Assembly (1 June 2017)

Annex 192

Letter from H.E. Mr Peter Thomson, President of the 71st session of the United Nations General Assembly, to all Permanent Representatives and Permanent Observers of the United Nations in New York (1 June 2017)

Annex 193

Letter from the Prime Minister of the Republic of Mauritius to the President of the United States (11 July 2017)

Annex 193

Letter from the Prime Minister of the Republic of Mauritius to the President of the United States (11 July 2017)

Annex 194

Chair of the Coordinating Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement, Political Declaration of New York (20 Sept. 2017)

Annex 195 Group of 77 and China, 41st Annual Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, Ministerial Declaration (22 Sept. 2017)

Annex 196 "Chagos Islands (BIOT) All-Party Parliamentary Group", "Statement issued at its 65th meeting on 6 December 2017 by the Chagos Islands (BIOT) All-Party Parliamentary Group on the legal consequences of the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965 to be considered by the International Court of Justice" (6 Dec. 2017)

Annex 197 United Kingdom, "British Indian Ocean Territory: Terrestrial Protected Areas", available at https://biot.gov.io/environment/terrestrial-protected-areas/ (last accessed 3 Jan. 2018)

Annex 198 United Kingdom, "British Indian Ocean Territory:

Governance", available at https://biot.gov.io/governance/ (last accessed 3 Jan. 2018)

Annex 199	U.S. Africa Command, About the Command, available at http://www.africom.mil/about-the-command (last accessed 5
	Jan. 2018)

Annex 200 U.S. Africa Command, Republic of Mauritius, available at http://www.africom.mil/area-of-responsibility/southern-africa/mauritius (last accessed 5 Jan. 2018)

Annex 150 James Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law (2006)

THE GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY LAW LIBRARY

The Creation of States in International Law

SECOND EDITION

JAMES CRAWFORD

SC, FBA, BA, LLB (Adel), DPhil (Oxon), LLD (Cantab) Whewell Professor of International Law, University of Cambridge Former Member of the International Law Commission

CLARENDON PRESS · OXFORD

MAY 22 2006

OXFORD

UNIVERSITY PRESS

Great Clarendon Street, Oxford OX2 6DP Oxford University Press is a department of the University of Oxford. It furthers the University's objective of excellence in research, scholarship, and education by publishing worldwide in

Oxford New York

Auckland Cape Town Dar es Salaam Hong Kong Karachi Kuala Lumpur Madrid Melbourne Mexico City Nairobi New Delhi Shanghai Taipei Toronto

With offices in

Argentina Austria Brazil Chile Czech Republic France Greece Augentina Austria Brazii Cinie Czech Keptione France Greece Guatemala Hungary Italy Japan Poland Portugal Singapore South Korea Switzerland Thailand Turkey Ukraine Vietnam

Oxford is a registered trade mark of Oxford University Press in the UK and in certain other countries

Published in the United States

by Oxford University Press Inc., New York

© James Crawford 2006 The moral rights of the author have been asserted Database right Oxford University Press (maker)

Crown copyright material is reproduced under Class Licence Number C01P0000148 with the permission of OPSI and the Queen's Printer for Scotland

First published 2006

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, without the prior permission in writing of Oxford University Press, or as expressly permitted by law, or under terms agreed with the appropriate reprographics rights organization. Enquiries concerning reproduction outside the scope of the above should be sent to the Rights Department, Oxford University Press, at the address above

You must not circulate this book in any other binding or cover and you must impose the same condition on any acquirer British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data

Data available

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data Data available

Typeset by Newgen Imaging Systems (P) Ltd., Chennai, India Printed in Great Britain on acid-free paper by Antony Rowe Ltd., Chippenham, Wiltshire

ISBN 0-19-826002-4 978-0-19-826002-8

1 3 5 7 9 10 8 6 4 2

plebiscites and the Mandate system, demonstrate the political force of the principle of self-determination in the inter-war period.⁴⁹ Nonetheless there was little general development of the principle before 1945.⁵⁰

(ii) Self-determination under the United Nations Charter

The Charter uses the term self-determination twice: in Article 1(2) (Purposes and Principles) where one of the purposes of the United Nations is stated to be the development of 'friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples', and in Article 55 where the same formula is used to express the general aims of the United Nations in the fields of social and economic development and respect for human rights.⁵¹ By elaborating upon these rather cryptic references, the General Assembly has sought in a vast number of resolutions to define more precisely the content of the principle.

For example, resolution 545(VI)⁵² decided that an article providing that 'All peoples shall have the right of self-determination' would be included in the International Covenants on Human Rights, which were finally adopted in 1966. Common Article 1 of the two Covenants provides as follows:

- 1. All peoples have the right of self-determination; by virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development.
- 2. All peoples may, for their own ends, freely dispose of their natural wealth and resources without prejudice to any obligations arising out of international economic co-operation, based upon the principle of mutual benefit, and international law. In no case may a people be deprived of its own means of subsistence.
- 3. The States Parties to the present Convention, including those having responsibility for the administration of Non-Self-Governing and Trust Territories, shall promote the realization of the right of self-determination and shall respect that right, in conformity with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations.⁵³

⁴⁹ Calogeropoulos-Stratis, Le Droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, 62–86; Hillgruber, Aufnahme neuer Staaten, 173–8 (minority rights guarantees in Poland after 1918).

50 See the quite favourable discussion, de lege ferenda, by Bisschop (1921–2) 2 BY 122, 129–30, and the important early study of Redslob, Le Principe des nationalités, discussed by Berman (1992–3) 106 HLR 1792, 1808–21.

51 See also the Atlantic Charter of 14 August 1941, 204 LNTS 384, which referred to 'the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live.' A proposal by China in 1945 to expand the scope of self-determination was rejected at San Francisco: Bedjaoui in Cot & Pellet (eds), La Charte des Nations Unies, 1062–63.

53 International Carrier Unies, 1062–63.

54 Proposal San Francisco: See John Scott San Francisco: Bedjaoui in Cot & Pellet (eds), La Charte des Nations Unies, 1062–63.

53 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 16 December 1966 (entered into force 3 January 1976), 993 UNTS 3, Art 1; International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 16 December 1966 (entered into force 23 March 1976), 999 UNTS 171, Art 1; adopted by GA res

The Colonial Declaration, clause 2, stated that: 'All peoples have the right to self-determination; by virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development.'54 The principle has also been affirmed by the Security Council.'55

In the Friendly Relations Declaration annexed to resolution 2625 (XXV), the Assembly dealt in the following terms with 'The principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples':

By virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter... all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and every State has the duty to respect this right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter.

The territory of a colony or other non-self-governing territory has, under the Charter, a status separate and distinct from the territory of the State administering it; and such separate and distinct status under the Charter shall exist until the people of the colony or non-self-governing territory have exercised their right of self-determination in accordance with the Charter . . . Every State shall refrain from any action aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity or territorial integrity of any other State or country. ⁵⁶

Of course, the General Assembly is not a legislature. Mostly its resolutions are only recommendations, and it has no capacity to impose new legal obligations on States.⁵⁷ No doubt the Assembly has a measure of discretion as to the way in which it interprets and applies the Charter on matters falling within the scope of its responsibilities, including Chapters XI and XII of the Charter. But ²²⁰⁰A, 16 December 1966 (104–0:0). Common Article 1 was referred to in Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, Advisory Opinion of 9 Jul 2004, ICJ Rep 2004 p 136, 171–2 (para 88). See also Cassese, Self-determination of peoples, 47–62.

⁵⁴ GA res 1514 (XV), 14 December 1960 (89–0:9), Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. For the status of the Declaration see Asamoah, The Legal Significance of the Declarations of the General Assembly, 164–73; Alston (2004) 15 EJIL 457, 478. See also GA res 1541 (XV), 15 December 1960, which Keitner & Reisman describe as 'an authentic explanation of how to grant independence': (2003) 39 Texas ILJ 1, 5–6.

E.g., SC resns 301, 20 October 1971 (Namibia); 377, 22 October 1975 (Western Sahara); 384, December 1975 (Portuguese Timor); 1598, 28 April 2005 (Western Sahara). By contrast SC res
 1483, 22 May 2003, on Iraq, refers to 'sovereignty and territorial integrity' without reference to 'self-determination'.
 ⁵⁶ 24 October 1970 (adopted without vote).

⁵⁷ See further Sloan (1948) 25 BY 1; Johnson (1955–6) 32 BY 97; Higgins, Development, 1–10; Asamoah, The Legal Significance of the Declarations of the General Assembly, 169–73; Falk (1966) 60 AJ 782; Castañeda, The Legal Significance of Resolutions of United Nations Organs, 120–1; Onuf (1970) 64 AJ 349. For a stricter view see Judge Fitzmaurice, diss, Namibia Opinion, ICJ Rep 1971 p 6, 280–1, and in Institut de Droit International. Livre du Centenaire, 268–71. Cf Judge Lauterpacht, sep op, Voting Procedure Case, ICJ Rep 1955 p 67, 116.

the resolutions cited are not merely interpretations of Charter texts. Both references to self-determination in the Charter seem to mean something rather different from the usual understanding of 'self-determination'. That term can refer to the sovereign equality of existing States, and in particular the right of the people of a State to choose its own form of government without external intervention. It can also mean the right of a specific territory (or more correctly its 'people') to choose their own form of government irrespective of the wishes of the rest of the State of which that territory is a part. Pre-1945 international law recognized the first but not the second of these, from which it is said that it did not recognize the right of self-determination.⁵⁸ The Charter, in referring to 'equal rights and self-determination' in Articles 1(2) and 55, seems to be referring to self-determination in this first and uncontroversial sense.⁵⁹ Selfdetermination in the second sense is not mentioned, though it is implicit in Articles 73(b) and 76(b). In proclaiming a general right of self-determination, and in particular of immediate self-determination, the resolutions cited go beyond the terms of the Charter.

But this does not foreclose the issue of general international law. State practice is just as much State practice when it occurs in the context of the General Assembly as in bilateral forms. ⁶⁰ The practice of States in assenting to and acting upon law-declaring resolutions may be of probative importance, in particular where that practice achieves reasonable consistency over a period of time. In Judge Petrèn's words, where a resolution is passed by 'a large majority of States with the intention of creating a new binding rule of law'⁶¹ and is acted upon as such by States generally, their action will have quasi-legislative effect. The problem is one of evidence and assessment. For present purposes such an assessment requires two distinct inquiries: whether there exists any criteria for the determination of territories to which a 'right of self-determination' is to be accorded; and whether in its application to those territories self-determination has been treated as peremptory.

⁵⁸ Parry, in Sørensen, Manual, 1, 19–20.

⁵⁹ At the San Francisco Conference, Committee II/4 had this to say on Art I(2): '[T]he Committee understands that the principle of equal rights of peoples and that of self-determination are two complementary parts of one standard of conduct: that the respect of that principle is a basis for the development of friendly relations and is one of the measures to strengthen universal peace; that an essential element of the principle in question is a free and genuine expression of the will of the people, which avoids cases of the alleged expression of the popular will, such as those used for their own ends by Germany and Italy in later years.' 6 UNCIO 955. See also Kaur (1970) 10 Indian III. 479.

⁶⁰ See Fitzmaurice in Institut de Droit International, Livre du Centenaire 1873–1973, 196, 271–5; Gupta (1986) 23 Int Stud 143; Schwebel in Bos and Siblesz (eds), Essays in Honour of Willem Riphagen, 203; Rosenne, 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law (1992), 632.

⁶¹ Fisheries Jurisdiction Case (Second Phase), ICJ Rep 1974 p 3, 162 (Judge Petrèn).

rights, is to be exercised by the people of the relevant unit without coercion and on a basis of equality. 113

- (5) Self-determination can result either in the independence of the selfdetermining unit as a separate State, or in its incorporation into or association with another State on a basis of political equality for the people of the unit.
- (6) By definition, matters of self-determination are not within the domestic jurisdiction of the metropolitan State.
- (7) Where a self-determination unit is a State, the principle of self-determination is represented by the rule against intervention in the internal affairs of that State, and in particular in the choice of the form of government of the State.

(2) Statehood and the operation of the principle of self-determination

The relation between the legal principle of self-determination and statehood must now be considered. It has been seen already, in situations such as that found in the Congo, that the principle of self-determination will operate to reinforce the effectiveness of territorial units created with the consent of the former sovereign. However, this only holds good where the new unit is itself created consistently with the principle of self-determination. Where, as with the Bantustans in South Africa a local entity is created in an effort to prevent the operation of the principle to the larger unit, different considerations apply. The same principle holds good in cases of secession. The secession of a selfdetermination unit, where self-determination is forcibly prevented by the metropolitan State, will be reinforced by the principle of self-determination, so that the degree of effectiveness required as a precondition to recognition may be substantially less than in the case of secession within a metropolitan unit. The contrast between the cases of Guinea-Bissau and Biafra is marked and can be explained along these lines. As a consequence, the rules relating to intervention in the two cases are, it seems, different. These problems will be elaborated further in Chapter 9.

These are, perhaps, ancillary or peripheral applications of the principle. The question remains whether the principle of self-determination is capable of preventing an effective territorial unit, the creation of which was a violation of self-determination, from becoming a State. Practice in this area is not well developed, but in one case, that of Southern Rhodesia, the problem was squarely raised.

¹¹³ See Johnson, Self-determination with the Community of Nations, and the early classic studies by Wambaugh, A Monograph on Plebiscites; Plebiscites since the World War.

From its unilateral declaration of independence (UDI) on 11 November 1965 until the return of a British governor on 12 December 1979,114 a minority government exercised effective control within the territory of Southern Rhodesia, and, for that period, it was the only government to do so, despite British claims under the Southern Rhodesia Act 1965 and generally. If the traditional tests for independence of a seceding colony were applied, Rhodesia would have been an independent State.¹¹⁵ However, Southern Rhodesia was not recognized by any State as independent, nor was it regarded as a State by the United Nations or any other organization. 116 The UDI was immediately condemned by the General Assembly¹¹⁷ and the Security Council, which decided 'to call upon all States not to recognize this illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia and to refrain from rendering any assistance to this illegal regime.'118 A further Council resolution of 20 November 1965 stated that the declaration of independence had 'no legal validity' and referred to the Smith government as an 'illegal authority'. 119 Partly, at least, on this basis various types of sanction were authorized against Southern Rhodesia. Notwithstanding the effectiveness of the government in Southern Rhodesia, the United Kingdom was regarded as the administering authority of the territory which remained a non-self-governing territory under Chapter XI.

Against this background, three positions are possible: that Rhodesia was a State, and that action against it, so far as it was based on the contrary proposition, was unlawful; that recognition is constitutive, and in view of its non-recognition Rhodesia was not a State; or that the principle of self-determination in this situation prevented an otherwise effective entity from being regarded as a State. In view of the consistent practice referred to, the first position is unacceptable. ¹²⁰ Moreover, the Southern Rhodesian government

¹¹⁴ Slinn (1980) 6 CLB 1038, 1050.

¹¹⁵ Fawcett (1971) 34 MLR 417; Coetzee, The Sovereignty of Rhodesia and the Law of Nations.

¹¹⁶ In 1966 the minority government forwarded communications to the Secretary-General and affirmed a right, as a 'state which is not a Member of the United Nations' to participate in proceedings under Article 32 of the Charter. The Secretary-General stated' that 'the legal status of Southern Rhodesia is that of a Non-Self-Governing Territory under resolution 1747... and Article 32 of the Charter does not apply...' There was no dissent from this view, and the minority government was not invited to participate under Art 32 or otherwise: SCOR 1280th mtg, 18 May 1966, 23. For criticism see Stephen (1973) 67 AJ 479. On the diplomatic isolation of Southern Rhodesia, see Ford, Ian Smith's Rhodesia (dissertation, Harvard, 1989).

¹¹⁷ GA res 2024 (XX), 11 November 1965 (107–2:1 (Fr)). Two States did not participate.

¹¹⁸ SC res 216 (1965), 12 November 1965 (10-0:1 (Fr)), para 2.

¹¹⁹ SC res 217 (1965), 20 November 1965 (10-0:1), para 3.

¹²⁰ To the same effect Higgins (1967) 23 The World Today 94, 98; it was also the view of Harold Wilson, The Labour Government 1964–1970, 966. Contrast Marston (1969) 18 ICLQ 1, 33; Verhoeven, Reconnaissance, 548.

did not itself dissent from the view that the United Kingdom retained authority with respect to its affairs, since it apparently accepted that any settlement of the situation had to be approved and implemented by the United Kingdom (as indeed happened). ¹²¹ The question of recognition has been discussed already, and the conclusion reached that recognition is in principle declaratory. It must be concluded that Southern Rhodesia was not a State because the minority government's declaration of independence was and remained internationally a nullity, as a violation of the principle of self-determination. ¹²² In Fawcett's words:

... to the traditional criteria for the recognition of a régime as a new State must now be added the requirement that it shall not be based upon a systematic denial in its territory of certain civil and political rights, including in particular the right of every citizen to participate in the government of his country, directly or through representatives elected by regular, equal and secret suffrage. This principle was affirmed in the case of Rhodesia by the virtually unanimous condemnation of the unilateral declaration of independence by the world community, and by the universal withholding of recognition of the new régime which was a consequence. It would follow then that the illegality of the rebellion was not an obstacle to the establishment of Rhodesia as an independent State, but that the political basis and objectives of the régime were, and that the declaration of independence was without international effect. 123

In Hillgruber's terms, Rhodesia's claim to statehood was defeated by an 'error at birth'. 124

- 121 For the Pearce Commission Report, see Cmnd 4904 (1972). The Smith Government consented to the Pearce Commission enquiring as to the acceptability of certain proposals as a basis for a settlement; and subsequently accepted a settlement as structured under United Kingdom guidance and involving an explicit acknowledgment that Southern Rhodesia was part of the British constitutional framework. See further Chapter 14.
- The Privy Council in Madzimabamuto v Lardner-Burke [1968] 3 WLR 1229, 1250 did not consider this position, arguing instead that Southern Rhodesia was not a State because the legitimate government was still trying to reassert itself. Cf In re James [1977] 2 WLR 1 (CA); (1977) 81 RGDIP 1189; SC res 423, 14 March 1978.
- 123 (1965–6) 41 BY 103, 112–13, citing the Universal Declaration, the Colonial Declaration and GA res 648 (VII), 10 December 1952. Brownlie regarded the status of Rhodesia as flowing from 'particular matters of fact and law' without further elaboration: Principles (4th edn), 98; cf his later formulation (6th edn), 95. Marshall (1968) 17 ICLQ 1022, 1033 argued that, because Rhodesia remained a monarchy but the Queen refused to act, there was 'no legal entity which can be recognized'. But this is an inadequate explanation: the proclamation of a Republic in 1970 did not alter Rhodesia's international status. Okeke, Controversial Subjects of Contemporary International Law, 88 referred to Fawcett's position with apparent approval but paradoxically concluded that 'Rhodesia' ranks among the entities which are endowed with statehood under international law' (ibid, 104–5).
 - 124 Hillgruber, Aufnahme neuer Staaten, 601. Generally on Rhodesia see ibid, 554–602.

This view was contested by Devine, who moved from a quasi-declaratory¹²⁵ to a firmly constitutive view¹²⁶ of recognition by his consideration of the Rhodesian affair. His position was to some extent vitiated by his misreading of Fawcett's criterion as one of 'good government'.¹²⁷ Good government was not then (and is not now) a criterion for statehood, but Fawcett did not suggest otherwise. Statehood is a predicate for governmental authority, whether exercised well or badly; if badly the State is internationally responsible, e.g., for breaches of fundamental human rights of its citizens; while such actions may delegitimize the government, they do not affect the State as such. Fawcett's position was a more limited one: that where a particular people has a right of self-determination in respect of a territory, no government will be recognized which comes into existence and seeks to control that territory as a State in violation of self-determination.¹²⁸ It may be concluded that an entity may not claim statehood if its creation is in violation of an applicable right to self-determination.

3.3 Entities created by the unlawful use of force129

Article 2 paragraph 4 of the Charter prohibits the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations. This prohibition does not affect the right of self-defence against armed attack under Article 51. These rules concerning the use of force are a clear case of peremptory norms. ¹³⁰ Moreover the principle that territory may not be validly acquired by the use of force is well established. ¹³¹ The principles of State succession do not, it seems,

- 125 [1967] Acta Juridica 39.
- ¹²⁶ [1973] Acta Juridica 1, 142–5; also McDougal and Reisman (1968) 62 AJ 1, 17. Cf Devine (1969) 2 CILSA 454; Richardson (2000) 45 Villanova LR 1091, 1125–6.
 - 127 (1971) 34 MLR 410; cf [1973] Acta Juridica 83-6.
- 128 Devine accepted that UDI was a violation of self-determination in a political sense: [1973] Acta Juridica 67. But he regarded self-determination as 'too controversial, unaccepted and vague to be used by the Rhodesians as a shield or by anyone else as a sword against them': ibid, 77. Cf Devine (1971) 34 MLR 415, and Fawcett's reply, ibid, 417. On the so-called 'failed States' see further pp 719–23.
- The literature on statehood and the use of force remains sparse. There is a characteristic contribution by Baty (1926–7) 36 Yale LJ 966 (based on the old regime of rules relating to the use of force). The relation between State extinction and the use of force has been more extensively discussed: see Chapter 17.
- ¹³⁰ Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, Arts 52 and 53. Article 52 was reaffirmed in the Icelandic Fisheries Case (First Phase), ICJ Rep 1973 p 3, 19.
- 131 Whiteman, 5 Digest 874–965 and authorities there cited. See also Case Concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina resolution in more-or-less common form, '[r]ecognizes the legitimacy of the struggle by the peoples under colonial rule to exercise their right to self-determination and independence and invites all States to provide material and moral assistance to the national liberation movements in colonial Territories.'153 Resolution 2795 (XXVI) ('Question of Territories under Portuguese Administration'), by clause 13

[r]equest[ed] all States... in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, to render to the peoples of the Territories under Portuguese domination, in particular the population in the liberated areas of those Territories, all the moral and material assistance necessary to continue their struggle for the restoration of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.¹⁵⁴

Resolutions in this form request what would otherwise be intervention against the established government in civil wars. Has the rule of non-intervention in civil wars ceased to apply in the case of colonial wars? Certainly that has been the contention of many Third World governments. For present purposes, however, the lawfulness of military assistance or civil aid to insurgents in non-self-governing or other self-determination territories is of peripheral importance. What is clear is that the receipt of such assistance is not regarded as relevant where the local unit achieves effective self-government by military or other means. The fact that large amounts of aid were given to the PAIGC in Guinea-Bissau did not prevent general recognition of Guinea-Bissau as a State prior to Portuguese recognition. 156

(ii) Military intervention to procure self-determination

Where on the other hand the emergence of local self-government in a self-determination unit is the result not of insurgency but of external military intervention, the situation is quite different. With this situation must be considered the fourth case mentioned above; that is, the emergence of an effective self-governing entity as a result of military intervention in violation of self-determination. Three possibilities exist. First, it may be that the effectiveness of the emergent entity prevails, so that its illegality of origin—however ¹⁵³ GA res 2105(XX), 20 December 1965 (74–6:15).

¹⁵⁴ GA res 2795(XXVI), 10 December 1971 (105–8:5).

¹⁵⁵ For discussion of this view in the General Assembly see Dugard in Orkin (ed), Sanctions Against Apartheid, 113.

¹⁵⁶ On national liberation movements generally, see Verwey (1981) 75 AJ 69; Wilson, International Law and the Use of Force by National Liberation Movements, esp chs 5 and 6; Gandolfi, Les mouvements de liberation nationale; Brietzke (1994) 13 Wisc ILJ 1. On SWAPO see Theodoropoulos (1979) 26 Africa Today 39; Ginther (1982) 32 ÖZöRV 131.

serious—will not impede recognition as a State. Secondly, it may be that in both cases the illegality of origin should be regarded as paramount in accordance with the maxim ex injuria non oritur jus. Or thirdly, it may be that, in the self-determination situation, the status of the local entity and the legality of the use of force ought to be regarded as separate issues so that the illegality of the intervention should not prejudice the pre-existing right of the local unit to self-determination.

Earlier practice in the cases of Hyderabad and Goa was equivocal, given the character of those post-colonial situations. They certainly showed the conflicts of political interest in situations of this type, which threaten to overwhelm considerations of principle. On the other hand, many areas of State practice that are in principle regulated by international law are also politicized, sometimes highly so. Moreover, there do exist accepted principles that regulate the legal effects of State conduct in closely related areas. For example, if State personality is preserved despite effective but illegal annexation by force (Ethiopia, Czechoslovakia, Albania, Baltic States, Kuwait), why cannot statehood not be denied to an entity created by external illegal force? If the rule regulating the use of force in international relations is sufficiently important to outweigh the principle of effectiveness in the one situation, there is no reason why it should not have a similar effect in the other situation. Equally if a State cannot acquire territory by the use of force, it should not be able to achieve the same result in practice by fomenting, and then supporting, insurrection.¹⁵⁷ This was an important factor in the Manchurian crisis, although, as we have seen, the lack of independence of 'Manchukuo' enabled the situation to be dealt with, at least in form, within the structure of the legal rules deriving from the principles of effectiveness and de facto independence.

Analysis of this problem must then centre on an assessment of two cases, contrasting in their outcome: Bangladesh and the putative Turkish State in northern Cyprus.

Briefly the situation in Bangladesh was as follows. 158 East Pakistan, a part of the geographically divided State of Pakistan created at partition in 1947, had suffered relatively severe and systematic discrimination from the central government based in Islamabad. However, in December of 1970 elections were held throughout Pakistan for a constituent Assembly. East Pakistan elected 167 Awami League representatives out of a total of 169 seats allocated to it. The Awami League thus had an absolute majority in the 313-seat National Assembly. The League's leader was Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, and its programme was based on provincial autonomy. However, the Assembly was indefinitely suspended on 1 March 1971. On 25 March 1971 the central government instigated a period of martial rule in East Pakistan, which involved acts of repression and even possibly genocide and caused some ten million Bengalis to seek refuge in India. The Awami League proclaimed the independence of Bangladesh on 10 April 1971 but, although it retained the support of the people of East Pakistan it was reduced to a form of guerrilla warfare against the occupying forces. On 3 December 1971, large-scale war broke out between India and Pakistan on both eastern and western borders, and lasted until 17 December when the Pakistan army in East Bengal surrendered, and India declared a unilateral ceasefire on the western border. Meanwhile India and Bhutan had recognized Bangladesh on 6 and 7 December respectively. The Awami League substantially controlled East Bengal very shortly after the ceasefire, with the assistance of Indian troops. The continued presence of those troops was not regarded as sufficiently important to preclude recognition of the new State. Twenty-eight states had recognized Bangladesh de jure by 4 February 1972, and a further five states had extended de facto recognition. Recognition by Pakistan was, however, delayed until 22 February 1974. 159

¹⁵⁷ Baty (1926-7) 36 Yale LJ 966, 979-82; Hsu, 1949 ILC Ybk 112-13.

¹⁵⁸ There is a useful though hardly impartial study by Chowdhury, The Genesis of Bangladesh. The factual material presented by Chowdbury is largely corroborated in ICJ Review no 8 (June 1972), 23. The best analysis is that by Salmon, in Multitudo legum, vol I, 467. See also Franck and Rodley (1972) 2 Israel YBHR 142; Nanda (1972) 66 AJ 321; Franck and Rodley (1973) 67 AJ 275; Salzberg (1973) 27 Int Org 115–28; Dugard (1987) 75–6.

It is clear that Indian intervention was decisive in effecting the emergence of Bangladesh. There was substantial local support for autonomy or, if that could not be obtained, for independence: there was also a reasonably substantial local insurgency. But there can be no doubt that Indian intervention was the dominant factor in the success of the independence movement. Yet Bangladesh, despite Indian intervention, was rapidly and widely recognized as a State. ¹⁶⁰ Indian intervention was criticized by many governments as a violation of the Charter, ¹⁶¹ but that illegality was not regarded as derogating from the status of East Bengal, or as affecting the propriety of recognition. Indeed, not even the fact that Indian troops remained in Bangladesh for a time was regarded as detracting from independence, despite the presumption against independence in such circumstances which has been consistently applied elsewhere. ¹⁶²

The question whether East Bengal in 1971 was a self-determination unit thus becomes important. If not, or if recognition was given simply on the basis of effectiveness without regard to the legality of Indian intervention or to any ^{159 (1974) 78} RGDIP 1171-4. 160 Salmon, 'Naissance et Reconnaissance' 478-9.

Okeke, Controversial Subjects of International Law, 142–57.
 Cf [1974] Rbdi 348–50.

denial of right to the people of East Bengal, then there would appear to be no criterion of legality regulating the creation of States by the use of external illegal force. 163

East Pakistan was not at any time after 1947 formally a non-self-governing territory. It would have been classified as 'metropolitan' and so outside the ambit both of Chapter XI of the Charter and (but for exceptional circumstances) the customary right of self-determination. However, its status, at least in 1971, was not so clear, for several reasons. In the first place, East Bengal qualified as a Chapter XI territory in 1971, if one applies the principles accepted by the General Assembly in 1960 as relevant in determining the matter.¹⁶⁴ According to Principle IV of resolution 1541 (XV), a territory is prima facie non-self-governing if it is both geographically separate and ethnically distinct from the 'country administering it'. East Pakistan was both geographically separate and ethnically distinct from West Pakistan: moreover by 1971 the relation between West and East Pakistan, both economically and administratively, could fairly be described as one which 'arbitrarily place[d] the latter in a position or status of subordination'. 165 It is scarcely surprising then that the Indian representative described East Bengal as, in reality, a non-self-governing territory. 166 In any case, and this point is perhaps as cogent, it is hard to conceive of any non-colonial situation more apt for the description 'carence de souverainete than East Bengal after 25 March 1971. Genocide is the clearest case of abuse of sovereignty, and this factor, together with the territorial and political coherence of East Bengal in 1971, qualified East Bengal as a selfdetermination unit within the third, exceptional, category discussed above, even if it was not treated as a non-self-governing territory. The view that East Bengal had, in March 1971, a right to self-determination has received juristic support.¹⁶⁷ Moreover, the particular, indeed the extraordinary, circumstances of East Bengal in 1971 to 1972 were undoubtedly important factors in the decisions of other governments to recognize, rather than oppose, the secession: by its conduct the Pakistan army had disqualified itself, and the State, from any further role in East Bengal. The comparison with international opposition to secession in other cases is marked, as shown in Chapter 9.

¹⁶³ This position is suggested by the Restatement (Third) (1987), §202, Reporters' Note 5, 81–2: 'In most instances the issue is not subject to authoritative determination.'

GA res 1541 (XV), 15 December 1960 (89-2:21). India and Pakistan both voted in favour.

¹⁶⁵ GA res 1541 (XV), Annex, Principle V. See Chapter 14.

¹⁶⁶ SCOR 1606th mtg, 4 December 1971, para 185.

¹⁶⁷ Chowdhury, Genesis, 188 ff; Okeke, Controversial Subjects, 131–41; Mani (1972) 12 Indian JIL 83; Nawaz (1971) 11 Indian JIL 251; Nanda (1972), 66 AJ 321; cf Nanda (1972) 49 Denver LJ 53. Contrast (1972) ICJ Review no 8, 51–2.

Thus, Salmon, after a cautious and reasoned assessment, concludes:

La même idée qui si l'acte de force créant le Bangla-Desh fut illicite, le résultat ne l'est pas—car il fait suite à une autre violence qui empêchait ce peuple à disposer de lui-même—explique que n'ont point joué ici les règles qui interdisent de reconnaître une situation lorsque la reconnaissance constitue une intervention dans les affaires intérieures des autres États ou lorsqu'il s'agit d'une acquisition territoriale obtenue par la menace ou l'emploi de la force. 168

The situation of Bangladesh may be compared with that in Cyprus. In Cyprus, too, external intervention was the decisive factor in establishing a new local administration, effective in a certain territorial sphere. Other aspects of the case, however, were in sharp contrast to Bangladesh, including assessments of the legality of the situation as it evolved.

A set of agreements reached in 1959 and 1960 between the administering power, Great Britain, and the two constituent communities in Cyprus, Greek and Turkish, included a constitution for the Republic of Cyprus and provided for its independence. Greece and Turkey were also parties. A 'Treaty of Guarantee' designated Great Britain, Greece and Turkey 'guaranteeing powers' undertaking to maintain the constitutional structures of Cyprus as set out in 1960. ¹⁶⁹ The Constitution established institutions designed to assure the rights of the Greeks and Turks as separate communities within the State. ¹⁷⁰ It guaranteed the territorial integrity of Cyprus and prohibited '[t]he integral or partial union of Cyprus with any other State or the separatist independence' of any part of the republic. ¹⁷¹

The arrangement prescribed in the 1960 Constitution quickly proved unworkable. 172 Inter-communal frictions paralyzed institutions at the ¹⁶⁸ Salmon, 'Naissance et Reconnaissance', 490.

¹⁶⁹ Treaty of Guarantee, 16 August 1960, 382 UNTS 475, app B Art IV provided that '[i]n the event of a breach of the provisions of the present Treaty, Greece, Turkey and the United Kingdom undertake to consult together with respect to the representations or measures necessary to ensure observance of those provisions.' In so far as common or concerted action may not prove possible, each of the three guaranteeing powers reserves the right to take action with the sole aim of re-establishing the state of affairs created by the present Treaty.'

¹⁷⁰ See Republic of Cyprus Constitution, app D; 382 UNTS 5475; 397 UNTS 5712. Among these structures were two communal legislative chambers; separate electoral rolls for Greeks and Turks; and a House of Representatives in which a simple majority of delegates of either community could veto legislative initiatives. See Republic of Cyprus Constitution, Arts 61, 62, 67, 77. Articles 87 and 89 defined extensive competences belonging to the Communal Chambers.

¹⁷¹ Constitution, Art 185.

¹⁷² Ehrlich (1966) 18 Stanford LR 1021, 1040–7; Wippman (1996) 31 Texas ILJ 141, 146–7. Writers after the fact said that a breakdown had been inevitable: Anthias and Ayres in Race and Class, 70; Hitchins, Cyprus, 49. But see Ehrlich (1966) 18 Stanford LR 1021, 1040; Ehlrich, Cyprus 1958–1967, 36–60. Necatigil, The Cyprus Question and the Turkish Position in International Law (2nd edn), 20–6.

national level, ¹⁷³ and by 1963 the Turkish community existed within its own enclaves, effectively self-administering. ¹⁷⁴ On 15 July 1974, the president of Cyprus, Archbishop Makarios III, was overthrown by Greek Cypriot national guardsmen supported by the government of Greece, and Nikos Sampson, an advocate of 'enosis' (union of Cyprus with Greece) was declared president. ¹⁷⁵ Invoking Article IV of the Treaty of Guarantee, Turkey deployed military forces to the north of Cyprus in July and August 1974. ¹⁷⁶ The situation was deplored by the General Assembly, which called for the withdrawal of all foreign forces. ¹⁷⁷ Nonetheless Turkish Cypriots consolidated their administration in the north of the island under the aegis of the Turkish army.

The northern administration declared a Turkish Federated State of Cyprus on 13 February 1975.¹⁷⁸ This was followed on 15 November 1983 with the declaration of an independent Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus (TRNC). Security Council resolution 541 of 18 November 1983 'deplore[d] the declaration of the Turkish Cypriot authorities of the purported secession of part of the Republic of Cyprus' and called upon 'all States not to recognize any Cypriot State other than the Republic of Cyprus'. ¹⁷⁹ Turkey was and remains the only State to extend recognition to the TRNC, a measure condemned by the Security Council. ¹⁸⁰ There were substantial refugee movements, expelled Greek Cypriots moving south, Turkish Cypriots to the north. ¹⁸¹ Thus a putative State emerged in northern Cyprus with the assistance of foreign military intervention.

- ¹⁷³ The Greek community in 1963 proposed a set of thirteen changes to the constitution of Cyprus, but these were rejected by the Turkish community on the grounds that such amendment would violate Art 182(1) of the constitution, forbidding changes to certain 'basic Articles' of the constitution. On the 1963 proposals, see Rossides (1991) 17 Syracuse JILC 21, 32 n48.
- 174 The Secretary-General in his report to the Security Council of 11 March 1965 noted the physical separation of the two communities. S/6228, paras 50–5.
- 177 GA res 3212, 1 November 1974 (117:0:0), para 2: 'urg[ing] the speedy withdrawal of all foreign armed forces and foreign military presence and personnel from the Republic of Cyprus and the cessation of all foreign interference in its affairs.'
 178 SC res 376, 12 March 1975.
- ¹⁷⁹ SC res 541, 18 November 1983 (13–1:1) (Pakistan against, Jordan abstaining). This was reiterated in resolution 550 of 11 May 1984.
- ¹⁸⁰ SC res 550, para 2, 11 May 1984 (13–1:1) (Pakistan against, US abstaining). For the Turkish position on recognition and diplomatic relations, see Statement of Foreign Minister, 15 November 1983, A/38/602, 23 November 1983.
- ¹⁸¹ Necatigil indicates that 200,000 Greeks left for the South. Necatigil, Cyprus Question (2nd edn), 136. An estimated 37,000 to 65,000 Turkish Cypriots resettled in the North: Pegg, International Society and the De Facto State, 98–9. See also Cooper and Berdal (1992) 35 Survival 118, 120; McDonald, The Problem of Cyprus (1988–9) Adelphi Papers, no 234, 10–11; Oberling, Road to Bellapais, 63–5. Provision for population exchange was made early in the process. See Population Exchange Agreement, 2 August 1975, S/11789.

There were important differences between the situation of Bangladesh and Turkish Cyprus. Though never formally declared a non-self-governing territory, the geographic separation of Bangladesh from the administering State, its ethnic distinctness and the arbitrary subordination of the territory to Pakistani rule built the case for its special status. Gross abuses amounting to genocide or crimes against humanity effectively made the separation irreversible. Moreover, the geography of the two cases was very different. The Turkish Cypriot community, though preponderantly in the north of the island, existed in the south as well, and members of the Greek community were to be found throughout Cyprus.

But the distinctions are not so plain as to speak for themselves. Unlike Bangladesh, Cyprus possessed domestic constitutional instruments formally acknowledging special rights in the seceding community (supported internationally by the guarantee of the former administering power, Britain, as well as by Greece and Turkey). The breakdown of any process within the framework of the 1960 institutions raised serious questions as to whether the Turkish Cypriot community could maintain its identity and rights.

The two dominant considerations, however, were the international guarantee of the unity of Cyprus, a condition of independence, and the external use of force, avowedly pursuant to a vague reservation of rights under Article IV of the Treaty of Guarantee but in fact aimed at partition. The TRNC declaration of independence of 15 November 1983 was clearly expressed to establish a new State on territory once part of the Republic of Cyprus. According to Necatigil:

The aim of the Turkish Cypriots in declaring, on 15 November 1983, an independent state, i.e., the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus, was to assert their status as cofounders of the future federal republic of Cyprus and to ensure that the sovereignty of that republic will derive from the existing two states joining together as equals to form the future federal republic.¹⁸²

The declared openness of Turkish Cypriot negotiators to some form of federal republic may imply an ambiguity in the nature of the TRNC. 183

¹⁸² Necatigil, Cyprus Question, 203–4, 318. See also Letter dated 16 November 1983 from the Permanent Representative of Turkey to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, A/38/602, 23 November 1983 ('independence does not necessarily mean that the island will remain divided forever and that they are determined not to unite with any State, unless it be in a federation with the Greek Cypriots').

¹⁸³ According to the Secretary-General's Set of Ideas, agreed to in August 1992: [The process] will result in a new partnership and a new constitution for Cyprus that will govern the relations of the two communities on a federal basis that is bi-communal as regards the constitutional aspects and bi-zonal as regards the territorial aspects...The overall framework agreement ensures that the Cyprus

Bangladesh, by contrast, was no mere legal feint toward statehood; in light of the events that had occurred, no federal solution was remotely practical. It was also significant that the putative Turkish Cypriot State continued to depend upon the presence of Turkish military forces for its existence. The use of force to change the legal status of territory is excluded by a peremptory norm of general international law, and applies to all uses of force in international relations (including in self-defence)—a fortiori where the use of force is of doubtful legality. Thus States, the Security Council,184 the General Assembly,185 the Council of Europe, 186 the Commonwealth, 187 the European Union, 188 the European Court of Justice¹⁸⁹ and the European Court of Human Rights¹⁹⁰ settlement is based on a State of Cyprus with a single sovereign and international personality and a single citizenship.' Set of ideas on an overall framework agreement on Cyprus, Annex, paras 2, 4, S/24472, 21 August 1992.

¹⁸⁴ See, e.g., SC resns 365, 13 Dec 1974, para 1; 367, 12 March 1975, para 2 ('Regret[ing] the unilateral decision of 13 February 1975 declaring that a part of the Republic of Cyprus would become "a Federated Turkish State" '); 541, 18 Nov 1983, paras 2, 7 ('Consider[ing] the declaration [of independence of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus"] invalid and call[ing] for its withdrawal' and '[c]all[ing] upon all States not to recognize any Cypriot State other than the Republic of Cyprus'); 544, 15 Dec 1983 (noting agreement of 'Government of Cyprus' that extension of the UNFICYP mandate was necessary); 550, 11 May 1984, para 3 ('Reiterat[ing] the call upon all States not to recognize the purported State of the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus" ').

185 See, e.g., GA res 3212 (XXIX), 1 Nov 1974, para 1 (calling on all States to respect the territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus).

186 See CE Parl Ass rec 974(83), 9 Dec 1983 ('Deploring the unilateral proclamation... of the secession of a part of the Republic of Cyprus'). The Committee of Ministers 'decided that it continued to regard the government of the Republic of Cyprus as the sole legitimate government of Cyprus'; quoted in Cyprus v Turkey, 35 EHRR 30, 762 (120 ILR 12, 23-24, para 14).

187 The Commonwealth Heads of Government indicated in a communiqué at New Delhi, 23-9 Nov 1983: '[The] Heads of Government condemned the declaration by the Turkish Cypriot authorities issued on 15 November 1983 to create a secessionist state in northern Cyprus, in the area under foreign occupation. Fully endorsing Security Council Resolution 541, they denounced the declaration as legally invalid and reiterated the call for its non-recognition and immediate withdrawal. They further called upon all States not to facilitate or in any way assist the illegal secessionist entity. They regarded this illegal act as a challenge to the international community and demanded the implementation of the relevant UN Resolutions on Cyprus.' Quoted in Loizidou v Turkey, ECHR (1997) 23 EHRR 513, 521 (Application 15318/89), Judgment of 18 Dec 1996, para 23.

¹⁸⁸ See, e.g., Common Statement of the 10 States Members of the European Community on the situation in the Republic of Cyprus issued in Athens on 16 Nov 1983, S/16155, Annex, 17 Nov 1983 ('continu[ing] to regard the Government of President Kyprianou as the sole legitimate Government of the Republic of Cyprus'); European Parliament resolution on state of accession negotiations with Cyprus, 5 Sept 2001, OJ 2002 C72E/77 (indicating that there would be 'no question either of accession for two Cypriot States or of accession of the northern part of the island upon Turkish accession'). 189 Rv Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, ex parte SP Anastasiou (Pissouri) Ltd and others

[1994] ECR I-3087, Judgment of 5 July 1994, paras 40, 47.

190 Loizidou v Turkey (1997) 23 EHRR 513, 526, 527, paras 42, 43: '[I]t is only the Cypriot government which is recognised internationally as the government of the Republic of Cyprus in the have consistently declined to accept the statehood of the TRNC.¹⁹¹ United Nations plans for a resolution of the Cyprus conflict have had as their premiss the continued existence of a single federal State.¹⁹² Cyprus was admitted to the European Union on 1 May 2004, although the acquis communautaire does not apply to the north pending a resolution of the conflict.¹⁹³

(2) Conclusions

The position, consistent with general principle and with a now substantial body of practice, is as follows.

- (1) The use of force against a self-determination unit by a metropolitan State is a use of force against one of the purposes of the United Nations, and a violation of Article 2 paragraph 4 of the Charter. Such a violation cannot effect the extinction of the right.
- (2) The annexation of a self-determination unit by external force in violation of self-determination also does not extinguish the right, except, possibly, in the controversial case of the 'colonial enclave', where the annexing State is the enclaving State and where the local population acquiesces in the annexation.
- (3) Assistance by States to local insurgents in a self-determination unit may be permissible, but in any event, local independence will not be impaired by the receipt of such external assistance (unless, at least, the continuation of independence relies upon continued external military assistance).

context of diplomatic and treaty relations and the working of international organisations'; and 'it is evident from international practice and the various, strongly worded resolutions... that the international community does not regard the "TRNC" as a State under international law and that the Republic of Cyprus has remained the sole legitimate Government of Cyprus.' See also Cyprus v Turkey (2002) 35 EHRR 30 (965), para 61: 'The Court reiterates the conclusion reached in its Loizidou judgment (merits) that the Republic of Cyprus has remained the sole legitimate government of Cyprus.'

- ¹⁹¹ For the response of English courts see Hesperides Hotels Ltd v Aegean Turkish Holidays Ltd [1977] 3 WLR 656; R v Minister of Agriculture, ex parte S.P. Anastasiou (Pissouri) Ltd, High Court, Queen's Bench Division, (1994) 100 ILR 245.
- ¹⁹² On the unsuccessful 2004 Annan Plan for the reunification of Cyprus see Palley, International Relations Debacle. On Cyprus see further Chapter 5.
- 193 See Protocol No 10 on Cyprus, 2003 Act of Accession, OJ L 236, 23 September 2003. Article 1 of the Protocol suspends the acquis 'in those areas of the Republic of Cyprus in which the Government of the Republic of Cyprus does not exercise effective control' (Art 1(1)). Under Art 1(2), it is for the Council to decide on the withdrawal of the suspension referred to in Art 1(1). The Protocol represents recognition by EU Member States that accession by the Republic of Cyprus to the EU gave competence to the Community to legislate for Cyprus as a whole with the consent of the Government of the Republic of Cyprus (decisions under the Protocol require unanimity).

(4) An entity claiming statehood but created during a period of foreign military occupation will be presumed not to be independent. 194

(5) Where the local unit is a self-determination unit, the presumption against independence in the case of foreign military intervention may be displaced or dispelled. There is no prohibition against recognition of a new State which has emerged in such a situation. The normal criteria for statehood—based on a qualified effectiveness—apply.

(6) On the other hand, where a State illegally intervenes in and foments the secession of part of a metropolitan State other States are under the same duty of non-recognition as in the case of illegal annexation of territory.¹⁹⁵ An entity created in violation of the rules relating to the use of force in such circumstances will not be regarded as a State.

3.4 Statehood and fundamental human rights

(1) General considerations

The principle of self-determination is itself an aspect of human rights law, but, apart from this, there is so far in modern practice no suggestion that as regards statehood itself, there exists any criterion requiring regard for fundamental human rights. ¹⁹⁶ The cases are numerous of governments violating fundamental norms of human rights; there is no case where such violations have called in question statehood itself. Thus, in connection with South Africa, it was said in the Third Committee:

The issues of racism and self-determination are related. The South African system is particularly obnoxious because racism is institutionalized in the apartheid system; and because the majority of South Africa's people are denied any effective defined. But neither were they equivalent to colonial protectorates. Their status was analogous to that of international protectorates.²²² By 1947 the Crown had evidently changed its mind, because its position then was inconsistent with the view that the States were merely municipal units of the Empire. Despite 'paramountcy', the Indian States were regarded as free to accede to India or Pakistan or neither: no constitutional authority was thought to exist to force such accession, although the British Government advised in favour of that course.²²³ The Indian Independence Act 1947, section 7 merely provided for the 'lapse' of suzerainty over the Indian States, so that it was arguable that those States which had not acceded were rendered fully independent.

¹⁹⁴ See Knox v Palestine Liberation Organization, 306 F Supp 2d 424, 437 (SDNY, 2004): '[under] international law, a state will maintain its statehood during a belligerent occupation... but it would be anomalous indeed to hold that a state may achieve sufficient independence and statehood in the first instance while subject to and laboring under the hostile military occupation of a separate sovereign' (emphasis in original); Efrat Ungar v Palestine Liberation Organization, 402 F 3d 274, 290 (1st Cir, Selya, CJ): 'Nor does the fact that the Egyptians and Jordanians occupied and controlled a significant portion of the defined territory immediately following the end of the mandate aid the defendants' cause. To the contrary, the fact is a stark reminder that no state of Palestine could have come into being at that time.'

¹⁹⁵ Cf Restatement (3rd), Foreign Relations Law of the United States, $202(2): 'A State has an obligation not to recognize or treat as a state an entity that has attained the qualifications for statehood as a result of a threat or use of armed force in violation of the United Nations Charter.'

¹⁹⁶ Fawcett (1965–6) 41 BY 103, 112 referred to the Rhodesian case as a 'systematic denial of civil and political rights.' It is submitted that the relevant rubric is self-determination.

The most important such case was that of Hyderabad, which had been in the 'most independent' class of native States prior to 1947. Its full independence was shortlived: Hyderabad was blockaded, invaded and annexed by India in September 1948. While hostilities were in progress, the Security Council accepted the Nizam's complaint of aggression as an agenda item and admitted his representative to the deliberations, apparently under Article 35(2).²²⁴ Following Hyderabad's surrender, it took no specific action.²²⁵

(3) Autonomy and residual sovereignty

Autonomous areas are regions of a State, usually possessing some ethnic or cultural distinctiveness, which have been granted separate powers of internal administration, to whatever degree, without being detached from the State of which they are part. For such status to be relevant for the purposes of this study it must be established as internationally binding upon the central authorities (as for example with the Memel Territory, discussed in Chapter 5). In such cases the local entity may have a certain status, although since that does not normally involve any foreign relations capacity, it is usually very limited. Until ²²² Great Britain had no power to act internally to carry out international agreements: ILO Off Bull vol XII, 172–3, cited by Kamanda, Study of Legal Status, 203–4. British cases on the States rest upon a distinction between those States which were separate from the Raj, the relationships with which were non-justiciable (e.g., Sec of State in Council for India v Kamachee (1859) 7 Moo Ind App 476; Rajah Salig Ram v Sec of State (1872) LR IA Supp 119; Ex-Rajah of Coorg v East India Co (1860) 29 Beav 300), and those States that had been taken over by the Raj, the relationships with which were municipally justiciable (e.g., Forester v Sec of State (1872) LR IA Supp 10).

²²³ 439 HC Deb cols 2451-2 (10 July 1947); 452 HC Deb cols 1360-2 (23 June 1948).

²²⁴ SCOR 3rd yr Supp, Sept 1948, 5 (S/986); Higgins, Development, 51–2; Eagleton (1950) 44 AJ 277; contra Das (1949) 43 AJ 57.

²²⁵ SCOR 3rd yr No 109, 357th mtg. 16 September 1948: Eagleton, 277–81, 294–9. See also USFR 1948/V, 360–1, 373, 411, 417. On the Kashmir dispute see Gupta, Jammu and Kashmir; Mendelson (1996) 36 Indian JIL 1. On Hyderabad, Franck (1984) 78 AJ 811, 815; Popper (1986) 80 ASIL Proc 348, 360.

an advanced stage is reached in the progress towards self-government such areas are not States. Two examples—Tibet and Oman—illustrate some of the legal problems of this type of dependency.

The status of Tibet has long been uncertain and became a matter of some controversy with the Chinese 'invasion' of the territory in 1951.²²⁶ Tibet had been said to be under the 'suzerainty' of China since the eighteenth century: the incidents of the relationship had remained obscure and fluctuated with the power of each side to impose or escape from its rights or obligations. By 1910 the weakness of central government in China made the separate independence of Tibet at least arguable. 227 In a treaty of 1904 with Great Britain, Tibet undertook not to dispose of territory, not to pledge its revenue and not to grant concessions to, or admit representatives of, any 'foreign Power' without British consent.²²⁸ That Treaty was confirmed by a Convention of 1906 between Great Britain and China, the terms of which confirm that the phrase 'foreign Power' in the 1904 Treaty was not intended to include China.²²⁹ This was further confirmed by the Russo-British Treaty of 1907 relating to Persia, Afghanistan and Tibet, by which the parties, 'reconnaissant les droits suzerains de la Chine sur le Thibet', agreed to respect the territorial integrity of Tibet, not to interfere in its internal affairs, and not to negotiate with Tibet except through the Chinese Government as intermediary.²³⁰ The Agreement of 1908 amending Trade Regulations in Tibet between Great Britain, China and Tibet, was concluded with the 'representative' of the 'High Authorities of Tibet' acting 'under the directions of the Chinese plenipotentiary'.231 In 1910, Tibet possessed a considerable degree of de facto independence but this was conditioned by Chinese power with respect to Tibetan foreign affairs, and by the claims of China (largely unexercised) to some greater degree of control. In 1911 the Manchu dynasty collapsed: with it, it has been argued, collapsed also the claims of China over Tibet, since these were based on a personal allegiance under feudal law.²³² In the event neither China nor Great Britain thought that this was the case.

²²⁶ See Lamb, The McMahon Line; Rubin (1968) 35 China Q 110; International Commission of Jurists, Question of Tibet; Alexandrowicz (1954) 48 AJ 265; van Walt van Praag, The Status of Tibet; McCorquodale and Orosz (eds), Tibet: The Position In international Law.

Alexandrowicz (1954) 48 A/265, 275; International Commission of Jurists, Question of Tibes, 85.
 98 BFSP 148, Art 9. For the circumstances surrounding the conclusion of the Treaty see International Commission of Jurists, Question Of Tibet, 78–91. 229 99 BFSP 171, Art III. 230 100 BFSP 555. But of McCorquodale and Orosz, Tibet, 147: 'The relationship of a tributary—sometimes contended for by China—necessarily implies the separate identities of the tributary and the dominant state. It is therefore inconsistent with a claim that Tibet was an integral part of China in the period prior to 1911.'

¹⁰¹ BFSP 170. Only Great Britain and China were to ratify the Agreement.

²³² Alexandrowicz (1954) 48 AJ 265, 275 270.

The crucial document of the period was the Simla Convention of 1914, intended to be signed by China, Tibet and Great Britain but because of disagreement over boundaries signed by the latter two only. The Simla Convention was not binding upon China but it is the best evidence of what the negotiating parties thought of Tibet's status at the time—or, perhaps, of what they hoped Tibet could successfully claim. Article 2 stated: 'The Governments of Great Britain and China recognizing that Tibet is under the suzerainty of China, and recognizing also the autonomy of Outer Tibet, engage to respect the territorial integrity of the country, and to abstain from interference in the administration of Outer Tibet ...'. ²³³ Thus despite various possibilities, ²³⁴ Tibet was not in 1914 regarded as independent, even though at least part of the country possessed substantial autonomy. This has always been the British view, ²³⁵ and it was also the Chinese view in 1951. ²³⁶ The invasion of Tibet was thus not a case of invasion of an independent State, although Chinese actions in Tibet after 1951 may be criticized on other grounds. ²³⁷

A rather similar controversy surrounded the status of Oman vis-à-vis the Sultan of Muscat and Oman.²³⁸ The hinterland had long been an autonomous area with a separate government owing little allegiance to the Sultan at Muscat. The situation was affirmed by the secret Treaty of Sib of 25 September 1920, concluded through British mediation between the Sultan and 'the people of Oman'.²³⁹ That agreement provided that the Sultan would not grant asylum to ²³³ Simla Convention, 3 July 1914, 220 CTS 144, 144–5. The International Commission of Jurists, 85 concluded that 'the events of 1911–1912 mark the re-emergence of Tibet as a fully sovereign state, independent in fact and law of Chinese control.' It is true that the signatories in 1914 deleted from the draft agreement the declaration that 'Thibet forms part of Chinese territory' (ibid, 140). But if Tibet was not part of China in 1914 it is difficult to understand why Art 2 was allowed to stand between two parties in whose interests it was that Tibet should be as independent as possible. See, generally, Goldstein, A History of Modern Tibet, 1913–1951.

²³⁴ On the disputed declaration of independence of 1912 see Rubin (1965) 59 AJ 586; (1966) 60 AJ 812; McCabe (1996) 60 AJ 369. The matter is also of importance in relation to the India-China boundary: see Rubin (1960) 9 ICLQ 96; Sharma (1965) 59 AJ 16. See also International Commission of Jurists, Tibet and the Chinese People's Republic, 139–66.

²³⁶ China–Tibet Agreement on Administration of Tibet, 23 May 1951: 158 BFSP 731. Cf, however, the Sino-Indian Agreement of 29 April 1954 concerning Indian Trade and Intercourse with the 'Tibet Region of China': Lamb II, 638–41. The 1954 Agreement assumes either termination or cancellation of British treaties relating to Tibet.

²³⁷ Cf GA res 1353 (XIV), 3rd preambular paragraph, 21 October 1959 (45–9:26), referring to 'the distinctive cultural and religious heritage of the people of Tibet and . . . the autonomy which they have traditionally enjoyed'; 1723 (XVI), para 2, 20 Dec. 1961 (56–11:29), referring to the 'right to self-determination' of the people of Tibet; 2079 (XX), 18 Dec. 1965 (43–26:22), referring only to the human rights issues. No further action has been taken. See also Higgins, Development, 123–5, 222; Rubin (1968) 35 China Q 110; Herzer and Levin (1996) 3 Mich J Gender & Law 551.

²³⁸ Al-Baharna, Legal Status, 239–47; Kelly, 'Sultanate and Imamate in Oman', Chatham House Memoranda (1959) 13.
²³⁹ Text in (1961) 10 ICLQ 552.

'any criminal fleeing from the justice of the people of Oman', that he would 'not interfere in their internal affairs'; and that, on the other hand, the tribes and Sheiks of Oman would be 'at peace with the Sultan. They shall not attack the towns of the coast and shall not interfere in his Government.' The Treaty is equivocal with regard to the status of the signatories; in the absence of any clear acknowledgment of their position, the status of the treaty depended on the position of the parties rather than the reverse. ²⁴⁰ In 1937 the Sultan, apparently without local protest, granted oil concessions over part of Oman. The status of Oman was raised in two different contexts before United Nations organs. In 1955 a rebellion in the hinterland was put down only after British military intervention at the invitation of the Sultan. The Security Council, after debate, refused to include on the agenda a complaint by eleven Arab League States of British aggression against Oman under Article 35 of the Charter. ²⁴¹

Of more consequence were the debates in the General Assembly on the problem of Oman. The matter was considered in 1960 to 1962, but for various reasons no action was taken. However, in December 1963 the Assembly created an 'Ad hoc Committee on Oman',242 which reported in 1964 to the effect that Oman was 'an autonomous political entity that took steps to assert its competence in such important matters as the control of its foreign relations and its natural resources.'243 Significantly it did not say that Oman was a State separate from the Sultanate of Muscat and Oman. In successive resolutions the General Assembly '[r]ecognize[d] the inalienable right of the people of the Territory as a whole to self-determination and independence in accordance with their freely expressed wishes. 244 The reference to 'the territory as a whole' was regarded as including both Muscat and Oman, so that these resolutions did not support the view implied by the Arab League States proposal in 1957 that Oman was itself an independent State.²⁴⁵ On 23 July 1970, the Sultanate of Muscat and Oman changed its name to the Sultanate of Oman.²⁴⁶ It was admitted to the United Nations in 1971.247

²⁴⁰ Al-Baharna, Legal Status, 243-4.

²⁴¹ S/3865 & Add 1, SCOR 12th yr supp, July-September 1957, 16–17; 783rd mtg, 20 August 1957, para 87 (4–5: 1 abst, 1 member not voting).

²⁴² GA res 1948 (XVIII), 11 December 1963 (96–1:4). ²⁴³ 1964 UNYB 186–8.

²⁴⁴ GA resns 2073 (XX); 17 December 1965 (61–18:32); 2238 (XXI), 20 December 1966 (70–12:28); 2302 (XXII), 12 December 1967 (72–18:19); 2424 (XXIII), 18 December 1968 (66–18:26); 2559 (XXIV), 12 December 1969 (64–17:24); and 2702 (XXV), 14 December 1970 (69–17:23).

The UK intervention in 1957 could of course have been unlawful on other grounds: see Al-Baharna, Legal Status, 246–7.
 Department of State, GE-69, 9 September 1970.
 SC res 299, 30 September 1971; GA res 2754 (XXVI), 7 October 1971.

These two cases of what might be called 'autonomous regions' present certain similarities. In both, the normal classifications of sovereignty and state-hood are only applicable with difficulty, and the facts are obscure and controversial. The case of Tibet, in particular, highlights the rather arbitrary way in which, for their own purposes, individual powers decided upon a particular course of action, and thus, in effect, determined the status of a people.

It is beyond the scope of this study to examine in more detail the large number of cases of residual authority claimed or exercised over autonomous territories. Such residual sovereignty may involve extensive rights, as with Turkey over Cyprus after 1878, or it may be so nominal that, as Sir Walter Scott said of Bengal, it 'hardly exists otherwise than as a phantom.' ²⁴⁸ In the modern period, too, various arrangements have been referred to in terms of autonomy, minority rights and regional devolution (e.g., Nunavut, Tatarstan, Catalonia, South Tyrol). ²⁴⁹ But these have resulted from grants of authority by the central government of the State and are probably revocable as a matter of international law. ²⁵⁰ Some of the considerations involved when territories separate themselves by degrees from metropolitan authority are examined in the next chapter.

(4) Spheres of influence

Spheres of influence were agreements by two or more States delimiting the areas of territory, in particular in Africa and also in Persia and Siam, ²⁵¹ within which each party would be permitted by the other party or parties to operate. Neuhold refers to spheres of influence as '[c]onceptually ill-defined and legally dubious'. ²⁵² But they were part of the apparatus of territorial control, in effect giving the State whose sphere was recognized a free hand within that sphere to colonize or not. They were considered as strictly contractual²⁵³ and gave no

²⁴⁸ The Indian Chief (1801) 3 C Rob 11, 31; 165 ER 367, 374; and cf Secretary of State for India v Sardar Rustam Khan (PC 1941) 10 ILR 98, 165 ER 367, 374.

²⁴⁹ See Hannum, Autonomy, Sovereignty and Self-determination (rev edn). Perhaps the best known modern case is that of Hong Kong after 1997, discussed in Chapter 5.

²⁵⁰ Subject to treaty commitments, bilateral (e.g. agreement between Austria and Italy, Art 3(c), 5 September 1946, incorporated as Annex IV to and confirmed by Art 10 of Treaty of Peace with Italy (Italy—Australia—France—UK—USA—USSR), 10 February 1947: 49 UNTS 3, 11, 69–70)) or multilateral: e.g. Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities, 1 February 1995, (in force 2 January 1998), [1995] ETS 157, 34 ILM 351, 2151 UNTS 246.

²⁵¹ Convention between Great Britain and Russia relating to Persia, Afghanistan, and Thibet, 31 August 1907, Arts I–III, 100 BFSP 555; Declaration between Great Britain and France, with regard to the Kingdom of Siam and other matters, Art III, 88 BFSP 13, 14.

²⁵² Neuhold, IV Enc PIL (2000) 577.

²⁵³ Cf US Memorandum of 22 June 1896 (Venezuela): 88 BFSP 1283, 1287, cited by Lindley, 212–13. To the same effect, Western Sahara Case, 1975 ICJ Rep p 12, 56.

majority of the population.'²⁰ On the view taken by the United Nations and by almost all States, the United Kingdom retained authority over Southern Rhodesia, and thus had the competence (and eventually the duty) to transfer power to the territory. However, the exercise of that competence was restricted, not only by the principle of self-determination but also by explicit United Nations resolutions to which the United Kingdom assented.²¹

(ii) Grants disruptive of the territorial integrity of a self-determination unit

United Nations' practice in self-determination matters reveals two distinct and to some extent conflicting principles: that '[a]ll peoples have the right to self-determination',²² and that '[a]ny attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.'²³ According to the Declaration on Principles of International Law of 24 October 1970:

Nothing in the foregoing paragraphs shall be construed as authorizing or encouraging any action which would dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign and independent States conducting themselves in compliance with the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples as described above and thus possessed of a government representing the whole people belonging to the territory without distinction as to race, creed or colour. Every State shall refrain from any action aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity or territorial integrity of any other State or country...²⁴

As shown in Chapter 3, the principle of self-determination is now clearly recognized in international law. The status of the principle of 'territorial ²⁰ SC res 202, 6 May 1965 (7–0:4), para 5. See also, e.g., SC res 253, 29 May 1968 (11–0:0), para 17; GA res 1883 (XVIII) (90–2:3), para 1; GA res 2138 (XXI) (86–2:18), para 1; GA res 2151 (XXI) (89–2:17), para 3.

²¹ See also GA res 2023 (XX) (90–1 1:4), para 4 (Question of Aden) (90–11:10), para 4: 'Further deplores the attempts of the administering power to set up an unrepresentative régime in the Territory, with a view to granting it independence contrary to General Assembly resns 1514 (XV) and 1949 (XVIII), and appeals to all States not to recognize any independence which is not based upon the wishes of the people of the Territory freely expressed through elections held under universal adult suffrage.' The Assembly also condemned in general terms the imposition of 'non-representative régimes and arbitrary constitutions': e.g., GA res 2878 (XXVII), 20 Dec 1971 (96–5:18), para 6; 2908 (XXVII), 2 Nov 1972 (99–5:23), para 7.

²³ Ibid, para 6.

²⁴ GA res 2625 (XXV), 24 Oct 1970 (adopted without vote). For a later but very similar formulation see Beijing Declaration, Joint Statement by PRC and Russian Federation, 18 December 1992: cited in Goldman and Sutter, CRS Report, 27 January 1997.

integrity', so far as it relates to self-determination units which are not States, is less certain. It is an established part of United Nations practice, and may be treated as a presumption as to the operation of self-determination in particular cases. Thus the division of a self-determination unit into fragments for the purpose of avoiding the principle of self-determination would be unlawful: for example, the division of South West Africa into 'bantustans' or native homelands was universally condemned. ²⁵ For present purposes, the consequences of the 'territorial integrity' principle may be summarized as follows.

- (1) Prima facie self-determination units must be granted self-determination as a whole. Only if the continued unity of the territory is clearly contrary to the wishes of the people or to international peace and security will schemes for partition meet with approval of United Nations organs.²⁶
- (2) Attempts to disrupt the territorial integrity of a self-determination unit so as to evade the principle of self-determination are excluded. By contrast, it appears that independent States may dissolve into their component parts without popular consultation: for example the so-called 'velvet divorce' in Czechoslovakia at the end of 1992 was not accompanied by any referenda but was carried out on the basis of legislation in the two component republics without attracting external criticism.²⁷
- (3) A further aspect of practice under the rubric of 'territorial integrity' has been the disapproval of the alienation of territory of self-determination units without local consent. For example, the General Assembly invited the United Kingdom as administering power 'to take no action which would dismember the Territory of Mauritius and violate its territorial integrity...'²⁸ Practice has not, however, been particularly consistent. For example, the transfer by the United Kingdom of the Cocos (Keeling) Islands and Christmas Island in 1955 and 1957 respectively from the Straits Settlement to Australia²⁹ was at least ²⁵ See, e.g., SC resns 323 (1972), para 2 (13–0:1); 366 (1974), para 5(6) (15–0:0). For the Odendaal Commission Report, see Dugard, The South West Africal Namibia Dispute, 236–8, 431–5; D'Amato (1966) 4 JMAS 177–92; Umozurike, Self-Determination in International Law, 133–7. Cf also Namibia Opinion, 1971 ICJ Rep p 6, 57.

²⁶ Partition was approved in the cases of Rwanda and Burundi, Palestine, the British Cameroons, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the Gilbert and Ellice Islands. In the case of West Irian a majority of the Assembly applied the 'territorial integrity' rather than the self-determination rule: Rigo Sureda, Evolution, 143–51 and Chapter 14 for further discussion.

²⁷ Hošková (1993) 53 ZaöRV 689. Cf the dissolution of the USSR: Antonwicz (1991–2) 19 Polish YBIL 7; Yakemtchouk, (1993) 46 Studia Diplomatica 3.

²⁸ GA res 2066 (XX), 16 December 1965, para 4 (89–0:18).

²⁹ Transfer was effected by legislation of the UK and Australia: Cocos (Keeling) Islands (Request and Consent) Act 1954 (Aust); Cocos Islands Act 1955 (UK), Cocos (Keeling) Islands Act 1955 (1955); 536 HC Deb cols 1575–8, 31 Jan 1955. Subsequently the Cocos (Keeling) Islands was, but Christmas Island was not, treated as a non-self-governing territory. See below, Chapter 14.

tacitly accepted by the United Nations, despite the absence of formal consent by any indigenous government in the Straits Settlement, still less by the people affected by the transfer. Separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius as the 'British Indian Ocean Territory' though from time to time contested by Mauritius, appears also to have been accepted, at least as a temporary measure. ³⁰ By contrast the division of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands into four separate units, though protested in the Trusteeship Council by the USSR, was accepted as the basis for the independence of three new States and the association of the Northern Marianas with the former administering power: in this case the relevant populations clearly supported the proposed division.

- (4) Associated with the problem of cession of parts of self-determination units is the problem of reservations for military bases. These have been condemned by the General Assembly³¹ but again practice has not been particularly consistent. For example, the 'sovereign base areas' reserved by the United Kingdom in Cyprus have been accepted by the Assembly.³² The problem is outside the scope of this study.
- (5) The problem of 'colonial enclaves' is sometimes treated as an aspect of the self-determination rule.³³ It is better regarded as an exception to the rule, and ³¹ E.g. GA res 2832 (XXVI) (Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace), 16 December 1971, para 1. See also GA res 40/153 (on implementation of the Declaration of the Indian Ocean as a Zone of Peace), 16 December 1985, esp preambular paras.

33 E.g. Rigo Sureda, Evolution, 218-19.

³⁰ The British Indian Ocean Territory houses the US military and naval base of Diego Garcia. According to the Minister of State, FCO: 'The islands of the British Indian Ocean Territory are British, and have been since 1814 when ceded by France. We do not accept that they were ever an integral part of Mauritius. We do not therefore consider that General Assembly Resolution 1514, which was concerned with the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a country, has any application to the Territory.' 307 HC Debs, WA, col 192, 24 Feb 1998. The British position is that the administration of the Chagos Archipelago as part of Mauritius £3 million 'for the detachment of the islands', which received the assent of the Mauritius Council of Ministers: Cmnd 4264 (1999), 50–1. The UK has undertaken to cede the islands to Mauritius 'when they are no longer needed for defence purposes' and 'subject to the requirements of international law'. Min State, FCO, 367 HC Debs cols 337–8, 26 Apr 2001, (2001) 72 BY633. See also (1992) 63 BY722; (1994) 65 BY 582; (1997) 68 BY 587; Lynch (1984) 16 Case W Res JIL 101. Litigation by the Chagos Islanders before UK courts has achieved limited results: R (Bancoult) v Secretary of State [2001] QB 1067; noted Byers (2000) 71 BY 433; Chagos Islanders v Attorney-General [2003] EWHC 2222; noted O'Keefe (2003) 74 BY 486.

³² For Cyprus see Chapter 5. For continued presence of Russian troops in the Baltic States, Georgia, and other former republics of the USSR see Heinstehe V Heinegg (1992) 34 Neue Zeitschrift für Webrrecht (Frankfurt/Main) 45; Tiller and Umbach, Kontinuität und Wandel der russischen Streitkräfte unter Jelzin; Uibopuu in Benedek (ed), Development and Developing International and European Law, 175; Lang, Vertrag über konventionelle Streitkräfte in Europa.

in this discussion of limitations on the competence to grant independence must be dealt with separately: see Chapter 14.

(3) Grants of independence in furtherance of fundamentally unlawful policies: the bantustans

The question of the limits on the power of a State to grant independence to some part of its metropolitan territory—a power previously regarded as more-or-less unfettered—was raised squarely by the purported grant of independence by South Africa to the so-called 'independent homelands' or bantustans. The first of these was Transkei, granted independence on 26 October 1976.³⁴ Bophuthatswana followed on 6 December 1977;³⁵ Venda on 13 September 1979;³⁶ and Ciskei on 4 December 1981.³⁷

(i) Origins of the bantustan policy

The policy of 'separate development' of racial groups within South Africa had been long established: its ultimate expression was the dismemberment of areas of the Republic by the creation of self-governing 'bantustans', which would then be granted independence. This took place in stages. South African law had imposed restrictions on the residency and movement of the black population well before the articulation of a policy of 'separate development'. The Glen Grey Act of 1874 established representative councils, known as 'local boards', in the Transkei area for the government of Africans. Reserves in various parts of the country were defined by statute in 1913. Pulited Transkeian Territories General Council was established in 1931. Legislation in 1936 extended the reserves, which 'eventually formed the cores of the territorial jurisdiction of the Black national states.'

³⁴ Status of Transkei Act 1976 (Act No 100 of 1976), 15 ILM 1175. See Booysen (1976) 2 S AfYBIL 1; Richings (1976) 93 SALJ 119; Harding, Unabhängigkeit der Transkei; Vorster, in Vorster, Wiechers & Van Vuuren (eds), Constitutions of Transkei, Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei, 21.

³⁵ Status of Bophuthatswana Act 1977 (Act No 89 of 1977); Wiechers and van Wyk (1977) 3 SAYB 85; Devenish in Vorster, Wiechers and Van Vuuren(eds), Constitutions of Transkei, Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei, 83.

³⁶ Status of Venda Act 1979 (Act No 107 of 1979); Carpenter (1979) 5 SAYB 40; Ventor in Vorster, Wiechers and Van Vuuren (eds), Constitutions of Transkei Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei, 1.

³⁷ Status of Ciskei Act 1981 (Act No 110 of 1981); Carpenter (1981) 7 SAYB 83; Cilliers in Votster, Wiechers and Van Vuuren (eds), Constitutions of Transkei Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei, 197.
³⁸ Welsh, A History of South Africa, 449.

³⁹ Black Land Act 1913; Festenstein and Pickard-Cambridge, Land and Race: South Africa's Group Areas and Land Acts.
40 Development Trust and Land Act 1936.

⁴¹ Venter, 'Perspectives on constitutions' in Vorster et al, Constitutions, 5. For discussion of the constitutional development of the Transkei to 1964, see Hill, Bantustans: The Fragmentation of South Africa, 53–88.

The Creation of States in International Organizations

570

In the cases of Lebanon and Syria under the French Mandate, again it seemed that the task of the Mandatory was not to administer the territory but to see that its administration by the 'local government' conformed with the conditions laid down in the Mandate agreement.²¹ But in fact France exercised direct rule throughout the period of the Mandates. Syria and Lebanon, under Mandate governments, made Treaties of Alliance with the Mandatory Powers,²² carried on international litigation in their own name²³ and had their own nationality.²⁴ But their status approximated to that of international protectorates rather than protected States.

If the consistency of this state of affairs with Article 22 was not entirely clear, it was even less so in the case of Palestine. There, in order to implement the declared recognition of 'the historical connection of the Jewish people with Palestine and the grounds for reconstituting their national home in that country',²⁵ the Mandatory was expressly given 'full powers of legislation and administration save as they may be limited by the terms of this mandate.'²⁶ As a result some writers considered that the Palestine Mandate was 'nearer the B than the A category',²⁷ emphasizing the special character of the Palestine Mandate.²⁸

(2) Sovereignty and other mandated and trust territories

In relation to the other mandated and (with one exception) trust territories there was no such local governmental autonomy, either according to the

- 21 For the Agreement (approved by the League Council on 24 July 1922) see LN Doc C.528.m.313.1922.XI. On the status of Syria see In re Cassèque & Cot (French Conseil d'État, 1929) 5 ILR 30 (Post Office officials in Syria and Lebanon not subject to French administrative authority or jurisdiction); In re Fouad Baddoura (Brazil, Supreme Federal Tribunal, 1927) 5 ILR 32 ('Syria, being a mandated territory, was really an independent Government under the guidance of France').
- ²² The Treaties of Alliance of 9 September 1936 (Syria) and 13 November 1936 (Lebanon) were suspended by the War and never came into force: Hackworth 1 Digest 113. See also Agreement of 20 May 1926 between Iraq, Palestine, Syria, Transjordan and Turkey for the creation of an International Office for Information on Locusts: 59 LNTS 128.
- ²³ See Radio-Orient Company Case, between the Levantine States under French Mandate and Egypt, (1940) 3 RIAA 1871. This was an arbitration under the International Telecommunications Convention, Madrid, 9 December 1932, 151 LNTS 5, Art 15.
- ²⁴ Bentwich (1926) 7 BYIL 97; Whiteman 1 Digest 664–7; AG v Goralschwili, 3 ILR 47 (Palestine H Ct, 1925); The King v Ketter [1940] 1 KB 787 (CCA); Kletter v Dulles, 111 F Supp 593, 598 (DC 1953) (Palestine a 'foreign State' for naturalization purposes); 20 ILR 251.
 - Palestine Mandate, preambular para 3: LN Doc CPM 446.
 Article 1; see also Art 4.
 - ²⁷ Stoyanovsky, The Mandate for Palestine, 40.
- 28 The Mandate for Palestine extended also over the area known as Transjordan, but Art 25 of the Mandate authorized the Mandatory, with the consent of the Council, not to apply certain of its provisions, specifically those relating to the Jewish homeland. This was achieved by a Memorandum of the British Delegate approved by the Council on September 16, 1922 (see [1922] LNOJ 1188: for the Mandate see LN Doc CPM 466, 7), and Transjordan was thereafter administered separately. By an constituting instruments or in practice. Subject to the limitations contained in the instruments the administering authorities had plenary powers of government. As a result the various indications of sovereignty—dispositive authority, administrative power, beneficial interest—seemed to point in different directions, so that one authority concluded that: 'The totality of functions of the administering authority and the United Nations, and the ultimate interest of the beneficiaries make up the totality of sovereignty, but its incidents are distributed.' Indeed the consensus view came to be that the concept of sovereignty was simply inapplicable to mandated and trust territories. As Lord McNair stated in his separate opinion in South West Africa (Status):

The Mandates System (and the 'corresponding principles' of the International Trusteeship System) is a new institution—a new relationship between territory and its inhabitants on the one hand and the government which represents them internationally on the other—a new species of international government, which does not fit into the old conception of sovereignty and which is alien to it. The doctrine of sovereignty has no application to the new system. Sovereignty over a Mandated Territory is in abeyance; if, and when the inhabitants of the Territory obtain recognition as an independent State... sovereignty will revive and vest in the new State. What matters in considering this new institution is not where sovereignty lies, but what are the rights and duties of the Mandatory in regard to the area of territory being administered by it. The answer to that question depends on the international agreements creating the system and the rules of law which they attract. Its essence is that the Mandatory acquires only a limited title to the territory entrusted to it, and that the measure of its powers is what is necessary for the purpose of carrying out the Mandate...³⁰

Thus the establishment of a Mandate (or Trusteeship) over a territory did not constitute cession of that territory to the Mandatory.³¹ The inhabitants of the territory lost their previous nationality but did not automatically gain the nationality of the Mandatory. In 'B' and 'C' Mandates they were treated as protected persons.³² Generally speaking, the territory was not considered by Agreement of 20 February 1928, the Emir Abdullah was recognized as the 'local government': 128 BFSP 273; Wright, Mandates under the League of Nations, 458. The status of Trans-Jordan was accordingly similar to that of the other 'A' Mandates, at least after 1928.

²⁹ O'Connell, International Law, vol 1, 369.

 $^{^{30}}$ ICJ Rep 1950 p 150. See also $\it Ffrost\ v\ Stevenson\ (1937)\ 58\ CLR\ 528,\ 549--55\ (Latham\ CJ),\ 565-6\ (Dixon\ J),\ 579--80\ (Evatt\ J),\ 612-15\ (McTiernan\ J);\ \it R\ v\ Christian\ (1924)\ SALR\ (AD)\ 101,\ 106\ (Ross-Innes\ CJ).$

³¹ See Status of South West Africa, ICJ Rep 1950 p 128, 132.

³² See Hales (1937) 23 Grotius ST 85, 96–111; O'Connell (1954) 39 BY 458; Whiteman, 1 Digest 667–71.

national courts as part of the territory of the administering State, but as having a special status.³³

So far as Trust territories were concerned, the only possible exception to this analysis was the Italian Trusteeship over Somaliland, approved by the General Assembly on 2 December 1950 for a fixed term of ten years.34 Article 24 of the Trusteeship Agreement provided that, at the conclusion of the period of ten years, 'the Territory shall become an independent sovereign State'. Article 1 of the Annexed Declaration of Constitutional Principles stated: 'The sovereignty of the Territory is vested in the people and shall be exercised by the Administering Authority on their behalf and in the manner prescribed herein by decision of the United Nations.'35 Exactly what the 'sovereignty' referred to in Article 1 meant is unclear: Somaliland was not independent before 1960.36 It may be that the term 'sovereign' in Article 1 expressed in strong terms the proposition that the people of the territory were entitled to independence; but it is difficult to see what further consequences followed that were not already expressed or implicit in the Charter and the Agreement. In any case the fixed term of the Somaliland Trusteeship may well serve to distinguish it from the other Trusteeships.

³³ US courts took the view that the Pacific Islands did not constitute 'sovereign' territory of the United States: Brunell v United States, 77 F Supp 68, 72 (SDNY 1948); 15 ILR 519 (Saipan a 'foreign country' for the purposes of the Federal Tort Claims Act); Application of Reyes, 140 F Supp 130, 131 (D Haw 1956) (Kwajalein foreign territory for purposes of US immigration law); Aradnas v Hogan, 155 F Supp 546, 547 (D Haw 1957); 24 ILR 57 (Kwajalein foreign territory for purposes of US immigration law); Porter v United States, 496 F 2d 583 (Ct Cl 1974), cert den 420 US 1004 (1975) (Government of the Trust Territory not a US agency); People of Saipan v United States Department of Interior, 356 F Supp 645 (D Haw 1973), aff'd 502 F 2d 90 (9th Cir 1974), cert den 420 US 1003 (1975); Gale v Andrus, 643 F 2d 826 (1980) (FOIA does not apply to Trust Territory, which is not a US government agency); Bank of Hawaii v Balos, 701 F Supp 744 (D Haw 1988); 84 ILR 201 (Marshall Islands a 'foreign state' for purposes of diversity jurisdiction). Although the situation was left for a time ambiguous with respect to Palau (In re Bowoon Sangsa Co, 720 F 2d 595 (9th Cir 1983) (Palau courts not 'foreign' until full independence); Morgan Guaranty Trust Co v Republic of Palau, 639 F Supp 706, 714 (SDNY 1986). 87 ILR 590 (adoption of Compact and Palau Constitution 'reactivated a sovereignty which had been dormant'), judicial determinations remained broadly consistent on the separate status of the units of the Territory.

³⁴ GA res 442(V) (44-6:0).

³⁵ 118 UNTS 225. See also Società ABC v Fontana and Della Rocca (Italy, Corte di Cassazione) (1954) 22 ILR 76, 77–8: 'it is clearly wrong to say that acts performed by the State which has the power of administration over a Trust Territory can be regarded as foreign in relation to its own legal system, even though they concern another subject of international law...The Trusteeship Administration which has been entrusted to Italy comes within the limits and scope of the Italian legal system...': but cf Trafficante v Ministry of Defence (Consiglio di Stato, 1961) 40 ILR 37.

³⁶ Cf the terms of GA res 289(IVA), ²1 November 1949 (48–1:9): '1. That Somaliland shall be an independent sovereign State; 2. That this independence shall become effective at the end of ten years from the date of the approval of a Trusteeship Agreement by the General Assembly.'

The notion of 'sovereignty' then was inapplicable to the system of Mandates and Trusteeships, according to the received view. Nevertheless writers tended to be internally consistent in their approaches to the questions of sovereignty, termination and revocation—deducing, for example, the existence of a power of revocation from the location of a residual sovereignty in the League or the United Nations,³⁷ or conversely the impossibility of revocation from the existence of sovereignty 'subject to the Mandate' in the Mandatory.³⁸ Neither approach is satisfactory. The implications to be drawn from the creation and structure of the two systems are not usefully summarized one way or another by the concept of sovereignty, which, if anything, would be a conclusion from the power of revocation rather than its premiss.

It may still be asked why the concept of sovereignty was inapplicable to the two systems. Chapter XI of the Charter embodies substantive obligations on metropolitan States with respect to their 'Non-Self-Governing Territories' not notably different from the substantive obligations of the Trusteeship System, yet it is generally considered that United Nations Members retain sovereignty over their non-self-governing (colonial) territories. The novelty of the Mandate (and Trusteeship) systems was the extent of international supervision and control over the Mandatory, and in particular over the ultimate disposition of the territory. The Mandate as a whole was, as the International Court pointed out, bound up with and inseverable from a form of international control in the interests of the inhabitants of the territory. ³⁹ The crux of the non-sovereign position of the Mandatory or Administering Authority was that it could not unilaterally determine the status of the territory. That required international action, normally exercised through the competent League or United Nations body.

On the other hand this did not mean that either the League or the United Nations were themselves sovereign over mandated or trust territories. Whether or not international organizations can be the holders of territorial sovereignty, the point of their position was supervision, not beneficial interest. The fundamental long-term goal of Mandates and Trust territories was the progression to self-government of the people of the territory. Their rights in that regard were not rights of any international organization, and as the practice showed, those rights still had to be made effective when the organization was dissolved or if it signally failed to act.

³⁷ E.g., Lauterpacht, Private Law Sources and Analogies of International Law, 198, 200-1.

Lindley, Acquisition and Government of Backward Territory in International Law, 247–69; cf
 Judge Fitzmaurice, Namibia Opinion, ICJ Rep 1971 p 16, 267 (para 69).
 Status of South West Africa, ICJ Rep 1950 p 128, 136–8.

termination of mandated or trust status, or the transfer from the former to the latter.

(1) Termination of Mandates

(i) During the period of the League

Neither the Mandate agreements nor Article 22 of the Covenant made express provision for the termination of Mandates, though Article 22 did state that 'the degree of authority, control, or administration to be exercised by the Mandatory shall, if not previously agreed upon by Members of the League, be explicitly defined in each case by the Council.' In the event, four Mandates—the 'A' Mandates for Iraq, Syria, Lebanon and Transjordan—were terminated by independence before the dissolution of the League in 1946. Of these, only the British Mandate for Iraq was actually terminated by agreement between the new State, the Mandatory and the Council. 46 This occurred in 1932, but it was the culmination of a longer process of emancipation. As early as 1924, a British representative to the League had said that his Government no longer think it practicable to adopt a mandatory form, even to regulate our obligations towards the League. The conception of a mandate is not popular among the people of Iraq. It is held to imply a form of tutelage inconsistent with the facts as they stand to-day and with the large measure of independence which the Iraq State has actually acquired. In other words, Iraq has advanced too far along the path laid down in Article 22 of the Covenant for the particular form of control contemplated in that article to be any longer appropriate.⁴⁷

In the period 1924 to 1930, a series of agreements between Iraq and Great Britain largely prefigured formal independence.⁴⁸

The history of the termination of the other three Mandates is of considerable interest, both in itself and as illustrating the character of the Mandate regime.

⁴⁶ LNOJ (1932), 1212, 1347; Bentwich (1930) 11 BY 193; Wright (1931) 25 AJIL 436; Tripp, A History of Iraq, 30–76.

⁴⁷ Lord Parmoor to the Council of the League of Nations, 19 September 1924: LNOJ (1924) 1314.
⁴⁸ The United Kingdom and Iraq on 10 October 1922 had concluded a Treaty of Alliance specifying terms of the Mandatory relationship and providing that Iraq in time would become independent: 119 BFSP 389. The Council of the League, acknowledging this transaction, on 27 September 1924 approved a Mandate in light of the British-representative's description of the special status of Iraq: LNOJ (1924) 1346–7. The period for which the 1922 Treaty would remain in force was defined in an agreement of 13 January 1926: 123 BFSP 446. The Mandatory and the government in the mandated territory on 30 June 1930 concluded a further Treaty of Alliance which again made provision for the independence of Iraq: 132 BFSP 280. See Gray and Olleson (2001) 12 Finish YBIL 354, 394. From the treaty practice it may be inferred that even before its full independence and admission to the League in 1932, Iraq was something more than a dependency of the Mandatory. Cf USFR 1943/IV, 990 (Aide-Mémoire of the British Embassy (Washington) to the Department of State, 18 September 1943).

Turning first to the French Mandates for Syria and Lebanon, on 27 September 1941 General Catroux proclaimed the independence of Syria and on 26 November 1941 of Lebanon. 49 These proclamations notwithstanding, the French Government on the whole took the view that the Mandates remained formally in existence until terminated by the League Council, and that the continued existence of the Mandates justified continued French rights with respect to Syria and Lebanon,⁵⁰ including the right to impose a treaty of future relations and to determine the composition of local government. Transfer of governmental authority was not immediate, and, in the case of Lebanon, uncertainty over French rights under the Mandate was a contributing factor to a constitutional crisis, resolved only after the United States, United Kingdom and Arab States communicated to the French Committee of National Liberation in Algiers their view that the Mandate neither continued in force nor, after termination, gave France authority to rescind decisions taken by the Lebanese parliament.⁵¹ The United States in November 1942 accredited a Diplomatic Agent and Consul General to Beirut and Damascus, a measure it characterized as 'limited recognition'.52 But it withheld an unequivocal statement of recognition, pending transfer by France of governmental functions to the Lebanese and Syrian authorities. The transfer was declared by the French Committee of National Liberation in December 1943 and entered into force on 1 January 1944.53 An exchange of notes took place in September 1944, in which the governments of Lebanon and Syria affirmed the continuation of American rights as agreed in a Convention of 1924, and the United States extended full recognition.54 'Limited' recognition and the delay before full recognition aside, at no stage did the United States regard the continuation of the Mandate as an obstacle to independence. Rather, the view was consistently taken that the independence of the two States, provided it was sufficiently

⁴⁹ USFR 1941/III, 786; ibid, 1941/III, 805.

⁵⁰ USFR 1941/III, 790-1, 809; ibid, 1942/IV, 616; ibid, 1943/IV, 956 ('non-recognition by most foreign States justified in itself a continuing exercise of the mandatory power'); ibid, 1944/V, 785, 811.

⁵¹ Parliament in early November 1943 had made amendments to the constitution, striking out references to the Mandate. France on 11 November forcibly dissolved the parliament, arrested the president and cabinet, and put in place a government consisting of its own nominees. USFR 1943/IV, 1003, 1011-12. French authorities on 22 November 1943 released the Lebanese politicians from jail, permitting the president, and, later, the members of his cabinet, to resume their official functions: ibid, 1943/IV, 1040–3, 1055.

⁵² USFR 1942/IV, 667, 673. See also ibid, 1943/IV, 984 n 51, 1000, 1049-50.

⁵³ USFR 1943/IV, 1055.

⁵⁴ Department of State Executive Agreement Series, No 435; 58 Stat (pt 2) 1493; Department of State Executive Agreement Series, No 434; 58 Stat (pt 2) 1491. The United States-France Convention of 4 April 1924, in which France guaranteed American rights in Lebanon and Syria, is at USFR 1924/I, 741.

effective, could be recognized as consistent with the object and purpose of the Mandate, notwithstanding the absence of formal termination by the League.⁵⁵ Egypt, which had recognized Syria in October 1941 and Lebanon in September 1943, expressed a similar view,⁵⁶ as did Syria.⁵⁷ The British Government attempted to mediate between the United States and France, and in the process took a somewhat equivocal stance on termination.⁵⁸ However, British action, and in particular the ultimatum of May 1945,⁵⁹ was inconsistent with the retention by France of substantial authority over Syria or Lebanon.

In the event, no formal League action was taken to terminate the Mandate, which disappeared 'with graceless reluctance'. ⁶⁰ No treaty with France formally terminating the French administration was concluded. The League Assembly at its final session merely welcomed 'the termination of the mandated status of Syria, the Lebanon, and Transjordan, which have, since the last Session of the Assembly [i.e. in 1939], become independent members of the world community. ⁶¹ Syria and Lebanon both became original members of the United Nations.

The same position was taken by both the United States and the United Kingdom when the independence of Transjordan was recognized by the

- 55 USFR, 1942/IV, 647–8, 665; ibid, 1943/IV, 966, 987, 1007 ('no useful purpose would be served by an academic debate on the juridical technicalities of this complex situation. The validity of the French thesis is dubious, at best, and for practical purpose the League Mandate must be regarded as being in suspense'); ibid, 1944/V, 774, 782, 785, 795–7; ibid, 1945/VIII, 1197. The Secretary of State, in a note of 22 August 1943 to the Diplomatic Agent and Consul General at Beirut, articulated a standard for recognition based on effectiveness. Recognition of the executive in a State, the Secretary wrote, was to be deferred until '1) It is in possession of the machinery of State, administering the government with the assent of the people thereof [and] 2) It is a position to fulfill the international obligations and responsibilities incumbent upon a sovereign state under treaties and international law.'
- 56 According to the Prime Minister of Egypt, the Mandate 'disappeared in fact and in law on the day when the French and British Governments recognized the independence of Syria and the Lebanon. At that time they admitted that [the] League of Nations was not functioning and that Syria and Lebanon could not await its problematical resurrection in order to ratify [the] decision of [the] French and British. If the mandate remained in force, [the] British and French had no right to declare independence and conversely by so doing they put [an] end to the mandate.' USFR 1943/IV, 1012.
 - 57 Ibid, 1944/V, 786.
- 58 Cf ibid 1941/III, 802, with 1942/IV, 646. See also 1943/IV, 900; 1945/VIII, 1041; 393 HC Deb col 157, 27 Oct 1943.
 59 USFR 1945/VIII, 1124.
- 60 Longrigg, Syria and Lebanon under French Mandate, 317. Consistent with this characterization, France continued to press the view that the Mandate had some continuing vitality, arguing well after other parties had taken the issue as settled, that a treaty between the two states and France was necessary to terminate the Mandate and that such treaty should accord France a special status in Lebanon and Syria. See USFR 1944/V, 783–4.
- ⁶¹ LNOJ 21st Ass (1946) Sp Supp No 194, 58. Cf the Franco-Lebanese Agreement of 24 Jan 1948; 173 UNTS 101, and the Franco-Syrian Financial Agreement of 7 Feb 1949; Rollet, 199.

578

conclusion of a Treaty of Alliance on 22 March 1946.62 The separate status of Transjordan from the rest of Palestine already had been suggested by Article 25 of the Mandate, which provided that Britain, with the approval of the Council of the League, could suspend implementation of certain Mandate provisions east of the River Jordan. 63 By an Amendment to the Mandate approved in September 1922, Britain was authorized to divide the territory into two, and to limit the application of the Balfour Declaration to the area to the west, excluding Transjordan.64 As described in the Palestine Order in Council of 1 September 1922, Transjordan consisted of 'all territory lying to the east of a line drawn from a point two miles west of the town of Agaba on the Gulf of that name up the centre of the Wadi Araba, Dead Sea and River Jordan to its junction with the Yarmuk: hence up the centre of that river to the Syrian frontier.' Self-determination for the residents of Transjordan was achieved in stages and on the basis of the territory so delimited. The first stage was a Treaty between Great Britain and the Emir Abdullah of 20 February 1928;65 the culmination was the Treaty of Alliance of 22 March 1946, already referred to. Although various links existed, and exist, between Jordan and the Occupied Palestinian Territory (not limited to the period 1949 to 1967 when Jordan administered the West Bank), nonetheless the effect of the separation was that issues of selfdetermination in respect of Palestine properly so-called, i.e. the area west of the 1922 line, had thereafter to be separately resolved. The 1994 Peace Treaty between Israel and Jordan affirmed that the western boundary of Jordan is the line laid down in 1922, but left other issues to be resolved as part of the

In 1946, a British Aide-Mémoire stated that objections to the form by which Transjordan acceded to independence were:

answered by the fact that (a) their intention to grant independence to Transjordan was announced at an early session of the United Nations Assembly in London, where it was not challenged by any delegate, and (b) that the final assembly of the League of Nations passed a resolution approving and welcoming this action . . . In the light of the above and of the welcome given by the United Nations Assembly in January to the announcement of His Majesty's Government's intention to recognise Transjordan as an independent

Permanent Status Negotiations.66

⁶² Treaty of Alliance between the United Kingdom and Transjordan, with Annex and Exchange of Notes, London, 22 March 1946, 146 BFSP 461, There is no reference in the Treaty to termination of the Mandate.
63 8 LNOJ 1007 (24 July 1922). See also Watson, The Oslo Accords, 18.

^{64 116} BFSP 849.

⁶⁵ Agreement between the United Kingdom and Transjordan respecting the Administration of the Latter, Jerusalem, 20 Feb 1928, 128 BFSP 273.

⁶⁶ Israel–Jordan Treaty of Peace, Avaba/Araba Crossing Point, 26 October 1994: (1995) 34 ILM 43.
See generally Al Madfai, Jordan, The United States and the Middle East Peace Process 1974–1991.

State . . . His Majesty's Government feel that, in so far as general international approval is required for setting up Transjordan as an independent State, such approval has in fact been manifestly given.⁶⁷

The legality of this process was challenged by Poland in the Security Council when Transjordan's application for United Nations membership was under discussion. ⁶⁸ The Polish representative did not appear to argue that Transjordan could not become independent without the consent of the League Council or transfer to Trusteeship. Rather he doubted whether Transjordan had in fact attained independence, and claimed that the consent of the General Assembly was a condition precedent to any such independence. Great Britain contended that such consent had in fact been given. ⁶⁹ Jordan was eventually admitted to membership in 1955. ⁷⁰

It is clear, then, that these three Mandates were effectively and validly terminated without the consent of the League Council. According to one view, the reason is to be found in the fact that 'A' Mandates, having already 'provisional independence', were subject to different procedures regarding termination. The But there was no textual basis for this distinction; Article 22 of the Covenant applied equally to all classes of Mandate. The better view is that approval by the Council was not a condition to valid termination of a Mandate. Termination of a Mandate involved compliance with the basic purpose of the Mandate and a determination of political fact—that effective self-government existed. In default of approval by the League Council, recognition by individual States and appropriate action by the General Assembly was seen as sufficient to terminate the Mandate with full legal effect. And this conclusion must be right: otherwise the dissolution of the League would have deprived the mandated people of the self-government or independence which it was the principal purpose of the Mandate system to advance.

- 67 USFR 1946/VII, 799–800. The US view was that 'formal termination of the mandate... would be generally recognized upon the admission of [Trans-Jordan] into the United Nations as a fully independent country': ibid, 798.
 - 68 SCOR 1st yr, 2nd sess Suppl No 4, 70–1 (S/133); Higgins, Development, 30–1.
- 69 In particular by GA res 11(I), 9 Feb 1946, clause 3 (adopted unanimously), noting with approval the Mandatory's intention to grant independence to Transjordan.
 - ⁷⁰ GA res 995(X), 14 December 1955.
 - 71 This was the US view in 1946: USFR 1946/VII, 797.
- 72 Throughout the Syria-Lebanon conflict the US emphasized that the independence of the two States was a right recognized and guaranteed by the Mandate: cf ibid, 1943/IV, 1008.
 - ⁷³ Cf Report of PMC, June 1931 (Iraq), discussed by Hales (1937) 23 Grotius ST 85, 117.
- 74 To the same effect, Duncan Hall, Mandates, Dependences and Trusteeship, 265–6; Longrigg, Syria and Lebanon under French Mandate, 362. In the Aegean Sea Continental Shelf case, Judge Tarazi expressed the view that attainment of independence automatically released the Mandatory from its obligations and thus terminated the Mandate: ICJ Rep 1978 p 3, 58.

580 The Creation of States in International Organizations

In one other case—viz, the loss by Japan of its right to administer the Pacific Islands Mandate—dispositive elements of a Mandate were altered. What was terminated there was not the Mandate but rather the authority of the Mandatory: the matter is closer to revocation than to termination and is dealt with below. Once again no League approval for the change was forthcoming.

(ii) After the dissolution of the League

Only two Mandates survived the dissolution of the League without being transferred to the Trusteeship system—Palestine and South West Africa. With regard to both, the General Assembly unequivocally asserted its authority, each Mandatory having made a request as to the future disposition of the territory. General Assembly action with respect to Palestine has been referred to already: it is clear that, at the least, GA resolution 181(II) was effective to terminate the Mandate for Palestine, although its relevance for the future disposition of the territory was disputed.

The General Assembly also refused a South African request for permission to annex South West Africa. Then, when it became clear that the territory would not be brought under Trusteeship, it asserted authority to carry out the supervisory functions of the Mandate. In this it was upheld by the International Court in Status of South West Africa. The Court unanimously held that the Mandate had survived the dissolution of the League and by twelve votes to two (Judges McNair and Read dissenting) that the supervisory functions were to be exercised by the Assembly. In the light of United Nations practice, the rationale behind the Opinion, and the South African request for permission to annex, there can be little doubt that the Assembly also had the authority to terminate the Mandate. The extent of this authority will be discussed in the context of revocation.

(iii) By transfer to Trusteeship

All the 'B' Mandates and all but one of the 'C' Mandates were terminated by transfer to the Trusteeship system. Yet again no League Council approval for this disposition was forthcoming, though the League Assembly did 'take note' of the new system.⁷⁷ Approval of the new arrangements was a matter for the ⁷⁵ GA res 65 (I), 14 Dec 1946 (37-0:9).

⁷⁶ ICJ Rep 1950 p 128, 136-7; 155-62 (Judge McNair); 169 (Judge Read).

⁷⁷ Assembly resolution of 17 Apr 1946; LNOJ Sp Supp No 194, 254. For the arguments concerning the rejection of the 'Chinese' draft resolution purporting to transfer supervisory functions to the UN see Judge Jessup, South West Africa Cases (Second Phase), ICJ Rep 1966 p 6, 347–8; but see Judge Fitzmaurice, Namibia Opinion, ICJ Rep 1971 p 6, 247–9.

It is for the people to determine the destiny of the territory and not the territory the destiny of the people.

Judge Dillard, sep op, Western Sahara Case 1975 ICJ Rep p 12, 122

14.1 Introduction

Before 1945 there was very little general international concern with colonial issues, and still less with the progress of colonized peoples to self-government. The Mandate and Trusteeship systems provided for progressive development towards independence or self-government of certain colonial territories, but their ambit was restricted, and has remained so.

However, at the San Francisco Conference more extensive provision for colonial territories was made, in the form of Chapter XI of the Charter, entitled 'Declaration Regarding Non-Self-Governing Territories'.¹ Chapter XI, which contains only Articles 73 and 74, is an attempt to apply somewhat similar ideas to those embodied in Article 22 of the Covenant to a far broader category of territory. The focus here will be on the dispositive aspects of Chapter XI, and on the extensive practice pursuant to Chapter XI. The status of that practice was historically controversial, but most UN Members took an extensive view of Chapter XI, and in general these views prevailed. Indeed, it has been largely through the medium of Chapter XI that Members have extended and elaborated the operation of the principle of self-determination.

In accordance with Article 73:

Members of the United Nations which have or assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government recognize the principle that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount, and accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote to the utmost, within the system of international peace and security established by the present Charter, the well-being of the inhabitants of these territories...

Article 73 then sets out five specific undertakings relating to (1) the development of the peoples concerned, (2) progress towards self-government, (3) the furtherance of international peace and security, (4) economic development, and (5) the regular transmission of certain information to the Secretary-General. An important development in the practice pursuant to Article 73 was the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,² which, like certain other Assembly Declarations, has achieved in practice a quasi-constitutional status.³ Clause 7 of the Declaration places it on a par with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Charter itself. The Colonial Declaration addresses all 'Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories' and 'all other territories which have not yet attained independence' (c 5), so that it derives in part from Chapters XI and XII, and in part from the customary law right of self-determination. It provides, inter alia, that:

¹ See GA res 9 (I), 9 Feb 1946; for the travaux préparatoires, Russell and Muther, A History of the United Nations Charter, 813–24.

604

- The subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a denial of fundamental human rights, is contrary to the Charter of the United Nations and is an impediment to the promotion of world peace and co-operation...
- Inadequacy of political, economic, social or educational preparedness should never serve as a pretext for delaying independence.
- 4. All armed action or repressive measures of all kinds directed against dependent peoples shall cease in order to enable them to exercise peacefully and freely their right to complete independence; and the integrity of their national territory shall be respected.
- 5. Immediate steps shall be taken, in Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories... to transfer all powers to the peoples of those territories, without any conditions or reservations, in accordance with their freely expressed will and desire, without any distinction as to race, creed or colour, in order to enable them to enjoy complete independence or freedom.
- Any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter...

United Nations practice under Chapter XI, and the Colonial Declaration as an integral part of that practice, have been explicitly approved by the International Court. In the Namibia case the Court stated that:

the concepts embodied in Article 22 of the Covenant... were not static, but were by definition evolutionary, as also, therefore, was the concept of the 'sacred trust'.

² Often referred to as the Colonial Declaration: GA res 1514 (XV), 14 Dec 1960 (89–0; 9) (Australia, Belgium, Dominican Republic, France, Portugal, South Africa, Spain, UK and USA abstaining).

³ For practice pursuant to the Declaration see UN Repertory, Supp III, vol 3, paras 302–48. Also Asamoah, The Legal Significance of the Declarations of the General Assembly of the United Nations, 163; Fastenrath in Simma, The Charter of the United Nations (2nd edn), 1089.

The parties to the Covenant must consequently be deemed to have accepted them as such. That is why, viewing the institutions of 1919, the Court must take into consideration the changes which have occurred in the supervening half-century, and its interpretation cannot remain unaffected by the subsequent development of law, through the Charter of the United Nations and by way of customary law.⁴

This is equally true of Article 73 of the Charter, based as it is on Article 22 of the Covenant; and the Court explicitly affirmed the applicability of self-determination to non-self-governing territories under the Charter. In the Western Sahara Case, after referring to this passage, the Majority Opinion reaffirmed '[t]he validity of the principle of self-determination'.5 In its view, Spain, as an administering power, 'has not objected, and could not validly object, to the General Assembly's exercise of its powers to deal with the decolonization of a non-self-governing territory...'6 Thus the 'right of [the Spanish Sahara] population to self-determination' was 'a basic assumption of the questions put to the Court'. The Court's reply to those questions, equally, was based upon 'existing rules of international law'.8 On the other hand, the Court stated, 'the right of self-determination leaves the General Assembly a measure of discretion with respect to the forms and procedures by which that right is to be realized.'9 In view of the fact that all but a few non-selfgoverning territories have achieved self-government in some form or other, the exercise of this 'procedural discretion' by the General Assembly in respect to the remaining territories (most of them small and relatively non-viable) has assumed considerable importance—it was the issue before the Court in the Western Sahara case. 10 Before considering these specific problems of application, a brief account of the development of Chapter XI in practice since 1945 is in order.11

⁴ ICJ Rep 1971 p 16, 31; 49 ILR 2, 21. 5 ICJ Rep 1975 p 12, 31–3.

⁶ Ibid, 33. The Court referred to GA res 1514 (XV) as providing the basis for the process of decolonization which has resulted since 1960 in the creation of many States which are today Members of the United Nations': ibid, 32.

⁷ Ibid, 36.

⁸ Ibid, 36. ⁹ Ibid, 30, 37. ¹⁰ Ibid, 36.

¹¹ The best study, of an extensive literature, is still Rigo Sureda, The Evolution of the Right of Self-Determination. See also Sud, The United Nations and Non-Self-Governing Territories; Ahmad, The United Nations and the Colonies; El-Ayouty, The United Nations and Decolonization; Rajan, The United Nations and Domestic Jurisdiction (2nd edn), 133–222; Barbier, Le Comité de décolonization des Nations-Unies; Nawaz (1962) 2 Indian YIA 3; van Asbeck (1947) 71 HR 345. See also Orentlicher (1998) 23 Yale II.J 1; Aldrich and Connell, The Last Colonies.

could be at the same time 'non-self-governing'. Or, if the antithesis between the two is to be seen as stipulated by Article 74, a territory might cease to be 'metropolitan' when it becomes 'non-self governing', whatever its history. ¹³

The usual and more restrictive view is that Chapter XI was intended to apply only to 'territories, known as colonies at the time of the passing of the Charter'. ¹⁴ In particular, according to Principle IV of resolution 1541 (XV): 'Prima facie there is an obliation to transmit information in respect of a territory which is geographically separate and is distinct ethnically and/or culturally from the country administering it.' Thereafter, according to Principle V:

Once it has been established that such a prima facie case of geographical and ethnical or cultural distinctness of a territory exists, other elements may then be inter alia, of an administrative, political, juridical, economic or historical nature. If they affect the relationship between the metropolitan State and the territory concerned in a manner which arbitrarily places the latter in a position or status of subordination, they support the presumption that there is an obligation to transmit information under Article 73e of the Charter.

Given these restrictive criteria, the question has been to determine which territories come within the ambit of Chapter XI.

(2) Competence to determine whether a territory falls under Chapter XI

In the early sessions of the Assembly, Administering States expressed a view that it was within the domestic jurisdiction of the administering State concerned to decide whether a given territory was non-self-governing for purposes of Chapter XI.¹⁵ They argued that Chapter XI, as a 'Declaration', represented merely a statement by administering powers of their colonial policy rather than a binding legal obligation.¹⁶ That argument, not surprisingly, did not gain

- ¹³ This was the contention of Belgium in 1952 (the so-called 'Belgian Thesis'): 'It cannot...be maintained that "colonies" are the only territories envisaged in ch XI. Colonies are not the only territories whose people are not completely self-governing, and the word 'colonies' does not appear anywhere in ch XI. To maintain that it is only colonies that are intended is therefore to limit arbitrarily the number of States bound by ch XI and to discriminate to the disadvantage of many peoples which are not yet completely self-governing,' Cited in Whiteman, 13 Digest 697–8. See also Belgian Government Information Centre, New York, 1953.
- ¹⁴ GA res 1541 (XV), Annex: Principles which should guide Members in determining whether or not an obligation exists to transmit the information called for in Article 73e of the Charter of the Principle I (99–221); Nawaz (1962) 11 Indian YIA 3, 13. But Art 73 expressly refers to after-acquired territories: it would be strange if only the characteristics of colonies in 1945 were to be relevant in such cases.
- See, e.g., A 64/Add 1, 125; A/AC 100/1, 43; UN Rep Vol IV, 68; Kelsen Law of the United Nations, 557. Cf Higgins, Development, 83–7, 110–13; Rajan, UN and Domestic Jurisdiction, 194–212.
 French delegate, GAOR, 1st sess Part 2, 4th ctee, pt 3, 27.

widespread acceptance: the Charter is a treaty and the terms of Article 73 'prima facie connote legal obligation'. ¹⁷ It was implausible from the beginning that the applicability of Chapter XI could be a matter of domestic jurisdiction, and the issue came to be accepted as at least within the concurrent competence of the Assembly. ¹⁸ In practice, the extent of Chapter XI has been determined by the United Nations acting in conjunction with the administering State, but the possibility was reserved of unilateral determination by the General Assembly. Given the evolutionary nature of Chapter XI, the presumption in favour of the validity of concerted Assembly action is strong. ¹⁹

(3) The scope of Chapter XI in practice

In the beginning, the scope of Chapter XI was determined by the replies of States to a letter from the Secretary-General requesting information about non-self-governing territories.²⁰ As a result, about seventy-two²¹ territories under eight different administering States were listed in resolution 66 (I)²² as territories with regard to which information under Article 73e had been or would be submitted. This voluntary method was not likely to achieve the consistent or comprehensive application of Chapter XI, but the only objections to the enumeration of territories in resolution 66 (I) were made by States with claims to sovereignty over certain of them (Guatemala over British Honduras; Panama over the Panama Canal Zone; and Argentina over the Falkland (Malvinas) Islands).²³

In 1955, after the admission of Spain and Portugal to United Nations membership, the issue of their colonial territories was raised. They refused to bring their colonial territories within the reporting system of Chapter XI: in response, ¹⁷ Waldock (1962-II) 106 HR 1, 28–34; Oppenheim (8th edn, 1955), vol I, 240.

 ¹⁸ Cf GA res 334 (IV), para 1 (30–12:10); GA res 1467 (XIV), para 1 (54–5:15); Higgins, Development, 112–13.
 19 Cf Expenses Opinion, ICJ Rep 1962 p 151, 168.

²⁰ Å/74, 29 June 1946; authorized by GA res 9 (I), 9 February 1946.

²¹ The UN's standard study refers to 72 territories (see The United Nations and Decolonization (2001) (http://www.un.org/Depts/dpi/decolonization/brochure/UN/page1.html)). The exact number depends whether the 'High Commission Territories of the Western Pacific' (Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony; the British Solomon Islands Protectorate and the Pitcairn Islands) are treated as a single territory; in practice they were treated as separate, thus bringing to 74 the territories listed in res 66 (I). This was the US view: A/915/Add.1, 22 Aug 1949. The UK itself, for purposes of internal reporting, treated them separately. See Colonial Office, Colonial Reports, 'Gilbert & Ellice Islands' (1948, 1949); 'British Solomon Islands' (1948, 1949–50); Neill, Pitcairn Islands: General Administrative Report, Colonial No 155. See also Pacific Order in Council 1893, s 6(1) (referring to 'Pacific dependencies', in the plural).

²³ See 1946–7 UNYB, 210; GAOR, 1st sess, 2nd part, Fourth Committee, 20th meeting, 113 (Panamanian statement of 14 Nov 1946).

the General Assembly moved to specify criteria for non-self-governing territories, which it did in resolution 1541 (XV). In accordance with those criteria it went on to determine that particular territories fell within Chapter XI.²⁴ Spain eventually agreed to comply with Assembly recommendations,²⁵ but Portugal refused and the Assembly itself designated nine Portuguese territories as non-self-governing,²⁶

In 1962, with the impending secession of Southern Rhodesia, the Assembly also declared it to be a non-self-governing territory.²⁷ The British contention was that, since Southern Rhodesia was a 'self-governing colony' in British constitutional law, it did not have the status of a 'Non-Self-Governing Territory' under the Charter and that any United Nations declaration to the contrary was ultra vires.²⁸ This was consistent with British practice since 1945, insofar as the UK had not transmitted information with respect to Southern Rhodesia under Article 73(e). This view was rejected by the General Assembly. But in 1965 the British Government itself, by the Southern Rhodesia Act, claimed 'responsibilities for the administration' of Southern Rhodesia: thus, whatever the position may have been at an earlier stage, the status of Southern Rhodesia as non-self-governing was clear enough by 1965.²⁹

At various times the General Assembly took action with reference to resolution 1541 (XV) in connection with a number of further territories, including French territories in Africa and the Pacific; 30 most recently New Caledonia,

- ²⁴ GA res 1542 (XV), 15 Dec 1960, para 1 (Portuguese territories); para 5 (Spanish territories).
- 25 Spanish statement to the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories, 7 November 1960: A/C.4/SR.1038, paras 20–8 (Mr Aznar, Spain). In May 1961, the participation of Spain in the work of the Committee was welcomed; and the Spanish representative told the Committee that 'Spain had nothing to hide with regard to the Territories it administered': A/AC.35/SR.238, 17 May 1961, 4 (Mr Rasgotra, India); A/AC.35/SR.239, 18 May 1961, 3 (Mr De Pinies, Spain). Spain tabled detailed information concerning Fernando Poo, Rio Muni, and (Western) Sahara: A/4785, Annex V, paras 37 ff; A/5078/Add.3.
- ²⁶ GA res 1542 (XV), 15 Dec 1960, para 1 (68–6:17). See UN Repertory, Supp III, vol 3, Art 73, paras 105–29; Wohlgemuth, IntCone No 545 (Nov 1963). For the Portuguese position see A/C.4/SR.1036, paras 34–61 (Mr Nogueira, Portugal). The Portuguese arguments were set out in Nogueira, The UN and Portugal: A Study of Anticolonialism. See also Galvão Teles and Canelas de Castro (1996) 34 AdV3, 11.
 ²⁷ GA res 1747 (XVI), 28 June 1962 (73–1:27, Portugal and UK np.).
- ²⁸ GAOR, 17th sess, 4th ctee, 360th mtg, A/C.4/SR 1360, 11 ff. Internally, the UK regarded it as 'constitutionally inappropriate' to transmit information about self-governing territories: Cmnd 8035 (1950), para 79. See also Cmnd 2807 (1965). Southern Rhodesia acquired responsible government under a limited franchise in 1923: Southern Rhodesia Constitution Letters Patent of 1 Sept 1923, attached to Southern Rhodesia (Annexation) Order in Council 1923 (UK). See also Southern Rhodesia (Constitution) Act 1961 (UK).
- 29 The declaration in the Southern Rhodesia Constitution Order 1965 (UK) that the UDI constitution was illegal reinforced the point.
- ³⁰ GA res 2069 (XX), 16 Dec 1965 (Condominium of New Hebrides); GA res 2228 (XXI), 20 December 1966 (French Somaliland); GA res 3161 (XXVIII), 14 Dec 1973 (Comoros).

which, by resolution 41/41A in 1986 was designated as non-self-governing.³¹ To provide an institutional locus for decolonization matters after the Colonial Declaration, the Assembly in 1961 established a Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, first with seventeen members, and, from 1962 with twenty-four.³²

The Committee of Twenty-Four (as it came to be called) not only added territories to the list; it also declined to delete others. Certain territories no longer reported on by Administering States continued to be considered by the Committee: these included the Comoro Archipelago, 33 the French Territory of the Afars and Isaas (formerly French Somaliland, now Djibouti), 34 and the West Indies Associated States (until the disaggregation of that entity in the early 1980s). In addition, Puerto Rico, which was removed from the General Assembly list of Non-Self-Governing Territories in 1953, 35 has continued to be considered by the Committee of Twenty-four, fifty years after its 'de-listing'. 36

A complete list of Chapter XI territories and their eventual political status is set out in Appendix 3 (pp. 746–56).

(4) Possible extension of Chapter XI beyond colonial territories

I have already discussed whether Chapter XI is limited to territories of the colonial type, or whether the term 'non-self-governing' should be read in some

- ³¹ GA res 41/41A, 2 Dec 1986 (New Caledonia). ³² GA res 1654 (XVI), 27 Nov 1961.
- 33 In a referendum on 22 December 1974, the inhabitants of the four islands voted overwhelmingly (94%) for independence. On one island (Mayotte), there was however a majority in favour of continued association with France. In negotiations for independence, attempts were made to secure separate self-determination, or at least substantial constitutional guarantees, for the inhabitants of Mayotte. The local government rejected these attempts and on 6 July 1975 unilaterally declared their independence. This was accepted (with respect to the three main islands) by France on 9 July 1975, and the Comoro Islands were recognized thereafter by a number of other States, and admitted to the UN on 12 November 1975. See (1975) 80 RGDIP 793; Ostheimer, The Politics of the Western Indian Ocean Islands, 73-101; and on the decision of the French Constitutional Court, Ruzié (1976) 103 JDI 392, Favoreu [1976] Rev Droit Public 557. The General Assembly rejected continued French occupation of Mayotte as a violation of the 'national unity of the Comorian State...': GA res 31/4 (XXXI), 21 Oct 1976 (102–1:28). See also GA res 32/7, 1 Nov 1977 (121–0: 17, France np); GA resns 34/69, 6 Dec 1979; 35/43, 28 Nov 1980; 36/105, 10 Dec 1981; 37/65, 3 Dec 1982; 38/13, 21 Nov 1983; 39/48, 11 Dec 1984; 40/62, 9 Dec 1985; 41/30, 3 Nov 1986; 42/17, 11 Nov 1987; 43/14, 26 Oct 1988; 44/9, 18 Oct 1989; 45/11, 1 Nov 1990; 46/9, 16 Oct 1991; 47/9, 27 Oct 1992; 48/56, 13 Dec 1993; 49/18, 28 Nov 1994. See further Aldrich and Connell, The Last Colonies, 228-32, 262.
 - ³⁴ Djibouti was admitted to the United Nations in 1977: GA res 32/1, 20 Sept 1977
- ³⁵ On constitutional arrangements between Puerto Rico and the United States and discussions concerning the cessation of transmission of information under Art 73e, see Igarashi, Associated Statehood in International Law, 44–62.
- $^{36}\,$ On Puerto Rico see Committee of Twenty-four res A/AC.109/2000/24, 12 July 2000; A/55/23, paras 30–9.

ISLAND OF SHAME

The Secret History of the U.S. Military Base on Diego Garcia

With a new afterword by the author

David Vine

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY PRESS

PRINCETON OXFORD

Copyright © 2009 by Princeton University Press Published by Princeton University Press, 41 William Street, Princeton, New Jersey 08540

In the United Kingdom: Princeton University Press, 6 Oxford Street, Woodstock, Oxfordshire OX20 1TW press.princeton.edu

All Rights Reserved

Fourth printing, and first paperback printing, 2011 Paperback ISBN 978-0-691-14983-7

The Library of Congress has cataloged the cloth edition of this book as follows Vine, David, 1974–

Island of shame : the secret history of the U.S. military base on Diego Garcia / David Vine.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 978-0-691-13869-5 (hbk.: alk. paper) 1. United States. Naval Communications Station, Diego Garcia—History. 2. Military bases, American—British Indian Ocean Territory—Diego Garcia. 3. Chagossians—History. 4. Population transfers—Chagossians. 5. Refugees—Mauritius. 6. Refugees—British Indian Ocean Territory. 7. British Indian Ocean Territory—History. 8. Diego Garcia (British Indian Ocean Territory)—History.

VA68.D53V66 2008 2008027868 355.70969'7—dc22

British Library Cataloging-in-Publication Data is available

This book has been composed in Adobe Garamond

The author will donate all royalties from the sale of this book to the Chagossians.

Printed on acid-free paper. ∞

Printed in the United States of America

5 7 9 10 8 6 4

"No person shall be . . . deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation."

—Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution, 1791

"No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile. . . . No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family [or] home. . . . No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property. . . . Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each State."

—Articles 9, 12, 17, 13, Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 1948

"We, the inhabitants of Chagos Islands—Diego Garcia, Peros Banhos, Salomon—have been uprooted from those islands. . . . Our ancestors were slaves on those islands, but we know that we are the heirs of those islands. Although we were poor there, we were not dying of hunger. We were living free."

—Petition to the governments of the United Kingdom and the United States, 1975

Annex 151

CONTENTS
List of Illustrations and Tables	ix
Foreword by Michael Tigar	xi
Abbreviations and Initialisms	xvii
A Note to the Reader	xix
Introduction	_ 1
1. The Ilois, The Islanders	20
2. The Bases of Empire	41
3. The Strategic Island Concept and a Changing of the Imperial Guard	56
4. "Exclusive Control"	72
5. "Maintaining the Fiction"	89
6. "Absolutely Must Go"	99
7. "On the Rack"	112
8. Derasine: The Impoverishment of Expulsion	126
9. Death and Double Discrimination	137
10. Dying of Sagren	149
11. Daring to Challenge	164
12. The Right to Return and a Humanpolitik	180
Epilogue	197
My Thanks	199
Further Resources	203
Notes	205
Afterword to the Paperback Edition	249
Index	255

A NOTE TO THE READER

Quotations that appear in this book without citation come from interviews and conversations conducted during my research. Translations from French, Mauritian Kreol, and Seselwa (Seychelles Kreol) are my own. The names and some basic identifying features of Chagossians in the book (other than members of the Bancoult family and representatives of the Chagos Refugees Group) have been changed in accordance with anonymity agreements made during the research.

INTRODUCTION

Rita felt like she'd been sliced open and all the blood spilled from her body.

"What happened to you? What happened to you?" her children cried as they came running to her side.

"What happened?" her husband inquired.

"Did someone attack you?" they asked.

"I heard everything they said," Rita recounted, "but my voice couldn't open my mouth to say what happened." For an hour she said nothing, her heart swollen with emotion.

Finally she blurted out: "We will never again return to our home! Our home has been closed!" As Rita told me almost forty years later, the man said to her: "Your island has been sold. You will never go there again."

Marie Rita Elysée Bancoult is one of the people of the Chagos Archipelago, a group of about 64 small coral islands near the isolated center of the Indian Ocean, halfway between Africa and Indonesia, 1,000 miles south of the nearest continental landmass, India. Known as Chagossians, none live in Chagos today. Most live 1,200 miles away on the western Indian Ocean islands of Mauritius and the Seychelles. Like others, 80-year-old Rita lives far from Mauritius's renowned tourist beaches and luxury hotels. Rita, or Aunt Rita as she is known, lives in one of the island's poorest neighborhoods, known for its industrial plants and brothels, in a small aging three-room house made of concrete block.

Rita and other Chagossians cannot return to their homeland because between 1968 and 1973, in a plot carefully hidden from the world, the United States and Great Britain exiled all 1,500–2,000 islanders to create a major U.S. military base on the Chagossians' island Diego Garcia. Initially, government agents told those like Rita who were away seeking medical treatment or vacationing in Mauritius that their islands had been closed and they could not go home. Next, British officials began restricting supplies to the islands and more Chagossians left as food and medicines dwindled. Finally, on the orders of the U.S. military, U.K. officials forced the remaining islanders to board overcrowded cargo ships and left them on the docks in Mauritius and the Seychelles. Just before the last deportations, British agents and U.S. troops on Diego Garcia herded the Chagossians' pet dogs into sealed sheds and gassed and burned them in front of their traumatized owners awaiting deportation.

Introduction 2 .

The people, the descendants of enslaved Africans and indentured south Indians brought to Chagos beginning in the eighteenth century, received no resettlement assistance and quickly became impoverished. Today the group numbers around 5,000. Most remain deeply impoverished. Meanwhile the base on Diego Garcia has become one of the most secretive and powerful U.S. military facilities in the world, helping to launch the invasions of Afghanistan and Iraq (twice), threatening Iran, China, Russia, and nations from southern Africa to southeast Asia, host to a secret CIA detention center for high-profile terrorist suspects, and home to thousands of U.S. military personnel and billions of dollars in deadly weaponry.

"You were born—"

"Peros Banhos," replied Rita Bancoult* before I could finish my question.

"In what year?"

"1928. . . . The thirtieth of June." Rita grew up in Peros Banhos's capital and administrative center, L'île du Coin-Corner Island. "Lamem monn ne, lamem monn reste," she added in the songlike, up-and-down cadence of Chagossians' Kreol: La-MEM moan NAY, la-MEM moan rest-AY. "The island where I was born is the island where I stayed."1

Corner Island and 31 neighboring islands in the Peros Banhos atoll form part of the Chagos Archipelago. Portuguese explorers named the largest and best-known island in the archipelago Diego Garcia, about 150 miles to the south. The archipelago's name appears to come from the Portuguese chagas—the wounds of Christ.2

"And your parents?" I asked. "What island were your parents born on?"

"My parents were born there too," Rita explained. "My grandmother the mother of my father—was born in Six Islands—Six Îles. My father was also born in Six Islands. My grandfather was born there too. My grandmother on my mother's side was born in Peros Banhos."

Rita does not know where her other ancestors were born, one of the injuries still borne by people with enslaved forebears. However, she remembers her grandmother, Olivette Pauline, saying that Olivette's grandmother—Rita's great-great-grandmother—had been enslaved and had the name "Masambo" or "Mazambo." Rita thinks she was a Malgas—a person from Madagascar.

^{*} Rita's last name has since changed to Isou, but for reasons of clarity I will refer to her throughout by the name Bancoult.

Rita and her family are some of Chagos's indigenous people.³ Chagossians lived in Diego Garcia and the rest of the previously uninhabited archipelago since the time of the American Revolution when Franco-Mauritians created coconut plantations on the islands and began importing enslaved and, later, indentured laborers from Africa and India.

Over the next two centuries, the diverse workforce developed into a distinct, emancipated society and a people known initially as the Ilois—the Islanders. Nearly everyone worked on the coconut plantations. Most worked in the production of copra—dried coconut flesh—and coconut oil made by pressing copra. The people built the archipelago's infrastructure and produced its wealth. As some maps still attest, the islands became known as the "Oil Islands"—meaning coconut oil, not the petroleum that would prove central to the archipelago's recent history. A distinct Chagos Kreol language emerged. The people built their own houses, inhabited land passed down from generation to generation, and kept vegetable gardens and farm animals. By the time Rita was a mother, there were nurseries and schools for her children. In 1961, Mauritian colonial governor Robert Scott remarked that the main village on Diego Garcia had the "look of a French coastal village miraculously transferred whole to this shore."

While far from luxurious and still a plantation society, the islands provided a secure life, generally free of want, and featuring universal employment and numerous social benefits, including regular if small salaries in cash and food, land, free housing, education, pensions, burial services, and basic health care on islands described by many as idyllic.

"You had your house—you didn't have rent to pay," said Rita, a short, stocky woman with carefully French-braided white hair. "With my ration, I got ten and a half pounds of rice each week, I got ten and a half pounds of flour, I got my oil, I got my salt, I got my dhal, I got my beans—it was only butter beans and red beans that we needed to buy.

"And then I got my fresh fish, Saturday. I got my salted fish too, of at least four pounds, five pounds to take. But we didn't take it because we were able to catch fish ourselves. . . . We planted pumpkin, we planted greens. . . . Chickens, we had them. Pigs, the company fed them, and we got some. Chickens, ducks, we fed them ourselves.

"I had a dog named Katorz—Katorz, when the sea was at low tide, he would go into the sea. He caught fish in his mouth and he brought them back to me," recalled Rita 1,200 miles from her homeland.

"Life there paid little money, a very little," she said, "but it was the sweet life."

4 Introduction

During the winter of 1922, eight-year-old Stuart Barber was sick and confined to bed at his family's home in New Haven, Connecticut. A solitary child long troubled by health problems, Stu, as he was known, found solace that winter in a cherished geography book. He was particularly fascinated by the world's remote islands and had a passion for collecting the stamps of far-flung island colonies. While the Falkland Islands off the coast of Argentina in the South Atlantic became his favorite, Stu noticed that the Indian Ocean was dotted with many islands claimed by Britain.⁵

Thirty-six years later, after having experienced a taste of island life as a naval intelligence officer in Hawai'i during World War II, Stu was drawing up lists of small, isolated colonial islands from every map, atlas, and nautical chart he could find. It was 1958. Thin and spectacled, Stu was a civilian back working for the Navy at the Pentagon.

The Navy ought to have a permanent facility, Stu suddenly realized, like the island bases acquired during the Pacific's "island hopping" campaign against Japan. The facility should be on "a small atoll, minimally populated, with a good anchorage." The Navy, he began to tell his superiors, should build a small airstrip, oil storage, and logistical facilities. The Navy would use it "to support minor peacetime deployments" and major wartime operations.

time operations. Working in the Navy's long-range planning office, it occurred to Stu that over the next decades island naval bases would be essential tools for maintaining military dominance during the Cold War. In the era of decolonization, the non-Western world was growing increasingly unstable and would likely become the site of future combat. "Within the next 5 to 10 years," Stu wrote to the Navy brass, "virtually all of Africa, and certain Middle Eastern and Far Eastern territories presently under Western control will gain either complete independence or a high degree of autonomy," making them likely to "drift from Western influence."

All the while, U.S. and other Western military bases were becoming dangerous targets of opposition both in the decolonizing world and from the Soviet Union and the United Nations. The inevitable result for the United States, Stu said, was "the withdrawal" of Western military forces and "the denial or restriction" of Western bases in these areas.⁸

But Stu had the answer to these threats. The solution, he saw, was what he called the "Strategic Island Concept." The plan would be to avoid traditional base sites located in populous mainland areas where they were vulnerable to local non-Western opposition. Instead, "only relatively small, lightly populated islands, separated from major population masses, could be safely held under full control of the West." Island bases were the key.

But if the United States was going to protect its "future freedom of military action," Stu realized, they would have to act quickly to "stockpile" island basing rights as soon as possible. Just as any sensible investor would "stockpile any material commodity which foreseeably will become unavailable in the future," Stu believed, the United States would have to quickly buy up small colonial islands around the world or otherwise ensure its Western allies maintained sovereignty over them. Otherwise the islands would be lost to decolonization forever.9

As the idea took shape in his head, Stu first thought of the Seychelles and its more than 100 islands before exploring other possibilities. Finally he found time to gather and "scan all the charts to see what useful islands there might be": There was Phuket, Cocos, Masirah, Farquhar, Aldabra, Desroches, Salomon, and Peros Banhos in and around the Indian Ocean alone. After finding all to be "inferior sites," Stu found "that beautiful atoll of Diego Garcia, right in the middle of the ocean."

Stu saw that the small v-shaped island was blessed with a central location within striking distance of potential conflict zones, one of the world's great natural harbors in its protected lagoon, and enough land to build a large airstrip. But the Navy still needed to ensure it would get a base absent any messy "political complications." Any targeted island would have to be "free of impingement on any significant indigenous population or economic interest." Stu was pleased to note that Diego Garcia's population was "measured only in the hundreds." 11

When in late 1967 a mule-drawn cart ran over the foot of Rita's three-year-old daughter Noellie, the nurse in Peros Banhos's eight-bed hospital told Rita that the foot needed an operation. She would have to take Noellie to the nearest full-service hospital, 1,200 miles away in Mauritius.

Going to Mauritius meant waiting for the next and only boat service—a four-times-a-year connection with the larger island. Which meant waiting two months. When the boat finally arrived, Rita packed a small box with some clothes and a pot to cook in, locked up the family's wood-framed, thatched-roof house, and left for Mauritius with Noellie, her husband, Julien Bancoult, and their five other children.

After four days on the open ocean, the family arrived in the Mauritian capital, Port Louis, and rushed Noellie to the nearest hospital. As Rita recalled, a doctor operated but saw immediately that the foot had gone untreated for "much too long." Gangrene had set in. Noellie died a month later.

Mourning her death, the family had to wait two months until the departure of the next boat for Chagos. With the departure date approaching, Rita walked to the office of the steamship company to arrange for the family's return. There the steamship company representative told her, "Your island has been sold. You will never go there again," leaving Rita to return to her family speechless and in tears.

Introduction

When Julien finally heard his wife's news he collapsed backwards, his arms splayed wide, unable to utter a word. Prevented from returning home, Rita, Julien, and their five surviving children found themselves in a foreign land, separated from their home, their land, their animals, their possessions, their jobs, their community, and the graves of their ancestors. The Bancoults had been, as Chagossians came to say, derasine—deracinated, uprooted, torn from their natal lands.

"His sickness started to take hold of him," Rita explained. "He didn't understand" a thing she said.

Soon Julien suffered a stroke, his body growing rigid and increasingly paralyzed. "His hands didn't move, his feet didn't move. Everything was frozen," Rita said. Before the year was out, she would spend several weeks receiving treatment in a psychiatric hospital.

Five years after suffering the stroke, Julien died. Rita said the cause of death was sagren—profound sorrow.

"There wasn't sickness" like strokes or sagren in Peros Banhos, Rita explained. "There wasn't that sickness. Nor diabetes, nor any such illness. What drugs?" she asked rhetorically. "This is what my husband remembered and pictured in his mind. Me too, I remember these things that I've said about us, David. My heart grows heavy when I say these things,

After Julien's death, the Bancoults' son Alex lost his job as a dockworker. understand?" He later died at 38 addicted to drugs and alcohol. Their son Eddy died at 36 of a heroin overdose. Another son, Rénault, died suddenly at age eleven, for reasons still mysterious to the family, after selling water and begging for money at a local cemetery near their home.

"My life has been buried," Rita told me from the torn brown vinyl couch in her small sitting room. "What do I think about it?" she continued. "It's as if I was pulled from my paradise to put me in hell. Everything here you need to buy. I don't have the means to buy them. My children go without eating. How am I supposed to bear this life?"

"Welcome to the Footprint of Freedom," says the sign on Diego Garcia. Today, at any given time, 3,000 to 5,000 U.S. troops and civilian support staff live on the island. "Picture a tropical paradise lost in an endless expanse of cerulean ocean," described Time magazine reporter Massimo Calabresi when he became one of the first journalists in over twenty-five years to visit the secretive atoll. Calabresi earned the privilege traveling with President George W. Bush and Air Force One during a ninety-minute refueling stop between Iraq and Australia. "Glossy palm fronds twist in the temperate wind along immaculate, powder white beaches. Leathery sea turtles bob lazily offshore, and the light cacophony of birdsong accents the ambient sound of wind and waves," he reported. "Now add concrete. Lots and lots of concrete. . . . Think early-'70s industrial park." 12

Confined to an auditorium during his stay (but presented with a souvenir t-shirt bearing "pictures of scantily clad women and mermaids" and the words "Fantasy Island, Diego Garcia"), Calabresi was prevented from touring the rest of the island. If he had, he would have found what, like most overseas U.S. bases, resembles a small American town, in this case magically transported to the middle of the Indian Ocean.

Leaving Diego Garcia International Airport, Calabresi might have stayed at the Chagos Inn; dined at Diego Burger or surfed the internet at Burgers-n-Bytes; enjoyed a game of golf at a nine-hole course; gone shopping or caught a movie; worked out at the gym or gone bowling; played baseball or basketball, tennis or racquetball; swam in one of several pools or sailed and fished at the local marina; then relaxed with some drinks at one of several clubs and bars. Between 1999 and 2007, the Navy paid a consortium of private firms called DG21 nearly half a billion dollars to keep its troops happy and to otherwise feed, clean, and maintain the base.

The United Kingdom officially controls Diego Garcia and the rest of Chagos as the British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT). As we will later see, the British created the colony in 1965 using the Queen's archaic power of royal decree, separating the islands from colonial Mauritius (in violation of the UN's rules on decolonization) to help enable the expulsion. A secret 1966 agreement signed "under the cover of darkness" without congressional or parliamentary oversight gave the United States the right to build a base on Diego Garcia. While technically the base would be a joint U.S.-U.K. facility, the island would become a major U.S. base and, in many ways, de facto U.S. territory. All but a handful of the troops are from the United States. Private companies import cheaper labor from places like the Philippines, Sri Lanka, and Mauritius (though until 2006 no Chagossians were hired) to do the laundry, cook the food, and keep the base running. The few British soldiers and functionaries on the atoll spend most of their time raising the Union Jack, keeping an eye on substance abuse as the local police force, and offering authenticity at the local "Brit Club." Diego Garcia may be the only place in what remains of the British Empire where cars drive on the right side of the road.

In the years since the last Chagossians were deported in 1973, the base has expanded dramatically. Sold to Congress as an "austere communications facility" (to assuage critics nervous that Diego Garcia represented the start of a military buildup in the Indian Ocean), Diego Garcia saw almost immediate action as a base for reconnaissance planes in the 1973 Arab-Israeli war. The base grew steadily throughout the 1970s and expanded even more rapidly after the 1979 revolution in Iran and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan: Under Presidents Carter and Reagan, Diego Garcia saw the "most dramatic build-up of any location since the Vietnam War." By 1986, the U.S. military had invested $500 million on the island. ¹³ Most of the construction work was carried out by large private firms like long-time Navy contractor Brown & Root (later Halliburton's Kellogg Brown & Root).

Today Diego Garcia is home to an amazing array of weaponry and equipment. The lagoon hosts an armada of almost two dozen massive cargo ships "prepositioned" for wartime. Each is almost the size of the Empire State Building. Each is filled to the brim with specially protected tanks, helicopters, ammunition, and fuel ready to be sent off to equip tens of thousands of U.S. troops for up to 30 days of battle.

Closer to shore, the harbor can host an aircraft carrier taskforce, including navy surface vessels and nuclear submarines. The airport and its over two-mile-long runway host billions of dollars worth of B-1, B-2, and B-52 two-mile-long runway host billions of dollars worth of B-1, B-2, and B-52 two-mile-long runway host billions of dollars worth of B-1, B-2, and B-52 two-mile-long runway host billions of dollars worth of B-1, B-2, and B-52 two-mile-long runway host billions of dollars worth of B-1, B-2, and B-52 two-mile-long runway host billions running the Global Positioning System (GPS). There's a range of other high-tech intelligence and communications equipment, including NASA facilities (the runway is an emergency landing site for the Space Shuttle), an electro-optical deep space surveil-lance system, a satellite navigation monitoring antenna, an HF-UHF-SHF satellite transmission ground station, and (probably) a subsurface oceanic intelligence station. Nuclear weapons are likely stored on the base. 14

Diego Garcia saw its first major wartime use during the first Gulf War. Just eight days after the U.S. military issued deployment orders in August 1990, eighteen prepositioned ships from Diego Garcia's lagoon arrived in Saudi Arabia. The ships immediately outfitted a 15,000-troop marine brigade with 123 M-60 battle tanks, 425 heavy weapons, 124 fixed-wing and rotary aircraft, and thirty days' worth of operational supplies for the annihilation of Iraq's military that was to come. Weaponry and supplies shipped from the United States took almost a month longer to arrive in Saudi Arabia, proving Diego Garcia's worth to many military leaders. 15

Since September 11, 2001, the base has assumed even more importance for the military. About 7,000 miles closer to central Asia and the Persian Gulf than major bases in the United States, the island received around 2,000 additional Air Force personnel within weeks of the attacks on northern Virginia and New York. The Air Force built a new thirty-acre housing facility for the newcomers. They named it "Camp Justice."

Flying from the atoll, B-1 bombers, B-2 "stealth" bombers, and B-52 nuclear-capable bombers dropped more ordnance on Afghanistan than any other flying squadrons in the Afghan war. ¹⁶ B-52 bombers alone dropped more than 1.5 million pounds of munitions in carpet bombing that contributed to thousands of Afghan deaths. ¹⁷ Leading up to the invasion of Iraq, weaponry and supplies prepositioned in the lagoon were again among the first to arrive at staging areas near Iraq's borders. The (once) secret 2002 "Downing Street" memorandum showed that U.S. war planners considered basing access on Diego Garcia "critical" to the invasion. ¹⁸ Bombers from the island ultimately helped launch the Bush administration's war overthrowing the Hussein regime and leading to the subsequent deaths of hundreds of thousands of Iraqis and thousands of U.S. occupying troops.

In early 2007, as the Bush administration was upping its anti-Iran rhetoric and making signs that it was ready for more attempted conquest, the Defense Department awarded a $31.9 million contract to build a new submarine base on the island. The subs can launch Tomahawk cruise missiles and ferry Navy SEALs for amphibious missions behind enemy lines. At the same time, the military began shipping extra fuel supplies to the atoll for possible wartime use.

Long off-limits to reporters, the Red Cross, and all other international observers and far more secretive than Guantánamo Bay, many have identified the island as a clandestine CIA "black site" for high-profile detainees: Journalist Stephen Grey's book Ghost Plane documented the presence on the island of a CIA-chartered plane used for rendition flights. On two occasions former U.S. Army General Barry McCaffrey publicly named Diego Garcia as a detention facility. A Council of Europe report named the atoll, along with sites in Poland and Romania, as a secret prison.¹⁹

For more than six years U.S. and U.K. officials adamantly denied the allegations. In February 2008, British Foreign Secretary David Miliband announced to Parliament: "Contrary to earlier explicit assurances that Diego Garcia has not been used for rendition flights, recent U.S. investigations have now revealed two occasions, both in 2002, when this had in fact occurred." A representative for Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice said Rice called Miliband to express regret over the "administrative error." The State

10 Introduction

Department's chief legal adviser said CIA officials were "as confident as they can be" that no other detainees had been held on the island, and CIA Director Michael Hayden continues to deny the existence of a CIA prison on the island. This may be true: Some suspect the United States may hold large numbers of detainees on secret prison ships in Diego Garcia's lagoon or elsewhere in the waters of Chagos.²¹

"It's the single most important military facility we've got," respected Washington-area military expert John Pike told me. Pike, who runs the website GlobalSecurity.org, explained, "It's the base from which we control half of Africa and the southern side of Asia, the southern side of Eurasia." It's "the facility that at the end of the day gives us some say-so in the Persian Gulf region. If it didn't exist, it would have to be invented." The base is critical to controlling not just the oil-rich Gulf but the world, said Pike: "Even if the entire Eastern Hemisphere has drop-kicked us" from every other base on their territory, he explained, the military's goal is to be able "to run the planet from Guam and Diego Garcia by 2015."

Before I received an unexpected phone call one day late in the New York City summer of 2001, I'd only vaguely known from my memories of the first Gulf War that the United States had an obscure military base on an island called Diego Garcia. Like most others in the United States, I knew nothing of the Chagossians.

On the phone that day was Michael Tigar, a lawyer and American University law professor. Tigar, I later learned from my father (an attorney), was famously known for having had an offer of a 1966 Supreme Court clerkship revoked at the last moment by Justice William Brennan. The justice had apparently succumbed to right-wing groups angered by what they considered to be Tigar's radical sympathies from his days at the University of California, Berkeley. As the story goes, Brennan later said it was one of his greatest mistakes. Tigar went on to represent the likes of Angela Davis, Allen Ginsberg, the Washington Post, Texas Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison, and Oklahoma City bomber Terry Nichols. In 1999, Tigar ranked third in a vote for "Lawyer of the Century" by the California Lawyers for Criminal Justice, behind only Clarence Darrow and Thurgood Marshall. Recently he had sued Henry Kissinger and other former U.S. officials for supporting assassinations and other human rights abuses carried out by the government of Chilean dictator Augusto Pinochet.

As we talked that day, Tigar outlined the story of the Chagossians' expulsion. He described how for decades the islanders had engaged in a David-and-Goliath struggle to win the right to return to Chagos and proper compensation.

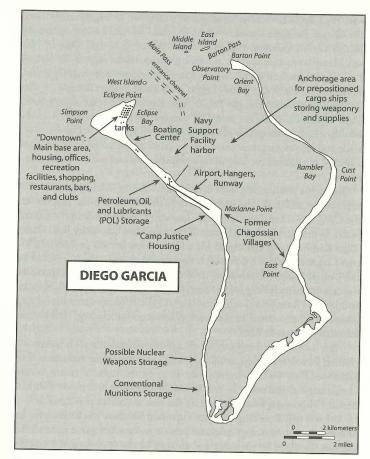

Figure 0.2 Diego Garcia, with base area at left.

In 1978 and 1982 their protests won them small amounts of compensation from the British. Mostly, though, the money went to paying off debts accrued since the expulsion, improving their overall condition little. Lately, they had begun to make some more significant progress. In 1997, with the help of lawyers in London and Mauritius, an organization called the Chagos Refugees Group, or the CRG, had launched a suit against the British Crown charging that their exile violated U.K. law. One of Nelson Mandela's former lawyers in battling the apartheid regime, Sir Sydney Kentridge, signed on to the case. And to everyone's amazement, Tigar said, in November 2000, the British High Court ruled in their favor.

12 Introduction

The only problem was the British legal system. The original judgment, Tigar explained, made no award of damages or compensation. And the islanders had no money to charter boats to visit Chagos let alone to resettle and reconstruct their shattered societies. So the people had just filed a second suit against the Crown for compensation and money to finance a

Through a relationship with Sivarkumen "Robin" Mardemooto, a former student of Tigar's who happened to be the islanders' Mauritian lawyer, the CRG had asked Tigar to explore launching another suit in the United States. Working with law students in his American University legal clinic, Tigar said he was preparing to file a class action lawsuit in Federal District Court. Among the defendants they would name in the suit would be the United States Government, government officials who participated in the expulsion, including former Secretaries of Defense Robert McNamara and Donald Rumsfeld (for his first stint, in the Ford administration), and companies that assisted in the base's construction, including Halliburton subsidiary Brown & Root.

Tigar said they were going to charge the defendants with harms including forced relocation, cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment, and genocide. They would ask the Court to grant the right of return, award compensation, and order an end to employment discrimination that had barred Chagossians from working on the base as civilian personnel.

As I was still absorbing the tale, Tigar said his team was looking for an anthropology or sociology graduate student to conduct some research for the suit. Troubled by the story and amazed by the opportunity, I quickly agreed.

Over the next six-plus years, together with colleagues Philip Harvey and Wojciech Sokolowski from Rutgers University School of Law and Johns Hopkins University, I conducted three pieces of research: Analyzing if, given contemporary understandings of the "indigenous peoples" concept, the Chagossians should be considered one (I found that they should and that other indigenous groups recognize them as such); documenting how Chagossians' lives have been harmed as a result of their displacement; and calculating the compensation due as a result of some of those damages.²²

While I was never paid for my work, ironically enough, big tobacco helped foot some of the bill: Tigar reimbursed my expenses out of a human rights litigation fund he had established at American University with attorney fees won in a Texas tobacco suit.²³

Not long after starting the project, however, I saw there was another side of the story that I wanted to understand. In addition to exploring the impact of the expulsion on the Chagossians, I wanted to tell the story of the United States and the U.S. Government officials who ordered the removals and created the base: How and why, I wanted to know, did my country and its officials do this?²⁴

Between 2001 and 2008, I conducted research with both the islanders and some of the now mostly retired U.S. officials. To understand something of the fabric and texture of Chagossians' lives in exile, I lived in their communities in Mauritius and the Seychelles for more than seven months over four trips between 2001 and 2004. This meant living in the homes of Chagossian families and participating actively in their daily lives. I did everything with the people from working, cooking, studying, cleaning, praying, and watching French-dubbed Brazilian telenovelas on Mauritian TV to attending weddings, baptisms, first communions, public meetings, birthday parties, and funerals. In addition to hundreds of informal conversations, I conducted more than thirty formal interviews in Mauritian Kreol, Seselwa (Seychelles Kreol), English, and French, and, with the help of dedicated Mauritian interviewers, completed a large survey of living conditions with more than 320 islanders. I complemented this work by going to the British Public Records Office and the national archives of Mauritius and the Seychelles to unearth thousands of pages of historical and documentary records about the history of Chagos, the expulsion, and its aftermath.²⁵

Back in the United States, I moved from New York to my hometown of Washington, DC, to try to understand the officials responsible for the base and the expulsion. I had no interest in turning them into caricatures, and wanted to dedicate the same anthropological attention and empathy to them that I had focused on the islanders. During more than seven months of concentrated research in 2004 and 2005, and continuing over the next two years, I interviewed more than thirty former and current U.S. Government officials, primarily from the departments of Defense and State and the Navy, as well as journalists, academics, military analysts, and others who were involved in the story or otherwise knowledgeable about the base. ²⁷

Unfortunately, I was unable to speak with some of the highest-ranking and most influential officials involved. Many, including White House official Robert Komer and Admirals Elmo Zumwalt and Arleigh Burke, were deceased. Two, Paul Nitze and Admiral Thomas Moorer, died early in my research before I could request an interview. Others, including Henry Kissinger, did not respond to repeated interview requests.

14 Introduction

After repeatedly attempting to contact Robert McNamara, I was surprised to return to my office one day to find the following voicemail: "Professor Vine. This is Robert McNamara. I don't believe I can help you. At 91, my memory is very, very bad. And I recall almost nothing about Diego Garcia. Thank you."

When I hurriedly called him back and asked if he had any memory of conversations about people on the island, he responded, "None."

When I asked why the Department of Defense would have wanted to remove the Chagossians, he said, "At 91, my memory's bad."

I asked if he could recommend anyone else to speak with. "No," he replied. I asked if he could suggest any other leads. "None," he said. Fumbling around to think what else I could ask, I heard McNamara say quickly, "Thank you very much," and then the click of the connection going dead.

With these kinds of limitations, I balanced my interviews with an analysis of thousands of pages of government documents uncovered in the U.S. National Archives, the Navy archives, the Kennedy and Johnson presidential libraries, the British Public Records Office, and the files of the U.S. and British lawyers representing the Chagossians.²⁸ While the Navy's archives proved a critical resource, all the files from Stu Barber's office responsible for the original base idea had been destroyed.²⁹

While many of the relevant surviving documents were still classified (after 30–40 years), Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests revealed some formerly secret information. However, government agencies withheld hundreds of documents, claiming various FOIA exemptions "in the interest of national defense or foreign relations." Tens of other documents were released to me "in part"; this often meant receiving page after page partially or entirely blank. Britain's "30 year rule" for the automatic release of most classified government documents, by contrast, revealed hundreds of pages of critical material, much of it originally uncovered by the Chagossians' U.K. legal team and a Mauritian investigative reporter and contributing to the 2000 victory.³⁰

Like trying to describe an object you can't actually see, telling the story of Diego Garcia was further complicated by not being able to go to Diego Garcia. The 1976 U.S.-U.K. agreement for the base restricts access "to members of the forces of the United Kingdom and of the United States" and their official representatives and contractors.³¹ A 1992 document explains, "the intent is to restrict visits in order . . . to prevent excessive access to military operations and activities." Visits by journalists have been explicitly banned, making the island something of a "holy grail" for reporters (only technically claimed by the recent ninety-minute visit of President Bush's reporting pool, during which reporters were confined to an airport hangar). In the 1980s, a Time magazine chief offered a "fine case of Bordeaux to the first correspondent who filed a legitimate story from Diego Garcia." ³³³

The U.S.-U.K. agreement does allow visits by approved "scientific parties wishing to carry out research." Indeed scientists, including experts on coral atolls and the Royal Navy Bird Watching Society, have regularly surveyed Diego Garcia and the other Chagos islands. Encouraged, I repeatedly requested permission from both U.S. and U.K. representatives to visit and conduct research on the islanders' former society. After months of trading letters with British officials in 2003 and 2004, I finally received word from Charles Hamilton, the British Indian Ocean Territory administrator, stating that "after careful consideration, we are unable to agree at the present time to a scientific visit involving a survey of the former homes of the Chagossians. I am sorry to have to send you such disappointing news." All my other requests were denied or went unanswered. John Pike described the chance of a civilian visiting Diego Garcia as "about as likely as the sun coming up in the west."

Still, if I had had a yacht at my disposal, I could have joined hundreds of other "yachties" who regularly visit Peros Banhos, Salomon, and other islands in Chagos far from Diego Garcia. (Enterprising journalist Simon Winchester convinced one to take him to Chagos in 1985, even managing to get onto Diego Garcia when his Australian captain claimed her right to safe harbor under the law of the sea. Many yachties today enjoy the "island paradise" for months at a time. They simply pay a fee to the BIOT for the right to stay in the territory and enjoy beachside barbeques by the "impossibly blue" water, parties with BIOT officials, and free range over the islands and the Chagossians' crumbling homes. "Welcome to the B.I.O.T.," a sign reads. "Please keep the island clean and avoid damage to buildings. Enjoy your stay." "36"

Sadly, the Chagossians are far from alone in having been displaced by a military base. As we will see in the story ahead, the U.S. military has exhibited a pattern of forcibly displacing vulnerable peoples to build its military bases. In the past century, most of these cases have taken place outside the United States. Generally those displaced have, like the Chagossians, been small in number, under colonial control, and of non-"white," non-European ancestry. Some of the examples are relatively well known, like those displaced in the Bikini Atoll and Puerto Rico's Vieques Island. Others have, like the Chagossians, received less attention, including the Inughuit of Thule, Greenland, and the more than 3,000 Okinawans displaced to, of all places, Bolivia.

16 Introduction

It is no coincidence that few know about these stories. Few in the United States know that the United States possesses some 1,000 military bases and installations outside the fifty states and Washington, DC, on the sovereign land of other nations. Let me repeat that number again because it's hard to take in: 1,000 bases. On other people's sovereign territory. 1,000 bases.

More than half a century after the end of World War II and the Korean War, the United States retains 287 bases in Germany, 130 in Japan, and 106 in South Korea. There are some 89 in Italy, 57 in the British Isles, 21 in Portugal, and nineteen in Turkey. Other bases are scattered around the globe in places like Aruba and Australia, Djibouti, Egypt, and Israel, Singapore and Thailand, Kyrgyzstan and Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain, and the United Arab Emirates, Crete, Sicily, and Iceland, Romania and Bulgaria, Honduras, Colombia, and Guantánamo Bay, Cuba—just to name a few (see fig. 2.1). Some can still be found in Saudi Arabia and others have recently returned to the Philippines and Uzbekistan, where locals previously forced the closure of U.S. bases. In total, the U.S. military has troops in some 150 foreign nations. Around the world the Defense Department reports having more than 577,519 separate buildings, structures, and utilities at its bases, conservatively valuing its facilities at more than $712 billion.

It's often hard to come up with accurate figures to capture the scope of the base network, because the Pentagon frequently omits secret and even well-known bases—like those in Iraq and Afghanistan—in its own accounting. In Iraq, as President Bush's second term came to an end, the military controlled at least 55 bases and probably well over 100. In trying to negotiate a long-term military agreement with the Iraqi Government, the Bush administration hoped to retain 58 long-term bases in the country as part of a "protracted" presence of at least 50,000 troops, following the South Korean model; originally U.S. officials pressed for more than 200 military facilities. In Afghanistan, the base collection includes sixteen air bases and may run to over eighty in total amid similar Pentagon plans for permanent installations.³⁸

While Pentagon and other officials have been careful never to refer to bases in Iraq and Afghanistan as "permanent," the structures on the ground tell a different story: A 2007 National Public Radio story reported that Balad Air Base near Baghdad, one of five "mega bases" in Iraq, housed some 30,000 troops and 10,000 private contractors in facilities complete with fortified Pizza Hut, Burger King, and Subway outlets and two shopping centers each about the size of a Target or Wal-Mart. "The base is one giant construction project, with new roads, sidewalks, and structures going up across this 16-square-mile fortress in the center of Iraq, all with an eye toward the next few decades," Guy Raz explained. "Seen from the sky at night, the base resembles Las Vegas: While the surrounding Iraqi villages get about 10 hours of electricity a day, the lights never go out at Balad Air Base." 39

If you are anything like me and grew up in the United States, you may have a hard time imagining another nation occupying a military base on your nation's territory—let alone living next to such "simulacrums of suburbia" found the world over. 40 In 2007, Ecuadorian President Rafael Correa offered some insight into this phenomenon when he told reporters that he would only renew the lease on the U.S. military base in Ecuador if the United States agreed to one condition: "They let us put a base in Miami—an Ecuadorian base."

"If there's no problem having foreign soldiers on a country's soil," Correa added, "surely they'll let us have an Ecuadorian base in the United States."

The idea of an Ecuadorian military base in Miami, of a foreign base anywhere in the United States, is unthinkable to most people in the United States. And yet this is exactly what thousands of people in countries around the world live with every day: Military forces from a foreign country living in their cities, building huge military complexes on their lands, occupying their nations. About 95 percent of these foreign bases belong to the United States. Today the United States likely possesses more bases than any nation or people in world history. Not to be confined to the globe alone, the Pentagon is making plans to turn outer space into a base as part of the rapid militarization of space. 42

Growing recognition about the U.S. overseas base network has mirrored a renewed acknowledgment among scholars and pundits, following the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq, that the United States is in fact an empire. ⁴³ With even the establishment foreign policy journal Foreign Affairs declaring, "The debate on empire is back," conversation has centered less on if the United States is an empire and more on what kind of empire it has become. ⁴⁴

Too often, however, the debates on empire have ignored and turned away from the lives of those impacted by empire. Too often analysts turn to abstract discussions of so-called foreign policy realism or macro-level economic forces. Too often, analysts detach themselves from the effects of empire and the lives shaped and all too often damaged by the United States. Proponents of U.S. imperialism in particular willfully ignore the death and destruction caused by previous empires and the U.S. Empire* alike.⁴⁵

18 Introduction

In 1975, the Washington Post exposed the story of the Chagossians' expulsion for the first time in the Western press, describing the people as living in "abject poverty" as a result of what the Post's editorial page called an "act of mass kidnapping." 46 When a single day of congressional hearings followed, the U.S. Government denied all responsibility for the islanders. 47 From that moment onward, the people of the United States have almost completely turned their backs on the Chagossians and forgotten them entirely.

Unearthing the full story of the Chagossians forces us to look deeply at what the United States has done, and at the lives of people shaped and destroyed by U.S. Empire. The Chagossians' story forces us to focus on the damage that U.S. power has inflicted around the world, providing new insight into the nature of the United States as an empire. The Chagossians' story forces us to face those people whom we as citizens of the United States often find it all too easy to ignore, too easy to close out of our consciousness. The Chagossians' story forces us to consider carefully how this country has treated other peoples from Iraq to Vietnam and in far too many other places around the globe.⁴⁸

At the same time, we would be mistaken to treat the U.S. Empire simply as an abstract leviathan. Empires are run by real people. People made the decision to exile the Chagossians, to build a base on Diego Garcia. While empires are complex entities involving the consent and cooperation of millions and social forces larger than any single individual, we would be mistaken to ignore how a few powerful people come to make decisions that have such powerful effects on the lives of so many others thousands of miles away. For this reason, the story that follows is two-pronged and bifocaled: We will explore both sides of Diego Garcia, both sides of U.S. Empire, focusing equally on the lives of Chagossians like Rita Bancoult and the actions of U.S. Government officials like Stu Barber. In the end ^{} Throughout the book I use the term U.S. Empire rather than the more widely recognized American Empire. Although "U.S. Empire" may appear and sound awkward at first, it is linguistically more accurate than "American Empire" and represents an effort to reverse the crasure of the rest of the Americas entailed in U.S. citizens' frequent substitution of America for the United States of America (America consists of all of North and South America). The name of my current employer, American University, is just one example of this pattern: Located in the nation's capital, the school has long touted itself as a "national university" when its name should suggest a hemispheric university. The switch to the less familiar U.S. Empire also represents a linguistic attempt to make visible the fact that the United States is an empire, shaking people into awareness of its existence and its consequences.

we will reflect on how the dynamics of empire have come to bind together Bancoult and Barber, Chagossians and U.S. officials, and how every one of us is ultimately bound up with both.49

To begin to understand and comprehend what the Chagossians have suffered as a result of their exile, we will need to start by looking at how the islanders' ancestors came to live and build a complex society in Chagos. We will then explore the secret history of how U.S. and U.K. officials planned, financed, and orchestrated the expulsion and the creation of the base, hiding their work from Congress and Parliament, members of the media and the world. Next we will look at what the Chagossians' lives have become in exile. While as outsiders it is impossible to fully comprehend what they have experienced, we must struggle to confront the pain they have faced. At the same time, we will see how their story is not one of suffering alone. From their daily struggles for survival to protests and hunger strikes in the streets of Mauritius to lawsuits that have taken them to some of the highest courts in Britain and the United States, we will see how the islanders have continually resisted their expulsion and the power of two empires. Finally, we will consider what we must do for the Chagossians and what we must do about the empire the United States has become.

The story of Diego Garcia has been kept secret for far too long. It must now be exposed.

^{} Those interested in reading more about the book's approach as a bifocaled "ethnography of empire" should continue to the following endnote.

1 CHAPTER

THE ILOIS, THE ISLANDERS

"Laba" is all Rita had to say. Meaning, "out there." Chagossians in exile know immediately that out there means one thing: Chagos.

"Laba there are birds, there are turtles, and plenty of food," she said. "There's a leafy green vegetable . . . called cow's tongue. It's tasty to eat, really good. You can put it in a curry, you can make it into a pickled chut-

"When I was still young, I was a little like a boy. In those times, we went looking" for ingredients for "curries on Saturday. So very early in the morning we went" to another island and came back with our food.

"By canoe?" I asked.

"By sailboat," Rita replied.

Peros Banhos "has thirty-two islands," she explained. "There's English Island, Monpatre Island, Chicken Island, Grand Bay, Little Bay, Diamond, Peter Island, Passage Island, Long Island, Mango Tree Island, Big Mango Tree Island. . . . There's Sea Cow Island," and many more. "I've visited them all. . . ."1

EMPIRES COMING AND GOING

"A great number of vessels might anchor there in safety," were the words of the first naval survey of Diego Garcia's lagoon. The appraisal came not from U.S. officials, but from the 1769 visit to the island by a French lieutenant named La Fontaine. Throughout the eighteenth century, England and France vied for control of the islands of the western Indian Ocean as strategic military bases to control shipping routes to India, where their respective East India companies were battling for supremacy over the spice trade.2

Having occupied Réunion Island (Île Bourbon) in 1642, the French replaced a failed Dutch settlement on Mauritius (renamed Île de France) in 1721. Later they settled Rodrigues and, by 1742, the Seychelles. As with its Caribbean colonies, France quickly shifted its focus from military to commercial interests.³ French settlers built societies on the islands around enslaved labor and, particularly in Mauritius, the cultivation of sugar cane. At first, the French Company of the Indies tried to import enslaved people from the same West African sources supplying the Caribbean colonies. Later the company developed a new slaving trade to import labor from Madagascar and the area of Africa known then as Mozambique (a larger stretch of the southeast African coast than the current nation). Indian Ocean historian Larry Bowman writes that French settlement in Mauritius produced "a sharply differentiated society with extremes of wealth and poverty and an elite deeply committed to and dependent upon slavery."⁴

Chagos, including Peros Banhos and Diego Garcia, remained uninhabited throughout the seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries, serving only as a safe haven and provisioning stop for ships growing familiar with what were sometimes hazardous waters—in 1786, a hydrographer was the victim of a shipwreck. But as Anglo-French competition increased in Europe and spilled over into a fight for naval and thus economic control of the Indian Ocean, Chagos's central location made it an irresistible military and economic target.⁵

France first claimed Peros Banhos in 1744. A year later, the English surveyed Diego Garcia. Numerous French and English voyages followed to inspect other island groups in the archipelago, including Three Brothers, Egmont Atoll, and the Salomon Islands, before Lieutenant La Fontaine delivered his prophetic report.⁶

TWENTY-TWO

Like tens of millions of other Africans transported around the globe between the fifteenth and nineteenth centuries, Rita's ancestors and the ancestors of other Chagossians were brought against their will. Most were from Madagascar and Mozambique and were brought to Chagos in slavery to work on coconut plantations established by Franco-Mauritians.

The first permanent inhabitants of the Chagos Archipelago were likely 22 enslaved Africans. Although we do not know their names, some of today's Chagossians are likely their direct descendants. The 22 arrived around 1783, brought to the island by Pierre Marie Le Normand, an influential plantation owner born in Rennes but who left France for Mauritius at the age of 20.7 Only half a century after the settlement of Mauritius, Le Normand petitioned its colonial government for a concession to settle Diego Garcia. On February 17, 1783, he received a "favourable reply" and "immediately prepared his voyage."

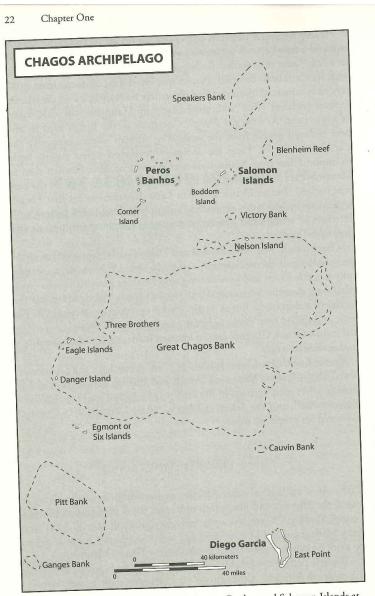

Figure 1.1 The Chagos Archipelago, with Peros Banhos and Salomon Islands at top center, Diego Garcia at bottom right.

Three years later, apparently unaware of Le Normand's arrival, the British East India Company sent a "secret committee" from Bombay to create a provisioning plantation on the atoll. Although they were surprised to find the French settlement, the British party didn't back down. On May 4, 1786, they took "full and ample Possession" of Diego Garcia and Chagos "in the name of our Most Gracious Sovereign George the third of Great Britain, France and Ireland King Defender of the faith etc. And of the said Honourable Company for their use and behoof."

Unable to resist the newcomers, Le Normand left for Mauritius to report the British arrival. When France's Vicompte de Souillac learned of the landing, he sent a letter of protest to Bombay and the warship Minerve to reclaim the archipelago. To prevent an international incident liable to provoke war, the British Council in Bombay sent departure instructions to its landing party. When the Minerve arrived on Diego, its French crew found the British settlement abandoned and its grain and vegetable seeds washed into the sand.¹⁰

While France won this battle, governing Chagos along with the Seychelles as dependencies of Mauritius, its rule proved short-lived. By the turn of the nineteenth century and the Napoleonic Wars, French power in the Indian Ocean had crumbled. The British seized control of the Seychelles in 1794 and Mauritius in 1810. In the 1814 Treaty of Paris, France formally ceded Mauritius, including Chagos and Mauritius's other dependencies (as well as most of France's other island possessions worldwide), to Great Britain. Succeeding the Portuguese, Dutch, and French empires before it, the British would rule the Indian Ocean as a "British lake" for a century and a half, until the emergence of a new global empire.

"IDEALLY SUITED"

Ernestine Marie Joseph Jacques (Diego Garcia). Joseph and Pauline Pona (Peros Banhos). Michel Levillain (Mozambique). Prudence Levillain (Madagascar). Lindor Courtois (India). Theophile Le Leger (Mauritius). Anastasie Legère (Three Brothers). ¹² These are the slave names and birth-places of some of the Chagossians' first ancestors. ¹³ While most arrived from Mauritius, some may have come via the Seychelles and on slaving ships from Madagascar and continental Africa as part of an illegal slave trade taking advantage of Chagos's isolation from colonial authority.¹⁴

Not long after Le Normand established his settlement, hundreds more enslaved laborers began arriving to build a fishing settlement and four more coconut plantations established by Franco-Mauritians Dauquet, Lapotaire, Didier, and the brothers Cayeux. By 1808 there were 100 enslaved people working under Lapotaire alone. By 1813, a similar number were working in Peros Banhos, as settlement spread throughout an archipelago judged to have "a climate ideally suited to the cultivation of coconuts." Less than eight degrees from the equator, Chagos's environment is marked by "the absence of a distinct flowering season and the gigantic size of many native and cultivated trees." The islands are also free from the cyclones (hurricanes) that frequently devastate Mauritius and neighboring islands. Meaning that coconut palms produce bountiful quantities of nuts year round for potential harvest. Hundreds more enslaved Africans were soon establishing new plantations at Three Brothers, Eagle and Salomon Islands and at Six Islands. ¹⁶

THE PLANTATION SYSTEM

Despite being under British colonial rule, Mauritius and its dependencies surprisingly retained their French laws, language, religion, and ways of life—including that of enslaving Africans. "Mauritius became formally British but remained very French," explains one historian.¹⁷

Slavery thus remained the defining feature of life in Chagos from Le Normand's initial settlement until the abolition of slavery in Mauritius and its dependencies in 1835. Enslaved labor built the archipelago's infrastructure, produced its wealth (mostly in coconut oil), and formed the overwhelming majority of inhabitants. Colonial statistics from 1826 illustrate the nature of the islands as absolute slave plantation societies relying on a small number of Franco-Mauritians and free people of African or mixed ancestry to rule much larger populations of enslaved Africans.

The considerable gender imbalance in the islands is also important to note. Although it had generally equalized by the mid-twentieth century, the imbalance may help explain the power and authority Chagossian women came to exercise, as we will see in the story ahead.

Plantation owners at the time described their enslaved workforce as "happy and content" and their treatment as being of "the greatest gentle-

TABLE 1.1 Chagos Population, 1826.

	Male	Female
Noirs/Enslaved Blacks	269	108
Blancs/Whites	8	1
Libres/Free Persons	13	9

Source: Commissioners of Compensation, Copy of Abstract of Biennial Returns of Slaves at Seychelles for the Year 1830, Minor Dependencies for the Year 1832, Port Louis, Mauritius, May 14, 1835, PRO: T 71/643.

ness." The laborers surely disagreed, working "from sunrise to sunset for six days a week" under the supervision of overseers. ¹⁸ However, outside these grueling workdays, each enslaved person was allowed to maintain a "petite plantation"—a small garden—to raise crops and animals and to save small sums of money from their sale. Significantly, these garden plots marked the beginnings of formal Chagossian land tenure. ¹⁹

Society in Chagos had little in common with the Maldivian islands and Sri Lanka several hundred miles away, sharing much more with societies thousands of miles away in the Americas from southern Brazil to the islands of the Caribbean and north to the Mason-Dixon line. What these disparate places (as well as Natal, Zanzibar, Fiji, Queensland, Mauritius, the Seychelles, Réunion, and others) shared was the plantation system.²⁰

With the plantation system of agriculture well established in the sugar fields of Mauritius by the end of the eighteenth century, Franco-Mauritian entrepreneurs applied the same technology in Chagos. Like societies from Bahia to Barbados and Baltimore, Chagos had all the major features of the plantation world: a mostly enslaved labor force, an agriculture-based economy organized around large-scale capitalist plantations supplying specialized products to distant markets, political control emanating from a distant European nation, a population that was generally not self-sustaining and required frequent replenishment (usually by enslaved peoples and, later, indentured laborers), and elements of feudal labor control. Still, Chagos exhibited important particularities: Unlike most of the Americas, society was based on slavery and slavery alone. Similarly, there was no preexisting indigenous population to force into labor and to replace when they were killed off. And perhaps because of its late settlement, the plantations in Chagos never employed European indentured laborers, or engagés.21

Likewise, although Chagos was an agriculture-based economy organized around capitalist plantations supplying a specialized product—copra—to distant markets, the majority of the copra harvest was not produced for European markets but was instead for the Mauritian market. The islands were thus a dependent part of the Mauritian sugar cane economy, which was itself a dependent part of the French and, later, British economies. Put another way, Chagos was a colony of a colony, a dependency of a dependency: Chagos helped meet Mauritius's oil needs to keep its mono-crop sugar industry satisfying Europe's growing sweet tooth.

From the workers' perspective, the plantations were in some ways "as much a factory as a farm," employing the "factory-like organization of agricultural labor into large-scale, highly coordinated enterprises." While some of the work was agricultural in nature, much of it required the repetitive manual processing of hundreds of coconuts a day by women, men, and children in what was essentially an outdoor factory area at the center of each plantation. Still, as in the Caribbean, most of the work was performed on a "task" basis, generally allowing laborers to control the pace and rhythm of their work. Plantation owners—who mostly lived far away in Mauritius—probably viewed the (relatively) less onerous task system as the best way to maintain discipline and prevent greatly feared slave revolts, given Chagos's isolation and the tiny number of Europeans. ²³

Authority over work regimens was carefully—and at times brutally—controlled, helping to shape a rigid color-based plantation hierarchy that mirrored the one in the French Caribbean. This was also undoubtedly related to owners' fears of revolt, which in Mauritius and the Seychelles made "domestic discipline," armed militias, and police the backbone of society.²⁴

Plantation owners came from the grand blanc—literally, "big white"—ruling class and ran the settlements essentially as patriarchal private estates. "Responsibility for the administration of the settlements, before and after emancipation, was vested in the proprietors," explains former governor Scott. "For all practical purposes, however, it was normally delegated to the manager on the spot, the administrateur," who was usually a relative or member of the petit blanc—"little white"—class, running the plantation from the master's house, the grand case.²⁵

Petit blanc or "mulatto" submanagers and other staff recruited to Chagos helped run the islands, and were rewarded with better salaries, housing, and other privileges rarely extended to laborers. The submanagers in turn delivered daily work orders and controlled the workers through a group of commandeurs—overseers—primarily of African descent who were given some privileges and, after emancipation, paid higher wages.

As on slave plantations elsewhere, owners and their subordinates generally ruled largely through fear. Despite the constraints on their lives, some laborers achieved a degree of upward mobility by becoming artisans and performing other specialized tasks. The vast majority of the population were general laborers of African descent at the bottom of the work and status hierarchy in a system that, as in the U.S. South, became engrained in the social order.

CHANGE AND CONTINUITY

Slavery was finally abolished in Mauritius and its dependencies in 1835. After emancipation, a period of apprenticeship continued for about four years. The daily routine of plantation life during and after the apprenticeship period changed according to the dictates of each island's administrator. On some islands, like Diego Garcia, life and conditions changed little. On others, daily work tasks were reduced in accordance with stipulations ordered by officials in Mauritius.²⁷

Following emancipation, plantation owners in Mauritius began recruiting large numbers of Indians to the sugar cane fields as a way to keep labor costs down and replace formerly enslaved laborers leaving the plantations en masse; by century's end, Indians constituted a majority in Mauritius. While plantation owners in Chagos also imported Indian indentured laborers, Indian immigration was relatively light and people of African descent remained in the majority. So, too, Chagos did not experience the large-scale departure of formerly enslaved Africans (in fact, at least some of those previously enslaved on sugar plantations in Mauritius appear to have emigrated to work on Diego Garcia).

This demographic stability, in such contrast to Mauritius, needs explanation: Ultimately it seems to point to a change in the quality of labor relations and the development of a society rooted in the islands. Newly freed Africans and the Indian indentured laborers who joined them massively outnumbered the plantation management of mostly European descent in a setting of enormous isolation. For management, this demographic imbalance and the lack of a militia or police force like the ones in Mauritius and the Seychelles made the threat of an uncontrollable labor revolt frighteningly real. Indeed the islands had a history of periodic labor protest. In one case in 1856, four workers who had been "kidnapped from Cochin" revolted and killed an abusive manager of Six Islands.³⁰ These facts combined with gradual improvements in salaries and workload (especially compared to the brutal work of cutting sugar cane) suggest that despite the continuation of the plantation system after emancipation, the general nature of labor relations probably improved noticeably in favor of the Chagossians. Even before the end of the apprentice period, a colonial investigator charged with supervising apprenticeship conditions found the work to be "of a much milder nature than that which is performed on the Sugar Plantations of Mauritius" and the workers to be "a more comfortable body of people" due "to so much of their own time being employed to their own advantage" (he also credited the archipelago's absence of both outsiders and liquor). 31 In general it appears that Chagossians gradually struck what for a plantation society was a relatively—and I stress the word relatively—good work bargain. Indeed more than a century later, in 1949, a visiting representative of the Mauritian Labour Office commented on the generally "patriarchal" relations between management and labor in Chagos, "dating back to what I imagine would be the slave days—by this I do not imply any oppression but rather a system of benevolent rule with privileges and no rights."32

A "CULTURE DES ÎLES"

By the middle of the nineteenth century, a succession of laws increasingly protected workers from the continuation of any slavery-like conditions. Around 1860, wages were the equivalent of 10 shillings a month, a dollop of rum, and a "twist of tobacco if times were good." Rations, which were treated as part of wages, totaled 11–14 pounds a week of what was usually rice. Two decades later, wages had increased to 16 shillings a month for male coconut laborers and 12 shillings a month for women. Some women working in domestic or supervisory jobs received more. Men working the coconut oil mills earned 18–20 shillings a month and had higher status than "rat-catchers, stablemen, gardeners, maize planters, toddy-makers and pig- and fowl-keepers." A step higher in the labor hierarchy, blacksmiths, carpenters, assistant carpenters, coopers, and junior commandeurs made 20–32 shillings.³³

Management often paid bonuses in the form of tobacco, rum, toddy, and, for some, coconut oil. Housing was free, and at East Point the manager "introduced the system of allowing labourers to build their own houses, if they so opted, the management providing all the materials." The system apparently proved a success, creating "quite superior dwellings," with wood frames and thatched coconut palm leaves, and "a sense of proprietorship" for the islanders.³⁴ By 1880, the population had risen to around 760.

"As a general rule the men enjoy good health, and seem contented and happy, and work cheerfully," reported a visiting police magistrate. Fish was "abundant on nearly all the Islands, and on most of them also pumpkins, bananas, and a fruit called the 'papaye,' grow pretty freely." Ripe coconuts were freely available upon request. Anyone could use boats and nets for fishing. Many kept gardens and generally management encouraged chicken and pig raising.

Although the exploitation and export of the coconut—in the form of copra, oil, whole coconuts, and even husks and residual poonac solids from the pressing of oil—dominated life in Chagos, the islands also produced and traded in honey, guano, timber, wooden ships, pigs, salt fish, maize and some vegetable crops, wooden toys, model boats, and brooms and brushes made from coconut palms. Guano—bird feces used as fertilizer—in particular became an increasingly important export for the Mauritian sugar fields in the twentieth century, reaching one-third of Diego's exports by 1957.³⁶

For about six years in the 1880s, two companies attempted to turn Diego Garcia into a major coal refueling port for steamer lines crossing the Indian Ocean. About the same time, the British Navy became interested in obtaining a site on the island.³⁷ The Admiralty never followed through, and the companies soon closed as financial failures, having faced the "promiscuous plundering of coconuts" by visiting steamship passengers and revolt from a group of imported English, Greek, Italian, Somali, Chinese, and Mauritian laborers—which required the temporary establishment of a Mauritian police post.³⁸

By the turn of the twentieth century, a distinct society was well established in Chagos. The population neared 1,000 and there were six villages on Diego Garcia alone, served by a hospital on each arm of the atoll. While conditions varied to some extent from island to island and from administrator to administrator within each island group, growing similarities became the rule. Chagos Kreol, a language related to the Kreols in Mauritius and the Seychelles, emerged among the islanders. People born in Chagos became collectively known by the Kreol name Ilois. Most considered themselves Roman Catholic—a chapel was built at East Point in 1895, followed by a church and chapels on other islands—although religious and spiritual practices and beliefs of African, Malagasy, and Indian origins remain present to this day. A distinct "culture des îles"—culture of the islands—had developed, fostered by the islands' isolation. "It is a system peculiar to the Lesser Dependencies," Scott would later write, "and it may be fairly described as indigenous and spontaneous in its emergence."

^{*} Many today prefer the term Chagossian. In exile, the older name has often been used as a slur against the

Figure 1.2 View of East Point village, Diego Garcia, from the lagoon, 1968. Photo courtesy of Kirby Crawford.

KUTO DEKOKE

Most mornings, Rita rose for work at 4 a.m. "At four o'clock in the morning, I got up. I made tea for the children, cleaned the house everywhere. At seven o'clock I went for the call to work."

Each morning, she said, the manager gave work orders to the commandeurs, who delivered them to other Chagossians. There were many jobs: cleaning the camp, cutting straw for the houses, harvesting the coconuts, drying the coconuts, work for the manager and his assistant, work at the hospital, child care. Most men worked picking coconuts, 500 or more a day, removing the fibrous husk with the help of a long, spearlike pike dekoke knife, planted in the ground. This left the small hard nut within the coconut, which others transported to the factory center. There, like most other women, Rita shelled the interior nut, digging the flesh out with a specialized coconut-shelling knife, the kuto dekoke.

"I put it on the ground. I hit it. It splits. I have my knife. I scoop it in quickly, and I dump it over there: the shell on one side, the coconut flesh on the other," Rita explained.

Often she would complete the day's task of shelling 1,200 coconuts by 10:00 or 10:30 in the morning—meaning a rate of about one nut every 10 seconds. The women sat in groups, children often at their sides, amid hills of coconuts, cracked emptied shells, and bright white coconut flesh. Their hands were a concentrated swirl of movement—picking the nut, hitting it once, scoop, scoop with the knife between the flesh and the shell, flesh flying in one direction, empty shell in another. And again, pick, hit, scoop, scoop, flesh, flesh, shell. And again, pick, hit, scoop, scoop, flesh, flesh, shell. And again.

"Then there are other people who take the flesh," Rita said, "to dry it" in the sun. "When it's dry, they gather it up and put it in the kalorifer," a heated shed fueled by burning coconut husks. There the flesh was fully dried, producing copra to make oil. Some of the copra was crushed on the spot in a donkey-powered oil mill. Most, Rita explained, went "to Mauritius—was sent all over."42

"THINGS WILL BE OVERTURNED"

On a seemingly ordinary Monday morning in August 1931, when Rita Bancoult was ten, Peros Banhos commandeur Oscar Hilaire gave his usual work orders to fifteen Chagossian men to go to Petit Baie island for a week to gather and husk 3,000 coconuts each. The fifteen refused the order.⁴³ Two days later they finally left for Petit Baie, but returned the same day, refusing to work any further. For the remainder of the week, the men went on strike and didn't report to work.

The following Saturday, nine islanders confronted the assistant manager, Monsieur Dagorne, about the size of a task of weeding he was giving some women. Two days later, a group again confronted Dagorne and demanded that he reduce the women's tasks. This time he complied.

A few hours later, according to a police magistrate's eventual report, one woman assaulted another "for having advised her fellow workers... to obey the orders of the staff and to refuse to obey those who wished to create a disorder on the estate." When the victim went to complain to the head manager, Jean Baptiste Adam, a crowd followed, yelling "threatening language" at Adam. 44

The crowd then turned and hurried into the kalorifer. There they ripped from the wall a rod, the length of a French fathom, used to measure lengths of rope made by elderly, infirm women working from their homes and paid by the length. They rushed back to Monsieur Adam with the rod and protested that it was a "false measure." 45 Moments later they returned to the kalorifer and placed a new measure on the wall—this one about 8 French inches shorter.

32

The next morning, the same group showed up at the center of the plantation and told the women to stop shelling coconuts. The group threatened to stop all work if Monsieur Adam did not add an extra laborer to the workforce at the kalorifer. The manager agreed to the change. Later they forced him to reduce the women's weeding and cleaning tasks, and still, all but two of the women walked off the job. The men told the manager they would refuse to unload and load the next cargo ship to arrive at Peros unless he and Dagorne were on the ship when it returned to Mauritius.

The insurgency continued into September. "Adam had lost all authority over these men," the police magistrate later reported. After a Chagossian drowned to death while sailing from Corner Island to another islet to collect coconuts, his partner and a crowd of supporters entered the manager's office, barred the exits, and forced him to sign a document granting her a widow's pension. They also forced him to give her free coffee, candles, sugar, and other goods from the company store to observe the islanders' traditional mourning rites. 46

Over the next two weeks, leaders of the insurgency twice made Dagorne buy them extra wine from the company store. One leader, Etienne Labiche, again protested the task assigned to some women. "You are going on again because I am remaining quiet," Labiche challenged the managers in Chagos Kreol, according to the police magistrate. "We shall see when the boat arrives. Sa boule-la pour devirer." Things will be overturned. Within minutes of issuing the challenge, the islanders had left work for the day. Days later Labiche and some supporters forced Dagorne to reveal that he was living with a mistress. Adam suspended Dagorne on the spot for "scandalous conduct."

Labor unrest continued into a second month, with Labiche, Willy Christophe, and others forcing the manager to lower the price of soap at the company store when they suspected price gouging and Adam was unable to show them a price invoice. During the protest a few approached the store's back door. The island's pharmacist pulled out a revolver and "threatened to blow out the brains of the first man who tried to enter the shop." 48

When two weeks later the cargo ship Diego finally came within sight on its voyage from Mauritius, the blast of a conch shell reverberated through the air as a signal among the islanders. Manager Adam went aboard the ship and returned to shore minutes later with his brother, the captain of the Diego. "The whole of the population met them at the landing stage," the magistrate's report recounts, "uttering loud shouts, and demanding to see the invoice" listing the prices for articles sold at the shop. The crowd accompanied Adam and his brother to the manager's house "shouting and threatening, climbed up the balcony stairs, and even into his dining room." There Adam unsealed the invoice. Someone in the crowd looked over Adam's shoulder and read the prices aloud. "Having noticed a mention in the official letter about a case of tobacco (plug) and the rise in the price . . . the crowd demanded the return of the case to Mauritius."

At the next morning's call for work, none of the men appeared. When the captain of the Diego asked them why they were not coming to work, they told him they would only work if his brother and Dagorne were sent back to Mauritius. A standoff ensued. The ship eventually left with its cargo aboard, but with Manager Adam and Dagorne still in Peros.

Three months and two days after the beginning of the insurgency, Mauritian magistrate W. J. Hanning arrived in the atoll along with an armed guard of ten police constables, two police inspectors, and two noncommissioned officers. Hanning and Police Inspector Fitzgibbon charged, convicted, and sentenced 36 Chagossian men and women for offenses including "larceny soap," "larceny rope measure," "extortion of document," "coalition to prevent unloading cargo," and "coalition to prevent work." Two were convicted of "wounds & blows." Punishment for the charges of larceny and extortion ranged from three to twelve months' hard labor. Labiche received a total of 30 months' hard labor; others got up to 36 months. Hanning sent three commandeurs back to Mauritius and mandated the reading of the names of the convicted and their punishments throughout the rest of Chagos and the other Mauritian dependencies.⁵⁰

"I have the honour to state that quiet has been restored at Peros," Magistrate Hanning wrote. Although he thought the insurgents' grievances "imaginary" and found the islanders "economically many times better off than the Mauritian labourer," he concluded his report by calling on the plantation owners to "exercise some leniency" over markups on prices for "articles of necessity" sold at the company store. 51

GROWING CONNECTIONS

In 1935, new owners in Chagos established the first regular steamship connection between Mauritius and Chagos after completing the consolidation of ownership over the various plantations, which had begun in the 1880s. Previously the islands sent copra, oil, and other goods to Mauritius and received supplies on twice-a-year boats. The new four-times-a-year steamship system decreased travel times significantly and provided a regular connection between Diego Garcia and the northern islands of Peros Banhos and Salomon, over 100 nautical miles away. Peros to Salomon transportation was by sailing ship and later motorboat. Transportation within each group and around Diego Garcia's lagoon was generally by small, locally built sailboats, and later by motorboats. News from the outside world came primarily from illustrated magazines and other reading materials supplied by the transport vessels visiting Chagos.

Figure 1.3 Schoolchildren in Chagos, 1964. Photographer unknown.

At the beginning of the twentieth century, Chagos had been so isolated that at the start of World War I, management on Diego Garcia supplied the German battleship Emden with provisions before learning that Britain and its colonies were already at war with Germany. By contrast, thirty years later during World War II, Diego Garcia became a small landing strip for Royal Air Force reconnaissance aircraft and a base for a small contingent of Indian Army troops. At war's end, the troops went home, leaving behind a wrecked Catalina seaplane that became a favorite playground for children.

By the mid-twentieth century, Chagos had moved from relative isolation to increasing connections with Mauritius, other islands in the Indian Ocean, and the rest of the world. Copra and coconut oil exports were sold in Mauritius and the Seychelles, and through them in Europe, South Africa, India, and Israel. Wireless communications at local meteorological stations connected the main islands with Mauritius and the Seychelles. Shortwave radios allowed reception of broadcasts from at least as far as the Seychelles and Sri Lanka. 52

The Mauritian colonial government started showing increasing interest in the welfare of Chagos's inhabitants and its economy. Specialists sent by the government investigated health and agricultural conditions. With the help of their reports, the government established nurseries in each island group, schools, and a regular garbage and refuse removal system reported to be better than that in rural Mauritius. Sa Water came from wells and from rain catchment tanks. Small dirt roads traversed the main islands, and there were a handful of motorbikes, trucks, jeeps, and tractors.

"NOTHING WE HAD TO BUY"

By the 1960s, everyone in Chagos was guaranteed work on the plantations and pensions upon retirement.⁵⁴ The vast majority of Chagossians still worked as coconut laborers. A few male laborers rose to become foremen and commandeurs, and a few women were also commandeurs. Other men became artisans working as blacksmiths, bakers, carpenters, masons, mechanics, and in other specialized positions.

Wages remained low and paternalistic: Men harvesting coconuts earned about £2 a month, while women shelling the nuts earned less than half that. Artisans, foremen, and commandeurs earned six times what female laborers earned, and those in privileged "staff" positions earned considerably more. No matter the position or the gender, workers' monthly rations included about £3 worth of rice or flour, coconut oil, salt, lentils, fish, wine, and occasionally vegetables and pork. Work benefits also included construction materials, free firewood, regular vacations—promne—with free passage to Mauritius, burial services, and free health care and medicines. Workers continued to occupy and receive land near their homes. Many used the land for gardens, raising crops like tomatoes, squash, chili peppers, eggplant, citrus and other fruits, and for keeping cows, pigs, goats, sheep, chickens, and ducks.

After the day's work task was completed, generally around midday, Chagossians could work overtime, tend to their gardens and animals, fish, or hunt for other seafood, including red snapper, tuna, and other fish, crab, prawns, crayfish, lobster, octopus, sea cucumber, and turtles.

"Whatever time it was, you went to your house and your day marched on," Rita recounted. "A commandeur passed by, asked you if you were going to do overtime. So then you went to work for another day's work. . . . If you didn't go do it, no one made you.

"But," she continued, "our money, at the end of the month we got it, we just put it in our account. And what we earned from overtime, that we used for buying our weekly supplies, understand?"

On payday people went to the store and "the women would go to buy a little clothing. . . . That was the only thing we had to buy: our clothing, cloth to make clothing, sugar, milk.

"Apart from that, there was nothing we had to buy. Apart from cigarettes, which if you smoked, you needed to buy. There was beer at the shop to buy. There was rum to buy, but we made our own drink," Rita added, referring to Chagossians' own fermented drinks of dhal-based baka and palm toddy kalu.

"Then, you know Saturday laba," Rita explained, "Saturday what we did, with our coconut leaf brooms, we swept the court of the manager's house, everywhere around the chapel, the hospital, everywhere. When we finished that, then we'd go to the house. Around nine o'clock, we finished and left. Then we had Saturday, Sunday to ourselves. Monday, then we went back to hard work."

But on Saturday "the house, all the family, everyone was there. We had some fun. . . . We had an accordion, later we had a gramophone. . . . On Saturday, Saturday night, we had our sega."

Although the long-standing popular institution featuring singing, playing, and dancing to sega music is found on islands throughout the southwest Indian Ocean, Chagos and most other islands had their own distinctive sega traditions. In Chagos, segas were an occasion for entire island communities to gather. On Saturday nights everyone met around a bonfire in a clearing. Under the moon and stars, drummers on the goat hide–covered ravanne would start tapping out a slow, rhythmic beat. Others would begin singing, dancing, and joining in on accordions, triangles, and other percussion and string instruments.

The sega allowed islanders to sing old traditional songs or their own originals, which were often improvised. Most segas followed a call-and-response pattern, with soloists singing verses, supported by dancers, musicians, and onlookers who joined in a chorus, providing frequent shouts, whistles, and outbursts of encouragement. In Chagos, segas were filled with themes of love, jealousy, separation, and loss. Much as in the blues and other musical traditions, the sega was an important mode of expression and a way to share hardships and gain support from the community.

"The segas," Rita recounted, "at night, people opened their doors, everyone came out, beat the drum, sang, danced. And we carried on until early in the morning. Early in the morning, six o'clock. . . . six o'clock, until seven o'clock too, and then even the old ones went home."

I asked Rita if she danced to the sega. She said, "Yes."

I asked if she sang sega. She said, "Yes."

"What did you sing?" I asked.

"Everything. Those that I knew, I sang. I know how to sing sega very well. . . . I'm full of segas that I know," said Rita. And then she started to sing . . .

My father, you're yelling "Attention passengers! Embark passengers!" This madame, her husband's going but she's staying.

Crying, madame, enough crying madame. On the beach, you're crying so much, The tears from your eyes are drowning the passengers list.

Crying, madame, even if you cry on the beach, even if you cry Capitan L'Anglois isn't going to turn the boat around to come get you.

O li la e, O la e, O li la la. O li le le, O li le la la.

L'Anglois answer me, L'Anglois, my friend Answer me, L'Anglois, this sega that you left down in Chagos.

"FRENCH COASTAL VILLAGES"

"The people of Île du Coin were exceptionally proud of their homes," Governor Scott wrote of Rita's Peros Banhos after World War II. "The gardens usually contained an arrangement of flower-beds and a vegetable patch, almost always planted with pumpkins and loofahs trained over rough trellis-work, with a few tomato plants and some greens." 56

By that time Salomon had a large timber industry for export and was known as the home of Chagos's boat building industry, widely renowned in the southwest Indian Ocean. Three Brothers, Eagle Island, and Six Islands had been settled for most of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries before the plantation company moved their inhabitants to Peros and Diego to consolidate production. Eagle's population rose to as many as 100 and was "regarded by its inhabitants," according to Scott, "as a real home," with a "carefully tended" children's cemetery and evocatively named places like Love Apple Crossing, Ceylon Square, and Frigates' Pool. 57

Looking on "from the seaward end of the pier," Scott compared Diego Garcia's capital East Point to a French coastal village: "The architecture, the touches of old-fashioned ostentation in the château and its relation to the church; the disposition of trees and flowering shrubs across the ample green; the neighbourly way in which white-washed stores, factories and workshops, shingled and thatched cottages, cluster round the green; the lamp standards along the roads and the parked motor-lorries: all contribute towards giving the village this quality."

Clearly charmed by the islands, Scott continued, "The association of East Point with a synthesis of small French villages, visited or seen on canvas, was strengthened by the warm welcome of the islanders, since their clothes and merry bearing, and particularly the small, fluttering flags of the school-children, were wholly appropriate to a fête in a village so devised."58

"Funny little places! Indeed they are. But how lovely!" wrote Scott's predecessor as governor, Sir Hilary Blood. "Coconut palms against the bluest of skies, their foliage blown by the wind into a perfect circle; rainbow spray to the windward where the South-East Trades pile in the Indian Ocean up on the reefs; in the sheltered bays to the leeward the sun strikes through shallow water to the coral, and emerald-green, purple, orange, all the rich colours of the world, follow each other across the warm sea," glowed Sir Hilary. "Its beauty is infinite." ³⁹

A WARNING

In 1962, ownership of the islands changed hands, purchased by a Mauritian-Seychellois conglomerate calling itself Chagos-Agalega Ltd. Around the same time, Chagossians saw the introduction of a more flexible labor supply revolving around single male laborers from the Seychelles, as well as the "drift" of permanent inhabitants from Chagos to Mauritius, drawn by the allure of Mauritius's "pavements and shop-windows, the cinemas and football matches, the diversity of food and occupation." Scott compared the movement to the migration of people in Great Britain from villages to cities after World War I, but emphasized, "it is still only a drift." 60

On the eve of the expulsion that no one in Chagos could have anticipated, Mauritian historian Auguste Toussaint wrote, "The insularity of this archipelago is total and, in this regard, Chagos differs from the Mascarenes and the Seychelles, which are linked with the rest of the world. The conditions of life there are quite specialized and even, believe me, unique."

"The life that I had, compared to what I am experiencing now, David. All the time, I will think about my home because there I was well nourished and I didn't eat anything preserved or stored. We ate everything fresh," Rita told me.

"Doctors know that when we left the islands—they know—your health here isn't the same. Here, we eat frozen food all the time. . . . But laba, no. Even if something is only three or four days old, it isn't the same as fresh, David. . . . There we ate everything fresh."

"There, I tell you, you didn't have strokes, you didn't have diabetes. Only rarely did an old person die. A baby, maybe once a year, an infant might die at birth, that's it. Here, every day you hear about—I'm tired of hearing about death."

"Yes," I said softly.

"It's not the same, David...." Rita continued, "I—how can I say this—I didn't leave there because the island closed.... I didn't realize" that the islands were being closed down. "And then I had a little girl named Noellie."

Writing in 1961, Governor Scott concluded his book with a sympathetic (if paternalistic and colonialist) description of the Chagossians. In it, one hears a chilling warning from one who as governor of Mauritius may well have known about developing plans aimed at realizing Lieutenant La Fontaine's original vision for harboring a "great number" of vessels in Diego Garcia's lagoon:

It must also be recognized, however, that ignorance of the way of life of the islanders might open the way to attempts to jerk them too rapidly into more highly organized forms of society, before they are ready. They have never been hurried. Their environment has probably inoculated them with an intolerance towards hurry. . . . This is far from being a plea to make the Lesser Dependencies a kind of nature reserve for the preservation of the anachronistic. It is, however, very definitely a plea for full understanding of the islanders' unique condition, in order to ensure that all that is wholesome and expansive in the island societies is preserved. 62

"MAINTAINING THE FICTION"

So far we have seen how officials were worried that despite the advantages of overseas bases for controlling large territories, bases also carry with them significant risks. The most serious, as Stu Barber realized, is the possibility that a host nation will evict its guest from a base. There is also the danger that for political or other reasons a host will make a base temporarily unavailable during a crisis. During the lead-up to the most recent invasion of Iraq, for example, Turkey's Islamist ruling party refused to allow the United States use of its territory for a large troop deployment, though it permitted the basing of warplanes and the use of its airspace. In most cases, guest nations are forced to negotiate continually for a variety of base rights with their hosts.

The other main risk facing bases on foreign soil is that posed by the people outside a base's gates. As recent U.S. experience in Saudi Arabia, South Korea, and Okinawa has shown, foreign bases can become targets of attacks and lightning rods for local protest and criticism about foreign intrusion and imperialism.¹ Worst of all, the military fears outright revolt against a base, or that locals could press claims to self-determination before the United Nations and thus threaten the life of the base. This was of special concern for U.S. officials during an era of rising nationalism and anti-imperialism in Africa and Asia.² U.S. military officials also worry that local populations pose risks of espionage, security breaches, and uncontrollable sexual and romantic liaisons between troops and their neighbors.

In short, soldiers and diplomats view local peoples as the source of troubles, headaches, and work that distracts the military from its primary missions. If civilian workers are needed as service personnel, importing outsiders without local ties or rights, who can be controlled and sent home at will, is typically preferred.

For these reasons, in the eyes of soldiers and diplomats, a base free of any nonmilitary population is the best kind of base. For these reasons, after World War II, U.S. officials increasingly looked for bases located in relatively unpopulated areas.³ The Strategic Island Concept was premised on the threat to bases posed by rising anti-Western sentiment and the search for people-less bases. With the islanders scheduled for removal from Diego Garcia, military planners were thrilled at the idea of a base with no civilian population within almost 500 miles. U.S. officials and their British counterparts wanted total control over the island and the entire archipelago without the slightest possibility of outside interference—be it from foreign politicians or local inhabitants.

Diego Garcia was attractive once it became British sovereign territory precisely because it was not subject to, as one Navy official explains, "political restrictions of the type that had shackled or even terminated flexibility at foreign bases elsewhere." The "special relationship" between the United States and the United Kingdom ensured the U.S. military near carte blanche (pun intended) use of the island.

The priorities of the U.S. and U.K. governments were clear: maintaining complete political and military control over the islands; retaining the unfettered ability to remove any island populations by force; and assuming an intentional disregard for the rights of inhabitants. The U.S. Government wanted unencumbered freedom to do what it wished with a group of "sparsely populated" islands irrespective of the treatment owed to the people of dependent territories. In simplest terms, the U.S. Government wanted the Chagossians removed because officials wanted to ensure complete political and military control over Diego Garcia and the entire archipelago.

PLANNING THE REMOVALS

Four days after the government of the United Kingdom created the British Indian Ocean Territory in November 1965, the British Colonial Office sent the following instructions to the newly established BIOT administration, headquartered in the Seychelles: "Essential that contingency planning for evacuation of existing population from Diego Garcia . . . should begin at once." 5

While planning between the British and U.S. governments had been underway since at least 1964, officials began to plan the removals in earnest after the creation of the BIOT. British officials again faced the untidy problem of how to get rid of the Chagossians, given UN rules on decolonization and the treatment due permanent inhabitants of colonial territories. In a 1966 memorandum, Secretary of State for the Colonies Francis Pakenham proposed simply rejecting "the basic principle set out in Article 73" of the UN Charter "that the interests of the inhabitants of the territory are paramount." "The legal position of the inhabitants would be greatly simplified from our point of view—though not necessarily from theirs," another official suggested, "if we decided to treat them as a floating population." They would claim that the BIOT had no permanent inhabitants and "refer to the people in the islands as Mauritians and Seychellois."

A Company of the Comp

Another official, Alan Brooke-Turner, feared that members of the UN Committee of Twenty-Four on Decolonization might demand the right to visit the BIOT, jeopardizing the "whole aim of the BIOT." Brooke-Turner suggested issuing documents showing that the Chagossians and other workers were "belongers" of Mauritius or the Seychelles and only temporary residents in the BIOT. "This device, though rather transparent," he wrote, "would at least give us a defensible position to take up in the Committee of Twentyfour."

"This is all fairly unsatisfactory," a colleague responded in a handwritten note a few days later. "We detach these islands—in itself a matter which is criticised. We then find, apart from the transients, up to 240 'ilois' whom we propose either to resettle (with how much vigour of persuasion?) or to certify, more or less fraudulently, as belonging somewhere else. This all seems difficult to reconcile with the 'sacred trust' of Art. 73, however convenient we or the US might find it from the viewpoint of defence. It is one thing to use 'empty real estate'; another to find squatters in it and to make it empty."

A response came from Sir Paul Gore-Booth, Permanent Under-Secretary in the Foreign Office: "We must surely be very tough about this. The object of the exercise was to get some rocks which will remain ours; there will be no indigenous population except seagulls who have not yet got a Committee (the Status of Women Committee does not cover the rights of Birds)."9

Below Gore-Booth's note, one of his colleagues, D. A. Greenhill (later Baron of Harrow), penned back, "Unfortunately along with the Birds go some few Tarzans or Men Fridays whose origins are obscure, and who are being hopefully wished on to Mauritius etc. When this has been done, I agree we must be very tough." 10 ^{*} U.K. and U.S. documents offer widely varying, and mostly inaccurate, estimates of the numbers of Chagossians. In fact, there were probably 1,000–1,500 in Chagos and at least 250–500 living in Mauritius at this time.

92 Chapter Five

British officials eventually settled on a policy, as Foreign Office legal adviser Anthony Aust proposed, to "maintain the fiction that the inhabitants of Chagos are not a permanent or semi-permanent population."

"We are able to make up the rules as we go along," Aust wrote. They would simply represent the Chagossians as "a floating population" of "transient contract workers" with no connection to the islands."

GRADUAL DEPOPULATION

Following the signing of the 1966 agreement, British officials moved to purchase the islands in the BIOT that were privately owned. After conveniently appointing themselves as the legislature for the new colony, British ministers passed "BIOT Ordinance No. 1 of 1967," allowing for the compulsory acquisition of land within the territory. In March 1967, the United Kingdom bought Chagos from Chagos-Agalega Ltd. for £660,000. 12

The next month the British Government leased the islands back to Chagos-Agalega to continue running the islands on its behalf. Until this point, Chagossians could, as they had been accustomed since emancipation, leave Chagos for regular vacations or medical treatment in Mauritius and return to Chagos as they wished. After May 1967, 13 the BIOT administration ordered Chagos-Agalega to prevent Chagossians, like Rita Bancoult's family, from returning to Chagos. When, at the end of 1967, one of Chagos-Agalega's parent companies, Moulinie & Co., took over management, it also agreed to serve as the United Kingdom's agent in Chagos and prevent the entry of anyone without BIOT consent. Like Rita, Chagossian after Chagossian appearing at the steamship company in Mauritius for return passage was turned away and told, "Your island has been sold."

By February 1968, Chagossians in Mauritius had begun to protest their banning to the Mauritian Government. Mauritian officials asked Moulinie & Co. to allow their return on the next ship to the islands. When Paul Moulinie, Moulinie & Co.'s director, asked BIOT officials if they would allow some Chagossians to return, they refused. The company's steamer, the M.V. Mauritius, left on its next voyage for Chagos with no Chagossians aboard.

Later in 1968, with labor running low on the plantations, Moulinie & Co. requested permission from BIOT authorities to bring some Chagossians back from Mauritius. Amid ongoing consultations with U.S. officials, BIOT authorities denied the request. British officials understood, as one wrote, "if we accept any returning Ilois, we must also accept responsibility for their ultimate resettlement." ¹⁶ To keep the plantations running at a "basic maintenance level," the BIOT administration allowed Moulinie & Co. to replace the stranded Chagossians with imported Seychellois workers. ¹⁷

DETERIORATING CONDITIONS

Back in Chagos, BIOT administrator John Todd found that "the islands have been neglected for the past eighteen months, due to uncertainty as to their future." With military talks ongoing and the start of base construction uncertain, the BIOT and its agents gradually reduced services on the islands, making only basic maintenance repairs to keep the plantations running.

Beginning in 1965 with the creation of the BIOT, Chagos-Agalega began importing three-month stocks of food rather than the six-month stocks ordered previously. This left staple supplies of rice, flour, lentils, milk, and other goods lower than normal, making Chagossians increasingly reliant on fish and their own produce to meet food needs.¹⁹

After 1967 (and perhaps as early as late 1965) medical and school staff began leaving the islands. The midwife at the hospital in Peros Banhos left Chagos sometime before August 1968. She was not replaced, leaving only a single nurse at the hospital. Around the same time, in 1967, the school in Peros Banhos closed due to the lack of a teacher. In the Salomon Islands, the midwife departed during the first half of 1969, leaving a single nurse employed there as well. Salomon's teacher left sometime before July 1970, and the school there closed.

At first Chagos-Agalega neglected the islands to avoid making capital investments on plantations it knew the BIOT might soon shut down. After the company sold the islands and gave up its lease, the BIOT institutionalized the neglect in the contract Moulinie & Co. signed to manage the islands: No improvements of more than Rs2,000 (around $420 at the time) could be made without BIOT permission.²³

STRANDED IN MAURITIUS

With conditions worsening, some Chagossians left for Mauritius, with hopes that life in Chagos would improve and allow their return. Others left as usual for vacations or medical treatment. Some Chagossians report being tricked or coerced into leaving Chagos with the award of an unscheduled vacation in Mauritius. ²⁴ When the new arrivees and other Chagossians in Mauritius attempted to book their return passage, they, like their predecessors, were again refused. Because there was no telephone service in Chagos and because mail service between Mauritius and Chagos had been suspended, news of Chagossians being stranded in Mauritius did not reach those in the archipelago. By 1969, there were at least 356 Chagossians already in exile. ²⁵

94 Chapter Five

This growing number found themselves having lost their jobs, separated from their homes and their land, with almost all of their possessions and property still in Chagos. Most were separated from family members left behind. All were confused about their future, about whether they would be allowed to return to their homes, and about their legal status in Mauritius.

The islanders also found themselves in a country that was highly unstable after gaining its independence in March 1968. Just after independence, riots between Afro-Mauritians and Indo-Mauritian Muslims broke out in many of the poor neighborhoods where Chagossians were living and continued through most of 1968.

Meanwhile, unemployment in Mauritius was over 20 percent. ²⁶ British experts warned that the island was a Malthusian disaster in the making and would soon lack the resources to feed and support its rapidly growing population. A secret British telegram acknowledged "the near impossibility of [Chagossians] finding suitable employment. There is no Copra industry into which they could be absorbed." The result was that most were left, as another British official put it, languishing "on the beach." ²⁸

As one Chagossian explained to me in 2004, life was turned completely upside down. Suddenly, "Chagossien dan dife, nu de lipie briye"—Chagossians were in the fire, with both our feet burning.

"LIKE QUESTIONING APPLE PIE"

As Paul Nitze's staff member Robert Murray recalled, the British "relieved us of a lot of problems. I mean, we didn't have to think through" the question of the removals anymore. "We didn't have to decide how we were going to manage our force relative to the local population, because there wasn't a local population."

I asked Murray if there were discussions about the fate of the Chagossians.

There were, he said, but "it was something the British thought they could manage. We didn't, we didn't try to get ourselves involved in it. Unless Kitchen and State did. We had the practical interest in having the base wind the British said that they could manage the transition. And they went about it and some of it was legal and some of it was otherwise. They were doing whatever they were doing. To the best of my knowledge they weren't consulting with us on the—now maybe that's not true, but I don't remember it anyway."

"And your sense was that you wanted to leave that to them and it was something you didn't particularly look into, or—" I asked before Murray interrupted.

"Yeah, we wanted to leave it to the British, I think, to manage that transition of the people and the sovereignty. We saw that as their responsibility. It was their island. . . . We personally saw, in Defense, no need or opportunity for us to inject ourselves—at least that's how I saw it at the time."

Murray's memory of the Chagossians reflects a striking consistency in former officials' responses when I asked what they remembered thinking about the Chagossians. Almost all remembered spending little time thinking about the islanders. The people were, as State Department official James Noyes put it, a "nitty gritty" detail that they never examined. Or as another said, they were something to which officials turned a "blind eye." The removal was a "fait accompli . . . a given" never requiring any thought.

I asked former State Department official George Vest if he disagreed in any ways with the Diego policy.

"I didn't have that deep a sense, [that] deep a feeling about it," he explained. "There was never any conflict. My attitude, which I expressed, was what I call an inner internal marginal attitude. I accepted the premises which led us to do what we were doing there without any real questioning."

That he and the United States were doing good in the world, Vest and others took for granted. Noyes said, "It was taken as a given good."

Indeed, Noyes explained that by the time he arrived at the State Department in 1970, there was no policy analysis about Diego Garcia because the base was treated as already being in place. There was no questioning of the British about "What are you guys doing with the natives?" he said. "It was an accepted part of the scenery."

"It was—the question, the ethical question of the workers and so on," Noyes said hesitatingly, "simply wasn't, wasn't in the spectrum. It wasn't discussed. No one realized, I don't think . . . the human aspects of it. Nobody was there or had been there, or was close enough to it, so. It was like questioning apple pie or something."

THE WHIZ KIDS

With the population already gone in the minds of most U.S. and U.K. officials, the Pentagon simultaneously pursued the Air Force's interest in Aldabra and the Navy's proposal for Diego Garcia. The Air Force budgeted $25 million in fiscal year 1968 for the 50/50 base on Aldabra. For the Diego Garcia proposal, Secretary of the Navy Nitze asked McNamara to "reconsider" McNamara's 1966 decision to withhold the Navy's request from Congress. This time Nitze had a new justification for the base, pitching it around the war in Vietnam as an "austere" refueling port for ships traveling to and from southeast Asia. The plan had a revised $26 million budget, divided into two funding increments beginning in fiscal year 1969. The austere facility, Nitze noted, would still offer a "nucleus" for expansion into a larger base, "if need arose." 29

For this new incarnation, Nitze and the Navy had allies at DOD in Nitze's former office and its new Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs, John McNaughton. Together, Nitze and McNaughton now pushed McNamara to approve the new Diego-asfueling-depot plan.

Still hesitant, McNamara referred the proposal to the office in the Pentagon that, bureaucratically speaking, defined his tenure as Secretary of Defense: Systems Analysis. When McNamara joined the Kennedy administration, he brought with him, from his tenure at Ford Motor Company, a mode of statistically based economic analysis that had started to grow in popularity in the 1950s. McNamara saw it as a way to seize control of the Pentagon from the military services by imposing rationality on Defense decision-making and hired a group that became known as the "Whiz" Kids" to implement the changes.

"Young, book-smart, Ivy League," these "think-tank civilian assistants," many coming from the RAND Corporation, championed rational calculation and statistical analysis as the basis for all policy decisions. "Everything was scrutinized with the cost-benefit and cost-effectiveness analysis" of RAND, Fred Kaplan writes in Wizards of Armageddon (1991[1983]). The questions of the day were ones like, ""What weapon system will destroy the most targets for a given cost?" or "What weapon system will destroy a given set of targets for the lowest cost?"

McNamara charged Systems Analysis, and its head Alain Enthoven, with providing this analysis. In Systems Analysis, statistically based cost-effectiveness and cost-benefit calculations helped shape, justify, and evaluate military policymaking. Nearly every weapons purchase, every troop deployment, and every base decision had to pass through Systems Analysis for approval.

"McNamara would not act on a proposal without letting Alain's department have a chop at it," explained Earl Ravenal, a Systems Analysis staffer who worked on the Diego Garcia proposal. "Systems analysis became accepted as the buzz word, the way that decisions were rationalized, the currency of overt transactions, the lingua franca inside the Pentagon," Kaplan writes.³¹ Often, this language and the use of statistical data alone were enough to create the veneer of rationality and justify policy decisions. This is exactly the type of language one sees in the Strategic Island Concept, in the talk of "stockpiling" islands like "commodities" and "investing" in bases as "insurance" to obtain future "benefits." As anthropologist Carole Cohn has shown among "defense intellectuals," and as the recollections of officials suggest, this language played an important role in shaping a particular version of reality and in shielding officials from the emotional and human impacts of their decisions.³²

But at this time Ravenal's team in Systems Analysis received the proposal for Diego Garcia with instructions to "look into the quantitative rationale" for the base and "see if it makes sense." They took the Navy at its word and evaluated its most recent justification for the project—to create a new fueling depot for ships traveling to and from Vietnam. Ravenal's team found the base was not cost-effective: Given the distances involved and the costs of transporting fuel, it was simply cheaper to refuel ships at existing ports.

McNamara wrote to the new Secretary of the Navy, Paul R. Ignatius (by the end of June 1967, Nitze was back at the Pentagon as Deputy Secretary of Defense), to inform him that he would again defer "investment."³³

Ravenal explained that the Navy and ISA were "extremely annoyed." They were "hopping up and down" mad, he said. Even people within Systems Analysis were concerned that Ravenal's team had taken on and defied the Navy over what they saw as such a relatively small project (thinking only in dollar terms). Rear Admiral Elmo Zumwalt, Senior Aide to the Secretary of the Navy, who had worked on Diego Garcia since serving under Nitze at ISA, immediately knew that the Navy had picked the wrong rationale to get the base.

"We knew it would be a billion before long," Ravenal said of the base's cost. "They said, 'Why are you opposing an austere communications facility?' I said, 'That's not what's going on here. You're going to have a tremendous base here. It's gonna be a billion'—of course it's over that now."

I asked Ravenal if any discussion of the Chagossians had surfaced in the work of Systems Analysis. Ravenal said he "heard about birds" on the island—some flightless rails, he thought—but "very little" about any people. "It was sort of out in the middle of, we thought, nowhere," he explained. "We thought nowhere because even though someone may have mentioned that there were some coconut farmers there, it didn't register. I never heard a single thing. Just birds. That's all."

98 Chapter Five

"Why do you think it didn't register?" I asked.

"Well," Ravenal paused. "The mindset of almost anyone on the political-military side of government, they simply were not sensitized to those kinds of issues," Ravenal replied. "And I think it would have been my assumption, if you had twelve hundred people there, if you're going to have a military base there . . . everyone's better off getting them off there. But I would have made the assumption in my mind—but probably not bothered to check it out, I have to admit—that we were going to give them a lot of money and relocate them somewhere. Now if we didn't, I think that's a terrible shame."

"THE ALDABRA AFFAIR"

While the Navy was facing continued resistance at the Pentagon, the British Government was still pursuing a base on Aldabra. At the time, however, the United Kingdom was undergoing a severe financial crisis and looking for ways to cut its overseas expenditures. In April and May 1967, British officials informed their U.S. counterparts that they remained interested in a Diego facility but the U.K. financial participation would be no more than a nominal one.³⁴ In July, a U.K. white paper announced the withdrawal of all British troops from Singapore and Malaysia by mid-1970.

As the British continued plans for construction on Aldabra, U.K. and U.S. scientists who had been sent by the governments to survey the islands of the BIOT began to rally public opposition against the base. In what soon became known as the Aldabra Affair, scientists from the Royal Geographic Society and the Smithsonian Institution argued against a base on Aldabra. They said the military would endanger local populations of giant tortoises and rare birds, like the red-footed booby, which made Aldabra the "Galapagos of the Indian Ocean."

By contrast, according to David Stoddart, one of the scientists who surveyed the islands, Diego Garcia "was simply a coconut plantation. The plants were common and the birds and land animals few." 36

"ABSOLUTELY MUST GO"

"When it came to writing official, top-secret reports that combined sophisticated analysis with a flair for scaring the daylights out of anyone reading them," writes Fred Kaplan, "Paul H. Nitze had no match." For five decades, Nitze was at the center of U.S. national security policy, beginning and perhaps most centrally with his authorship of the 1950 NSC-68 memo, which became one of the guiding forces in U.S. Cold War policy.

In NSC-68, and throughout his career, Nitze became an ardent proponent of building up "conventional, non-nuclear forces to meet Soviet aggression on the peripheries" (i.e., in the so-called Third World). But NSC-68's language was "deliberately hyped," admitted another of its authors, Nitze's boss, Secretary of State Dean Acheson. They used it as a "bludgeon," for "pushing their own, more militaristic views into official parlance." In NSC-68 and again in 1957 when Nitze helped spawn unfounded fears about a "missile gap" with the Soviets, as well as in his later work, the Democrat and former Wall Street financier continually inflated the Soviet threat. He offered a "highly pessimistic vision of Soviet military might, and the idea that the only real answer to the Soviet challenge lay in the construction of a gigantic, world-wide U.S. military machine." 3

In June 1967, with Diego Garcia detached from Mauritius as part of the BIOT and an agreement for a base signed but still facing stiff opposition on financial grounds from Robert McNamara, Nitze left his job as Secretary of the Navy to become Deputy Secretary of Defense, the second highest-ranking official in the Defense Department. Half a year later, with Britain having devalued the pound and still facing deep military spending cuts and scientific opposition to a base on Aldabra, Prime Minister Wilson announced the cancellation of the Aldabra base. McNamara, Nitze, and other U.S. officials were little interested in going it alone on Aldabra (which they had always viewed primarily as another way to keep a British military presence "East of Suez"). Nitze and other Pentagon leaders returned their focus to Diego Garcia.⁴

Before long, however, changes came closer to home. By March 1968, McNamara had left the Defense Department for the World Bank, and Clark Clifford became Johnson's new Secretary of Defense. With Clifford focused almost entirely on Vietnam, Nitze was left to run most of the rest of the Pentagon. Having worked on Diego Garcia since 1961 during his tenure at ISA, Nitze soon began meeting with Navy officials to discuss plans for the base.

Barely a month after McNamara's departure, the Joint Chiefs offered a "reappraisal" of the Diego Garcia proposal in light of the 1967 Arab-Israeli war and the January 1968 British decision to withdraw their forces east of Suez by the end of 1971. Once again predicting the development of a "power vacuum" in the region and ensuing Soviet and Chinese "domination," the JCS recommended "the immediate establishment" of a base on Diego. They proposed a $46 million joint service facility capable of supporting limited forces in "contingency situations" (the euphemism for combat), Army and Air Force infrastructure, and a 12,000-foot runway capable of landing B-52 nuclear bombers and C-5A transport aircraft. 5 So much for "austere."

Internally the JCS crafted a strategy to dissuade new Secretary of Defense Clifford from being "unduly influenced" by Systems Analysis: "The project is analogous to an insurance policy," their rationale explained. "Low premiums now could lead to large returns later if military requirement does develop." The Chiefs continued, "We are trying to buy preparedness which is never cost-effective."

Systems Analysis was again unconvinced. It urged the Secretary to "reject the JCS proposal" because it was not cost-effective and risked starting an arms race in the Indian Ocean.⁷

Surprisingly, Deputy Secretary of Defense Nitze agreed. He found there was "no justification" for a major base. However, he decided that "adequate justification exists" for what he called a "modest facility" on Diego Garcia, at a cost of $26 million, which, it just so happened, was exactly the price he had previously suggested as Secretary of the Navy.8

In this case, Nitze let the JCS provide the "bludgeon" with its warnings of Soviet "domination" and Chinese "expansion." In the face of these articulated threats and with the major JCS proposal on the table, Nitze's plan looked like a cheap, rational option, challenging the heart of Systems Analysis's opposition.

The Navy submitted a plan for the base along Nitze's suggested lines. It sent Nitze's former staffer Elmo Zumwalt back to Ravenal at Systems Analysis to make the case. "What is so striking about the succession of proposals," Ravenal later said, was "the kaleidoscopic change of rationales to support the same proposals."

But this time, "they knew they were going to win," Ravenal recalled of Zumwalt's visit. "They were going to do it right this time. . . . They weren't going to make some sort of a [weak] case."

Still Systems Analysis continued its opposition, questioning the urgency of the Diego project and asking for it to be deferred until fiscal year 1971. But this time, Ravenal explained, "We lost."

ISA approved the plan as expected and in November 1968, Nitze signed off on the Navy's request to include $9,556,000 in the fiscal year 1970 military construction budget. Within days, the Navy had notified the armed services committees of both houses of Congress. Under Nitze's leadership, an interdepartmental group of top officials from the Pentagon, State Department, CIA, and Treasury Department began arguing for the base on Capitol Hill. In January 1969, a classified line item for Diego Garcia appeared in the fiscal year 1970 Military Construction budget. The funding process for the base was finally underway.

"It is the persistence of the military services," Ravenal would tell Congress years later, "that eventually wears down opposition within the Pentagon, within the executive branch, and ultimately within Congress and succeeds in attaining what they were after in the first place." 12

In the case of Nitze, Ravenal told me, one has to see, "He threw the football as Secretary of the Navy, and he caught it as Deputy Secretary of Defense."

PLANNING THE "EVACUATION"

While DOD was quarreling over funding, the State Department's Bureau of Politico-Military Affairs and the embassy in London were coordinating the removals with the British.

"U.S. would desire removal of migrant laborers from Diego Garcia after due notice in accord with Minutes to BIOT Agreement," read an August 1968 telegram to the embassy in the name of Secretary of State Rusk. The joint State-Defense message instructed the embassy to inform British officials of the State and Defense departments' concern that the removals might arouse the attention of the United Nations' Committee of Twenty-Four. The message asked that the removals be carried out in a manner minimizing such negative publicity, preferably with resettlement taking place outside the BIOT (and thus technically removing it from the purview of the Committee of Twenty-Four). ¹³

The telegram further noted that some British officials had still been using the term "inhabitants" to describe the people of Diego Garcia. Following the Foreign Office's plan to deny there was a settled population, the message asserted that the islanders were in fact "migrant laborers."

"We suggest, therefore, that the term 'migrant laborers' be used in any conversations with HMG as withdrawal of 'inhabitants' obviously would be more difficult to justify to littoral countries and Committee of Twenty-four." ¹⁴

The embassy spoke with the Foreign Office the next day. Ambassador David Bruce telegrammed back to the State Department that the Foreign Office's representative "took the point on 'migrant laborers" but noted that although "it was a good term for cosmetic purposes . . . it might be difficult to make completely credible as some of the 'migrants' are second generation Diego residents." ¹⁵

MORE "FICTIONS"

"Negligible.... For all practical purposes... uninhabited." Or so the U.S. Navy said when characterizing Chagos's population in briefing papers delivered to members of Congress to secure Diego's funding in the 1970 military construction budget. When pushed by Senate Appropriations Committee member Senator Henry Jackson about the local population, one Navy official "told him that it consisted entirely of rotating contract copra workers, and that the British intended to relocate them as soon as possible after Congressional action was complete." Recounting Jackson's reaction, the official explained, "He came back to this question twice more. He was obviously concerned about local political problems. I assured him that there should be none."

On Capitol Hill however, the political problems mounted for the Navy. First the Senate Armed Services Committee rejected the project, only to have it restored in a House-Senate conference. Then, after the House Appropriations Committee authorized funding, Jackson's Senate committee disapproved it, despite an intensive Navy lobbying campaign led by new Chief of Naval Operations Admiral Thomas Moorer.

In appropriations committee conference, senators led by Democrat Mike Mansfield refused to yield to Diego backers in the House through four meetings on the military appropriations. Democrats argued the project was a new military commitment overseas at a time when the Nixon administration had already indicated its desire to withdraw from Vietnam. Others wanted to "hold the Brits feet to the fire," and keep the U.S. from assuming their role in the Indian Ocean. The conferees ultimately left the project unfunded but offered the Navy an oral agreement: It should return in the following year's budget cycle with a pared-down request for a communications station without the other proposed facilities.¹⁷

Following the congressional defeat, newly elected President Richard Nixon's Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird gave the Navy equally simple instructions: "Make it a communications facility." Within two weeks, John H. Chafee, the new Secretary of the Navy, submitted to Laird a proposal for a $17.78 million "communications facility," with an initial funding increment of $5.4 million for fiscal year 1971.¹⁸

This of course was the same proposal that in 1965 had been "overtaken by events." Navy documents indicate that while the station was supposed to address gaps in the naval communications network in the Indian Ocean, the only such gaps were in the ocean's southernmost waters, closest to Antarctica and far from any potential conflict zones. A closer examination of the Navy's budget shows too that half the cost of the revised "communications station" project was for dredging Diego Garcia's lagoon and building an 8,000-foot airstrip; both were said to allow the resupply of a facility that featured a mere $800,000 worth of communications equipment. The "austere" project featured the construction of a 17-mile road network, a small nightclub, a movie theater, and a gym. 19

Under the guise of a communications station, the Navy was asking for the nucleus of a base whose design allowed for ready expansion and the restoration of previously envisioned elements of the base.²⁰ As the CNO's Office of Communications and Cryptology put it, "The communications requirements cited as justification are fiction."²¹

FUNDING SECURED

By the spring of 1970, with congressional funding looking likely for the following year, British officials wanted to begin making arrangements for the deportations. The British were eager to begin negotiations to convince the Mauritian Government to receive the Chagossians and arrange for their resettlement. State and Defense officials on the other hand were concerned that Mauritian officials would leak news of the negotiations and endanger congressional funding by drawing international attention to the removals. State and Defense moved quickly and secured agreement from British officials not to begin negotiations until funding had been secured. With members of Congress concerned at the time about increasing problems between U.S. overseas bases and local populations, presentations to Congress were careful to maintain that there would "be no indigenous population and no native labor utilized in the construction." ²³

At the same time, Defense and State emphasized in internal discussions that they needed "to retain enough distance" from the details of the deportations to ensure that British officials would not look to the United States for assistance and to avoid anyone making the connection between the impending base construction and the removals. Accordingly, the departments rejected a suggestion from the embassy in London to send an engineer to assist simultaneously with the base planning and the resettlement program.²⁴

As expected under the previous year's oral agreement, in November 1970, Congress appropriated funds for an "austere communications facility." The funds were again listed as a classified item in the military construction budget. In a closed-to-the-public "executive" session of the House Appropriations Committee, Navy representatives told members of Congress for the first time that the BIOT agreement included the "resettlement of local inhabitants" and $14 million in Polaris missile payments.²⁵ Neither issue ever found its way out of the closed-door session.

With the money secured, Navy officials worked "to pursue the early removal" of those they were now simply calling "copra workers." On December 7, 1970, a joint State-Defense message, telegrammed in the name of Secretary of State William P. Rogers, delivered instructions to the U.S. Embassy in London. Rogers asked the embassy to inform British officials that it was time "for the UK to accomplish relocation of the present residents of Diego Garcia to some other location":

All local personnel should be moved from the western half of the island before the arrival of the construction force in March 1971. We hope that complete relocation can be accomplished by the end of July 1971 when aircraft begin using the air strip and the tempo of construction activities reaches its full scale.²⁷

In turn, the embassy reported that the British were facing serious difficulties in arranging the deportations, given the bar on discussing resettlement with the Mauritians until after base funding was secured.²⁸

"We recognize the British problem," State and Defense replied, but deporting the population "was clearly envisioned as United Kingdom's responsibility in 1966 agreements," and one for which the United States had paid "up to $14,000,000 in Polaris Research and Development charges."

At 10:00 a.m. Washington time, on Tuesday, December 15, the Nixon White House for the first time publicly announced the United States' intention to build a joint U.S.-U.K. military facility on Diego Garcia. The State and Defense departments provided embassies with a list of anticipated questions and suggested answers to handle press inquiries, including the following:

Q: What is the purpose of the facility?

A: To close a gap in our worldwide communications system and to provide communications support to U.S. and U.K. ships and aircraft in the Indian Ocean.

Q: Is this part of a U.S. build-up in the Indian Ocean?

A: No.

Q: Will other facilities be built in this area?

A: No others are contemplated.

Q: What will happen to the population of Diego Garcia?

A: The population consists of a small number of contract laborers from the Seychelles and Mauritius engaged to work on the copra plantations. Arrangements will be made for the contracts to be terminated at the appropriate time and for their return to Mauritius and Seychelles.³⁰

AN ORDER

If, as Earl Ravenal indicated with one of today's ubiquitous sports metaphors, Paul Nitze helped get the plan for Diego Garcia moving as Secretary of the Navy (in fact he started even earlier at ISA) and got the base funded as Deputy Secretary of Defense, the man who saw the project to its completion was Admiral Elmo Zumwalt.

Born in San Francisco in 1920 to two doctors, Elmo Russell Zumwalt, Jr., a prep school valedictorian and Naval Academy graduate, enjoyed an unprecedented rise to the top of the Navy hierarchy. At 44, Zumwalt was the youngest naval officer to be promoted to Rear Admiral. At 49, Zumwalt became the Navy's youngest-ever four-star Admiral and the youngest-ever CNO. His record of awards, decorations, and honorary degrees runs a single-spaced page, including medals from France, West Germany, Holland, Argentina, Brazil, Greece, Italy, Japan, Venezuela, Bolivia, Indonesia, Sweden, Colombia, Chile, South Korea, and South Vietnam.³¹

As CNO from 1970 to 1974, Zumwalt gained attention for integrating the Navy, for upgrading women's roles, and for relaxing naval standards of dress in keeping with the times. In an order to the Navy entitled "Equal Opportunity in the Navy," Zumwalt acknowledged the service's discriminatory practices against African Americans and ordered corrective actions. "Ours must be a Navy family that recognizes no artificial barriers of race, color or religion, "Zumwalt wrote in what was a pathbreaking statement for the U.S. armed forces. "There is no black Navy, no white Navy—just one Navy—the United State Navy." 32

Nitze originally recruited Zumwalt in 1962 to work under him when Nitze was Assistant Secretary of Defense at ISA. In his memoirs, Zumwalt describes working closely with his "mentor and close friend." Zumwalt eventually following Nitze to his position as Secretary of the Navy, as Nitze's Executive Assistant and Senior Aide. Zumwalt was "at Paul's side" during the Cuban Missile Crisis and negotiations leading to the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty. Under Nitze's "tutelage," Zumwalt writes, he earned a "Ph.D. in political-military affairs." 33

Nitze, for his part, rewarded Zumwalt by recommending him to receive the rear admiral's second star two years before others in his Naval Academy class were eligible and without having commanded a destroyer squadron or cruiser, as was the Navy's tradition.³⁴ Upon becoming the Navy's youngest-ever rear admiral, Zumwalt commanded a cruiser-destroyer flotilla and later became Commander of U.S. Naval Forces in Vietnam before his promotion by President Nixon to CNO.

Zumwalt worked on Diego Garcia from his time with Nitze at ISA and maintained the same interest in the base once he left Nitze's staff.³⁵ One of Zumwalt's staffers, Admiral Worth H. Bagley, remembered in 1989 how Zumwalt wanted to boost the U.S. naval presence in the Indian Ocean, in part out of concern for the "growing reliance on high oil imports at a time when things were looking unstable." Helped by the 1971 war between India and Pakistan, Zumwalt increased the pace of deployments in the ocean.

"He went out himself and visited the . . . African countries," Bagley explained. "Looking into the question of bases and things of that sort. . . . To see if he could find some economical way to increase base and crisis support possibilities there." ³⁶

"In dealing with Diego Garcia also?" Bagley's interviewer suggested. "Moorer did that. Zumwalt finished it up for him," Bagley replied.³⁷

And so Zumwalt did. Once Nitze and Admiral Moorer had secured funding from Congress, Zumwalt focused on removing Diego Garcia's population to prevent any construction delays. At a December 10, 1970 meeting, CNO Zumwalt told his deputies that he wanted to "push the British to get the copra workers off Diego Garcia prior to the commencement of construction," scheduled to begin in March 1971.³⁸

A secret letter confirmed British receipt of the order to remove the Chagossians: "The United States Government have recently confirmed that their security arrangements at Diego Garcia will require the removal of the entire population of the atoll. . . . This is no surprise. We have known since 1965 that if a defence facility were established we should have to resettle elsewhere the contract copra workers who live there." ³⁹

As both governments prepared for the deportations and the start of construction, the U.S. embassies in London and Port Louis began recommending that the Navy use some Chagossians as manual laborers for the construction. Zumwalt refused. Two days after his December 17 order redressing racial discrimination in the Navy, Zumwalt stressed that by the end of construction all inhabitants should be moved to their "permanent other home."

In a small note handwritten on the face of Zumwalt's memo, a deputy commented, "Probably have no permanent other home." 40

As planning proceeded into January 1971, Zumwalt received a memorandum from the State Department's Legal Adviser, John R. Stevenson, bearing on the deportations and the speed with which they would be accomplished. In the memo, Stevenson discussed "several legal considerations affecting US-UK responsibilities toward the 400 inhabitants of Diego Garcia." He pointed out that the 1966 U.S.-U.K. agreement "provides certain safeguards for the inhabitants," noting as well the commitment of both nations under the UN Charter to make the interests of inhabitants living in non–self-governing territories "paramount":

Although the responsibility for carrying out measures to ensure the welfare of the inhabitants lies with the UK, the US is charged under the [1966] Agreement with facilitating these arrangements. London 10391 [embassy memo] states that the US constrained the UK from discussing the matter with the GOM pending the outcome of our Congressional appropriations legislation. In light of this, we are under a particular responsibility not to pressure the UK into meeting a time schedule which may not provide sufficient time in which to satisfactorily arrange for the welfare of the inhabitants. Beyond this, their removal is to accommodate US needs, and the USG will, of course, be considered to share the responsibility with the UK by the inhabitants and other nations if satisfactory arrangements are not made. 41

108 Chapter Six

A day after Zumwalt received Stevenson's warning, two Navy officials were in the Seychelles to meet with the commissioner and administrator of the BIOT, Sir Bruce Greatbatch and John Todd. Together, they made plans for emptying the western half of Diego Garcia before the arrival of Navy "Seabee" construction teams, the "segregation" of Chagossians from the Seabees, and the "complete evacuation" of Diego Garcia by July. 42 Greatbatch and Todd explained that this was the fastest they could get rid of the population other than to "drop Ilois on pier at Mauritius and sail away quickly." 43

Two weeks later a nine-member Navy reconnaissance party arrived on Diego Garcia with Todd and Moulinie & Co. director Paul Moulinie. On January 24, Todd and Moulinie ordered everyone on the island to the manager's office at East Point. Dressed in white and perched on the veranda of the office overlooking the assembled crowd, Todd announced that the BIOT was closing Diego Garcia and the plantations. The BIOT, he added, would move as many people as possible to Peros Banhos and Salomon.

A black-and-white photograph of the scene shows the islanders staring in disbelief (see figure 6.1). Some "of the Ilois asked whether they could return to Mauritius instead and receive some compensation for leaving their 'own country.'"⁴⁴ Not unlike the Bikinians before them, most were simply stunned.⁴⁵

When given the "choice" between deportation to Mauritius or to Peros Banhos or Salomon, most elected to remain in Chagos. Many Seychellois workers and their Chagos-born children were deported to the Seychelles. Some Chagossians resigned themselves to deportation directly to Mauritius.

Many Chagossians say that they were promised land, housing, and money upon reaching Mauritius. Moulinie's nephew and company employee Marcel Moulinie swore in a 1977 court statement that he "told the labourers that it was quite probable that they would be compensated." He continued, "I do not recall saying anything more than that. I was instructed to tell them that they had to leave and that is what I did."

Figure 6.1 Closing Diego Garcia, January 24, 1971. The BIOT announces the deportations, John Todd at center, hand on forehead; Paul Moulinie at right, in white hat. Courtesy Chagos Refugees Group, Willis Prosper.

Within days, a Navy status report detailed the progress of the deportations:

Relocation of the copra workers is proceeding in a satisfactory manner. The Administrator of the BIOT has given his assurance that the three small settlements on the western half of the atoll will be moved immediately to the eastern half. All copra producing activities on the western half will also cease immediately. The BIOT ship NORDVAER is relocating people from Diego Garcia to Peros Banhos, Salomon Islands, and the Seychelles on a regular basis. 48

On February 4, a State-Defense message directed all government personnel to "Avoid all direct participation in resettlement of Ilois on Mauritius." The cable explained that "basic responsibility [is] clearly British," and that the United States was under "no obligation [to] assist with" the resettlement. On the other hand, the departments conceded, the government had some obligation to give the British "sufficient time" to adequately ensure the welfare of the islanders. "USG also realizes," the telegram stated, "it will share in any criticism levied at the British for failing to meet their responsibilities re inhabitants' welfare."

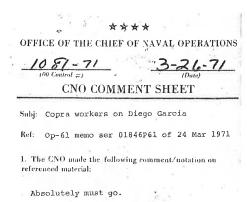

Figure 6.2 CNO Comment Sheet, Admiral Elmo Russell Zumwalt, Jr., Navy Yard, Washington, DC, 1971. Naval Historical Center.

ECHOES OF CONRAD

The pace of deportations continued unabated, and within a few months, Marcel Moulinie and other company agents had forced all Chagossians on the western side of Diego Garcia, including the villages of Norwa and Pointe Marianne, to leave their homes and land to resettle on the eastern side of the atoll.⁵⁰

On March 9, a landing party arrived on Diego to prepare for the arrival of a Seabee construction battalion later that month. Within days, unexpected reports came back to Navy headquarters from the advance team.

The commander "warns of possible bad publicity re the so-called 'copra workers," a Deputy CNO wrote. "He cites . . . fine old man who's been there 50 years. There's a feeling the UK haven't been completely above board on this. We don't want another Culebra," he said, referring to the opposition and negative publicity faced by the Navy during major protests in Puerto Rico against 1970 plans to deport Culebra's people and use their island as a bombing range. 51

"Relocation of persons," Captain E. L. Cochrane, Jr. admitted to the Deputy CNO four days after the Seabees began construction, "is indeed a potential trouble area and could be exploited by opponents to our activities in the Indian Ocean." He added, "A newsman so disposed could pose questions that would result in a very damaging report that long time inhabitants of Diego Garcia are being torn away from their family homes because of the construction of a sinister U.S. 'base.'"52

The Navy, Pentagon, and State concluded, however, "that the advantages of having a station on an island which has no other inhabitants makes it worth the risk to ask the British to carry out the relocation." In fact, Cochrane wrote, the advantages of having the British relocate the inhabitants were "so great that the United States should adopt a strict 'let the British do it' policy while at the same time keeping as well informed as possible on the actual relocation activities." ⁵⁵³

Weighing the concerns of the advance party and Cochrane's recommendation, Zumwalt had the final say. On a comment sheet with the subject line "Copra workers on Diego Garcia," Zumwalt had three words:

"Absolutely must go."54

CHAPTER 7

"ON THE RACK"

With the money finally secured from Congress and the British taking charge of the final deportations, the Navy set to work building its base. "Resembling an amphibious landing during World War II," writes a former Navy officer who worked on the project, "Seabees landed on Diego Garcia in March 1971 to begin construction." A tank landing ship, an attack cargo ship, two military sealift command charter ships, and two dock landing ships descended on Diego with at least 820 soldiers and equipment to construct a communications station and an 8,000-foot airstrip. The Seabees brought in heavy equipment, setting up a rock crusher and a concrete block factory. They used Caterpillar bulldozers and chains to rip coconut trees from the ground. They blasted Diego's reef with explosives to excavate coral rock for the runway. Diesel fuel sludge began fouling the water.²

According to many Chagossians, there were threats that they would be bombed or shot if they did not leave the island. Children hid in fear as military aircraft began flying overhead.³ The Washington Post's David Ottaway later reported that "one old man . . . recalled being told by an unidentified American official: 'If you don't leave you won't be fed any longer.'"⁴

Navy officials continued to pressure their British counterparts to complete the deportations as quickly as possible. On April 16, the United Kingdom issued BIOT Immigration Ordinance #1 making it a criminal offense for anyone except authorized military personnel to be on the islands without a permit. A State Department official in the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Africa later acknowledged, "In order to meet our self-imposed timetable, their evacuation was undertaken with a haste which the British could claim has prevented careful examination of resettlement needs." Construction continued unabated, with the runway operational by July 1971.

Figure 7.1 M.V. Nordwer, 1968. The BIOT cargo ship used to deport Chagossians, at times with more than 100 aboard. Photo courtesy of Kirby Crawford.

The BIOT administration and its Moulinie & Co. agents continued to remove families to Peros Banhos and Salomon. Some Chagossians refused but were told they had no choice but to leave. Marcel Moulinie and other Moulinie & Co. agents reiterated that there would be no more work. There would be no more transportation to and from the island, food stores had run out, and the boats were taking away the salvageable plantation infrastructure.

For the voyage, passengers were generally allowed to take a small box of their belongings and a straw bed mat. Most of their possessions and all their animals were left behind. In August 1971, the BIOT dispatched its 500-ton cargo ship, the M.V. Nordvær, to Diego to remove the last families from the island. When the Nordvær experienced engine troubles before reaching Diego, the BIOT administration sent another ship, the Isle of Farquhar, to continue the removals. By then food supplies were running dangerously low, and BIOT officials started considering asking for emergency assistance. The Navy's Seabee contingent eventually shipped food and medical supplies across the lagoon to sustain the remaining islanders.

In the days before the last inhabitants of Diego Garcia were removed, BIOT commissioner Sir Bruce Greatbatch sent the order to Moulinie & Co. to kill the Chagossians' pet dogs and any other remaining dogs on the island. Marcel Moulinie, who had been left to manage Diego Garcia, was responsible for carrying out the extermination.

According to Moulinie, he first tried to shoot the dogs with the help of Seabees armed with M16 rifles. When this failed as an expeditious extermination method, he attempted to poison the dogs with strychnine. This too failed. Sitting in his home overlooking a secluded beach in the Seychelles 33 years later, Moulinie explained to me how he finally used raw meat to lure the dogs into a sealed copra-drying shed, the kalorifer. Locking them in the shed, he gassed the howling dogs with exhaust piped in from U.S. military vehicles. Setting coconut husks ablaze, he burnt the dogs' carcasses in the shed. The Chagossians were left to watch and ponder their fate.

114 Chapter Seven

THE FINAL DEPORTATIONS

After the Isle of Farquhar took a load of Chagossians and Seychellois from Diego, a repaired Nordvær returned to remove the final inhabitants. "There was a crowd of people there and a lot of them were crying," Marcel Moulinie remembered. "People were upset about" the killing of their dogs, "as well as being upset about having to leave the islands. I persuaded Marcel [Ono, a Diego Garcia commandeur] that he had to go as there were no more rations on the island and the boat had not brought in any food. The stores had been removed and there was no way of feeding anyone. . . . I last saw him as he walked on to the boat." With U.S. military personnel looking on shortly before the end of October 1971, the last boatload steamed away from Diego Garcia."

Chagossians and others report that the boats were terribly overcrowded and that the open seas were often rough on the initial 1,200-mile, four-day journey to the Seychelles. The Nordvær had cabin passenger space for twelve and deck space for sixty (accommodating a total of 72 passengers). On the last voyage, 146 were packed on the vessel. At the orders of Sir Bruce Greatbatch, Diego's horses were given the best places on deck. All but a few Chagossians made the trip exposed to the elements elsewhere on deck or in the hold, sitting and sleeping on a cargo of copra, coconuts, company equipment, and guano—bird feces. Many became ill during the passage, vomiting on deck and in the hold. Two women are reported to have miscarried. 10

Moulinie recalled:

The boat was very overcrowded. The boat deck was covered with stores, the belongings of the labourers, and a lot of labourers were traveling on deck. Greatbatch had insisted that the horses be carried back to Mahé and these were on deck with the labourers. The labourers also traveled in the holds. This was not unusual but there were more people than usual in them. The holds also held a lot of copra being taken out of Diego. When the boat finally arrived the conditions were filthy. They had taken four days to travel and many of the women and children were sick. The boat deck was covered in manure, urine and yomit and so was the hold.

When the Nordvær arrived in the Seychelles, offloading the islanders before the second leg of the journey, another 1,200 miles to Mauritius, Moulinie & Co. arranged to have their management housed in hotels. The Chagossians were housed in a prison.¹²

A VOICE IN THE BUREAUCRACY

With the arrival in Mauritius of the last islanders from Diego Garcia, the U.S. Embassy in Port Louis grew increasingly concerned about the condition of what officials described as "1300 miserable and uneducated refugees."¹³

"The USG has a moral responsibility for the well-being of these people who were involuntarily moved at our request," the embassy argued to the State Department in Washington. U.S. moral responsibility was especially heavy given that the government had "resisted GOM and HMG efforts to permit Ilois to remain as employees of the facility." Even if legally speaking "primary responsibility" lay with the British, the Port Louis mission believed, the U.S. Government was responsible for ordering the removal and was vulnerable to criticism in public and at the UN. 14

The embassy was equally unhappy about the lack of resettlement planning: "To our knowledge," the mission cabled, "there exists no operative plan and no firm allocation of funds to compensate them for the hardship of the transfer from their former home and their loss of livelihood." While the British were still in the midst of convincing the Mauritian Government to create a resettlement plan, such a scheme was "foredoomed," first, because of the "political impossibility" of giving special resources to the Chagossians while unemployed Hindus, Muslims, and Afro-Mauritians received nothing, and second, because of the Mauritian Government's own inability to make use of current British aid money, let alone new funds for a special Chagossian project. ¹⁵

"The plight of the Ilois," the embassy wrote, "is a classic example of perpetuation of hardship through bureaucratic neglect." "The Embassy believes we have regrettably neglected our obligation toward them. We recommend that early and specific exchanges with HMG be undertaken in order to assure the welfare of the Ilois and that authority for this essentially political matter be appropriately centralized within the Department." 16

The primary author of these remarkable cables was Henry Precht, the deputy to the ambassador in an embassy of just seven (Precht later worked on Iran at the State Department, playing a key role in the Carter administration's handling of the hostage crisis). Now living in the Washington area, Precht remembered that the Navy "didn't want to be bothered. They wanted an all-American facility," free of any labor problems, health issues, or anything that would have "complicated life there." It was "much neater" without the islanders, he said.

For three months, Precht and Ambassador William Brewer cabled strongly worded reports about the Chagossians, demanding, "Justice should be done." Lambasting the "inadequate and cavalier treatment so far accorded the Ilois," they traded charged dispatches with an undersecretary of the Air Force and others in the bureaucracy over the U.S. Government's responsibility.¹⁷ It was "absurd" to say, as some in the bureaucracy continued to maintain, that Diego Garcia had "no fixed population," given its history of habitation dating to the eighteenth century. Moreover, "DOD acknowledged its responsibility for the removal of the Ilois by payment of $14 million to HMG." Precht and Brewer wrote that the Government didn't fulfill its obligation to the Chagossians by its $14 million payment, pointing out correctly that most of the money seemed to have gone toward building an international airport in the Seychelles.

"The point of our exercise," they said, is that "the USG should make sure that the British do an adequate job of compensation." (Around the same time Brewer was also helping to "burnish the Diego public relations image" in Mauritius by delivering 3,000 bags of Christmas candy prepared by Navy personnel on Diego to underprivileged and children's groups. (19)

I asked Precht why he thought no one else spoke out on behalf of the Chagossians. "There weren't very many of them," he replied. "They didn't add up to much of a problem. They were easily pushed aside." And it would have taken someone in Washington, he said, to have enough interest "to pursue it. And pursuing something in Washington" takes a lot of political energy. It can be quite a "profitless enterprise."

Adam Hochschild's exploration of violence perpetrated by the Belgian Empire in the Congo helps explain Precht's observation: Because Belgian authorities sanctioned violence against the Congolese, "for a white man to rebel meant challenging the entire system that provided your livelihood.

Everyone around you was participating. By going along with the system, you were paid, promoted, awarded medals."²⁰

As the embassy's failed protests show, challenges to the expulsion would likely have been fruitless save for those originating at the highest levels of the bureaucracy, from people like Nitze, Komer, Zumwalt, Moorer, McNamara, and Rusk. "The individual bureaucrat cannot squirm out of the apparatus in which he is harnessed," Max Weber wrote half a century earlier. "The professional bureaucrat is chained to his activity by his entire material and ideal existence. In the great majority of cases, he is only a single cog in an ever-moving mechanism which prescribes to him an essentially fixed route of march. The official is entrusted with specialized tasks and normally the mechanism cannot be put into motion or arrested by him, but only from the very top." ²¹

Back in the State Department bureaucracy in Washington, James Bishop was the desk officer who received Precht and Brewer's cables. "Vaguely" recalling the dispatches when I spoke to him in early 2008, Bishop said they came a "considerable time" before human rights "became a major part of our diplomacy." This "was the Kissinger era," when the Secretary of State and National Security Adviser was "chastising" the African bureau "as a bunch of missionaries." Plus, the Chagossians were not a very high issue on State's agenda when it came to relations with Bishop's "parish" Mauritius. On the other hand, he said, "there wasn't any question about their being recent arrivals. It was their homeland." Bishop added, "I do recall feeling that they were going to get screwed."

Jonathan "Jock" Stoddart had responsibility at the State Department for much of the implementation of the removals. I asked Stoddart if anyone investigated the embassy's reports.

"My answer would be, I don't think so," Stoddart replied from his apartment at The Jefferson, a retirement facility in the Washington, D.C. suburbs. "I doubt if the Navy sent somebody that was interested in human rights out to Diego to look into this. I think the Navy's attitude was, accept what the British say, and turn a blind eye to whatever was going on."

State and Defense officials seemed to choose the same tack. "It was, I would say, an issue that was lurking in the background but generally ignored," Stoddart said. "We were all leaving the whole problem up to the British—to justify, rationalize, whatever. We were quite aware that our original—the original information that we had received from the British was wrong: that this was an uninhabited archipelago. I think we fully accepted that fact."

Still, "this is one of the best deals the United States has ever negotiated," Stoddart added, from his apartment complex named for the president known for one of the nation's earliest land acquisitions.

118 Chapter Seven

"For a change," he said, it came "at a minimal cost."

The official response to Precht and Brewer from higher-ups in the State and Defense bureaucracies was a February cable from the State Department. "Basic responsibility" for the Chagossians lay with the British, the telegram said; but it directed the embassy in London to inform the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of the U.S. Government's "concern" over their treatment. The State Department conceded internally (in its clipped bureaucratic language), "USG also realizes it may well share in any criticism levied at British for failing meet their responsibilities re inhabitants' welfare." Concerned about the removal's Cold War implications, State added: "Continued failure resolve these issues exposes both HMG and USG to local criticism which could be picked up and amplified elsewhere."²²

Former national security officials Anthony Lake and Roger Morris, who resigned from the Nixon administration to protest the invasion of Cambodia, describe memoranda from Washington like these and the effect of the geographical and, as they say, spiritual distance between decision makers and those affected by their decisions:

We remember, more clearly than we care to, the well carpeted stillness and isolation of those government offices where some of the Pentagon Papers were first written. The efficient staccato of the typewriter, the antiseptic whiteness of nicely margined memoranda, the affable, authoritative and always urbane men who wrote them—all of it is a spiritual as well as geographic world apart from piles of decomposing bodies in a ditch outside Hue or a village bombed in Laos, the burn ward of a children's hospital in Saigon, or even a cemetery or veteran's hospital here. It was possible in that isolated atmosphere, and perhaps psychologically necessary, to dull one's awareness of the direct link between those memoranda and the human sufferings with which they were concerned.²³

In the summer of 1972, the State Department sent Precht to Tehran and Brewer to fill the place of the assassinated ambassador to Sudan.

DETERIORATING CONDITIONS

At about the time that Brewer was on his way to Khartoum, the British secured the agreement of the Mauritian Government to receive the Chagossians. Despite the fact that a majority of the Chagossians said they wanted to receive compensation in cash, a planned Anglo-Mauritian rehabilitation scheme called for the provision of housing, pig breeding jobs (never a significant economic activity in Chagos), and some cash payments. On September 4, 1972, Mauritian Prime Minister Ramgoolam accepted £650,000 to resettle the Chagossians, including the remaining few hundreds who were still to be removed from Peros Banhos and Salomon.

British officials realized that the project was "under-costed" for an adequate resettlement, but were happy to have struck such a cheap deal. Precht had earlier weighed in on the likelihood of the resettlement plan's working: "We doubt it." The resettlement was never implemented, and Chagossians saw almost none of the £650,000 for more than five years.

After the emptying of Diego Garcia, around 370 Chagossians remained in Peros Banhos and Salomon. Like those who went to Mauritius and the Seychelles, those who went from Diego Garcia to Peros and Salomon had been required to leave most of their possessions, furniture, and animals in Diego. They received Rs500 (about $90) as a "disturbance allowance" to compensate them for the costs of reestablishing their lives. Those going to Mauritius and the Seychelles received nothing.

The neglect of Peros Banhos and Salomon by the BIOT and Moulinie & Co. continued as it had on Diego Garcia, and conditions worsened dramatically in 1972 and 1973. Food supplies declined and Chagossians remember how their diet became increasingly dependent on fish and coconuts. When milk supplies ran out, women fed their children a thin, watery mixture of coconut milk and sugar. Medicines and medical supplies ran out. With even ripe coconuts in short supply, people ate the spongy, overripe flesh of germinated nuts. The remaining staff in each island's hospital left, and the last school, in Peros Banhos, closed.

In June 1972, the Nordwar continued emptying Peros and Salomon. At least 53 left on this one voyage, telling BIOT agents they wished to "return later to the islands," hopeful that conditions would improve.²⁵ Again Chagossians say conditions on the ship were terrible. Marie Therese Mein, a Chagossian woman married to the departing manager of Peros Banhos, described the voyage:

Our conditions were somewhat better than the other suffering passengers since we were given a small cabin [because her husband was the manager], but we had to share this between my husband, myself and our 8 children. We could not open the portholes since the ship was heavily laden, and the sea would splash in if we did. It was therefore extremely hot and uncomfortable. Many people were in much worse conditions than us, having to share a cargo compartment with a cargo of coconuts, horses and tortoises. Some had to sleep on top of the deck of the ship. No meals were provided, and the captain, a Mr. Tregarden, told the families to prepare their own meals. By contrast the horses were fed grass. The passage was rough and many of the passengers were seasick. There was urine and manure from the horses on the lower deck. The captain decided to jettison a large part of the cargo of coconuts in order to lessen the risk of being sunk. The whole complement of passengers suffered both from an extremely rough passage and from bad smells of animals and were sick and weary after the 6 day crossing. ²⁶

120 Chapter Seven

Mein was three months pregnant at the time. She miscarried a day after arriving in the Seychelles.

A subsequent voyage of the Nordvær had 120 Chagossians on board, nearly twice its maximum capacity. In December 1972, BIOT administrator Todd reported that Salomon had closed, with all its inhabitants moved to Peros Banhos or deported to Mauritius or the Seychelles. A small number of Chagossians remained in Peros, with only enough food to last until late March or April.

Early in 1973, Moulinie & Co. agents informed the remaining Chagossians that they would have to leave. At the end of April, with food supplies exhausted, the Nordvær left Peros Banhos with 133 Chagossians aboard. The Nordvær arrived in Mauritius on April 29.

By this time, however, the Chagossians on the Nordvar had heard about the fate of others arriving in Mauritius. They refused to disembark. They demanded that they be returned to Chagos or receive houses in Mauritius. After nearly a week of protest and negotiations, 30 families received a small amount of money and dilapidated houses in two of the poorest neighborhoods of Port Louis.

A month later, on May 26, 1973, the Nordwar made its final voyage, removing 8 men, 9 women, and 29 children from Peros Banhos. The expulsion from Chagos was complete.

EXPANSION

As early as Christmas Day, 1972, Bob Hope and Red Foxx were cracking jokes for the troops on Diego Garcia as part of a USO special. 28 Shortly before the final deportations from Peros Banhos in 1973, the Seabees completed their 8,000-foot runway and made the communications station operational. By October, the Navy was using the base to fly P-3 surveillance planes to support Israel during the 1973 Arab-Israeli war—quite a feat for a mere communications station.²⁹

As Nitze and others in the U.S. Government had hoped, the original "austere communications facility" on Diego Garcia served as a nucleus for what became a rapidly expanding base. Before the base was operational, Zumwalt was already asking others in the Navy in 1972, "What do we do in 74, 75, and 76 for Diego Garcia?" referring to expansion ideas for the upcoming fiscal years.³⁰

Restricted to the use of the Azores as its only base from which to resupply Israel during the October war, the Navy soon submitted an "emergency" request for $4.6 million in additional construction funds. The Pentagon turned them down. Within weeks, the Navy submitted a request to the Pentagon for an almost $32 million expansion of the base over three years, to include ship support facilities and a regular air surveillance capacity. Days later, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Admiral Moorer sent a recommendation to Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger to expand the base beyond the new request, including a runway extension to accommodate B-52 bombers. In January 1974, the Air Force asked for a $4.5 million construction budget of its own.³¹

After an initial supplemental appropriation for fiscal year 1974 was deferred to the 1975 budget, additional appropriations for Diego Garcia soon became a minor political battle between the Ford administration and Democratic senators concerned about U.S. military expansion and a growing arms race with the Soviet Union in the Indian Ocean. Hearings were held in both houses of Congress. Amendments to defeat the expansion and to force arms negotiations in the Indian Ocean were introduced but defeated. Congress made new funding contingent on the President affirming that the expansion was "essential to the national interest of the United States," which Ford quickly did. "In particular," his justification said, "the oil shipped from the Persian Gulf area is essential to the economic well-being of modern industrial societies. It is essential that the United States maintain and periodically demonstrate a capability to operate military forces in the Indian Ocean."³³²

During House committee hearings, State Department representative George Vest was asked, was there "any question about Diego Garcia being in the open sea lanes?"

"No, it is open sea," he replied, before volunteering, "and uninhabited." "There are no inhabitants in Diego Garcia?" queried Representative Larry Winn of Kansas.

122 Chapter Seven

"No inhabitants," Vest answered.

"None at all?"

"No."

Within weeks the Pentagon won appropriations for fiscal years 1975 and 1976 totaling more than $30 million.³³

CONGRESSIONAL HEARINGS

On September 9, 1975, a page-one Washington Post headline read, "Islanders Were Evicted for U.S. Base." Reporter David Ottaway had become the first in the Western press to break the story. Democratic Senators Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts and John Culver of Iowa, who had opposed the expansion of the base, took to the floor of the Senate to propose an amendment demanding the Ford administration explain the circumstances surrounding the expulsion and the role of the U.S. Government in the removals. The amendment passed. A month later the administration submitted to Congress a nine-page response drafted by State and Defense.

The "Report on the Resettlement of Inhabitants of the Chagos Archipelago" described how Chagos had been inhabited since the late eighteenth century, and that "despite the basically transitory nature of the population of these islands, there were some often referred to as 'Ilois'.... In the absence of more complete data," the report said, "it is impossible to establish the status of these persons and to what extent, if any, they formed a distinct community." 34

The report explained the removals by saying that the 1966 U.S.-U.K. agreement envisioned the total evacuation of the islands for military purposes, citing three reasons for wanting the islands uninhabited: security, British concerns about the costs of maintaining civil administration, and Navy concerns about "social problems... expected when placing a military detachment on an isolated tropical island alongside a population with an informal social structure and a prevalent cash wage of less than $4.00 per month." — this was a polite way of referring to trumped up, racist fears about prostitution and other unwanted sexual and romantic relations between military personnel and the islanders.

As to the deportations, the report said, "All went willingly." It continued, "No coercion was used and no British or U.S. servicemen were involved." Although acknowledging that the "resettlement doubtless entailed discomfort and economic dislocation," the report concluded, "United States and United Kingdom officials acted in good faith on the basis of the information available to them." The last sentence of the report offered the Ford administration's final position: "There is no outstanding US obligation to underwrite the cost of additional assistance for the persons affected by the resettlement from the Chagos Islands." 36

7.2 U.S. Government officials. Top from left: Adm. Arleigh Burke, Adm. Horacio Rivero, Paul Nitze. Bottom from left: Robert McNamara, Adm. Thomas Moorer, Adm. Elmo Zumwalt. Photos credits: Admirals courtesy Naval Historical Center; Nitze courtesy Harry S. Truman Library and Museum; McNamara courtesy Lyndon Baines Johnson Library and Museum.

When the House Special Subcommittee on Investigations called for a day of hearings, administration representatives held firm. On November 4, 1975, Democrat subcommittee chair Lee H. Hamilton asked State Department representative George T. Churchill if he considered the characterization "all went willingly to be a fair disclosure of the facts."

"In the sense that no coercion at all was used," Churchill replied.

"No coercion was used when you cut off their jobs? What other coercion do you need? Are you talking about putting them on the rack?" 37

^{*} Hamilton co-chaired the Iraq Study Group following the 2003 invasion.

124 Chapter Seven

Figure 7.3 "Aunt Rita," wearing her best for a Chagos Refugees Group festival and fundraising event, 2004. Photo by author.

At another point in the hearings Hamilton probed further with Churchill: "Is it the position of our Government now, that we have no responsibility toward these islanders? Is that our position?"

"We have no legal responsibility," Churchill replied. "We are concerned. We recently discussed the matter with the British. The British have discussed it with the Mauritian Government. We have expressed our concern."

"It is our basic position that it is up to the British. Is that it?" Hamilton pressed.

"It is our basic position that these people originally were a British responsibility and are now a Mauritian responsibility," Churchill explained.

"We have no responsibility, legal or moral?"

"We have no legal responsibility. Moral responsibility is a term, sir, that I find difficult to assess." 38

Before testimony's end, Churchill said that it was the position of the Government not to allow the Chagossians to return to their homeland. Congress has never again taken up the issue.

NOTES

Archival Sources

6.5
JFK	John F. Kennedy Presidential Library, Boston, MA
LBJ	Lyndon B. Johnson Presidential Library, Austin, TX
MA	Mauritius Archives, Cormandel, Mauritius
NARA	NARA and Records Administration II, College Park, MD
NHC	Naval Historical Center, Operational Archives Branch,
	Washington, DC
PRO	National Archives, Public Records Office, Kew Gardens, England
SNA	Seychelles National Archives, Victoria, Mahé, Seychelles
UKTB	U.K. Trial Bundle, Sheridans Solicitors, London [U.K. litigation documents]

Introduction

- 1. Chagossians born in Chagos spoke Chagos Kreol, one of a group of Indian Ocean French Kreol languages, including Mauritian Kreol and Seselwa (Seychellois Kreol). Their vocabulary is largely French while also incorporating words from English, Arabic, and several African, Indian, and Chinese languages; the underlying grammar for the Kreols appears to come from Bantu languages. Speakers of the various Kreols can understand each other, but Chagos Kreol is distinct in some of its vocabulary and pronunciation. Most Chagossians have lost most of the distinctive features of the language over four decades in exile. See Philip Baker and Chris Corne, Isle de France Creole: Affinities and Origins (n.p.: Karoma, 1982); Robert A. Papen, "The French-based Creoles of the Indian Ocean: An Analysis and Comparison" (Ph.D. diss., University of California, San Diego, 1978). Throughout I use the word Kreol to identify languages and the word Creole when used to identify people of generally African ancestry who are socially categorized as such in Mauritius and Seychelles.
- 2. Auguste Toussaint, History of the Indian Ocean, trans. June Guicharnaud (London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1966), 110.
- 3. David Vine, "The Former Inhabitants of the Chagos Archipelago as an Indigenous People: Analyzing the Evidence," report for Washington College of Law, American University, Washington, DC, July 9, 2003.
- 4. Robert Scott, Limuria: The Lesser Dependencies of Mauritius (Westport, CT: Greenwood Press, 1976[1961]), 242.
- 5. Stuart B. Barber, letter to Paul B. Ryan, April 26, 1982, 3. My thanks to Richard Barber for his help with many important details about his father's life and for providing this and other invaluable documents.

206 Notes to Introduction

- 6. Ibid., 3.
- 7. Horacio Rivero, "Long Range Requirements for the Southern Oceans," enclosure, memorandum to Chief of Naval Operations, May 21, 1960, NHC: 00 Files, 1960, Box 8, 5710, 2. Admiral Horacio Rivero credited Barber with doing most of the writing for the Long Range Objectives Group that produced this document.
 - 8. Rivero, "Long Range Requirements," 2.
- 9. Horacio Rivero, "Assuring a Future Base Structure in the African-Indian Ocean Area," enclosure, memorandum to Chief of Naval Operations, July 11, 1960, NHC: 00 Files, 1960, Box 8, 5710; see also Monoranjan Bezboruah, U.S. Strategy in the Indian Ocean: The International Response (New York: Praeger Publishers, 1977), 58.
 - 10. Barber, letter to Ryan, April 26, 1982, 3.
- 11. Roy L. Johnson, memorandum for Deputy Chief of Naval Operations (Plans & Policy), July 21 1958, NHC: 00 Files, 1958, Box 4, A4-2 Status of Shore Stations, 2–3. See also Bezboruah, U.S. Strategy in the Indian Ocean, 58; Vytautas B. Bandjunis, Diego Garcia: Creation of the Indian Ocean Base (San Jose, CA: Writer's Showcase, 2001), 2.
- 12. Massimo Calabresi, "Postcard: Diego Garcia," Time, September 24, 2007, 8.
- 13. GlobalSecurity.org, "Diego Garcia 'Camp Justice," http://www.globalsecurity.org/military/facility/diego-garcia.htm.
- 14. See, e.g., Peter Hayes, Lyuba Zarsky, and Walden Bello, American Lake: Nuclear Peril in the Pacific (Victoria, Australia: Penguin Books, 1986), 439–46.
- 15. Michael C. Desch, When the Third World Matters: Latin American and United States Grand Strategy (Baltimore, MD: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1993), 152–53.
 - 16. GlobalSecurity.org, "Diego Garcia 'Camp Justice."
 - 17. Neil Hinch, "A Time of Change," Chagos News 24 (August 2004), 6.
- 18. Times Online, "The Secret Downing Street Memo," May 1, 2005, available at http://timesonline.co.uk/tol/news/uk/article387374.ece.
- 19. Stephen Grey, Ghost Plane: The True Story of the CIA Torture Program (New York: St. Martin's Press, 2006); Ian Cobain and Richard Norton-Taylor, "Claims of a Secret CIA Jail for Terror Suspects on British Island to Be Investigated," Guardian, October 19, 2007; Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, "Secret Detentions and Illegal Transfers of Detainees Involving Council of Europe Member States: Second Report," explanatory memorandum, June 7, 2007, Strasbourg, 13.
- 20. Democracy Now, "CIA Admits Used UK Territory for Rendition Flights," February 22, 2008, http://www.democracynow.org/2008/2/22/headlines#6.
- 21. Kevin Sullivan, "U.S. Fueled 'Rendition' Flights on British Soil," Washington Post, February 22, 2008, A16; Cobain and Norton-Taylor, "Claims of a Secret CIA Jail"; Duncan Campbell and Richard Norton-Taylor, "US Accused of Holding Terror Suspects on Prison Ships," Guardian, June 2, 2008; Reprieve,

"US Government Must Reveal Information about Prison Ships Used for 'Terror Suspects," press release, June 2, 2008, available at http://www.reprieve.org.uk.

- 22. See Vine, "The Former Inhabitants"; David Vine, S. Wojciech Sokolowski, and Philip Harvey, "Dérasiné: The Expulsion and Impoverishment of the Chagossian People [Diego Garcia]," expert report for American University Law School, Washington, DC, and Sheridans Solicitors, London, April 11, 2005.
- 23. I have never been employed or paid by Tigar or anyone connected with the suits. The American University law clinic that Tigar supervises paid for some of my research expenses in 2001–2 and in 2004.
- 24. This book builds on David Vine, "Empire's Footprint: Expulsion and the U.S. Military Base on Diego Garcia" (Ph.D. diss., Graduate Center, City University of New York, 2006). Despite the significant role that the British Government and its officials played in carrying out the expulsion, I focus on the U.S. role for three reasons: First, nearly all the literature on Diego Garcia has focused on the role of the British Government in organizing the removal process. The literature has not, other than in passing, examined the role of the U.S. Government in ordering and orchestrating the expulsion. This neglect has left some confusion about the role of the U.S. Government in creating the base and ordering the expulsion. Frequent historical and factual inaccuracies have also appeared in the journalistic and scholarly literature (e.g., to whom the base and the territory belong: as it should be clear by now, while the territory is technically controlled by Britain the base is controlled by the United States, with Diego Garcia de facto U.S. territory). These shortcomings have made a scholarly exploration of the history of the U.S. role long overdue. Second, because I have found that the U.S. Government ordered the expulsion, I believe any analysis of why the Chagossians were exiled must focus on the U.S. role. Third, on a personal level, as one who was born and lives in the United States, I was more immediately concerned about the U.S. Government's role in the exile.
- 25. Because I think social scientists have an obligation to ensure that people participating in and assisting with our research directly benefit from the research—we certainly benefit through grant money, book contracts, articles, speaking engagements, prestige, jobs—I made small contributions of food or money to families with whom I stayed. As thanks to the Chagos Refugees Group for helping to enable my research, I periodically worked in the group's office, primarily providing English translation and clerical assistance.
- 26. In this I was guided by the work of Hugh Gusterson, Nuclear Rites: A Weapons Laboratory at the End of the Cold War (Berkeley, CA: University of California Press, 1996); Carole Cohn, "'Clean Bombs' and Clean Language," in Women, Militarism, and War: Essays in History, Politics, and Social Theory, ed. Jean B. Elshtain and Sheila Tobias (Savage, MD: Rowman & Littlefield, 1990), 33–55, Jennifer Schirmer, The Guatemalan Military Project: A Violence Called Democracy (Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1998); Lesley Gill, The School of the Americas: Military Training and Political Violence in the Americas, (Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 2004); James Mann, Rise of the Vulcans: The History of Bush's War Cabinet (New York: Penguin Books, 2004).

27. In total, I conducted in-depth semi-structured interviews with 18 former and 2 current U.S. Government officials. They included officials from the U.S. Navy, the U.S. departments of Defense and State, and the U.S. Congress. The interview sessions sought to elicit detailed histories of the decision-making process leading to the development of the base and the expulsion. Throughout, I continually asked interviewees to describe their thinking at the time of the events under discussion to identify their contemporaneous interests, motivations, assumptions, and understandings. I conducted more than 10 additional interviews of a similar nature with journalists, academics, military analysts, a scientist, and others who were involved in the history of Diego Garcia or who were knowledgeable about the base.

28. I used these sources and interviews not just to understand the history of Diego Garcia and the dynamics of U.S. Empire but also to understand more about the actors in the national security bureaucracy themselves. As Derek Gregory points out, the actions of states are not produced "through geopolitics and geoeconomics alone"; they are also produced by cultural, social, and psychological processes and practices, especially those that "mark other people as irredeemably "Other" and locate both the self and others spatially. Derek Gregory, The Colonial Present: Afghanistan, Palestine, Iraq (Malden, MA: Blackwell Publishing, 2004), 16, 20. The aim is not to demonize or blame particular individuals but to empathetically understand their involvement within the context in which they were living, while identifying processes and practices that conditioned their actions.

- 29. Stuart B. Barber, letter to Ryan, April 26, 1982.
- 30. Henri Marimootoo, "The Diego Files," Week-end, serial, May-September 1997.
- 31. Exchange of Notes between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Government of the United States of America concerning a limited United States Naval Communications Facility on Diego Garcia, British Indian Ocean Territory (The Diego Garcia Agreement 1972), London, October 24, 1972, 3.
- 32. "Guidelines for Visits to Diego Garcia," memorandum, August 21, 1992, UKTB 3.
- 33. Calabresi, "Postcard," 8. Having filed such a story when he was one of the first journalists to visit the island in at last 25 years, Calabresi calculated "the equivalent in 2007 media dollars" as "probably a box of Chablis."
 - 34. Letter to author, May 12, 2004.
- 35. Simon Winchester, The Sun Never Sets: Travels to the Remaining Outposts of the British Empire (New York: Prentice Hall Press, 1985); "Diego Garcia," Granta 73 (2001): 207–26.
- 36. See, e.g., La Barca: Blog, available at http://labarcaatsea.spaces.live.com/Blog/cns/SCEFC52FCBOE5896!167; Diane Stuemer, "Caught in a Net of Colourful Neighbours," The Ottawa Citizen, February 5, 2001.

- 37. The Department of Defense defines a "facility" as a building, structure, or utility. Department of Defense, "Base Structure Report," 8.
- 38. Global Security.org, "Iraq Facilities," http://www.globalsecurity.org/military/facility/iraq.htm; "Afghanistan Facilities," http://www.globalsecurity.org/military/facility/afghanistan.htm; Patrick Cockburn, "Revealed: Secret Plan to Keep Iraq under US Control," Independent, June 5, 2008; Joseph Gerson, "Enduring' U.S. Bases in Iraq," CommonDreams.org, March 19, 2007; Alexander Cooley, "Base Politics," Foreign Affairs 84, no.6 (2005): 79–92; James Bellamy Foster, "A Warning to Africa: The New U.S. Imperial Grand Strategy," Monthly Review 58, no. 2(2006), available at http://www.monthlyreview.org/0606jbf.htm; Ann Scott Tyson, "Gates, U.S. General Back Long Iraq Stay," Washington Post, June 1, 2007, A11.
- 39. Guy Raz, "U.S. Builds Air Base in Iraq for Long Haul," All Things Considered, National Public Radio, October 12, 2007, http://www.npr.org/templates/story/story.php?storyId=15184773]; Tom Engelhardt, "Baseless Considerations," Tom Dispatch.com, November 5, 2007.
- 40. Mark Gillem, American Town: Building the Outposts of Empire (Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 2007), xvi.
 - 41. Engelhardt, "Baseless Considerations."
- 42. See, e.g., Theresa Hitchens, Michael Katz-Hyman, and Victoria Samson, "Space Weapons Spending in the FY 2007 Defense Budget," report, Center for Defense Information, Washington, DC, March 6, 2006.
- 43. E.g., David Harvey, The New Imperialism (Oxford, UK: Oxford University Press, 2003); Neil Smith, American Empire: Roosevelt's Geographer and the Prelude to Globalization (Berkeley, CA: University of California Press, 2003); Niall Ferguson, Colossus: The Price of America's Empire (New York: Penguin Press, 2004); Chalmers Johnson, The Sorrows of Empire: Militarism, Secrecy, and the End of the Republic (New York: Metropolitan Books, 2004).
- 44. G. John Ikenberry, "Illusions of Empire: Defining the New American Order," Foreign Affairs 83, no. 2(2004): 144.
- 45. See, e.g., Ferguson, Colossus; Michael Ignatieff, "The Burden," New York Times Magazine, January 5, 2003.
- 46. David Ottaway, "Islanders Were Evicted for U.S. Base," Washington Post, September 9, 1975, A1; Washington Post, "The Diego Garcians," editorial, September 11, 1975.
- 47. U.S. Congress, House, "Diego Garcia, 1975: The Debate over the Base and the Island's Former Inhabitants," Special Subcommittee on Investigations, Committee on International Relations, June 5 and November 4, 94th Cong., 1st sess. (Washington, DC: U.S. Government Printing Office, 1975).
- 48. Catherine Lutz's Homefront, an ethnography of Fayetteville, North Carolina and the Fort Bragg U.S. Army base, has provided a particularly effective model for exploring the costs of militarization and U.S. Empire in the United States; in many ways I sought to replicate her study with a base abroad. Catherine Lutz, Homefront: A Military City and the American 20th Century (Boston: Beacon, 2001). See also Katherine T. McCaffrey, Military Power and Popular Protest: The U.S. Navy in Vieques, Puerto Rico (New Brunswick, NJ: Rutgers University Press, 2002); Gill, School of the Americas.

210 Notes to Introduction

49. With few exceptions, anthropologists have been absent from the debates on empire. Amid earlier imperial arguments in the 1960s, Kathleen Gough criticized anthropology, "the child of Western imperialism," for having "virtually failed to study Western imperialism as a social system, or even adequately to explore the effects of imperialism on the societies we studied." More than three decades later, Catherine Lutz found there was still almost no anthropological analysis of empire. (Kathleen Gough, "New Proposals for Anthropologists," Current Anthropology 9, no. 5 (1968): 403, 405; Catherine Lutz, "Making War at Home in the United States: Militarization and the Current Crisis," American Anthropologist 104, no. 3 [2002]: 732.)

While there has been some progress in recent years, there should be little surprise that a discipline rooted in the imperialism and colonialism of Europe and the United States has shied away from making empire and imperialism its immediate subject of study (see Talal Asad, "Introduction," in Anthropology and the Colonial Encounter, ed. Talal Asad [London: Ithaca Press, 1973]). Notwithstanding Mina Davis Caulfield's critique of anthropologists' inattention to empire and Laura Nader's still largely ignored exhortation to study the powerful, most anthropologists have continued to study the lives of the powerless, the poor, and those whose lives have suffered the impact of large-scale forces like imperialism (Mina Davis Caulfield, "Culture and Imperialism: Proposing a New Dialectic," and Laura Nader, "Up the Anthropologist—Perspectives Gained from Studying Up," both in Reinventing Anthropology, ed. Dell Hymes [New York: Pantheon Books, 1969]).

In recent years, there has been progress toward the investigation of empire, paralleling important new research on clites, policymaking, and policymakers. Catherine Lutz has called for the production of "ethnographies of empire" as a way to ethnographically explore the particularities, practices, shifts, and contradictions in empire, as well as its costs. In her ethnography of Fayetteville, North Carolina, home to the Fort Bragg U.S. Army base, Lutz illustrates the domestic costs of militarization and U.S. Empire, providing an important model for investigating the international effects of militarization and empire in the lives of the Chagossians. (See Lutz, "Making War at Home"; "Empire Is in the Details," American Ethnologist 33, no. 4 (2006); Homefront. See also McCaffrey, Military Power and Popular Protest; Gill, School of the Americas.)

Too often, however, many anthropological analyses treat large-scale forces and sources of power like imperialism and the U.S. Government, which shape and structure people's lives, as abstract givens, without subjecting them to detailed analysis of any kind (Michael Burawoy, "Introduction: Reaching for the Global," in Global Ethnography, ed. Michael Burawoy et al. [Berkeley, CA: University of California Press, 2000], 1–40). To say, as many do, that structural forces shape lives, constrain agency, and create suffering is one thing. To demonstrate how these things happen is another.

This book then is an attempt to build on the need to subject extralocal forces to ethnographic investigation and to realize a model for understanding widespread suffering developed by Paul Farmer: With suffering, "structured by historically given (and often economically driven) processes and forces that conspire . . . to constrain agency," the task is to detail what the historically given, economically (and politically) driven processes and forces are, how they operate, and how they have shaped Chagossians' lives. As Michael Burawoy says, forces "become the topic of investigation." (See Paul Farmer, "On Suffering and Structural Violence: A View from Below," in Social Suffering, ed. Arthur Kleinman, Veena Das, and Margaret Lock [Berkeley, CA: University of California Press, 1997], 261-83; William Roseberry, "Understanding Capitalism—Historically, Structurally, Spatially," in Locating Capitalism in Time and Space, ed. D. Nugent (Palo Alto, CA: Stanford University Press, 2002), 61-79; Michael Burawoy, "Manufacturing the Global," Ethnography 2, no. 2 [2001]: 147–59; Burawoy, "Introduction: Reaching for the Global"; Michel-Rolph Trouillot, "The Anthropology of the State in the Age of Globalization," Current Anthropology 42, no. 1 [2001]: 125-38; Eric R. Wolf, Europe and the People without History [Berkeley, CA: University of California Press, 1982].)

At the same time, this corrective would go too far to focus, like many traditional foreign policy scholars, only on the structural dynamics or even the actors of U.S. foreign policy while ignoring the effects of foreign policy. I began to see that a bifocaled approach offering roughly equal study of the Chagossians and U.S. Empire would offer the best way to understand Diego Garcia (see also Gill, School of the Americas). The book aims to contribute to scholarship on empire, militarization, and foreign policy by subjecting U.S. Empire and its actors to the same kind of ethnographic scrutiny most often reserved for imperialism's victims, while still attending to the lives affected by the U.S. Empire so often ignored by most non-anthropologist scholars. Ultimately the book attempts to do justice anthropologically to both sides of Diego Garcia, both sides of U.S. Empire, by seeking to investigate ethnographically the experience of U.S. Government officials and the Chagossians while attending to the larger structural context in which the base was created. Bringing the two sides "into the same frame of study," I aim to "posit their relationships on the basis of first-hand ethnographic research." See George Marcus, Ethnography through Thick and Thin (Princeton University Press, 1998), 84.

Chapter One The Ilois, The Islanders

1. On the history of Chagos, see especially former governor of colonial Mauritius Sir Robert Scott's Limuria: The Lesser Dependencies of Mauritius, and former commissioner of the British Indian Ocean Territory Richard Edis, Peak of Limuria: The Story of Diego Garcia and the Chagos Archipelago, new ed. (London:

Chagos Conservation Trust, 2004). The most important primary sources are those available in the Mauritius Archives and the Public Records Office (National Archives), in Kew, England.

- 2. Scott, Limuria, 68, 42–43, 48–50; Vijayalakshmi Teelock, Mauritian History: From Its Beginnings to Modern Times (Moka, Mauritius: Mahatma Gandhi Institute, 2000), 16–17.
- 3. Robert L. Stein, The French Slave Trade in the Eighteenth Century: An Old Regime Business (Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 1979), 9.
- 4. Larry Bowman, Mauritius: Democracy and Development in the Indian Ocean (Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1991), 13. See also Teelock, Mauritian History, 104–5; Stein, The French Slave Trade in the Eighteenth Century, 119.
- 5. Alfred J. E. Orian, "Report on a Visit to Diego Garcia," La Revue Agricole et Sucrière 38 (1958): 129; Scott, Limuria, 76.
- 6. Iain B. Walker, "British Indian Ocean Territory," in The Complete Guide to the Southwest Indian Ocean (Argelès sur Mer, France: Cornelius Books, 1993), 562; Scott, Limuria, 63, 69; Charles Grant, The History of Mauritius or the Isle of France and the Neighboring Islands from Their First Discovery to the Present Time (New Delhi: Asia Educational Services, 1995[1801]), 359.
 - 7. It is possible that other enslaved people arrived as early as 1770.
- 8. H. Ly-Tio-Fane and S. Rajabalee, "An Account of Diego Garcia and its People," Journal of Mauritian Studies 1, no. 2 (1986): 91–92; I. Walker, "British Indian Ocean Territory," 563; Scott, Limuria, 20; B. d'Unienville, "Notes on the Chagos Archipelago." Mauritiana Collection, University of Mauritius, n.d.; Edis, Peak of Limuria.
- 9. "Diego Garcia Expedition 1786," India Office Records, Bombay Secret and Political Consultations, Vol. 73, 1786. See also Edis, Peak of Limuria, 30–31.
- 10. Edis, Peak of Limuria, 31; Scott, Limuria, 75, 20; I. Walker, "British Indian Ocean Territory," 562; "Diégo Garcia," report, n.d. [1825–29], MA: TB 3/2.
- 11. Europeans had previously referred to the Indian Ocean as an "Arab Lake." See Enseng Ho, "Empire through Diasporic Eyes: A View from the Other Boat," Comparative Study of Society and History 46 (2004): 219.
- 12. Permits to Slave Holders to Transport Slaves between Islands, 1828, MA: IA 32. See also MA: IA 32; IG 59; IG 112/5052, 5117, 5353, 5355, 5448.
- 13. See Herbert G. Gutman, The Black Family in Slavery and Freedom, 1750–1925 (New York: Vintage, 1976), 185–201, on naming practices during slavery reflecting the maintenance of kinship ties among African Americans.
- Scott, Limuria, 112, 119; Donald Taylor, "Slavery in the Chagos Archipelago," Chagos News 14 (2000): 3; Dulary Peerthum and Satyendra Peerthum, "By the Sweat of Their Brow: A Study of Free and Unfree Labourers in the Chagos Archipelago, c. 1783–1880," preliminary paper abstract, 2002; MA: IB 12/47.
 M. N. Lucie-Smith, "Report on the Coconut Industry of the Lesser De-
- M. N. Lucie-Smith, "Report on the Coconut Industry of the Lesser Dependencies, Mauritius," Department of Agriculture, Port Louis, Mauritius, June 1959, 6.

16. Ly-Tio-Fane and Rajabalee, "An Account of Diego Garcia and Its People," 92; d'Unienville, "Notes on the Chagos Archipelago"; "Diégo Garcia" (report [1825–29]); I. Walker, "British Indian Ocean Territory," 563; Orian, "Report on a Visit to Diego Garcia," 129. Cyclones are only known to have hit Chagos in 1891 and 1944. See Edward P. Ashe, letter to Sir A. W. Moore, November 26, 1903, PRO: ADM 123/34, 2; Edis, Peak of Limuria. "Dauquet" was perhaps spelled "Danguet" or "Dauget." Six Islands actually includes a seventh.

17. Bowman, Mauritius, 17–18. British oversight in Mauritius and to an even greater extent in the isolated dependencies like Chagos was weak at best. The British sent the first government agent to investigate conditions in Chagos 10–15 years after taking possession of the archipelago, but otherwise simply encouraged the production of oil to supply the Mauritian market. See Scott, Limuria, 128; Ly-Tio-Fane and Rajabalee, "An Account of Diego Garcia and Its People," 92–93.

18. Lapotaire et al., "Mémoire," letter, October 8, 1828, MA: TB 1/41828, 13. For descriptions of life under slavery, also see Scott, Limuria, 99, 104–5, 149.

19. Lapotaire et al., "Mémoire," 13. Scott confirms that by law, slave owners were technically required to provide basic food rations, clothing, housing, and medical care, and that "slaves were usually supplied with various vegetables . . . [and] encouraged to rear small livestock . . . either by way of incentives to good work or to place on the slaves themselves as much as possible of the onus of providing a balanced diet." Scott, Limuria, 105.

20. Also known as the "plantation complex." See Sidney W. Mintz, "The Caribbean as a Socio-cultural Area," in Peoples and Cultures of the Caribbean: An Anthropological Reader, ed. Michael M. Horowitz (Garden City, NY: Natural History Press, 1971), 17–46; Mintz, Caribbean Transformations (Chicago: Aldine Publishing, 1974); Phillip D. Curtin, The Rise and the Fall of the Plantation Complex: Essays in Atlantic History (New York: Cambridge University Press, 1990); Michael Craton, Empire, Enslavement and Freedom in the Caribbean (Kingston, Iamaica: Ian Bandle, 1997).

21. Curtin, The Rise and Fall of the Plantation Complex, 11–13; Mintz, Caribbean Transformations, 46.

22. Mintz, Carribean Transformations, 52, 54.

23. This was the case in the isolated Out Islands of the Bahamas, where similar conditions prevailed. See Howard Johnson, The Bahamas from Slavery to Servitude, 1783–1933 (Gainesville: University of Florida Press, 1996), 50.

24. See W. J. Eccles, The French in North America, 1500–1783 (East Lansing: Michigan State University Press, 1998), 172–74; William F. S. Miles, Elections and Ethnicity in French Martinique: A Paradox in Paradise (New York: Praeger Publishers, 1986), 32–34; Deryck Scarr, Seychelles since 1770: History of a Slave and Post-Slavery Society (Trenton, NJ: Africa World Press, 1999).

25. Scott, Limuria, 136; Craton, Empire, Enslavement, and Freedom in the Caribbean, 3; Eccles, The French in North America, 1500–1783, 172.

26. Eccles, The French in North America, 1500-1783, 172.

27. Scott, Limuria, 140-41.

28. L. B. Büehmüller and André Büehmüller, census record, April 8, 1861, MA: TB 3/1. The extent and rate at which Indian labor was introduced in Chagos is unclear. A visiting magistrate's report from 1880 says that there were on the order of 10 Indians in all of Chagos, a figure almost certainly far too low. See J. H. Ackroyd, "Report of the Police and Stipendary Magistrate for the Smaller Dependencies 1880," Magistrate for Lesser Dependencies 1880, Port Louis, Marutitius, March 22, MA: RA 2568, 11. Some claim a figure of 40 percent Indian descent by the 1960s, which may accurately reflect the percentage tracing at least some Indian ancestry. See Francoise Botte, "The 'Ilois' Community and the 'Ilois' Women," unpublished MS, 1980; Iain B. Walker, "Zaffer Pe Sanze": Ethnic Identity and Social Change among the Ilois in Mauritius (Vacoas, Mauritius: KMLI, 1986).

29. Marina Carter and Raymond d'Unienville, Unshackling Slaves: Liberation and Adaptation of Ex-Apprentices (London: Pink Pigeon Books, N.D), 57.

30. See Thomas V. Bulpin, Islands in a Forgotten Sea ([no city], Netherlands: Howard Timmins, 1958), 314; H. Labouchere, letter to Governor Higginson, February 26, 1857, MA: SA 57/47, and letter to Governor Higginson, August 20, 1857, MA: SA 59/19; Scott, Limuria, 263; Ackroyd, "Report of the Police and Stipendary Magistrate," 8.

31. Charles Anderson to Colonial Secretary, September 5, 1838, MA: RD 18.

32. G. Meyer, "Report on Visit to Chagos Archipelago," Port Louis, Mauritius, Labour Office, May 23, 1949, PRO: CO 859/194/8, 1.

33. Bulpin, Islands in a Forgotten Sea, 28, 314; Ackroyd, "Report of the Police and Stipendary Magistrate," 11; Scott, Limuria, 162.

d Stipendary Magistrate, 11; Scott, Limuria, 16. 34. Scott, Limuria, 162–65.

35. Ackroyd, "Report of the Police and Stipendary Magistrate," 11. Without hearing from Chagossians at the time, however, one must be careful about drawing conclusions based on these uncorroborated official reports.

36. Scott, Limuria, 253; Warner, "Report of Mr. Warner on the Dependencies of Mauritius," Port Louis, Mauritius, MA: TB 1/3.

37. H. J. Holland, letter to Colonial Secretary, February 7, 1887, MA: SA 167/25.

38. Ivanoff Dupont, "Report of the Acting Magistrate for the Lesser Dependencies of Mauritius on Diego Garcia," Bambous, Mauritius, June 4, 1883, MA: SA 142/9, 2–5; Scott, Limuria, 169–78.

39. Papen, "The French-based Creoles of the Indian Ocean"; John Holm, Pidgins and Creoles, vol. 2: Reference Survey (Cambridge: University of Cambridge Press, 1989), 403–4.

40. Also Ilwa. See Roger Dussercle, Archipel de Chagos: En mission, novembre 10, 1933–janvier 1934 (Port Louis, Mauritius: General Printing and Stationery, 1934), 9; John Madeley, "Diego Garcia: A Contrast to the Falklands," The Minority Rights Group Report 54, London: Minority Rights Group Ltd, 1985 [1982], n. 5.

- 41. Ly-Tio-Fane and Rajabalee, "An Account of Diego Garcia and Its People," 105; Scott, Limuria, 182.
- 42. For a concise description of copra processing, see I. Walker, "British Indian Ocean Territory," 563.
- 43. The account and all quotations in this section come from W. J. Hanning, "Report on Visit to Peros Banhos," parts I and II, March 29, 1932. PRO: CO 167/879/4 102894. Unfortunately I was unable to ask Rita and other older Chagossians about the events described.
 - 44. Ibid., I:6.
 - 45. Ibid., I:5.
 - 46. Ibid., I:6.
 - 47. Ibid., I:8.
 - 48. Ibid., I:8-9.
 - 49. Ibid., I:9–10. 50. Ibid., attachment.
 - 51. Ibid., II:1–3.
- 52. John Todd, "Notes on the Islands of the British Indian Ocean Territory," report, January 10, 1969. SNA, 33; "Notes on a Visit to Chagos by the Administrator, British Indian Ocean Territory," report, July 30, 1969, PRO, 3; Dalais 1935:18.
- 53. R. Lavoipierre, "Report on a Visit to the Mauritius Dependencies: 16th October–10th November, 1953," Port Louis, Mauritius, December 7, 1953, PRO: CO 1023/132 1953:5; Mary Darlow, "Report by Public Assistance Commissioner and Social Welfare Advisor," Port Louis, Mauritius, December, PRO: CO 1023/132 1953; Scott, Limuria, 7.
- 54. The plantation company had the power—and at times exercised it—to deport workers that management considered troublesome. Otherwise, everyone living on the islands was guaranteed work. The following description of working and living conditions comes from many sources, including interviews and conversations with Chagossians and other plantation employees. See also Scott, Limuria; I. Walker, Zaffer Pe Sanze, "British Indian Ocean Territory"; the reports of J. R. Todd; and a series of magistrate reports on Chagos dating to the nineteenth century.
 - 55. See, e.g., Todd, "Notes on the Islands of the BIOT."
 - 56. Scott, Limuria, 285.
 - 57. Ibid., 266-67.
 - 58. Ibid., 242.
- 59. Hilary Blood, "The Peaks of Lemuria," Geographical Magazine 29 (1957): 522.
 - 60. Scott, Limuria, 184, 24.
- 61. Auguste Toussaint, Histoire des Îles Mascareignes (Paris: Editions Berger-Levrault, 1972), 18.
- Scott, Limuria, 293. Scott meant his description to apply also to the people of the other Lesser Dependencies like Agalega.

76. "British Indian Ocean Territory," memorandum, December 14, 1966, PRO, 2. Emphasis in original.

77. Chalfont, letter to David K. E. Bruce, December 30, 1966, NARA: RG 59/150/64–65, Subject-Numeric Files 1964–1966, Box 1552.

Chapter Five "Maintaining the Fiction"

- 1. McCaffrey, Military Power and Popular Protest; Monthly Review, "U.S. Military Bases and Empire."
- 2. A comparative study of maritime empires notes, "navies, like their governments, regard any political upheaval as dangerous to imperial stability. Rebels cannot be tolerated if order (or 'peace') is to prevail." Clark G. Reynolds, Command of the Sea: The History and Strategy of Maritime Empires (Malabar, FL: Robert E. Krieger Publishing, 1983), 7.
 - 3. Bezboruah, U.S. Strategy in the Indian Ocean, 52, 54, 58, 60.
 - 4. Ryan, "Diego Garcia," 133.
 - 5. UKTB 4-132.
- 6. Secretary of State for the Colonies, telegram to Commissioner, British Indian Ocean Territory, February 25, 1966, UKTB.
 - 7. Brooke-Turner, "British Indian Ocean Territory."
 - 8. Ibid.
- 9. Queen v. Secretary of State ex parte Bancoult 2006: para. 27, emphasis in original.
 - 10. Ibid., para. 27.
- 11. Anthony Aust, "Immigration Legislation for BIOT," memorandum, 16 January 1970.
- 12. The British Government also acquired the islands of Desroches from Paul Moulinie (the primary owner in Chagos), and Farquhar from another private owner (Aldabra was already Crown territory belonging to the Queen).
 - 13. Some may have been prevented from returning prior to this date.
- 14. The contract also established the number of workers allowed on the islands, working hours, and wages.
- 15. See also Mauritius Ministry of Social Security, letter, July 19, 1968, PRO: FCO 31/13. This history of the expulsion process builds on Vine et al., Dérasiné, and is drawn from several sources. Many published accounts of the expulsion exist: see, e.g., Ottaway, "Islanders Were Evicted for U.S. Base"; Winchester, The Sun Neuer Sets; Madeley, "Diego Garcia." Most provide a broad overview of the expulsion. To document the expulsion accurately and verifiably and with more detail than previous histories, this history draws almost exclusively on primary sources: interviews and conversations with Chagossians and others in Mauritius and the Seychelles who witnessed events; court documents; and contemporaneous British Government documents describing many of the events of the expulsion as they occurred. Although I have relied on Chagossians' eyewitness accounts, I have tried to verify their accounts with published sources as cited.

- 16. UKTB 5-578. In January 1969, a joint State Department—Defense Department message indicated the U.S. Government's displeasure with a new request by the BIOT administrator to rehire fifty "Chagos-born laborers" in Mauritius for work on Diego Garcia. See William P. Rogers, telegram to the U.S. Embassy London, January 31, 1969, NARA: RG 59/150/64–65, Subject-Numeric Files 1967–1969, Box 1551, 4.
- 17. A. Wooler, letter to Eric G. Norris, August 22, 1968, attachment to Eric G. Norris, note to Mr. Counsell, September 9, 1968, PRO: FCO 31/134.
- 18. John Todd, "Tour Report—Chagos May 1967," report, May 1967, British Indian Ocean Territory, PRO. 5.
- 19. John Todd, "Chagos," report, British Indian Ocean Territory, September 1968, PRO, 4.
 - 20. Todd, "Tour Report—Chagos May 1967," 3; Todd, "Chagos."
 - 21. The school later seems to have briefly reopened before closing permanently.
- 22. Todd, "Tour Report—Chagos May 1967," 3; Todd, "Notes on the Islands of the British Indian Ocean Territory," 33; "Notes on a Visit to Chagos by the Administrator, British Indian Ocean Territory," 3; "Notes on a Visit, July 17th to August 2nd," 1970, PRO, 2.
- 23. Draft contract between the Crown and Moulinie and Company (Seychelles) Limited, 1968, PRO: WO 32/21295.
 - 24. See, e.g., Madeley, "Diego Garcia," 4.
- 25. K. R. Whitnall, letter to Mr. Matthews, Miss Emery, May 7, 1969, UKTB: 6-755.
- 26. David Greenaway and Nishal Gooroochurn, "Structural Adjustment and Economic Growth in Mauritius," in Rajen Dabee and David Greenaway, eds., The Mauritian Economy: A Reader (Houndsmill, UK: Palgrav, 2001), 67; Ramesh Durbarry, "The Export Processing Zone," in Dabee and Greenaway, The Mauritian Economy, 109.
 - 27. Wooler, letter to Norris, August 22, 1968.
- 28. E.H.M. Counsell, "Defence Facilities in the Indian Ocean; Diego Garcia," letter to Mr. Le Tocq, 1969, PRO: FCO 31/401.
 - 29. Foreign Relations of the United States, 1964-1968, 21:103-5.
- 30. Fred Kaplan, The Wizards of Armageddon (Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 1991), 254–55.
 - 31. Ibid., 257.
 - 32. Cohn, "Clean Bombs' and Clean Language"; also Gusterson, Nuclear Rites.
 - 33. Foreign Relations of the United States, 1964–1968, 21:108.
- 34. James W. O'Grady, memorandum for the Secretary of the Navy, September 19, 1967, NHC: 00 Files, 1967, Box 74, 11000/2.
- 35. F. Pearce, "An Island of No Importance," New Scientist, February 7, 2004, 48

36. Ibid. Stoddart has long been troubled by his role in saving Aldabra and inadvertently helping to clear the way for the Diego Garcia removals. Since the 1970s, he has expended large amounts of his time and money collecting documents about the creation of the base and the expulsion, provided assistance to the Chagossians' struggle to return, and written detailed letters to politicians in the United States and United Kingdom advocating on their behalf. See also Charles Douglas-Home, "Scientists Fight Defence Plans for Island of Aldabra," Times (London), August 16, 1967.

Chapter Six "Absolutely Must Go"

- 1. Kaplan, Wizards of Armageddon, 138.
- 2. Ibid., 140, 139.
- 3. Ibid., 141; Bob Thompson, "Arsenal of Words," Washington Post, 29 October 2007, C2.
- 4. Foreign Relations of the United States, 1964–1968, 21:92–93, 109–17; Bandjunis, Diego Garcia, 30.
- 5. FRUS, Foreign Relations of the United States, 1964–1968, 21:109–12; James W. O'Grady, memorandum to Op-002, May 2, 1968, NHC: 00 Files, 1967, Box 74, 11000/3.
 - 6. O'Grady, memorandum to Op-002, 3.
- 7. Alain Enthoven, memorandum for Secretary of Defense, May 10, 1968, NHC: 00 Files, 1967, Box 74, 11000/3.
 - 8. Foreign Relations of the United States, 1964-1968, 21:113-14.
- 9. Earl C. Ravenal, "American Strategy in the Indian Ocean: The Proposed Base on Diego Garcia," Hearings before the Subcommittee on the Near East and South Asia of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, 93rd Congress, March 14, 1974.
 - 10. Bandjunis, Diego Garcia, 35-36.
- 11. U.S. Department of State, "Senior Interdepartmental Group, Chairman's Summary," December 24, 1968, NARA: CIA records, 7.
 - 12. Ravenal, "American Strategy in the Indian Ocean."
- 13. Dean Rusk, telegram to U.S. Embassy London, August 7, 1968, NARA: RG 59/150/64–65, Subject-Numeric Files 1967–1969, Box 1552.
- 14. Ibid. At times the U.S. Government has argued that it did not know there was an indigenous population in Chagos and that it thought the population was composed of transient workers. This argument is difficult to believe. Any cursory inspection of writings on Chagos (most importantly Scott, Limuria; Blood, "The Peaks of Lemuria") would have revealed the existence of generations of Chagossians living on the islands. Even without reading a word, it is hard to imagine that the Navy's first reconnaissance inspection of Diego Garcia in 1957 would have overlooked hundreds of families (unusual in the case of migrant workers) and a fully functioning society complete with nineteenth-century cemeteries and churches and people tracing their ancestry back as many as five generations in Chagos. The British were clearly well aware of the indigenous population, as their extensive discussions on the subject in memos and letters throughout the 1960s reveal. A secret 1969 letter from the U.S. Embassy in London to the British Foreign and Commonwealth Department confirms U.S. knowledge of "Chagos-born laborers" (Gerald G. Oplinger, letter to Richard A. Sykes, February 3, 1969, PRO).

15. U.S. Embassy London, telegram to Secretary of State, August 9, 1968, NARA: RG 59/150/64–65, Subject-Numeric Files 1967–1969, Box 1551, 1.

16. R. S. Leddick, memorandum for the Record, November 11, 1969, NHC: 00 Files, 1969, Box 98, 11000.

17. R. S. Leddick, memorandum for the Record, December 3, 1969, NHC: 00 Files, 1969, Box 98, 11000; Bandjunis, Diego Garcia, 37.

18. Tazewell Shepard, memorandum for Harry D. Train, January 26, 1970, NHC: 00 Files, 1970, Box 111, 11000.

19. Robert A. Frosch, memorandum for the Deputy Secretary of Defense, February 27, 1970, NHC: 00 Files, 1970, Box 111, 11000; John H. Chafee, memorandum for the Secretary of Defense, January 31, 1970, NHC: 00 Files, 1970, Box 111, 11000.

20. Throughout the development of Diego Garcia and BIOT, U.S. and U.K. government officials sought at least in public to describe the military activities there not as a "base" but as a "station," a "facility," or a "post." They usually linked these terms with adjectives like "austere," "limited," or "modest." From early in the development of Diego Garcia, however, the Navy and later the Department of Defense and the Air Force had large visions for the island: first, for naval communications in the Indian Ocean (including the coordination of nuclear submarines newly deployed there to strike the Soviet Union and China); second, as a large harbor for Navy warships and submarines, with enough room to protect an aircraft carrier task force; and third, as an airfield intended first for Navy reconnaissance planes and later for nuclear-bomb-ready B-52 bombers and almost every other plane in the Air Force arsenal (see Bandjunis, Diego Garcia, 8-14; U.K. Colonial Office; J. H. Gibbon et al., "Brief on UK/US London Discussions on United States Defence Interests in the Indian Ocean," memorandum, March 6, 1964, PRO: CAB 21/5418, 81174, 1-2). Faced with the potential for growing opposition, U.S. and U.K. officials insistently avoided describing plans for Diego Garcia as a "base." With the British soon committing to withdraw its troops east of the Suez Canal by 1971, the U.K. Government did not want to be involved in any development perceived to be a new base. See Mewes, 1. U.S. officials faced opposition to their expansion into the Indian Ocean in Congress, from nations around the Indian Ocean like India, and even within the Pentagon. This opposition was especially intense in reaction to the escalating war in Vietnam; as in southeast Asia, this would also be a move into a region almost entirely without a prior U.S. presence.

- 21. See attachment, Op-605E4, "Proposed Naval Communications Facility on Diego Garcia," briefing sheet, [January] 1970, NHC: 00 Files, 1970, Box 111, 11000.
- 22. Walter H. Annenberg, telegram to the Secretary of State, July 12, 1970, library of David Stoddart (see also NARA: RG 59, Subject-Numeric Files, 1970–1973 1970); Greene, telegram to the Secretary of State, December 16, 1970, library of David Stoddart (see also NARA: RG 59, Subject-Numeric Files, 1970–1973).
- 23. F. J. Blouin, memorandum for the Chief of Naval Operations, December 28, 1970, NHC: 00 Files, 1970, Box 115, 11000.
- 24. William P. Rogers, telegram to the U.S. Embassy London, June 19, 1970, library of David Stoddart (see also NARA: RG 59, Subject-Numeric Files, 1970–1973).
 - 25. Ibid.
- 26. Walter H. Small, memorandum for the Chief of Naval Operations, December 11, 1970, NHC: 00 Files, 1970, Box 115, 11000.
- 27. William P. Rogers, telegram to the U.S. Embassy London, June 19, 1970, library of David Stoddart (see also NARA: RG 59, Subject-Numeric Files, 1970–1973).
- 28. Greene, telegram to the Secretary of State, December 16, 1970, library of David Stoddart (see also NARA: RG 59, Subject-Numeric Files, 1970–1973).
 - 29. Bandjunis, Diego Garcia, 46.
- 30. William P. Rogers, telegram to the U.S. Embassy London, December 14, 1970, NARA: RG 59/150/67/1/5, Subject-Numeric Files 1970–1973, Box
- 1744.
 31. Elmo R. Zumwalt, Jr., On Watch: A Memoir (New York: Quadrangle, 1976), 17–19. Matching his own elite background, Zumwalt married Mouza
- Coutelais-du-Roche, a woman of French and Russian parentage, whom he met at the end of World War II among the White Russian community-in-exile in Harbin, Manchuria.
 - 32. Ibid., 203-4.
 - 33. Ibid., 27-29.
 - 34. Ibid., 34.
 - 35. Ibid., 28.
- 36. U.S. Naval Institute, "Reminiscences by Staff Officers of Admiral Elmo R. Zumwalt, Jr., U.S. Navy, vol. I," Annapolis, MD, U.S. Naval Institute, 1989, 311–12
- 37. Ibid., 313.
- 38. J. H. Dick, memorandum for the Chief of Naval Operations, December 18, 1970, NHC: 00 Files, 1970, Box 115, 11000.
- 39. I. Watt, letter to Mr. D.A. Scott, Sir L. Monson, and Mr. Kerby, January 26, 1971, PRO: T317/162, 1–2.

- 40. Blouin, memorandum for the Chief of Naval Operations, December 28, 1970.
- 41. Attachment to Walter H. Small, memorandum for the Chief of Naval Operations, January 11, 1971, NHC: 00 Files, 1971, Box 172, 11000. See also Walter H. Small, memorandum for the Vice Chief of Naval Operations, January 28, 1971, NHC: 00 Files, 1971, Box 172, 11000.
- 42. Small, memorandum for the Chief of Naval Operations, January 11, 1971, 1.
- 43. Attachment to Small, memorandum for the Chief of Naval Operations, January 11, 1971.
- 44. John Todd, letter to Allan F. Knight, February 17, 1971, PRO: T317/1625.
- 45. According to Madeley, "One Ilois woman, Marie Louina, died on Diego when she learned she would have to leave her homeland." Madeley, "Diego Garcia," 5. I have been unable to confirm this account.
- 46. See also Sunday Times, "The Islanders that Britain Sold," September 21, 1975, 10.
- 47. Marcel Moulinie, statement of Marcel Moulinie, application for judicial review, Queen v. The Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, exparte Bancoult, 1999.
- 48. Small, memorandum for the Vice Chief of Naval Operations, January 28, 1971, 1.
- 49. U.S. Department of State, telegram to U.S. Embassy Port Louis, U.S. Embassy London, February 4, 1971, library of David Stoddart. See also NARA: RG 59, Subject-Numeric Files 1970–1973.
- 50. Bruce Greatbatch, FCO Telno BIOT 52, telegram to Foreign and Commonwealth Office, August 26, 1971, PRO.
- 51. Attachment to E. L. Cochrane, Jr., memorandum for the Deputy Chief of Naval Operations (Plans and Policy), March 24, 1971, NHC: 00 Files, 1971, Box 174, 11000, 2.
 - 52. Ibid., 1.
 - 52. Ibid.,
- 54. Ibid. The Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Plans and Policy explained to Zumwalt that Diego's inhabitants were a mix of Ilois, Mauritians, and Seychellois. He also explained the Navy's position on employing any locals: "The decision not to hire local labor, even for domestic work, was made on the basis that no local economy dependent on the facility should be created. To do so would make it more difficult to remove the workers when the facility becomes operational. If a native community of bars, laundries, etc. grew and then was required to be disbanded, the resultant publicity could become damaging. Another important factor is that presentations to Congress have stressed that there will be no indigenous population and no native labor utilized in the construction." Zumwalt scrawled the following in response: "Better than I had hoped." See Blouin, memorandum for the Chief of Naval Operations, December 28, 1970.

Chapter Seven "On the Rack"

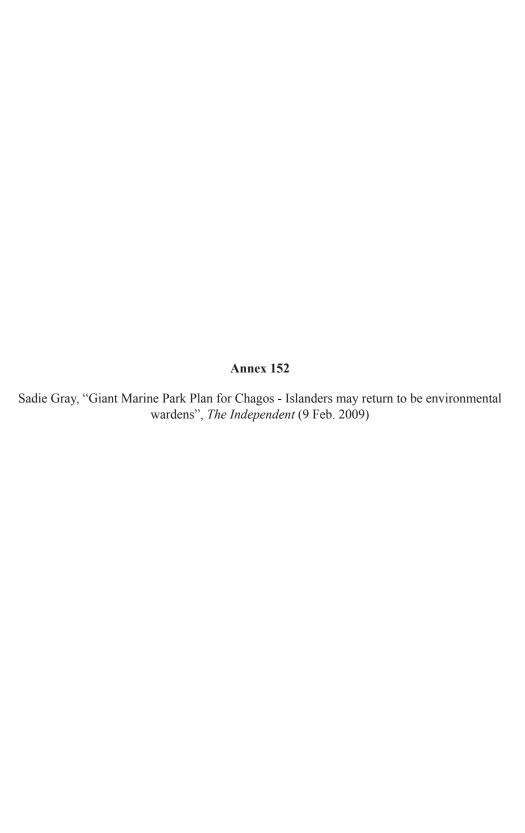

- 1. Bandjunis, Diego Garcia, 47.
- 2. Ibid., 47-49.
- 3. See also Marimootoo, "Diego Files," 46, 48.
- 4. Ottaway, "Islanders Were Evicted for U.S. Base."
- 5. D. D. Newsom, letter to James K. Bishop, Jr., February 1, 1972, NARA: RG 59/150/67/1/5, Subject-Numeric Files 1970–1973, Box 1715, 1.
- 6. Bruce Greatbatch, FCO Telno BIOT 52, telegram to Foreign and Commonwealth Office, August 26, 1971, PRO.
 - 7. U.S. Congress, House, "Diego Garcia, 1975," 61.
- 8. See also Marcel Moulinie, "Statement of Marcel Moulinie," application for judicial review, Queen v. The Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, ex parte Bancoult [1999], para. 14; Pilger, Freedom Next Time, 26–27, 35.
 - 9. Moulinie, "Statement," para. 14. See also Madeley, "Diego Garcia," 4–5. 10. Some of the voyages to the Seychelles took as many as six days. Pilger,
- 10. Some of the voyages to the Seychelles took as many as six days. Pilger Freedom Next Time, 28.
 - 11. Moulinie "Statement," para. 16.
- 12. Greatbatch, FCO Telno BIOT 52, August 26, 1971; Dale, telegram to Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Telno personal 176, September 23, 1971, PRO.
- 13. William D. Brewer, memorandum to Department of State, December 20, 1971, NARA: RG 59/150/67/27/6, Subject-Numeric Files 1970–1973, Box 3010, 4.
 - 14. Ibid., 1, 4.
 - 15. Ibid., 1, 3.
 - 16. Ibid., 5, 1.
- 17. William D. Brewer, letter to Herman J. Cohen, January 5, 1972, NARA: RG 59/150/67/1/5, Subject-Numeric Files 1970–1973, Box 1715, 2, 5. Although Brewer's State Department superiors knew the Air Force undersecretary was being "intemperate and at times illogical," they chose not to challenge him (and the Air Force) on an issue they considered minor and which they perceived might harm other departmental priorities. See Herman J. Cohen, letter to David D. Newsom, January 20, 1972, NARA: Subject-Numeric 1970–1973, 59/150/67/1/5.
 - 18. Brewer, letter to Cohen, January 5, 1972.
- 19. Ibid., 1.
- 20. Adam Hochschild, King Leopold's Ghost: A Story of Greed, Terror, and Heroism in Colonial Africa (Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1999), 121–22. The possibility that others might have challenged the expulsion becomes more improbable when one considers that to challenge any policy of the U.S. Government is not simply to challenge one's immediate superior or an office within the Government, but to challenge one's entire department, the department's secretary, and to a significant extent the U.S. Government as a whole. This lesson is communicated explicitly in most telegrams, which, in the case of the State Department, for example, deliver most orders and instructions not in the name of a State Department superior but in the name of the "Department of State," under the signature of the Secretary of State. This contributed to the feeling among many officials that they were carrying out the policy dictates of the U.S. Government writ large, matters about which they generally believed they had no input.

- 21. Charles Lemert, Social Theory: The Multicultural and Classic Readings (Boulder, CO: Westview Press, 1993), 119.
- 22. U.S. Department of State, telegram to U.S. Embassy London, February 5, 1972, NARA: RG 59/150/67/27/6, Subject Numeric Files 1970–1973, Box 3010.
- 23. Anthony Lake and Roger Morris, "Pentagon Papers (2): The Human Reality of Realpolitik," Foreign Policy 4 (1971): 159. See Samantha Power, "A Problem from Hell": America and the Age of Genocide (New York: Perennial, 2002), 365.
- 24. PRO: Foreign & Commonwealth Office, Overseas Development Administration, London, 1972; Henry Precht, airgram to Department of State, May 2, 1972, NARA: RG 59/150/67/1/5, Subject-Numeric Files 1970–1973, Box 1715, 2.
 - 25. John Todd, letter to Allan F. Knight, June 17, 1972, PRO.
 - 26. UKTB: M. T. Mein, 2002, para. 14.
 - 27. C. A. Seller, Letter to Morris, June 20, 1967, PRO: T317/1347.
 - 28. Bandjunis, Diego Garcia, 49, 58.
 - 29. Ibid., 62.
- 30. C. S. Minter, Jr., memorandum for Chief of Naval Operations, July 20, 1972, NHC: 00 Files, 1972, Box 161, 11000.
 - 31. Bandjunis, Diego Garcia, 64–71.
 - 32. U.S. Congress, House, "Diego Garcia, 1975," 12
 - 33. See Bandjunis, Diego Garcia, 309.
 - 34. U.S. Congress, House, "Diego Garcia, 1975," 41.
 - 35. Ibid., 42.
 - 36. Ibid., 42-45.
 - 37. Ibid., 79.
 - 38. Ibid., 66.

Chapter Eight Derasine: The Impoverishment of Expulsion

1. Anahita World Class Sanctuary Mauritius, "Paradise Found," available from http://www.anahitamauritius.com/anahita_location.php?langue=uk.

9 February 2009

Giant Marine Park Plan for Chagos Islanders may return to be environmental wardens

Sadie Gray

An ambitious plan to preserve the pristine ocean habitat of the Chagos Islands by turning them into a huge marine reserve on the scale of the Great Barrier Reef or the Galapagos will be unveiled at the Royal Society next Monday.

Unpopulated for 40 years since the British government forcibly evicted inhabitants so the Americans could build a strategic military base on Diego Garcia, the Chagos Islands offer a stunning diversity of aquatic life.

The absence of human habitation has been a key factor in the preservation of the pristine coral atolls, the unpolluted waters, rare bird colonies and burgeoning turtle populations that give the archipelago its international importance.

The plan will be launched in London by the Chagos Environment Network, which includes the Chagos Conservation Trust, the RSPB, the Zoological Society and the Pew Environmental Group, a powerful US charity which successfully lobbied the Bush administration for marine reserves in America.

The Chagos Islands, which belong to the British Indian Ocean Territory, were emptied of about 2,000 residents between 1967 and 1971 to meet US demands that the islands be uninhabited. Most islanders were exiled to Mauritius and the Seychelles, where many ended up in poverty. Proposals for the new reserve tentatively broach the possible return of some of the Chagossian refugees to their homeland as environmental wardens.

"It is going to be compatible with defence and do something for the Chagossians," said William Marsden, the chairman of the Chagos Conservation Trust, adding that the islands were "by far Britain's richest area of marine biodiversity" and that at 250,000 square miles, the reserve would be in the "big league" globally.

Professor Callum Roberts, a marine biologist at the University of York, said the plan would mean far better environmental monitoring, especially where incursions from Sri Lankan fishing boats had depleted fish stocks. "The attitude of the British towards the Chagos Islands has been one of benign neglect," he said.

A formidable hurdle lies in the shape of US security fears and the refugees' continuing legal battles with the British Government over the court rulings that have prevented them going home.

Refugee groups say that of the 5,000 people eligible to return, half wished to do so permanently. Resettlement plans have called for the construction of a small airport and limited development to allow environmentally sustainable tourism, raising fears that designation as a reserve would be a further blow to the islanders' hopes. In 2000, the Chagossians won the right to return to 65 of the islands - although not Diego Garcia, the largest - only to see the ruling nullified in 2004 by the Government, using the Royal Prerogative.

The islanders succeeded in overturning that action in the High Court and the Court of Appeal, but in June last year the Government went to the House of Lords, arguing that allowing the islanders to return would damage defence and security.

The Government appeal was allowed by the law lords in October, and now experts say the case may be taken to the European Court of Human Rights. The Diego Garcia base has been used for bombing raids on Iraq and Afghanistan, and as a staging post in CIA "extraordinary rendition" flights.

A Foreign Office spokesman told Economist.com that the Government "welcomes and encourages recognition of the global environmental importance of the British Indian Ocean Territory", adding that it would "work with the international environmental and scientific community to develop further the preservation of the unique environment".

Haven of safety: Species at risk

Red-footed booby (Sula sula)

This seabird is the smallest of all the boobies, with distinctive red legs and pink and blue bill and throat. The spectacular diver has elaborate greeting rituals between mates.

Green turtle (Chelonia mydas)

Endangered; feeds mostly on seagrass; has found the waters around the Chagos Islands a haven. Elsewhere, it has suffered from habitat loss, pollution and fishing nets.

Variable flying fox (Pteropus hypomelanus maris)

A species of "megabat", it feeds on fruit and roosts in large colonies in forests, usually on small islands or near the coast. Under threat elsewhere because of deforestation and hunting.

Cuvier's beaked whale (Ziphius cavirostris indicus)

Also known as the goose-beaked whale, this mammal was thought in the Middle Ages to have a fish's body and an owl's head. Can live up to 40 years and grow to seven metres long. Occasionally seen off western and northern Scotland.

Copyright 2008 Independent News and Media Limited

Note Verbale from the Mauritius Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the U.K. Foreign and Commonwealth Office, No. 1197/28 (10 Apr. 2009)

.8 May 2009 8:57 MFA

6

2126744

P. 003

2126744

44 p.3

REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, REGIONAL INTEGRATION AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Note No: 1197/28

10 April 2009

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade of the Republic of Mauritius presents its compliments to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and has the honour to refer to the latter's Note No. OTD 04/03/09 of 13 March 2009 in reply to the note verbale no. 2009(1197/28) dated 5 March 2009 of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade wishes to reiterate that it has no doubt of its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago and does not recognize the existence of the so-called British Indian Ocean Territory. The Government of Mauritius deplores the fact that Mauritius is still not in a position to exercise effective control over the Chagos Archipelago as a result of its unlawful excision from the Mauritian territory by the British Government in 1968.

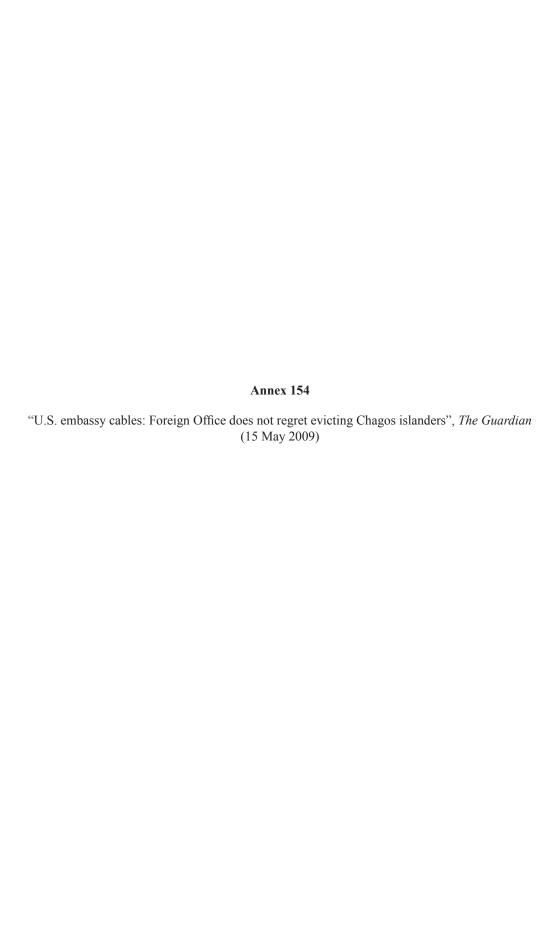

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius, whilst also supportive of domestic and international initiatives for environmental protection, would like to stress that any party initiating proposals for promoting the protection of the marine and ecological environment of the Chagos Archipelago, should solicit and obtain the consent of the Government of Mauritius prior to implementing such proposals.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade wishes to reiterate to the Government of the United Kingdom that the Government of United Kingdom has an obligation under international law to return the Chagos Archipelago in its pristine state to enable Mauritius to exercise and enjoy effectively its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade of the Republic of Mauritius avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland the assurances of its highest commonwealth.

Foreign and Commonwealth Office King Charles Street London SW1A 2AH United Kingdom

US embassy cables: Foreign Office does not regret evicting Chagos islanders

Thu 2 Dec '10 18.45 EST

Friday, 15 May 2009, 07:00 C O N F I D E N T I A L LONDON 001156 NOFORN SIPDIS

EO 12958 DECL: 05/13/2029

TAGS MARR, MOPS, SENV, UK, IO, MP, EFIS, EWWT, PGOV, PREL SUBJECT: HMG FLOATS PROPOSAL FOR MARINE RESERVE COVERING

THE CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO (BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY)

REF: 08 LONDON 2667 (NOTAL)

Classified By: Political Counselor Richard Mills for reasons 1.4 b and d

1. (C/NF) Summary. HMG would like to establish a "marine park" or "reserve" providing comprehensive environmental protection to the reefs and waters of the British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT), a senior Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) official informed Polcouns on May 12. The official insisted that the establishment of a marine park -- the world's largest -- would in no way impinge on USG use of the BIOT, including Diego Garcia, for military purposes. He agreed that the UK and U.S. should carefully negotiate the details of the marine reserve to assure that U.S. interests were safeguarded and the strategic value of BIOT was upheld. He said that the BIOT's former inhabitants would find it difficult, if not impossible, to pursue their claim for resettlement on the islands if the entire Chagos Archipelago were a marine reserve. End Summary.

Protecting the BIOT's Waters

2. (C/NF) Senior HMG officials support the establishment of a "marine park" or "reserve" in the British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT), which includes Diego Garcia, Colin Roberts, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's (FCO) Director, Overseas Territories, told the Political Counselor May 12. Noting that the uninhabited islands of the Chagos

Archipelago are already protected under British law from development or other environmental harm but that current British law does not provide protected status for either reefs or waters, Roberts affirmed that the bruited proposal would only concern the "exclusive zone" around the islands. The resulting protected area would constitute "the largest marine reserve in the world."

US embassy cables: Foreign Office does not regret evicting Chagos islanders | World new... Page 2 of 6

3. (C/NF) Roberts iterated strong UK "political support" for a marine park; "Ministers like the idea," he said. He stressed that HMG's "timeline" for establishing the park was before the next general elections, which under British law must occur no later than May 2010. He suggested that the exact terms of the proposals could be defined and presented at the U.S.-UK annual political-military consultations held in late summer/early fall 2009 (exact date TBD). If the USG would like to discuss the issue prior to those talks, HMG would be open for discussion through other channels -- in any case, the FCO would keep Embassy London informed of development of the idea and next steps. The UK would like to "move forward discussion with key international stakeholders" by the end of 2009. He said that HMG had noted the success of U.S. marine sanctuaries in Hawaii and the Marianas Trench. (Note: Roberts was referring to the Papahanaumokuakea Marine National Monument and Marianas Trench Marine National Monument. End Note.) He asserted that the Pew Charitable Trust, which has proposed a BIOT marine reserve, is funding a public relations campaign in support of the idea. He noted that the trust had backed the Hawaiian reserve and is well-regarded within British governmental circles and the larger British environmental community.

Three Sine Qua Nons: U.S. Assent...

4. (C/NF) According to Roberts, three pre-conditions must be met before HMG could establish a park. First, "we need to make sure the U.S. government is comfortable with the idea. We would need to present this proposal very clearly to the American administration...All we do should enhance base security or leave it unchanged." Polcouns expressed appreciation for this a priori commitment, but stressed that the 1966 U.S.-UK Exchange of Notes concerning the BIOT would, in any event, require U.S. assent to any significant change of the BIOT's status that could impact the BIOT's strategic use. Roberts stressed that the proposal "would have no impact on how Diego Garcia is administered as a base." In response to a request for clarification on this point from Polcouns, Roberts asserted that the proposal would have absolutely no impact on the right of U.S. or British military vessels to use the BIOT for passage, anchorage, prepositioning, or other uses. Polcouns rejoined that designating the BIOT as a marine park could, years down the road, create public questioning about the suitability of the BIOT for military purposes. Roberts responded that the terms of reference for the establishment of a marine park would clearly state that the BIOT, including Diego Garcia, was reserved for military uses.

5. (C/NF) Ashley Smith, the Ministry of Defense's (MOD) International Policy and Planning Assistant Head, Asia Pacific, who also participated in the meeting, affirmed that the MOD "shares the same concerns as the U.S. regarding security" and would ensure that security concerns were fully and properly addressed in any proposal for a marine park. Roberts agreed, stating that "the primary purpose of the BIOT is security" but that HMG could also address environmental concerns in its administration of the BIOT. Smith added that the establishment of a marine reserve had the potential to be a

US embassy cables: Foreign Office does not regret evicting Chagos islanders | World new... Page 3 of 6

"win-win situation in terms of establishing situational awareness" of the BIOT. He stressed that HMG sought "no constraints on military operations" as a result of the establishment of a marine park.

...Mauritian Assent...

6. (C/NF) Roberts outlined two other prerequisites for establishment of a marine park. HMG would seek assent from the Government of Mauritius, which disputes sovereignty over the Chagos archipelago, in order to avoid the GOM "raising complaints with the UN." He asserted that the GOM had expressed little interest in protecting the archipelago's sensitive environment and was primarily interested in the archipelago's economic potential as a fishery. Roberts noted that in January 2009 HMG held the first-ever "formal talks" with Mauritius regarding the BIOT. The talks included the Mauritian Prime Minister. Roberts said that he "cast a fly in the talks over how we could improve stewardship of the territory," but the Mauritian participants "were not focused on environmental issues and expressed interest only in fishery control." He said that one Mauritian participant in the talks complained that the Indian Ocean is "the only ocean in the world where the fish die of old age." In HMG's view, the marine park concept aims to "go beyond economic value and consider bio-diversity and intangible values."

...Chagossian Assent

7. (C/NF) Roberts acknowledged that "we need to find a way to get through the various Chagossian lobbies." He admitted that HMG is "under pressure" from the Chagossians and their advocates to permit resettlement of the "outer islands" of the BIOT. He noted, without providing details, that "there are proposals (for a marine park) that could provide the Chagossians warden jobs" within the BIOT. However, Roberts stated that, according to the HGM,s current thinking on a reserve, there would be "no human footprints" or "Man Fridays" on the BIOT's uninhabited islands. He asserted that establishing a marine park would, in effect, put paid to resettlement claims of the archipelago's former residents. Responding to Polcouns' observation that the advocates of Chagossian resettlement continue to vigorously press their case, Roberts opined that the UK's "environmental lobby is far more powerful than the Chagossians' advocates." (Note: One group of Chagossian litigants is appealing to the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) the decision of Britain's highest court to deny "resettlement rights" to the islands' former inhabitants. See below at paragraph 13 and reftel. End Note.)

Je Ne Regrette Rien

8. (C/NF) Roberts observed that BIOT has "served its role very well," advancing shared U.S.-UK strategic security objectives for the past several decades. The BIOT "has had a great role in assuring the security of the UK and U.S. -- much more than anyone foresaw" in the 1960s, Roberts emphasized. "We do not regret the removal of the population," since removal was necessary for the BIOT to fulfill its strategic purpose, he said. Removal of the population is the reason that the BIOT's uninhabited islands and the surrounding waters are in "pristine" condition. Roberts added that Diego Garcia's excellent condition reflects the responsible stewardship of the U.S. and UK forces using it.

US embassy cables: Foreign Office does not regret evicting Chagos islanders | World new... Page 4 of 6

Administering a Reserve

9. (C/NF) Roberts acknowledged that numerous technical questions needed to be resolved regarding the establishment and administration of a marine park, although he described the governmental "act" of declaring a marine park as a relatively straightforward and rapid process. He noted that the establishment of a marine reserve would require permitting scientists to visit BIOT, but that creating a park would help restrict access for non-scientific purposes. For example, he continued, the rules governing the park could strictly limit access to BIOT by yachts, which Roberts referred to as "sea gypsies."

BIOT: More Than Just Diego Garcia

- 10. (C/NF) Following the meeting with Roberts, Joanne Yeadon, Head of the FCO's Overseas Territories Directorate's BIOT and Pitcairn Section, who also attended the meeting with Polcouns, told Poloff that the marine park proposal would "not impact the base on Diego Garcia in any way" and would have no impact on the parameters of the U.S.-UK 1966 exchange of notes since the marine park would "have no impact on defense purposes." Yeadon averred that the provision of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea guaranteed free passage of vessels, including military vessels, and that the presence of a marine park would not diminish that right.
- 11. (C/NF) Yeadon stressed that the exchange of notes governed more than just the atoll of Diego Garcia but expressly provided that all of the BIOT was "set aside for defense purposes." (Note: This is correct. End Note.) She urged Embassy officers in discussions with advocates for the Chagossians, including with members of the "All Party Parliamentary Group on Chagos Islands (APPG)," to affirm that the USG requires the entire BIOT for defense purposes. Making this point would be the best rejoinder to the Chagossians' assertion that partial settlement of the outer islands of the Chagos Archipelago would have no impact on the use of Diego Garcia. She described that assertion as essentially irrelevant if the entire BIOT needed to be uninhabited for defense purposes.
- 12. (C/NF) Yeadon dismissed the APPG as a "persistent" but relatively non-influential group within parliament or with the wider public. She said the FCO had received only a handful of public inquiries regarding the status of the BIOT. Yeadon described one of the Chagossians' most outspoken advocates, former HMG High Commissioner to Mauritius David Snoxell, as "entirely lacking in influence" within the FCO. She also asserted that the Conservatives, if in power after the next general election, would not support a Chagossian right of return. She averred that many members of the Liberal Democrats (Britain's third largest party after Labour and the Conservatives) supported a "right of return."

13. (C/NF) Yeadon told Poloff May 12, and in several prior meetings, that the FCO will vigorously contest the Chagossians' "right of return" lawsuit before the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR). HMG will argue that the ECHR lacks jurisdiction over the BIOT in the present case. Roberts stressed May 12 (as has Yeadon on previous occasions) that the outer islands are "essentially uninhabitable" and could only be rendered livable by modern, Western standards with a massive infusion of cash.

Comment

14. (C/NF) Regardless of the outcome of the ECHR case, however, the Chagossians and their advocates, including the "All Party Parliamentary Group on Chagos Islands (APPG)," will continue to press their case in the court of public opinion. Their strategy is to publicize what they characterize as the plight of the so-called Chagossian diaspora, thereby galvanizing public opinion and, in their best case scenario, causing the government to change course and allow a "right of return." They would point to the government's recent retreat on the issue of Gurkha veterans' right to settle in the UK as a model. Despite FCO assurances that the marine park concept -- still in an early, conceptual phase -- would not impinge on BIOT's value as a strategic resource, we are concerned that, long-term, both the British public and policy makers would come to see the existence of a marine reserve as inherently inconsistent with the military use of Diego Garcia -- and the entire BIOT. In any event, the U.S. and UK would need to carefully negotiate the parameters of such a marine park -- a point on which Roberts unequivocally agreed. In Embassy London's view, these negotiations should occur among U.S. and UK experts separate from the 2009 annual Political-Military consultations, given the specific and technical legal and environmental issues that would be subject to discussion.

15. (C/NF) Comment Continued. We do not doubt the current government's resolve to prevent the resettlement of the islands' former inhabitants, although as FCO Parliamentary Under-Secretary Gillian Merron noted in an April parliamentary debate, "FCO will continue to organize and fund visits to the territory by the Chagossians." We are not as sanguine as the FCO's Yeadon, however, that the Conservatives would oppose a right of return. Indeed, MP Keith Simpson, the Conservatives' Shadow Minister, Foreign Affairs, stated in the same April parliamentary debate in which Merron spoke that HMG "should take into account what I suspect is the all-party view that the rights of the Chagossian people should be recognized, and that there should at the very least be a timetable for the return of those people at least to the outer islands, if not the inner islands." Establishing a marine reserve might, indeed, as the FCO's Roberts stated, be the most effective long-term way to prevent any of the Chagos Islands' former inhabitants or their descendants from resettling in the BIOT. End Comment.

US embassy cables: Foreign Office does not regret evicting Chagos islanders | World new... Page 6 of 6

Visit London's Classified Website: http://www.intelink.sgov.gov/wiki/Portal:Unit ed_Kingdom

TOKOLA

Since you're here ...

... we have a small favour to ask. More people are reading the Guardian than ever but advertising revenues across the media are falling fast. And unlike many news organisations, we haven't put up a paywall - we want to keep our journalism as open as we can. So you can see why we need to ask for your help. The Guardian's independent, investigative journalism takes a lot of time, money and hard work to produce. But we do it because we believe our perspective matters - because it might well be your perspective, too.

High-quality journalism is essential intellectual nourishment. The generosity of providing such a service without a paywall deserves recognition and support. Giacomo P, Italy

If everyone who reads our reporting, who likes it, helps fund it, our future would be much more secure. For as little as $1, you can support the Guardian - and it only takes a minute. Thank you.

Support the Guardian

Topics

- · Chagos Islands
- US embassy cables: the documents
- · Foreign policy
- The US embassy cables
- · US foreign policy
- · Human rights
- · US military

Annex 155
Africa-South America Summit, 2nd Summit, Declaration of Nueva Esparta (26-27 Sept. 2009)

Declaration of Nueva Esparta, 2nd Africa-South America Summit, 26-27 September 2009, Isla de Margarita, Venezuela [extract]

ASAVenezuela 2009

[...]

- 37. WE HIGHLIGHT the importance of fostering an Agenda, within the framework of WIPO, with a view to promote the transfer and dissemination of technology and access to knowledge and education to the benefit of developing countries and countries of less relative development, and the most vulnerable social groups.
- 38. WE CALL UPON the international community not to approve unilateral illegal and coercive measures as a means of exerting political, military or economic pressure against any country, in particular against developing countries, according to the Charter of the United Nations.
- 39. WE URGE the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Argentine Republic to resume negotiations in order to find, as a matter of urgency, a fair, peaceful and lasting solution to the dispute concerning sovereignty over the Falklands/Malvinas Islands and South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands and surrounding maritime spaces, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations and other pertinent regional and international organizations.
- 40. WE URGE the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, France and the Republic of Mauritius to pursue negotiations in order to find, as a matter of urgency, a fair, peaceful and definitive solution to the issues regarding the sovereignty over Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia and Tromelin and the surrounding maritime spaces, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations and the other pertinent regional and international organizations.

Assembly of the African Union, 15th Ordinary Session, Decision on the Sovereignty of the Republic of Mauritius Over the Chagos Archipelago, Assembly/AU/Dec.331(XV) (27 July 2010)

Assembly/AU/Dec.331(XV) Page 1

DECISION ON THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS OVER THE CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO

The Assembly,

1. RE-AFFIRMS that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised by the former colonial power from the territory of Mauritius in violation of UN Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965 which prohibit colonial powers from dismembering colonial territories prior to granting independence, forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Mauritius and CALLS UPON the United Kingdom to expeditiously put an end to its continued unlawful occupation of the Chagos Archipelago with a view to enabling Mauritius to effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Archipelago.

Adopted by the Fifteenth Ordinary Session of the Assembly of the Union on 27 July 2010 in Kampala, Uganda

I. Henry & S. Dickson, British Overseas Territory Law (2011)

THE GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY LAW LIBRARY

British Overseas Territories Law

Ian Hendry and Susan Dickson

KD 5020 .H46

Published in the United Kingdom by Hart Publishing Ltd 16C Worcester Place, Oxford, OX1 2JW Telephone: 444 (0)1865 517530 Fax: 444 (0)1865 510710 E-mail: mail@hartpub.co.uk Website: http://www.hartpub.co.uk

Published in North America (US and Canada) by Hart Publishing
c/o International Specialized Book Services
920 NE 58th Avenue, Suite 300
Portland, OR 97213-3786
USA
Tcl: +1 503 287 3093 or toll-free: (1) 800 944 6190
Fax: +1 503 280 8832
E-mail: orders@isbs.com
Website: http://www.isbs.com

Website: http://www.isbs.com

© Ian Hendry and Susan Dickson 2011

Ian Hendry and Susan Dickson have asserted their right under the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, to be identified as the authors of this work.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, without the prior permission of Hart Publishing, or as expressly permitted by law or under the terms agreed with the appropriate reprographic rights organisation. Enquiries concerning reproduction which may not be covered by the above should be addressed to Hart Publishing Ltd at the address above.

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data Data Available

ISBN: 978-1-84946-019-4

Typeset by Compuscript Ltd, Shannon Printed and bound in Great Britain by TJ International Ltd, Padstow, Cornwall

Foreword

The historian WEH Lecky once said that empires, like the sun, often throw out their most glorious colours when they are on the point of disappearing. In legal terms, it might be said that the twilight of the British Empire has thrown out a more confused, kaleidoscopic range of colours than any sunset could hope to emulate. The ad hoc evolution of the British Empire over a period of centuries, and its piecemeal breakup since the Second World War have between them produced 'an overall pattern of complexity and obscurity'. To modern eyes the problem is further compounded by the fact that many of the legal principles which underlay the development of colonial law, and even the legal vocabulary in which it is expressed, are now so rarely encountered by practitioners that the case-law can seem impenetrable. Indeed, it has even been suggested by one academic commentator that English judges are now so unfamiliar with the applicable principles of colonial law that the House of Lords recently accepted a submission which 'every Colonial or Foreign and Commonwealth Office draftsman during the past 200 years would ... have regarded ... as a theory defunct since the time of William and Mary'.2 But in fairness to contemporary judges, even the judiciary of an earlier age which was more accustomed to dealing with arcane questions such as the indivisibility of the Crown sometimes found that the relevant legal concepts tended to 'dissolve into verbally impressive mysticism'.3

There are now only 14 British Overseas Territories, and their combined population is slightly less than that of Norwich. Some, like South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands, Pitcairn and the British Antarctic Territory, have either a tiny human population or none at all. But others, such as Bermuda, the Cayman Islands and the British Virgin Islands, have substantial populations and thriving economies based on financial services and tourism. And in any event, the mere size of a territory's civilian population bears no relation to the frequency with which legal problems may come before the courts, nor the complexity of the constitutional issues which they may raise. For example, the long-running litigation brought by a number of Chagossians seeking to return to the British Indian Ocean Territory was prompted precisely by the fact that the islands had been depopulated and the islanders were prevented from living where they or their forbears had been born. In recent years there have also been other complex disputes in the English courts covering a range of issues from electoral boundary changes in Bermuda to the capacity in which the Crown acts in relation to South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands, and from the application to the territories of the Human Rights Act 1998 to the jurisdiction of ¹ K Roberts-Wray, Commonwealth and Colonial Law (London, Stevens, 1966) 138. 2 J Finnis, Common Law Constraints: Whose Common Good Counts? University of Oxford Faculty of Law Legal Studies Research Paper no 10/2008, §18, commenting on the decision in R (Quark Fishing Limited) v Secretary of State for Foreign & Commonwealth Affairs [2006] 1 AC 529.

3 Munster for Works for Western Australia v Gulson (1944) 69 CLR 338, 350, per Latham CJ.

300 Annex

licences to whaling companies. The Falkland Islands Dependencies Survey, since 1962 called the British Antarctic Survey, started operations in 1943, when the first of its bases was established.38

The British Antarctic Territory was legally established as a separate colony in 1962 by the British Antarctic Territory Order in Council 1962.39

Status

The British Antarctic Territory is a British overseas territory acquired by annexation, but it is treated as a British settlement for the purposes of the British Settlements Acts 1887 and 1945.4 Power to provide for the government of the British Antarctic Territory by Order in Council is conferred by those Acts.

Constitution

The current Constitution of the British Antarctic Territory is contained in the British Antarctic Territory Order 1989.41 It establishes the office of Commissioner for the Territory, who is appointed by the Queen. In practice the office of Commissioner is held by a senior official in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The Commissioner exercises executive authority, may appoint a deputy to exercise functions on his or her behalf, and may constitute offices for the Territory and make appointments to them.

The Commissioner may make laws, styled Ordinances, for the peace, order and good government of the Territory. Any Ordinance made by the Commissioner may be disallowed by Her Majesty through a Secretary of State. The Commissioner is given express power to establish, by Ordinance, courts for the Territory, to constitute judgeships and other related offices and to make appointments to such offices. Power is reserved to Her Majesty to legislate by Order in Council for the peace, order and good government of the Territory.

Courts

The British Antarctic Territory Order 1989 does not itself establish any courts. The Supreme Court and Magistrate's Court are established by Ordinance, 42 The of British occupation and administration of the Falkland Islands Dependencies is set out The history of british occupation and administration of the raistand islands Dependencies is set on in detail in the UK Applications instituting proceedings against Argentina and Chile at the International Court of Justice in Max 1955; see ICJ Pleadings, Antarctica Cases (United Kingdom): Argentina; United Kingdom): Chile), 1955. The cases were not determined because neither Argentina nor Chile accepted the jurisdiction of the Court.

9 St. 1962-400, amended by St. 1964/1396.

^{49 1887} e 54 and 1945 e 7.

15 1 1989/842. This Order revoked the Orders of 1962 and 1964 referred to in n 39 above. Administration of Justice Ordinance 1990 (Laws of the British Antarctic Territory, Ordinance

British Antarctic Territory Order 1989 enables courts established by Ordinance to sit within the Territory or in the United Kingdom or 'any other colony' with the concurrence of the Governor of such colony. By virtue of the Falkland Islands Courts (Overseas Jurisdiction) Order 1989,43 the Supreme Court and Magistrate's Court of the Falkland Islands respectively have jurisdiction to hear and determine any civil or criminal proceedings in respect of matters arising under the law of the British Antarctic Territory which are within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court or the Magistrate's Court of the Territory. Local magistrates are appointed from among the British Antarctic Survey personnel serving at the scientific stations in the Territory.

There is a Court of Appeal for the Territory, established by Order in Council, which may sit outside the Territory.44 Final appeal lies to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.45

Law

The statute law in force in the British Antarctic Territory mainly comprises Ordinances enacted by the Commissioner and instruments made under them. These local laws are supplemented by certain Acts of the United Kingdom Parliament and Orders in Council that have been extended to the Territory. The incorporation of English statutes, common law and rules of equity is provided for in detail in sections 5 and 6 of the Administration of Justice Ordinance 1990.41

Economy

The main source of income is the sale of postage stamps and local tax paid by overwintering scientists. Tourism is a growing industry, mostly ship-based. The currency is the pound sterling.

BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY

The British Indian Ocean Territory is a group of islands lying about 1,770 kilometres east of Mahe in Seychelles. It comprises the following islands, known collectively as the Chagos Archipelago: Diego Garcia; Egmont or Six Islands; Peros Banhos; Salomon Islands; Three Brothers Islands; Nelson or Legour Island; Eagle Islands; and Danger Islands.⁴ While the Territory covers about 54,400 square kilometres of sea, the total land area is 60 square kilometres, the largest island, Diego

SI 1989/2399, as amended by SI 2009/1737.
 British Antarctic Territory Court of Appeal Order 1965 (SI 1965/590, as amended by SI 1989/2399).

⁴⁵ British Antarctic Territory Court of Appeal (Appeal to Privy Council) Order 1965 (SI 1965/592, as amended by $1 2009/224).

⁴⁶ Laws of the British Antarctic Territory, Ordinance No 5 of 1990. ⁴⁷ British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004 (see n 58 below) s 2(2) and sch.

302 Annex

Garcia, being 44 square kilometres. The Territory was constituted and is set aside for the defence purposes of the United Kingdom and the United States of America, 48 and has no permanent population. The temporary inhabitants are the armed forces at the United States defence facility on Diego Garcia, civilian employees of contractors to the United States military, and a small Royal Navy contingent. All of these reside on Diego Garcia, the other islands (sometimes called 'the outer islands') being uninhabited. Mauritius has asserted a sovereignty claim to the Territory since 1980. While the United Kingdom rejects this claim, successive British Governments have given undertakings to the Government of Mauritius that the Territory will be ceded to Mauritius when it is no longer required for defence purposes.⁴⁹

History

The islands of the Chagos Archipelago were charted by Vasco da Gama in the early sixteenth century, and Portuguese seafarers named the archipelago and some of the atolls. The islands were administered by France from Mauritius during the late eighteenth century. France ceded the islands to the United Kingdom, along with Mauritius and Seychelles, by the Treaty of Paris, 1814.50 They were administered as a dependency of the colony of Mauritius until 1965 when, with the agreement of the Mauritius Council of Ministers, they were detached to form the major part of a new colony called the British Indian Ocean Territory. The United Kingdom Government paid the Government of Mauritius £3 million in consideration of the detachment of the islands. Three other island groups,⁵¹ previously part of the colony of Seychelles, made up the Territory as originally constituted,⁵² but these were returned to Seychelles when that country became independent in 1976.53

The new colony was established for the defence purposes of the United Kingdom and the United States, as provided for in an Exchange of Notes between their two Governments of 30 December 1966.⁵⁴ This agreement is expressed to last for 50 years, followed by a further period of 20 years unless, not more than two years before the end of the 50 year period, notice of termination has been given by either Government, in which case it shall terminate two years after the date of such notice.55 Further Exchanges of Notes were concluded between the United Kingdom and United States Governments on 24 October 1972 and 25 February 1976 relating to the United States naval facility on Diego Garcia.56

⁴⁸ British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004 s 9(1).

⁴⁹ UK White Paper 'Partnership for Progress and Prosperity, Britain and the Overseas Territories'

White Paper Partnership for Progress and Prosperity, Britain and the Overseas Territories' (Cm 4264) p 51.
 State Papers vol 1 pt 1 p 151.
 The Farquar Islands, the Aldabra Group and the Island of Desroches.
 British Indian Ocean Territory Order 1965 (SI 1965/1920), amended by SI 1968/111. These Orders recited powers granted by the Colonial Boundaries Act 1895 (1895 c 34) as well as prerogative

³ British Indian Ocean Territory Order 1976 (SI 1976/893) s 14. This Order also recited the Colonial Boundaries Act 1895 and prerogative powers.

54 UKTS No 15 (1967); Cmnd 3231.

 ⁵⁷ See paragraph (11).
 58 UKTS No 126 (1972); Cmnd 5160 and UKTS No 19 (1976); Cmnd 6413. The 1976 agreement replaced the 1972 agreement.

The Chagos islands had been exploited for copra from the late eighteenth century. After emancipation in the nineteenth century the former slaves on the islands became contract employees working the copra plantations, and some chose to remain on the islands, having children who also stayed there. Following the 1966 Exchange of Notes, in 1967 the Crown purchased the freehold title to all land in the islands that was not already Crown land. The copra plantations were run down as they had become commercially unviable. The plantation workers were progressively relocated, mostly to Mauritius and Seychelles, and the last of them left the Territory in 1973. The United Kingdom Government paid the Government of Mauritius £650,000 in 1973, and a further £4 million in 1982 into a Trust Fund, to assist in the resettlement of the workers in Mauritius. Attempts by the former inhabitants, originally called 'Ilois' but now more commonly called 'Chagossians', to win the right to return to the islands or to obtain further compensation in the English courts have been ultimately unsuccessful.⁵

Status

The British Indian Ocean Territory is a British overseas territory, the islands comprising which were acquired by cession. The government of the Territory is provided for by Royal prerogative powers.

Constitution

The current Constitution of the Territory is set out in the British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004.58 This establishes the office of Commissioner, who is appointed by the Queen. In practice the office of Commissioner is held by a senior official in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The Commissioner exercises executive powers, may constitute offices for the Territory and make appointments to such offices. In practice the Commissioner is assisted by an Administrator, resident in London, and by the Commissioner's Representative, who is the officer in charge of the Royal Navy contingent on Diego Garcia.

The Commissioner may make laws for the peace, order and good government of the Territory. Exceptionally, section 10(2) of the Order declares, without prejudice to the generality of the provision granting legislative power and 'for the avoidance of doubt', that the Commissioner may make any such provision as he considers expedient for or in connection with the administration of the Territory, and no such provision shall be deemed to be invalid

^{5°} See R (Bancoult) v Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2001] QB 1067; Chagos Islanders v Attorney General [2003] EWHC 2222 (QB); [2003] All ER (D) 166; R (Bancoult) v Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (No 2) [2008] UKHL 61, [2009] 1 AC 45 the Children of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (No 2) [2008] UKHL 61, [2009] 1 AC 45 to 64 the Children of Country of the State of extensive documentary and oral evidence, in the judgment of Ouseley J in Chagos Islanders v Attorney General

⁵⁸ This is a prerogative Order, and therefore not a statutory instrument. It was published in the (2004) 36(1) British Indian Ocean Territory Official Gazette. For convenience it is reproduced at pp 305–10 except to the extent that it is inconsistent with the status of the Territory as a British overseas territory or with this Order or with any other Order of Her Majesty in Council extending to the Territory or otherwise as provided by the Colonial Laws Validity Act 1865.

304 Annex

Any law made by the Commissioner may be disallowed by Her Majesty through a Secretary of State. Power to legislate for the Territory by Order in Council is reserved in unusual detail, and power is also expressly reserved to Her Majesty to amend or revoke the 2004 Order.59

The 2004 Order also expressly provides in section 9:

- (1) Whereas the Territory was constituted and is set aside to be available for the defence purposes of the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of the United States of America, no person has the right of abode in the Territory.
- (2) Accordingly, no person is entitled to enter or be present in the Territory except as authorised by or under this Order or any other law for the time being in force in the Territory.60

Courts

The Territory has a Supreme Court and a Magistrates' Court established by Ordinance. 61 The Supreme Court consists of a Chief Justice, and the British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004 makes provision for the Court to sit in the United Kingdom 'as the Chief Justice may direct'. 62 There is a legally qualified, but non-resident, Senior Magistrate, and the officer in charge of the Royal Navy component on Diego Garcia is in practice appointed as a local magistrate.

The Territory has a Court of Appeal, established by Order in Council. 63 Final appeal lies to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.14

Law

The statute law in force in the British Indian Ocean Territory comprises Ordinances made by the Commissioner and instruments made under them, and certain Acts of the United Kingdom Parliament and Orders in Council that have been extended to ⁵⁰ See s 15. The detail of these provisions, and the exceptional provision in s 10/2), were occasioned by the judgment in R (Bancoult) i Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2001] QB 1067, which had held that the power to legislate for 'peace, order and good government' was not unlimited, a finding later overruled by the House of Lords in R 'Bancoult' i Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (No 2) (2008) UKHL 61, [2009] 1 AC 453 'HL).

⁶⁰ The validity of this section was challenged, and upheld by the majority in the House of Lords, in R (Bancoult) v Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (No 2) [2008] UKHL 61, [2009] I AC 453 (HL).
61 Courts Ordinance 1983, Parts II and III (Laws of the British Indian Ocean Territory, Ordinance

No 3 of 1983).

^{0.3} of 1763),

See's 13(4) and (5)–(8).

Britsh Indian Ocean Territory Court of Appeal) Order 1976 (published in SI 1976, II, p 3815).

Britsh Indian Ocean Territory (Appeals to Privy Council) Order 1983 (SI 1983/1888, as amended by SI 2009/2241.

the Territory. The incorporation of English statutes, common law and rules of equity is provided for in detail by sections 3 to 5 of the Courts Ordinance 1983.65

Economy

There are no commercial, industrial or agricultural activities in the Territory, the population being solely military personnel and people employed to support the defence facility. The currency in use is the US dollar.

经验检验检验检验检验证

BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY (CONSTITUTION) ORDER 2004

At the Court at Buckingham Palace

THE 10th DAY OF JUNE 2004

PRESENT,

THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY

IN COUNCIL

Her Majesty, by virtue and in exercise of all the powers in Her Majesty vested, is pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:—

Citation and Commencement

1. This Order may be cited as the British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004 and shall come into force forthwith.

Interpretation

- 2.—(1) The Interpretation Act 1978 shall apply, with the necessary modifications, for the purpose of interpreting this Order, and otherwise in relation thereto, as it applies for the purpose of interpreting, and otherwise in relation to, Acts of Parliament.
 - (2) In this Order, unless the contrary intention appears—
 - 'the Commissioner' means the Commissioner for the Territory and includes any person for the time being lawfully performing the functions of the office of Commissioner;

⁶⁵ Laws of the British Indian Ocean Territory, Ordinance No 3 of 1983. These provisions need to be read with section 3(2) of the British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004.

Assembly/AU/Res.1(XVI)

RESOLUTION

The Assembly of the Union, at its 16th Ordinary Session held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia from 30 to 31 January 2011,

Recalling that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, was unlawfully excised by the United Kingdom, the former colonial power, from the territory of Mauritius prior to independence of Mauritius, in violation of UN Resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965 which prohibit colonial powers from dismembering colonial territories prior to granting independence;

Reaffirming that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Mauritius;

Recalling in this regard, inter-alia:

- Resolution AHG/Res.99 (XVII) of July 1980 of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organisation of African Unity (OAU);
- (ii) Decision AHG/Dec.159 (XXXVI) of July 2000 of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organisation of African Unity (OAU);
- (iii) Decision Assembly/AU/Dec.331(XV) of July 2010 of the Assembly of the African Union.

Noting with grave concern that notwithstanding the OAU/AU Resolution/Decisions and the strong opposition expressed by the Republic of Mauritius, the United Kingdom has proceeded to establish a 'marine protected area' around the Chagos Archipelago on 01 November 2010, in a manner that was inconsistent with its international legal obligations, thereby further impeding the exercise by the Republic of Mauritius of its sovereignty over the Archipelago;

Noting further that the Government of the Republic of Mauritius has, on 20 December 2010, initiated proceedings against the United Kingdom in relation to the dispute concerning the legality of the purported marine protected area' as set forth in the Notification of that date, to an Arbitral Tribunal to be constituted under Article 287 and Annex VII of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the sea;

Considering that the Government of the Republic of Mauritius is committed to taking other measures to protect its rights under international law relating to its legitimate aspiration to be able to exercise sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including action at the United Nations General Assembly:

 DECIDES to support fully the action of the Government of the Republic of Mauritius at the United Nations General Assembly with a view to enabling Mauritius to exercise its sovereignty over the Archipelago.

Annex 159

Note Verbale from the Permanent Mission of the Republic of Mauritius to the United Nations Office and other International Organisations in Geneva to the Permanent Mission of Switzerland to the United Nations Office and other International Organisations in Geneva, No. 361/2011

MMG/HR/19 (28 Nov. 2011)

PERMANENT MISSION OF THE REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS TO THE UNITED NATIONS AND OTHER INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS

MISSION PERMANENTE DE LA REPUBLIQUE DE MAURICE AUPRES DES NATIONS UNIES ET DES AUTRES ORGANISATIONS INTERNATIONALES

No. 361/2011 MMG/HR/19

The Permanent Mission of the Republic of Mauritius to the United Nations Office and other International Organisations in Geneva presents its compliments to the Permanent Mission of Switzerland to the United Nations Office and other International Organisations in Geneva and, with reference to the Notification (Ref. 242-512.0-GEN 3/11) dated 1 July 2011 from the Swiss Federal Council, in its capacity as depositary of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War Victims and Additional Protection, addressed to the Governments of the States parties to the Geneva Conventions, has the honour to state as follows:

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius strongly objects to the declaration deposited by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern ireland with the Swiss Federal Council on 15 June 2011 concerning the applicability of the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and retating to the Adoption of an Additional Distinctive Emblem (Protocol III), done at Geneva on 8 December 2005, in so far as it purports to extend the ratification by the United Kingdom of the said Protocol to the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory".

The Government of the Republic of Mauritlus does not recognise the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory" which the United Kingdom purported to create by illegally exclsing the Chagos Archipelago from the territory of Mauritius prior to its independence. This excision was carried out in violation of the United Nationa Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (UN General Assembly Resolution 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960) prohibiting the dismemberment of any colonial territory prior to independence, and UN General Assembly Resolutions 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, 2232 (XXI) of 20 December 1966 and 2357 (XXII) of 19 December 1967.

The Government of the Republic of Maurittus reaffirms the sovereignty of the Republic of Maurittus over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia. The Chagos Archipelago forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Maurittus under both Maurittan law and international law. The United Kingdom is therefore not entitled to adhere to any international legal instrument on behalf of the Chagos Archipelago.

The Permanent Mission of the Republic of Mauritus would appreciate it the contents of this Note could be transmitted to the Swiss Federal Council and circulated to the High Contracting Parties to Protocol III Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949.

The Permanent Mission of the Republic of Mauritius would also appreciate if the Permanent Mission of Switzerland could acknowledge receipt of this Note Verbale.

The Permanent Mission of the Republic of Mauritius to the United Nations Office and other International Organisations in Geneva avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Permanent Mission of Switzerland to the United Nations Office and other International Organisations in Geneva the assurances of its highest consideration.

Geneva, 28 November 2011

The Permanent Mission of Switzerland to the United Nations and other International Organisations 9—11, rue de Varembé 1201 Geneva

Fax: 022 749 2437

The Charter of the United Nations

A Commentary

THIRD EDITION

VOLUME I

Edited by

BRUNO SIMMA
DANIEL-ERASMUS KHAN
GEORG NOLTE
ANDREAS PAULUS

Assistant Editor
NIKOLAI WESSENDORF

Advisory Board

ALBRECHT RANDELZHOFER CHRISTIAN TOMUSCHAT RÜDIGER WOLFRUM

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

Great Clarendon Street, Oxford, OX2 6DP, United Kingdom

Oxford University Press is a department of the University of Oxford.

It furthers the University's objective of excellence in research, scholarship, and education by publishing worldwide. Oxford is a registered trade mark of Oxford University Press in the UK and in certain other countries

© C. H. Beck Verlag, 2012

The moral rights of the authors have been asserted Database right Oxford University Press (maker)

Second Edition published in 2002

Impression: 1

Recommended mode of citation: Contributor, 'Art. X, MN Y' in B Simma, DE Khan, G Nolte, and A Paulus (eds), The Charter of the United Nations (3rd edition, 2012)

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, without the prior permission in writing of Oxford University Press, or as expressly permitted by law, by licence or under terms agreed with the appropriate reprographics rights organization. Enquiries concerning reproduction outside the scope of the above should be sent to the Rights Department, Oxford University Press, at the address above

You must not circulate this work in any other form and you must impose this same condition on any acquirer

Crown copyright material is reproduced under Class Licence Number C01P0000148 with the permission of OPSI and the Queen's Printer for Scotland

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data

Data available

ISBN 978-0-19-963976-2

Printed in Great Britain by CPI Group (UK) Ltd., Croydon, CR0 4YY

Links to third party websites are provided by Oxford in good faith and for information only. Oxford disclaims any responsibility for the materials contained in any third party website referenced in this work.

Self-Determination

	MN
A. The Right of Self-Determination as a Concept of the UN Charter	1-2
B. Historical Developments	3-22
I. Evolution of Self-Determination as a Legal Concept	3-5
II. Chapters XI and XII of the UN Charter	6-7
III. UN Practice and Decolonization	8-14
IV. The UN Human Rights Covenants	15-16
V. The Practice of the ICJ	17-22
C. Basic Preconditions and Components of the Right of
Self-Determination	23-41
I. The Bearers of the Right of Self-Determination	23-27
II. Components of the Right of Self-Determination	28-38
1. Internal Self-Determination	28-31
2. External Self-Determination—the Special Case of Decolonization	32
3. Unification with a Third State	33-34
4. Is there a Right to Secession?	35-37
5. Self-Determination and Democracy	38
III. Self-Determination and Third States—Issues of Recognition and Intervention	39-41

Select Bibliography

Alexander Y and Friedlaender RA (eds), Self-Determination: National, Legal and Global Dimensions (Westview 1980).

Allison WC, 'Self-Determination and Recent Developments in the Baltic States' (1991) 19 Denver J Intl L & Pol'y 625.

Alston P (ed), Peoples' Rights (OUP 2001).

Anaya SJ, Indigenous Peoples in International Law (OUP 1996).

Binder G, 'The Case for Self-Determination' (1993) 29 Stanford J Intl L 223.

Brilmayer L, 'Secession and Self-Determination: A Territorial Interpretation' (1991) 16 Yale J Intl L 177–202.

Brölmann C, Lefeber R, Zieck M (eds), Peoples and Minorities in International Law (Nijhoff 1993).

Buchanan A, Justice, Legitimacy, and Self-Determination. Moral Foundations for International Law (OUP 2004).

Buchheit LC, Secession: The Legitimacy of Self-Determination (Yale UP 1978).

Calogéropoulos-Stratis S, Le droit des peoples à disposer d'eux-mêmes (Bruylant 1973).

Cass DZ, 'Rethinking Self-Determination: A Critical analysis of Current International Law Theories' (1993) 18 Syr J Intl L & Com 21.

Cassese A, Self-Determination of Peoples. A Legal Reappraisal (CUP 1995).

Cobban A, The Nation State and National Self-Determination (2nd edn, Collins 1969).

Coppieters B and Sakwa R (eds), Contextualizing Secession. Normative Studies in Comparative Perspective (OUP 2003).

Corntassel JL and Primeau TH, 'Indigenous "Sovereignty" and International Law: Revised Strategies for Pursuing "Self-Determination" (1995) 17 HRQ 343.

Crawford J (ed), The Rights of Peoples (OUP 1988).

Danspeckgruber W (ed), The Self-Determination of Peoples: Community, Nation and State in an Interdependent World (Lynne Rienner 2002).

Doehring K, 'Das Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker als Grundsatz des Völkerrechts' (1973) 14 DGVR Berichte 7.

Fisch J, Das Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker: Die Domestizierung einer Illusion (CH Beck 2010).

Fox GH, 'The Right to Political Participation in International Law' (1992) 17 Yale J Intl L 539.

Franck TM, 'The Emerging Right to Democratic Governance' (1992) 86 AJIL 46.

Gray C, 'Self-Determination and the Break-Up of the Soviet Union' (1992) 12 YB European L 465.

Guilhaudis J-F, Le droit des peoples à disposer d'eux-mêmes (Presses univ de Grenoble 1976).

Gusy C, 'Selbstbestimmungsrecht im Wandel. Von der Selbstbestimmung durch den Staat zur Selbstbestimmung im Staat' (1992) 30 AVR 385.

Halperin MH and Scheffer DJ, Self-Determination in the New World Order (Carnegie Endowment 1992).

Hannum H, Autonomy, Sovereignty, and Self-Determination (University of Pennsylvania Press 1990).

Heintze HJ (ed), Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker—Herausforderung der Staatenwelt (JHW Dietz 1997).

Heraclides A, The Self-Determination of Minorities in International Politics (Cass 1991).

Hilpold P (ed), Das Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker: Vom umstrittenen Prinzip zum vieldeutigen Recht? (Peter Lang 2009).

Islam MR, 'Secessionist Self-Determination: Some Lessons from Katanga, Biafra and Bangladesh (1985) 22 JPR 211.

Kingsbury B, 'Claims by Non-State Groups in International Law' (1992) 25 Cornell Intl LJ 481.

Kirgis FL, 'The Degrees of Self-Determination in the United Nations Era' (1984) 88 AJIL 304.

Knop K, Diversity and Self-Determination in International Law (CUP 2002).

Koskenniemi M, 'The Police in the Temple: Order, Justice and the UN' (1995) 6 EJIL 325.

Laing EA, 'The Norm of Self-Determination' (1991) 22 Calif W Intl LJ 209.

Lâm MC, At the Edge of the State: Indigenous Peoples and Self-Determination (Transnational Publishers 2000).

Macedo S and Buchanan A (eds), Secession and Self-Determination (NYU Press 2003).

Moore M (ed), National Self-Determination and Secession (OUP 1998).

Murswiek D, 'Offensives und defensives Selbstbestimmungsrecht. Zum Subjekt des Selbstbestimmungsrechts der Völker' (1984) 23 Der Staat 523.

Nafziger JAR, 'Self-Determination and Humanitarian Intervention in a Community of Power' (1994) 22 Denver J Intl L & Pol'y 219.

Nanda VP, 'Self-Determination under International Law: Validity of Claims to Secede' (1981) 13 Case W Res J Intl L 257.

Oeter S, 'Selbstbestimmungsrecht im Wandel. Überlegungen zur Debatte um Selbstbestimmung, Sezessionsrecht umd "vorzeitiger" Anerkennung' (1992) 52 ZaöRV 741.

Ofuatey-Kodjoe W, The Principle of Self-Determination in International Law (Nellen 1977).

Pomerance M, Self-Determination in Law and Practice (Nijhoff 1982).

Quane H, 'The UN and Self-Determination' (1998) 47 ICLQ 537.

Raić D, Statehood and the Law of Self-Determination (Kluwer 2002).

Rao MK, 'Right of Self-Determination in the Postcolonial Era. A Survey of Juristic Opinion and State Practice' (1988) 28 IJIL 58.

Reiter E (ed), Grenzen des Selbstbestimmungsrechts: Die Neuordnung Europas und das Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker (Styria 1996).

Rigo AS, The Evolution of the Right of Self-Determination (Sijthoff 1973).

Ronen D, The Quest for Self-Determination (Yale UP 1979).

Rosskopf R, Theorie des Selbstbestimmungsrechts und Minderheitenrechts (Berliner Wissenschafts-Verlag 2004).

Saxer U, Die internationale Steuerung der Selbstbestimmung und Staatsentstehung (Springer

Shaw M, 'Peoples, Territorialism and Boundaries' (1997) 8 EJIL 478.

Talmon S, Kollektive Nichtanerkennung illegaler Staaten (Mohr Siebeck 2006).

Thornberry P, 'Self-Determination, Minorities, Human Rights: A Review of International Instruments' (1989) 38 ICLQ 867.

Thürer D, Das Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker (Stämpfli 1976).

Tomuschat C (ed), Modern Law of Self-Determination (Nijhoff 1993).

Turp D, 'Le droit de secession en droit international public' (1982) 20 Can YB Intl L 24.

Umozurike UO, Self-Determination in International Law (Archon Books 1972).

Weller M, 'The International Response to the Dissolution of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia' (1992) 86 AJIL 569.

Wheatley S, Democracy, Minorities and International Law (CUP 2005).

A. The Right of Self-Determination as a Concept of the UN Charter

The right of self-determination is mentioned in the UN Charter in Art. 1 (2). The Charter in its first mention refers to self-determination as a 'purpose' of the United Nations, giving the political principle that had been so disputed since the nineteenth century a clearly programmatic character for the new Organization. With this reference, guaranteeing self-determination of all nations became a central political purpose of the UN, inextricably linked with the purpose of achieving friendly relations among nations. Such friendly relations should be based—according to the Charter—on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples. Such wording indicates that the drafters considered self-determination to be a fundamental principle of international law.2 It remains doubtful whether the formula in Art. 1 (2) of the UN Charter originally intended to codify self-determination as a legal right upon which an individual claim of a specific 'people' may be based-most authors initially negated such an interpretation and viewed it (with good reasons) as a not directly applicable principle, a kind of political prescription.3 But with the passage of time such construction increasingly lost its persuasive force. Subsequent development in the UN, in particular the practice of decolonization, transformed the old (political) principle of self-determination into a collective right—a trend which became more or less irrebuttable with the codification of the right of self-determination in the two UN Human Rights Covenants of 1966.4 In hindsight it is clear that self-determination, as it was referred to in Art. 1 (2) of the Charter, constitutes an elementary structuring principle of the legal world order created by the UN Charter, a normative programme

¹ See only H Kelsen, The Law of the United Nations (Stevens 1950) 9; G Dahm, Völkerrecht, vol 1 (Kohlhammer 1958) 150.

² See, however, K Doehring, 'Self-Determination' in B Simma (ed), The Charter of the United Nations: A Commentary, vol 1 (2nd edn, OUP 2002) 48.

³ See the references with Doehring (n 2) 48 at n 1.

⁴ Doehring (n 2) 48-49.

oscillating between the basic purpose of the Organization and fundamental legal principle. In most writings on 'ius cogens' it is even mentioned as one of the few norms of international law of a peremptory character. Article 2 (4) of the Charter corroborates such a reading when it prohibits any use of force 'inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations Charter'. Accordingly, it is beyond doubt that self-determination, as a purpose and principle of the UN Charter, constitutes a legally binding norm for all member States of the United Nations, as has been confirmed by a series of resolutions of the GA and SC, but also the jurisprudence of the ICJ, and State practice in the process of decolonization as well as in the cases of creation of new States in Europe after 1990. Although Art. 1 (2), due to its programmatic character, cannot define in detail the content and scope of a right to self-determination, it sets forth beyond dispute that it forms part of the law of the Charter and is binding upon all members of the UN. Convincing arguments may be made also for the claim that State practice subsequent to the adoption of the Charter has transformed self-determination into a principle of customary international law, too.8

Self-determination is also explicitly mentioned in Art. 55 of the Charter. Article 55 gives some hints as to the operational measures to be taken by the UN in order to give more substance to the purpose of peaceful and friendly relations among nations 'based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples'. Article 55 states that friendly relations among nations (in a normative perspective inextricably linked with self-determination) should be promoted by trying to achieve higher standards of living for peoples; solutions of international economic, social, and health problems; international cultural and educational cooperation; and universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. Art. 55 is of a declaratory character concerning the principle of self-determination—it does not guarantee it, but it presupposes its existence. Interestingly enough, there is no further explicit mention of self-determination in the text of the Charter, not even in Chapter XI which played a decisive role in UN practice concerning self-determination during the process of decolonization.

⁵ See also Doehring (n 2) 49, para 3.

⁶ See only HG Espiell, 'Self-Determination and Jus Cogens' in A Cassese (ed), UN Law/Fundamental Rights (Sijhoff & Noorthoff 1979) 167-73; A Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples (CUP 1995) 133-36; EA Laing, 'The Norm of Self-Determination' (1991) 22 Calif W Intl LJ 209, 248-52; D Turp, 'Le droit de sécession en droit international public' (1982) 20 Can YB Intl L 24, 28-29; D Raić, Statehod and the Law of Self-Determination (Kluwer 2002) 218-19; U Saxer, Die internationale Steuerung der Selbstbestimmung und der Staatsentstehung (Springer 2010) 213-15.

⁷ Doehring (n 2) 49, para 1.

⁸ ibid.

⁹ Doehring (n 2) 49, para 2.

¹⁰ ibid, para 4.

Historical Developments

I. Evolution of Self-Determination as a Legal Concept

As already mentioned, self-determination as a political principle dates back at least to the nineteenth century. However, the first document that might be seen as a revocation of such a principle is the American Declaration of Independence of 1776 which claimed that men have the right to freedom and the right to participate in the exercise of State power, with the ensuing right to alter or to abolish a form of government which fails to guarantee or which disregards such freedom.11 In a comparable manner, the French Revolution claimed a right to freely organize its form of government without any intervention by third States.12 These declarations were rooted in an ancient tradition of political and legal thinking in Europe, dating back to medieval concepts of a right of resistance against an unjust ruler.¹³ In addition, it was normal for European authors of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, like Grotius, Pufendorf, and Kant, to link the legitimacy of transfer of territory from one ruler to another to the consent of the estates possessing a right of (co-)determination in political affairs.¹⁴ But only when these concepts started to merge with the new ideas of peoples' sovereignty, as happened in the American and French revolution, did the arguments become revolutionary. In the context of the US movement of independence, the cause was still largely argued in terms of a right to resistance against a despotic ruler. But with the independence of the Spanish colonies in Latin America, an additional element came up—the declarations of independence in the early nineteenth century stated also a 'natural right' of peoples in the colonies to determine their own political fate, and this might take the form of independent statehood. In order to avoid violent conflicts over territory,15 Latin American diplomatic practice linked this new right with a preservation of the inherited territorial status quo, in the form of the principle of uti possidetis.16

European powers of course did not accept such title to independent statehood, although they finally had to accept the independence of the Latin American States. Some years later, the same claim was also made in Europe, with revolutionary movements striving for 'national' self-determination in the form of new nation-states, irrespective of traditional monarchical titles of sovereignty.¹⁷ The modern terminology of 'self-determination' also evolved in the mid-nineteenth century, as a conceptual weapon of revolutionary nationalism. 18 National self-determination became inextricably intertwined with concepts of peoples' sovereignty.¹⁹ Although some minor concessions were made in a number of exceptional cases, in the form of (very limited) plebiscites,²⁰

¹¹ See J Fisch, Das Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker (CH Beck 2010) 80-82; Saxer (n 6) 51.

¹² See Saxer (n 6) 52; see also in more detail Fisch (n 11) 93–103.

¹³ Fisch (n 11) 72-74.

¹⁺ See Fisch (n 11) 76-78.

¹⁵ See in detail Fisch (n 11) 82-88.

¹⁶ See also Fisch (n 11) 88-93.

¹⁷ See S Oeter, 'Demokratieprinzip und Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker—Zwei Seiten einer Medaille?' in H Brunkhorst (ed), Demokratischer Experimentalismus (Suhrkamp 1998) 329-32; see also Saxer (n 6) 61-79.

¹⁸ Fisch (n 11) 133-39.

¹⁹ See Oeter (n 17) 330-33.

²⁰ See Fisch (n 11) 123-33.

the European 'concert of powers' remained by and large opposed to accepting self-determination as a guiding concept of international law.

This changed only with World War I. Lenin and the Bolsheviks forged 'national selfdetermination' into a political weapon to be used against the Tsarist Russian Empire.²¹ And US President Wilson, with his famous 'fourteen points', used it as a tool to destroy the traditional multinational empires in Central and Eastern Europe, by promising people in the east of Europe their own nation-state.²² The victorious powers were not really consistent in operationalizing the principle in the peace treaties after 1918, and had to compensate many national groups by complex arrangements for minority protection.² This system of minority protection, which was based on the international treaties and unilateral declarations of some new States, seemed promising, but in the late 1920s proved to be a failure, due to the benign neglect of the major powers, which were not interested in enforcing the international guarantees upon the new States.²⁴ The system of 'Mandates entrusted to the victorious powers in order to lead former colonies of the Entente powers into self-government was also not very successful, since the tendency to control these territories as a kind of protectorate was difficult to contain.25 The new international lega order of the League of Nations thus compromised its high-sounding promises. But the principle of self-determination had made its way into international diplomacy and international legal discourse, transforming it from a revolutionary concept of the left into a political principle operated by international diplomacy.

II. Chapters XI and XII of the UN Charter

6 With the prominence which self-determination had gained as a concept in political-lega discourse, it was difficult to avoid mentioning it in the UN Charter, as the constitutive document of the new international legal order. Nevertheless the first draft of the Charter prepared in Dumbarton Oaks attempted to do exactly this—writing the Charter without mentioning explicitly the term 'self-determination'. The colonial powers sitting at the table knew very well that any reference to self-determination would backfire agains them, and would in particular encourage claims of local elites in the colonies to independent statehood. But the Soviet Union blocked these attempts and insisted on mentioning self-determination at a prominent place in the Charter. The final result o

²¹ See Doehring (n 2) MN 50 para 9; Raić (n 6) 184–88; Fisch (n 11) 136–39, 148–51.

²² Concerning Wilson's 'fourteen points' see K Rabl, Das Selbstbestimmungsrecht der Völker (Kori 1963) 76–80; M Pomerance, 'The United States and Self-Determination: Perspectives on the Wilsonian Conception' (1976) 70 AJIL 1, 16–20; Raić (n 6) 177–84; Fisch (n 11) 151–57.

²³ As to the failures of the system of the Paris peace treaties see Rabl (n 22) 96–102; H Hannum Autonomy, Sovereignty, and Self-Determination (University of Pennsylvania Press 1990) 28–31; P Allot, 'Self Determination—Absolute Right or Social Poetry?' in C Tomuschat (ed), Modern Law of Self-Determination (Nijhoff 1995) 202–05; A Whelan, 'Wilsonian Self-Determination and the Versailles Settlement' (1994) 4. ICLQ 99–115; A Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples: A Legal Reappraisal (CUP 1995) 24–28; Raić (n 6 190–4: Fisch (n 11) 157–66.

^{190-4;} Fisch (n 11) 157-66.

24 See only P Thornberry, International Law and the Rights of Minorities (Clarendon 1991) 46-49; C Weisbrod, 'Minorities and Diversities: The Remarkable Experiment of the League of Nations' (1993) 1 Connecticut J Int L 359-406; PB Finney, 'An Evil for All Concerned: Great Britain and Minority Protection after 1919' (1995) 30 J Contemporary History 533-31; Fisch (n 11) 182-88.

²⁵ See Raić (n 6) 193-96; see also Doehring (n 2) MN 51 para 11.

²⁶ See Fisch (n 11) 216; see also M Mazower, No Enchanted Palace. The End of Empire and the Ideologica Origins of the United Nations (Princeton UP 2009) 149–51.

the dispute between the United Kingdom and France on the one hand and the Soviet Union on the other hand was Art. 1 (2) with its reference to self-determination as a fundamental purpose of the UN. Self-determination was not clearly phrased as a collective right but merely as a purpose and principle of the Organization-although the (similarly authoritative) French text speaks of a 'principe de l'égalité des droits des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes', thus using the language of rights. In essence, the reference was a formula compromise—self-determination was provided for as a guiding principle of the new order, but the modalities of its implementation were left in the dark. There is no doubt that this happened deliberately, since it conformed to the dominant position of colonial powers—all men were in principle equal and entitled to self-determination, but the inhabitants of colonial territories had not progressed enough in the civilizational process to form their own States, and needed benevolent supervision and assistance by European powers to achieve full self-government (the famous 'sacred trust of civilization').28 With the new formula, it was put beyond doubt that in principle colonial peoples had a right to self-determination, but it was left to the discretion of the governing powers to decide when these peoples would be ready for full self-government.25

Chapter XI and XII of the Charter to a certain degree try to operationalize such a procedural concept of self-determination.30 Article 73 provides that members of the UN 'which have to assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government' (the so-called 'non-selfgoverning territories') with the adoption of the Charter recognize 'the principle that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount, and accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote to the utmost ... the well-being of the inhabitants of these territories'. To this end, the administering powers shall 'ensure, with the respect for the culture of the peoples concerned, their political, economic, social, and educational advancement'. They shall also 'develop self-government, to take due account of the political aspirations of these peoples', as well as 'promote constructive measures of development'. In order to achieve a minimal control of the United Nations over these measures, they were obliged-according to Art. 73 (e) of the Charter-to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General for information purposes' relevant information concerning the conditions in the non-self-governing territories. The obligations imposed upon the administering powers of so-called 'trusteeship territories' (the former 'mandates' of the League of Nations) were in substance more or less the same, with the exception of the much more stringent control exercised by the UN over the policies of the administering powers, through the Trusteeship Council. The path towards self-determination of colonial territories thus was set; the colonial powers could only try to gain time by arguing that the societies in the colonies were still not ready for full self-government.31

²⁸ Concerning this classical line of argumentation see Fisch (n 11) 199–200; see also Mazower (n 26) 28–65.

²⁹ See Fisch (n 11) 234.

³⁰ Raić (n 6) 200-02; K Knop, Diversity and Self-Determination in International Law (CUP 2002) 329-32; Fisch (n 11) 224-25.

³¹ See Fisch (n 11) 234.

III. UN Practice and Decolonization

- 8 The colonial powers proved unable to stem the tide of growing claims for self-determination in their colonial territories. With the incorporation of the principle of self-determination in the UN Charter, the Soviet Union had taken the lead—and it managed to become the spokesman of colonial peoples' aspirations for independent statehood. It took some time until a stable anti-colonial developed—although a powerful current of anti-colonial sentiment had existed in the GA from the beginning.³² More and more colonies had to be allowed independence, and the majority in the GA was gradually changing as a consequence. This became evident with UNGA Res 1514 (14 December 1969), the so-called 'Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples', expressing a strong condemnation of all forms of colonialism and calling for decolonization.³³ Even the traditional excuses for upholding colonial structures as a transitional arrangement with a view to achieving 'civilizational progress' were not accepted any more; instead the 'right of self-determination' of all peoples was stressed, including in particular their right to freely decide upon their political status.³⁴ Article 2 of the resolution stated self-determination, as the goal of decolonization, to be not only a principle, but characterized it as a collective right of all peoples still suffering under colonial rule.
- An immense number of GA resolutions making similar points followed during the 1960s and 1970s, culminating in the 'Friendly Relations Declaration' of 24 October 1970.³⁵ In its Preamble, the 'Friendly Relations Declaration' stresses the States' conviction 'that the subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a major obstacle to the promotion of international peace and security' and subsequently:
 - that the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples constitutes a significant contribution to contemporary international law, and that its effective application is of paramount importance for the promotion of friendly relations among States; based on respect for the principles of sovereign equality.
- This is supplemented by the formula: 'Convinced in consequence that any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a State or country or at its political independence is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter'. The operative part of the Declaration further elaborates this anti-colonial thrust, under the heading of the 'principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples', by stressing at the outset that 'all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and every State has the duty to respect this right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter'. What the last formula means is spelled out a little later by emphasizing:

Every State has the duty to refrain from any forcible action which deprives peoples referred to above in the elaboration of the present principle of their right to self-determination and freedom and independence. In their actions against, and resistance to, such forcible action in pursuit of ³² See Mazower (n 26) 152.

³⁵ Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, UNGA Res 1514 (XV) (14 December 1960) UN Doc A/RES/1514(XV).

³⁴ See also Doehring (n 2) 51–52, para 14; Raić (n 6) 202–09; Fisch (n 11) 226; Saxer (n 6) 234–8.

³⁵ Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Co-Operation Among States in Accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, UNGA Res 2625 (XXV) (24 December 1970) UN Doc A/RES/2625(XXV).

the exercise of their right to self-determination, such peoples are entitled to seek and to receive support in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter.

The following paragraph makes the message even clearer by demanding that non-self-governing territories should be governed in 'a status separate and distinct from the territory of the State administering it'—a status that should prevail 'until the people of the colony or non-self-governing territory have exercised their right of self-determination in accordance with the Charter'. That such emphasis on self-determination should not be misunderstood as an invitation to secessionist movements is made clear in the next paragraph of the Declaration, which stresses that:

nothing in the foregoing paragraphs shall be construed as authorizing or encouraging any action which would dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign and independent States conducting themselves in compliance with the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples as described above and thus possessed of a government representing the whole people belonging to the territory without distinction as to race, creed or colour.

The anti-colonial orientation of these formulations is beyond any doubt—colonialism must find its end, but the 'newly independent States' should be protected in their territorial integrity and political independence.³⁶ Only in cases of discriminatory, racist regimes where a part of the population denies the rest of the people any political participation and full citizenship rights might a denial of the respect for political independence and territorial integrity be justified (the last part of the formula cited above must be understood as a reaction to the problem of 'apartheid').

The enormous number of GA resolutions with an analogous message cannot be enumerated here, or dealt with in detail.³⁷ The content of these resolutions, however, is of the utmost clarity. Self-determination is more or less identified with decolonization.³⁸ What self-determination means in detail is not worked out—except for cases of decolonization.³⁹ Furthermore, it remains doubtful whether there is much room for self-determination outside the context of decolonization (and illegal occupation).⁴⁰

The practice of UN organs, in particular the GA, thus construed self-determination purely in terms of decolonization—and the strong pressure towards decolonization proved at the same time to be the driving force behind the consolidation of self-determination as a collective entitlement of peoples, as a 'right'. More than a hundred new States were born in the course of decolonization, and the reference to self-determination played a decisive role in these processes of gaining independent statehood. Decolonization thus played a decisive role in transforming self-determination from a mere (objective) principle to a (subjective) right, although of a collective nature; but at the same time, decolonization gave rise to doubts as to whether self-determination still constitutes a general principle, or has been narrowed down to a collective entitlement of a merely anti-colonial nature.

³⁶ See also Fisch (n 11) 228-32; Saxer (n 6) 250-59.

³⁷ See more in detail Raić (n 6) 210-19.

³⁸ See Raić (n 6) 219; S Wheatley, Democracy, Minorities and International Law (CUP 2005) 66–77.

³⁹ See, however, Doehring (n 2) 52, paras 15 and 16.

⁴⁰ See Doehring (n 2) 53, para 18; Raić (n 6) 220–25; Wheatley (n 38) 77–85.

⁴¹ See also Doehring (n 2) 53, para 18.

⁴² See in detail W Ofuatey-Kodjoe, The Principle of Self-Determination in International Law (Nellen 1977) 349–52; Laing (n 6) 216–25.

⁴³ See Wheatley (n 38); see also Doehring (n 2) 53, para 18.

16

IV. The UN Human Rights Covenants

The transformation of self-determination into a legal entitlement under positive international law was consolidated by the two UN Human Rights Covenants of 1966, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant or Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.⁴⁴ Each Covenant declares (in identical wording) ir its Art. 1: 'All peoples have the right of self-determination. By virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural devel opment.' Paragraph 2 of this Art. 1 stresses the right to 'freely dispose of their natural wealth and resources'. Only para 3 then makes an explicit reference to decolonization, by stating that all State parties, including the administering powers having responsibility for non self-governing territories, 'shall promote the realization of the right of self-determination and shall respect that right, in conformity with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations'. The two Covenants thus not only transformed self-determination into a collective right under (positive) international law, by codifying it in the form of a treaty obligation but disconnected the right of self-determination from its strict coupling to the context o decolonization. The systematic structure of the two Covenants makes clear that the right o self-determination is a general entitlement, and that the purpose of decolonization is only a specific emanation of such general right.

The initiative for including the right of self-determination in the two Covenants again came from the Soviet Union.⁴⁵ With a view to the systematic structure of the Covenants the codification of the right of self-determination as the starting-point for the subse quent codification of (individual) human rights is to a certain degree surprising, since the right of self-determination definitively is a collective right, and not an individual humar right. In systematic terms, however, its inclusion may be justified with the argument prominently put forward by Third World States-that the exercise of the right of self determination must be seen as a precondition for the exercise of all other human rights.4 One may debate such a claim, but evidently it formed the basis of the construction of Art 1 of both Covenants. The (more or less declaratory) description of the major component of self-determination in the second sentence of Art. 1 (1) of both Covenants—'by virtu of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic social and cultural development'—cannot be read as an exhaustive definition of the com ponents of the right of self-determination. Article 1 of the Covenants again does not giv an authoritative definition of what kinds of operational entitlements may be deduced from the right of self-determination. If it is understood as a right linked solely to people of existing States (and colonial territories), it would be superfluous—beyond decoloniza tion. For the established people of a recognized State the guarantees contained in sucl a formula would be more or less redundant—they cover entitlements to decide freely or its own political affairs that already follow from the principle of non-intervention. Bu whether such an argument of potential redundancy may be used as the basis of a clain that Art. 1 of both Covenants also covers ethnic groups not constituting a 'state people ie 'minorities', is open to doubt⁴⁷—and still very much disputed. The question will i substance be dealt with below.

⁴⁴ See Doehring (n 2) 53, para 19; Saxer (n 6) 238-49.

⁴⁵ Doehring (n 2) 53, para 20.

⁴⁶ ibid.

⁴⁷ See in this regard the arguments of Doehring (n 2) 54, para 21.

V. The Practice of the ICJ

The right of self-determination was also referred to in the jurisprudence of the ICJ, which corroborates its nature as a norm of positive international law. There is relatively little case-law explicitly referring to self-determination, however. It took some time until self-determination made its way into the judgments of the ICJ. In the case between Portugal and India over Right of Passage over Indian Territory, for example, the Court did not mention self-determination at all, although India had explicitly invoked such a right and had included it in the arguments of its memorials. The first reference made to self-determination in a case happened in the Namibia Advisory Opinion. In that case, the GA contested that South Africa had a right to maintain governmental authority over Namibia, with the argument that such continued colonial rule violated the right of self-determination. In referring explicitly to such a right of self-determination, the Court seems to have simply assumed that it constituted a norm of positive international law. Except for the fact that the argumentation of the Court in that case confirmed the existence of a right of self-determination in modern international law, the opinion is not that helpful, since the Court did not say anything in detail on the components and contents of such a right.

In the Western Sahara Advisory Opinion, the Court again based its conclusions on the existence of a right of self-determination.⁵² In referring to UNGA Res 1514 on decolonization, and characterizing the situation in Western Sahara as a case of decolonization, it reaffirmed the right of the people of such colonial territory to decide freely on its political status. A decade later, self-determination was referred to in the judgment on the Frontier Dispute between Burkina Faso and Mali, where the application of the principle uti possidetis was confirmed outside the Latin American context.53 Self-determination thus goes the argument—does not grant a basis to challenge established frontiers, since in the course of decolonization these are inherited from the colonial powers, according to uti possidetis. The Court went a step further in the Eastern Timor Case (Portugal v Australia)54 where it confirmed the erga omnes character of the right of self-determination. Eastern Timor had remained (throughout the decades of Indonesian occupation) a non-self-governing territory, with its peoples enjoying a right to self-determination which had to be respected by all third parties. Some mention of self-determination has also been made in more recent cases, as in the Lockerbie Case (Libya v United States)55 and the Bosnian Genocide Case against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia56, as well as in advisory opinions such as the Wall Advisory Opinion (Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory).57 However, new insights ⁴⁸ See also Doehring (n 2) 54, para 22.

⁴⁹ Right of Passage over Indian Territory (Portugal v India) (Merits) [1960] ICJ Rep 6.

50 Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (South West Africa) Notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 267 (Advisory Opinion) [1971] ICJ Rep 16.

51 See Doehring (n 2) 54, para 24.

52 Western Sahara (Advisory Opinion) [1975] ICJ Rep 12.

53 Frontier Dispute (Burkina Faso v Republic of Mali) (Merits) [1986] ICJ Rep 566.

⁵⁴ Case Concerning East Timor (Portugal v Australia) (Merits) [1995] ICJ Rep 90.

55 Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention Arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamarhiriya v United States of America) (Metits) [1992] ICJ Rep 210.

56 Case Concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v Yugoslavia) (Preliminary Objections) [1996-11] ICJ Rep 595.

5 Legal Consequences of the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory (Advisory Opinion) [2004] ICJ Rep 136, paras 118, 122.

18

324

19

into the legal character and the contents of the right of self-determination cannot be gained from these cases.

The same in essence also holds true for the 2010 Kosovo Advisory Opinion. Although the issue of self-determination (and of the legality of third State recognition) was clearly at stake when the request for the Advisory Opinion was formulated, the Court did not give clear-cut answers to all the implicit questions. As a reaction to the various references made in the course of the proceedings to the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada relating to the secession of Québec, the ICJ stressed: 'The Court is not required by the question it has been asked to take a position on whether international law conferred a positive entitlement on Kosovo unilaterally to declare its independence or, a fortiori, on whether international law generally confers an entitlement on entities situated within a State unilaterally to break away from it.'

Nevertheless, the Court reaffirmed that during the second half of the twentieth century, 'the international law of self-determination developed in such a way as to create a right to independence for the peoples of non-self-governing territories and peoples subject to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation'. A great many new States—it continued—'have come into existence as a result of the exercise of this right'. There were, however, also instances of declarations of independence outside this context. The practice of States in these latter cases does not point to the emergence in international law of a new rule prohibiting the making of a declaration of independence in such cases.

21 Concerning the issue of secession, the Court stated:

Whether, outside the context of non-self-governing territories and peoples subject to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation, the international law of self-determination confers upon part of the population of an existing State a right to separate from that State is, however, a subject on which radically different views were expressed by those taking part in the proceedings and expressing a position on the question. Similar differences existed regarding whether international law provides for a right of "remedial secession" and, if so, in what circumstances. There was also a sharp difference of views as to whether the circumstances which some participants maintained would give rise to a right of "remedial secession" were actually present in Kosovo.

The Court considered, however, that it was not necessary to resolve these questions in the present case. 'The General Assembly has requested the Court's opinion only on whether or not the declaration of independence is in accordance with international law. Debates regarding the extent of the right of self-determination and the existence of any right of "remedial secession", however, concern the right to separate from a State.' As the Court noted, 'that issue is beyond the scope of the question posed by the General Assembly'.

Such deliberate omission to tackle the (implicitly raised) questions of self-determination and of legality of secession was heavily criticized by some of the judges in dissenting opinions. 'The unilateral declaration of independence of 17 February 2008 was not intended to be without effect', as Judge Koroma observed. 'It was unlawful and invalid. It failed to comply with laid down rules. It was the beginning of a process aimed at separating Kosovo from the State to which it belongs and creating a new State. Taking into account the factual circumstances surrounding the question put to the Court by the General Assembly, such an action violates UNSC Res 1244 (1999) and general international law.' What in fact was primarily at stake was the proper interpretation and application of UNSC Res 1244 (1999). The resolution, Judge Koroma continues, 'reaffirms the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, of which Kosovo is a component part'. Moreover, the resolution provides for 'substantial autonomy

OETER

2.2

[for the people of Kosovo] within the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia'. In other words, it was intended that Kosovo enjoy substantial autonomy and self-government during the international civil presence but that it remain an integral part of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.' Some of the other judges raised similar concerns in their separate opinions. Even some judges generally in favour of the majority decision appended declarations in which they criticized the far too narrow construction the Court had given to the question put before it. The General Assembly's request would have deserved—so argued Judge Simma—a more comprehensive answer, assessing whether the right of self-determination (or any other rule, like remedial secession) 'permit or even warrant independence (via secession) of certain Peoples/territories'. That the Court did not have the courage to try to give an answer to these heatedly discussed questions should be interpreted as an indication of how divisive and controversial the issues of doctrinal construction of the right of self-determination (and of a potential right of secession) still are today.

C. Basic Preconditions and Components of the Right of Self-Determination

I. The Bearers of the Right of Self-Determination

The overview of the historical evolution of the right of self-determination has demonstrated that there is a clear core area where the bearer of the right is beyond dispute. This is the case of decolonization, where State practice has confirmed that non-self-governing territories (as well as trusteeship territories) enjoy a clear right to self-determination, understood as a right freely to determine their political status. The 'people' in the sense of self-determination in these cases is the autochtonous population of the non-self-governing territories that has been grouped together to a polity by carving out a certain territory in colonial times in order to form a distinct political entity.⁵⁹ These territories became independent States on the basis of the principle of uti possidetis, which means that the geographical shape of the territories had been definitely established in colonial times—and they simply inherited the boundaries from their colonial rulers.⁶⁰ Self-determination did not mean that there was any scope for a decision of the local people concerned regarding whether they wanted to belong to the newly independent State, or to a neighbouring State. State practice clearly banned such a far-reaching claim, making the inherited territorial boundaries inviolable.⁶¹

Whether this excludes other 'peoples' from the right of self-determination is still an open issue, despite a fierce debate on the matter for decades. An important strand in international legal scholarship argues that every group of persons bound together by common objective characteristics, like language, culture, religion, race, might be qualified as a 'people', as long as such a group has also a common (subjective) understanding of belonging together and being distinct from all the other surrounding groups. 62

24

⁵⁸ United Nations SCOR 4011th meeting UN Doc S/RES/1244 (1999) para 10.

⁵⁹ See only Saxer (n 6) 278-81.

⁶⁰ On the details of uti possidetis see Saxer (n 6) 763-79.

⁶¹ See only Fisch (n 11) 56-61.

⁶² See D Ronen, The Quest for Self-Determination (Yale UP 1979) 39–45; C Gusy, 'Selbstbestimmungsrecht im Wandel. Von der Selbstbestimmung durch den Staat zur Selbstbestimmung im Staat' (1992) 30 AVR 385–410; Doehring (n 2) 55–56, paras 28–30.

25

26

Such an understanding might be termed as a 'naturalist' concept of peoples. Another strand insists on the territorial element of self-determination. Self-determination, thus the argument goes, has always been linked to historically pre-constituted political entities with a specific territory. 'People' in this understanding is not simply a group of persons, one could also say an 'ethnic group', but the constituent people of a certain territorial entity formed by history.⁶³

A careful analysis of State practice clearly supports the second understanding. Beyond the context of decolonization, there has never been any serious international support for a claim of self-determination raised by a simple 'ethnic group' having no firm territorial basis in a pre-existing political entity. ⁶⁴ Colliding claims of self-determination of (nonterritorial) ethnic groups cannot be solved without having recourse to a defined territory—only when there is a given territory does a plebiscite or referendum make sense in order to then let a majority determine the political status of the territory. Although a traditional, 'naturalist' understanding of a 'people' can point to the intuition that the term 'people' does not in itself have a territorial connotation, a functional perspective of self-determination, construing the concept in the light of the political and legal system in which it is embedded, leads to the insight that a certain degree of 'territoriality' is unavoidable if the concept of self-determination is to operate productively under our current political circumstances.

In essence, the whole debate turns on the question whether 'ethnic groups', which qualify as 'minorities' in the sense of modern concepts of minority protection, may also qualify also as 'peoples' enjoying a right of self-determination. 65 In principle one should definitely keep these concepts separate. 66 The term 'minorities' covers all groups linked together by commonalities like language, culture, religion, race—as long as these groups do not form the majority in a given State. Some of these minorities might have a clear territorial basis, a historical settlement area where they used to live together in high concentration. In modern times even such groups will tend to lose their territorial roots to a certain degree, because personal mobility and the resulting waves of migration will spread these groups over a much larger area. Other groups never had clear territorial strongholds but were always scattered among other population groups. Accepting a 'right of self-determination' for each of these historically-formed groups would mean opening a Pandora's box of never-ending disputes on territory and political dominance.67 The only way to avoid such endless quarrelling is the way taken by the community of States in twentieth-century State practice, namely the insistence upon a close linkage between (pre-determined) political entities and self-determination. Self-determination is a right that can only sustainably be granted to polities linked to a historically defined territory. Here self-determination may well work, with a majority deciding in a plebiscite upon its political status, and clearly defined boundaries that must be accepted by neighbours according to the principle of uti possidetis.

OETER

⁶³ See TM Franck, 'Clan and Superclan: Loyalty, Identity and Community in Law and Practice' (1996) 90 AJIL 359–83; Saxer (n 6) 310–26.

⁶⁴ Saxer (n 6) 324-26.

⁶⁵ See, on the one hand, Doehring (n 2) 55-56 paras 28-30, on the other hand Saxer (n 6) 286-300, 310-25.

⁶⁶ See also Wheatley (n 38) 124-26.

^{6°} See TM Franck, 'Postmodern Tribalism and the Right to Secession' in C Brölmann and others (eds), Peoples and Minorities in International Law (Nijhoff 1993) 3–27 as well as Franck (n 62) 359–83.

Such pre-determined entities may be established States, where it is beyond dispute that the peoples of such States enjoy a continuing right of self-determination protecting them against foreign intervention, alien domination, or illegal occupation.⁶⁸ They may also be historical entities traditionally enjoying a certain degree of autonomy within States, or member States of federations and federal States. 69 The fact that a certain territory has formed a distinct political entity, with a population living together in such an entity for a long time, usually also results in a strong sense of collective identity, irrespective of language, culture, or religion. This does not exclude divergences of opinion—the members of the previously dominant group will not wish to be separated from their kin-state and thus become a minority in a new State, as was the case with Russians in the former republics of the Soviet Union.⁷⁰ But the international community accepted the claims of such republics, as well as the claims of the former republics constituting the Socialist Federative Republic of Yugoslavia, to form their own States.71 Although in both cases the recognition was mostly based on arguments of dismemberment of the former federations, the international community had no problems in accepting their claims of self-determination. Other cases are more disputed, like the unilateral declaration of independence of the former Autonomous Province of Kosovo within Serbia.⁷² But all in all State practice is clear—the subjects of self-determination which are recognized as States are pre-determined political entities with a clear territorial basis, not 'peoples' in a purely personalist, group-based form.

II. Components of the Right of Self-Determination

1. Internal Self-Determination

As has become clear from the description of the potential bearers of the right of selfdetermination, the consequence of such a right cannot always be independent statehood. The principled presumption in favour of territorial integrity that was so strongly emphasized in the 'Friendly Relations Declaration' definitely goes against such an assumption. The historical characteristic of federated States, autonomous regions, and member States of federations is precisely the fact that they are federated or integrated into another State, although provided with a certain degree of political and institutional autonomy. The principle of territorial integrity works not only in favour of centralized, unitary States, but protects also federations, federal States, and quasi-federal constructs. The result of such precedence of territorial integrity is the legal assumption that in these cases self-determination is bound up in the constructs of federation or autonomy. The 'peoples' of such entities historically had reasons for entering into a close relationship with another political entity, and as long as there are no exceptional grounds rebutting ⁶⁸ See Doehring (n 2) 56, para 33.

 69 See eg O Kimminich, 'A "Federal" Right of Self-Determination?' in C Tomuschat (ed), Modern Law of Self-Determination (Kluwer 1993) 83-99, as well as P Thornberry, 'The Democratic or Internal Aspect of Self-Determination with some Remarks on Federalism' ibid, 101-38.

¹⁰ See only WC Allison, 'Self-Determination and Recent Developments in the Baltic States' (1991) 19 Denver J Intl L & Pol'y 625-84.

^{&#}x27;I See M Weller, 'The International Response to the Dissolution of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia' (1992) 86 AJIL 569–607.

⁷² See the contributions in P Hilpold (ed), Das Kosovo-Gutachten des IGH vom 22. Juli 2010 (Brill ^{2012).}

PRIME MINISTER REPLIES TO PRIVATE NOTICE QUESTION AND PARLIAMENTARY QUESTIONS OF 12th JUNE 2012

12.06. 2012

Private Notice Question

To ask Dr the Honourable Prime Minister, Minister of Defence, Home Affairs and External Communications, Minister for Rodrigues -

Whether, in regard to the sovereignty of Mauritius over the Chagos Archipelago, he will state -

- (a) if he discussed same with Mr David Cameron, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, during his last visit thereto and, if so, indicate the outcome thereof;
- (b) if he proposes to meet Mr Barack Obama, President of the United States of America, in relation thereto and, if so, when;
- (c) if Government proposes to take new initiatives to make out our case in relation thereto and, if so, give details thereof; and
- (d) the stand taken by Government, if any, at the April/May 2012 Meeting of the Indian Ocean Tuna Commission held in Australia, following the intervention of the officials of the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory"?

REPLY

Mr Speaker, Sir,

Following my meeting with the British Prime Minister, Mr David Cameron on Friday 08 June 2012, I announced through the media that I shall make a statement at the National Assembly today on the outcome of the meeting. I thank the Hon. Leader of the Opposition for his Private Notice Question which gives me an opportunity to inform the House and the population at large on the discussions I had with the British Prime Minister.

I should like to stress that the main purpose of my mission to the UK last week was to have a bilateral meeting with Mr David Cameron, the British Prime Minister. While in the UK, I also participated in the celebrations marking Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee at Her Majesty's invitation

The meeting with the British Prime Minister was held at 10, Downing Street. On the British side the Hon. Henry Bellingham, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Mr John Dennis, Head of Africa Desk at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Private Secretaries of Prime Minister Cameron and Hon. Henry Bellingham were also present. In attendance on the Mauritius side were the Secretary to the Cabinet, the Solicitor-General, our High Commissioner in London and our Permanent Representative to the United Nations in New York.

Both sides highlighted the long-standing ties between our two countries and looked forward to the successful hosting of CHOGM in Mauritius in 2015. I observed, however, that the dispute on the Chagos issue remained a blot in this otherwise excellent relationship.

I reminded the British Prime Minister of the repeated undertakings by the UK that the Chagos Archipelago would be returned to Mauritius when no longer needed for defence purposes. I indicated that there is an excellent window of opportunity to redress the injustice caused by the excision of the Chagos Archipelago from the territory of Mauritius with the expiry of the UK-US arrangements on the use of the archipelago in 2016. And, in this connection, I stressed on the need for formal talks between Mauritius, UK and the US to be initiated with a view to reaching an agreement on the effective exercise of sovereignty by Mauritius while safeguarding the continued use of Diego Garcia for US defence purposes.

The British Prime Minister observed that there were some concerns about the multiplicity of litigations pertaining to the Chagos Archipelago that are currently ongoing. He added that the presence of a military base in Diego Garcia further added to the complexity of the issue.

In the course of the discussions an understanding was reached for both parties to start a process of positive dialogue on the future use of the Chagos Archipelago. I informed the British Prime Minister that I will make a formal announcement about this process. I will follow up on this matter for a prompt start of such talks and will propose that these be held at Ministerial level.

In regard to part (b) of the Question I informed the British Prime Minister that I intend, during a proposed visit to Washington, to put across our proposal that all three States sit together and come to an agreement on the sovereignty issue without causing any prejudice to the continued use of Diego Garcia as a military base to meet prevailing security needs. The British Prime Minister took note of this initiative vis-à-vis the US.

Mr Speaker, Sir,

Regarding part (c) of the Question, we all know the circumstances in which the Chagos Archipelago was excised from the territory of Mauritius prior to our accession to independence when the UK was the colonial master dictating the laws and policies of Mauritius. The excision was in violation of international law and various United Nations General Assembly Resolutions.

Mr Speaker, Sir,

The House will surely appreciate that in view of the sensitive and complex nature of discussions on this subject, it will not be in our interest to delve into details of the strategy we have chartered out for attaining our ultimate objective.

It will be recalled that, when in June 2004, media gave headline publicising a leaked information that Mauritius intended to leave the Commonwealth in order to take the UK to the International Court of Justice, the British Government promptly came up with a declaration at the UN stating that it did not recognize the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in relation to any dispute with the Government of any other country which is or has been a member of the Commonwealth.

Mr Speaker, Sir,

In the light of what I have just said the Leader of the Opposition and the House will appreciate that we should be very careful in engaging in a public debate about each and every of our initiatives. However, the House can rest assured that we will continuously explore all legal and diplomatic initiatives with the assistance of our local and external lawyers or advisers.

I must, however, inform the House that at the diplomatic level, a number of initiatives have been successfully undertaken by Mauritius, as evidenced by Declarations, Decisions and Resolutions supporting the sovereignty of Mauritius over the Chagos Archipelago adopted by the African Union Summits in July 2010 and January 2011, the Non-Aligned Movement Summit in July 2009, and the Non-Aligned Movement Ministerial Conferences in May 2011 and May 2012. In particular, for the first time, the Group of 77 and China in April 2012 adopted a Ministerial Declaration on the occasion of UNCTAD XIII which, inter alia, reaffirms the need to find a peaceful solution to the dispute over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised from the territory of Mauritius.

Mr Speaker, Sir,

Regarding part (d) of the Question, I am informed that Mauritian Officials attending the Indian Ocean Tuna Commission held in April 2012 in Australia had made the following statement, I quote,

"The Government of the Republic of Mauritius does not recognise the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory" ("BIOT") which the United Kingdom purported to create by illegally excising the Chagos Archipelago from the territory of Mauritius prior to its independence. This excision was carried out in violation of United Nations General Assembly Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960, 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, 2232 (XXI) of 20 December 1966 and 2357 (XXII) of 19 December 1967.

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius reiterates that the Chagos Archipelago including Diego Garcia forms an integral part of the territory of Mauritius under both Mauritian law and international law.

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius does not also recognise the existence of the 'marine protected area' which the United Kingdom had purported to establish around the Chagos Archipelago. On 20 December 2010, Mauritius initiated proceedings against the United Kingdom under Article 287 and Annex VII to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea to challenge the legality of the 'marine protected area'."

Unquote

In fact I should inform the House that my office has issued a circular to all supervising officers of Ministries/Departments in January 2012, requesting to ensure that officials attending international conferences, meetings or seminar adopt a consistent stand on the Mauritius position on the Chagos and Tromelin issue whenever so related questions arise.

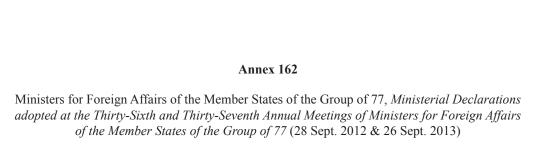

The sovereignty of Mauritius over the Chagos Archipelago is an issue which, in my view, should transcend party politics. We should all act with a unity of purpose to achieve our objective for our country to effectively exercise sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago. I would, therefore, appeal to all members of this august Assembly to support the initiative of Government regarding what the late Mr Robin Cook, former British Foreign Secretary described as, I quote

"one of the most sordid and morally indefensible episodes in our post colonial history"

Unquote.

Mr Speaker, Sir,

Let me assure the House that I will keep all members informed of any development on the Chagos Archipelago issue.

EXTRACT

THIRTY-SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING OF MINISTERS FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE MEMBER STATES OF THE GROUP OF 77 New York, 28 September 2012

MINISTERIAL DECLARATION

114. The Ministers reaffirmed the need to find a peaceful solution to the sovereignty issues facing developing countries, including among others the dispute over Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised from the territory of Mauritius in violation of international law and United Nations General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965. Failure to resolve these decolonization and sovereignty issues would seriously damage and undermine the development and economic capacities and prospects of developing countries.

EXTRACT

THIRTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF MINISTERS FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE MEMBER STATES OF THE GROUP OF 77 New York, 26 September 2013

MINISTERIAL DECLARATION

141. The Ministers reaffirmed the need to find a peaceful solution to the sovereignty issues facing developing countries, including among others the dispute over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised from the territory of Mauritius in violation of international law and United Nations General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965. Failure to resolve these decolonization and sovereignty issues would seriously damage and undermine the development and economic capacities and prospects of developing countries.

THIRD AFRICA-SOUTH AMERICA SUMMIT, MALABO, EQUATORIAL GUINEA, 20-22 FEBRUARY 2013

MALABO DECLARATION (EXTRACT)

We reaffirm that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised by the former colonial power from the territory of the Republic of Mauritius in violation of international law and UN Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Mauritius. In this regard, we note with grave concern that despite the strong opposition of the Republic of Mauritius, the United Kingdom purported to establish a 'marine protected area' around the Chagos Archipelago which contravenes international law and further impedes the exercise by the Republic of Mauritius of its sovereignty over the Archipelago and of the right of return of Mauritian citizens who were forcibly removed from the Archipelago by the United Kingdom. We resolve to fully support all peaceful and legitimate measures already taken and which will be taken by the Government of Mauritius to effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago and, in this respect, call upon the United Kingdom to expeditiously end its unlawful occupation of the Chagos Archipelago. We recall, in this regard, the Resolutions / Decisions adopted by the African Union at the highest political level including Decision Assembly/AU/Dec.331 (XV) of 27 July 2010 of the AU Assembly and Resolution Assembly/AU/Res.1(XVI) adopted by the 16th Ordinary Session of the AU Assembly held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 30-31 January 2011.

Annex 164 Assembly of the African Union, 21st Ordinary Session, Solemn Declaration on the 50th Anniversary of the OAU/AU, Assembly/AU/2(XXI)Rev.1 (26 May 2013)

Assembly/AU/2(XXI)Rev.1
Page 1

SOLEMN DECLARATION ON THE 50th ANNIVERSARY OF THE OAU/AU

We, Heads of State and Government of the African Union assembled to celebrate the Golden Jubilee of the OAU/AU established in the city of Addis Ababa, Ethiopia on 25 May 1963,

Evoking the uniqueness of the history of Africa as the cradle of humanity and a centre of civilization, and dehumanized by slavery, deportation, dispossession, apartheid and colonialism as well as our struggles against these evils, which shaped our common destiny and enhanced our solidarity with peoples of African descent;

Recalling with pride, the historical role and efforts of the Founders of the Pan-African Movement and the nationalist movements, whose visions, wisdom, solidarity and commitment continue to inspire us;

Reaffirming our commitment to the ideals of Pan-Africanism and Africa's aspiration for greater unity, and paying tribute to the Founders of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) as well as the African peoples on the continent and in the Diaspora for their glorious and successful struggles against all forms of oppression, colonialism and apartheid;

Mindful that the OAU/AU have been relentlessly championing for the complete decolonization of the African continent and that one of the fundamental objectives is unconditional respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of each of its Member States;

Stressing our commitment to build a united and integrated Africa;

Guided by the vision of our Union and affirming our determination to "build an integrated, prosperous and peaceful Africa, driven and managed by its own citizens and representing a dynamic force in the international arena";

Determined to take full responsibility for the realisation of this vision;

Guided by the principles enshrined in the Constitutive Act of our Union and our Shared Values, in particular our commitment to ensure gender equality and a people centred approach in all our endeavours as well as respect for sovereignty and territorial integrity of our countries.

ACKNOWLEDGE THAT:

I. The Organisation of African Unity (OAU) overcame internal and external challenges, persevered in the quest for continental unity and solidarity; contributed actively to the liberation of Africa from colonialism and apartheid; provided a political and diplomatic platform to generations of leaders on continental and international matters; and elaborated frameworks for Africa's development and integration agenda through programmes such as NEPAD and APRM.

- II. The African Union (AU) carried forward our struggle for self-determination and drive for development and integration; formulated a clear vision for our Union; agreed that the ultimate goal of the Union is the construction of a united and integrated Africa; instituted the principle of non-indifference by authorizing the right of the Union to intervene in Member States in conformity with the Constitutive Act; and laid the groundwork for the entrenchment of the rule of law, democracy, respect for human rights, solidarity, promotion of gender equality and the empowerment of Women and Youth in Africa.
- III. The implementation of the integration agenda; the involvement of people, including our Diaspora in the affairs of the Union; the quest for peace and security and preventing wars and genocide such as the 1994 Rwandan genocide; the alignment between our institutional framework and the vision of the Union; the fight against poverty; inequality and underdevelopment; and, assuring Africa's rightful place in the world, remain challenges.

WE HEREBY DECLARE:

A. On the African Identity and Renaissance

- Our strong commitment to accelerate the African Renaissance by ensuring the integration of the principles of Pan Africanism in all our policies and initiatives;
- Our unflinching belief in our common destiny, our Shared Values and the affirmation of the African identity; the celebration of unity in diversity and the institution of the African citizenship;
- iii) Our commitment to strengthen AU programmes and Member States institutions aimed at reviving our cultural identity, heritage, history and Shared values, as well as undertake, henceforth, to fly the AU flag and sing the AU anthem along with our national flags and anthems;
- Promote and harmonize the teaching of African history, values and Pan Africanism in all our schools and educational institutions as part of advancing our African identity and Renaissance;
- v) Promote people to people engagements including Youth and civil society exchanges in order to strengthen Pan Africanism.

Assembly/AU/2(XXI)Rev.1 Page 3

B. The struggle against colonialism and the right to self-determination of people still under colonial rule

- The completion of the decolonization process in Africa; to protect the right to self-determination of African peoples still under colonial rule; solidarity with people of African descend and in the Diaspora in their struggles against racial discrimination; and resist all forms of influences contrary to the interests of the continent;
- The reaffirmation of our call to end expeditiously the unlawful occupation of the Chagos Archipelago, the Comorian Island of Mayotte and also reaffirm the right to self-determination of the people of Western Sahara, with a view to enable these countries and peoples, to effectively exercise sovereignty over their respective territories.

C. On the integration agenda

Our commitment to Africa's political, social and economic integration agenda, and in this regard, speed up the process of attaining the objectives of the African Economic Community and take steps towards the construction of a united and integrated Africa. Consolidating existing commitments and instruments, we undertake, in particular, to:

- Speedily implement the Continental Free Trade Area; ensure free movement of goods, with focus on integrating local and regional markets as well as facilitate African citizenship to allow free movement of people through the gradual removal of visa requirements;
- ii) Accelerate action on the ultimate establishment of a united and integrated Africa, through the implementation of our common continental governance, democracy and human rights frameworks. Move with speed towards the integration and merger of the Regional Economic Communities as the building blocks of the Union.

D. On the agenda for social and economic development

Our commitment to place the African people, in particular women, children and the youth, as well as persons with disabilities, at the centre of our endeavours and to eradicate poverty. In this regard, we undertake to:

- Develop our human capital as our most important resource, through education and training, especially in science, technology and innovation, and ensure that Africa takes its place and contributes to humanity, including in the field of space sciences and explorations;
- Eradicate disease, especially HIV/AIDS, Malaria and Tuberculosis, ensure that no African woman dies while giving life, address maternal, infant and child mortality as well as provide universal health care services to our citizens;

- iii) Accelerate Africa's infrastructural development, to link African peoples, countries and economies; and help to drive social, cultural and economic development. In this regard, we commit to meet our strategic targets in transport, ICT, energy and other social infrastructure by committing national, regional and continental resources to this end;
- iv) Create an enabling environment for the effective development of the African private sector through meaningfull public-private sector dialogue at all levels, in order to foster socially responsive business, good corporate governance and inclusive economic growth;
- Take ownership of, use and develop, our natural endowments and resources, through value addition, as the basis for industrialization; promote intra-Africa trade and tourism, in order to foster economic integration, development, employment and inclusive growth to the benefit of the African people;
- Also take ownership, preserve, protect and use our oceanic spaces and resources, improve our maritime and transport industries to the benefit of the continent and its peoples, including by contributing to food security;
- Preserve our arable land for current and future generations, develop our rural economies, our agricultural production and agro-processing to eradicate hunger and malnutrition, as well as achieve food security and self-sufficiency;
- viii) Expand and develop urban infrastructure and develop planned approaches to rapid urbanization and the emergence of new cities;
- ix) Make our development agenda responsive to the needs of our peoples, anchored on the preservation of our environment for current and future generations, including in the fight against desertification and mitigation of the effects of climate change, especially with regards to island states and landlocked countries.

E. On peace and security

Our determination to achieve the goal of a conflict-free Africa, to make peace a reality for all our people and to rid the continent of wars, civil conflicts, human rights violations, humanitarian disasters and violent conflicts, and to prevent genocide. We pledge not to bequeath the burden of conflicts to the next generation of Africans and undertake to end all wars in Africa by 2020. In this regard, we undertake to:

 Address the root causes of conflicts including economic and social disparities; put an end to impunity by strengthening national and continental judicial institutions, and ensure accountability in line with our collective responsibility to the principle of non-indifference;

Assembly/AU/2(XXI)Rev.1 Page 5

- Eradicate recurrent and address emerging sources of conflict including piracy, trafficking in narcotics and humans, all forms of extremism, armed rebellions, terrorism, transnational organized crime and new crimes such as cybercrime.
- Push forward the agenda of conflict prevention, peacemaking, peace support, national reconciliation and post-conflict reconstruction and development through the African Peace and Security Architecture; as well as, ensure enforcement of and compliance with peace agreements and build Africa's peace-keeping and enforcement capacities through the African Standby Force;
- Maintain a nuclear-free Africa and call for global nuclear disarmament, nonproliferation and peaceful uses of nuclear energy;
- Ensure the effective implementation of agreements on landmines and the non-proliferation of small arms and light weapons;
- Address the plight of internally displaced persons and refugees and eliminate the root causes of this phenomenon by fully implementing continental and universal frameworks.

F. On democratic governance

Our determination to anchor our societies, governments and institutions on respect for the rule of law, human rights and dignity, popular participation, the management of diversity, as well as inclusion and democracy. In this regard, we undertake to:

- Strengthen democratic governance including through decentralized systems, the rule of law and the capacities of our institutions to meet the aspirations of our people;
- Reiterate our rejection of unconstitutional change of government, including through any attempts to seize power by force but recognize the right of our people to peacefully express their will against oppressive systems;
- iii) Promote integrity, fight corruption in the management of public affairs and promote leadership that is committed to the interests of the people;
- iv) Foster the participation of our people through democratic elections and ensure accountability and transparency.

G. On Determining Africa's Destiny

Our determination to take responsibility for our destiny. We pledge to foster self-reliance and self-sufficiency. In this regard, we undertake to:

- Take ownership of African issues and provide African solutions to African problems;
- Mobilize our domestic resources, on a predictable and sustainable basis to strengthen institutions and advance our continental agenda;
- Take all necessary measures, using our rich natural endowments and human resources, to transform Africa and make it a leading continent in the area of innovation and creativity;

H. Africa's place in the world

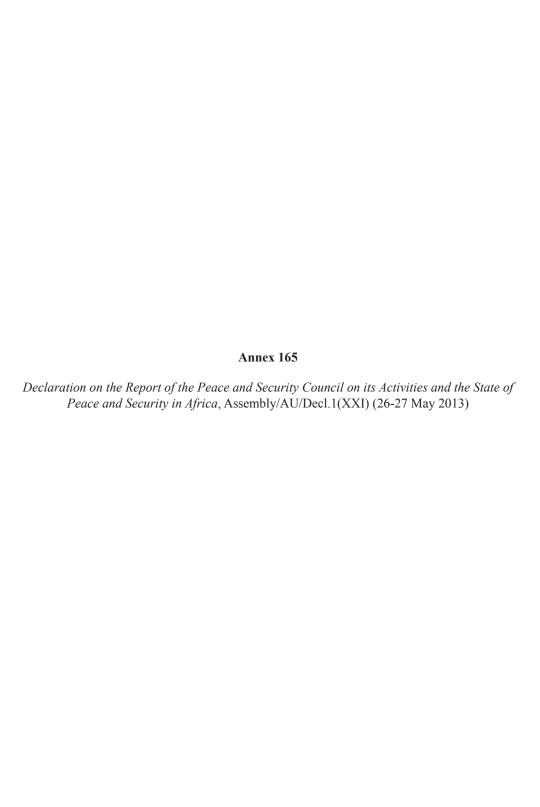

Our endeavour for Africa to take its rightful place in the political, security, economic, and social systems of global g overnance towards the realization of its Renaissance and establishing Africa as a leading continent. We undertake to:

- Continue the global struggle against all forms of racism and discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerances;
- ii) Act in solidarity with oppressed countries and peoples;
- iii) Advance international cooperation that promotes and defends Africa's interests, is mutually beneficial and aligned to our Pan Africanist vision;
- iv) Continue to speak with one voice and act collectively to promote our common interests and positions in the international arena;
- Reiterate our commitment to Africa's active role in the globalization process and international forums including in Financial and Economic Institutions;
- vi) Advocate for our common position for reform of the United Nations (UN) and other global institutions with particular reference to the UN Security Council, in order to correct the historical injustice with Africa as the only region without a permanent seat.

We pledge to articulate the above ideals and goals in our national development plans and in the development of the Continental Agenda 2063, through a people-driven process for the realization of our vision for an integrated, people-centred, prosperous Africa at peace with itself.

As Heads of State and Government, mindful of our responsibility and commitment, we pledge to act together with our Peoples and the African Diaspora to realize our vision of Pan Africanism and African Renaissance.

Adopted by the 21st Ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the African Union, at Addis Ababa, on 26 May 2013.

EXTRACT

AFRICAN UNION

UNION AFRICANA
UNIÃO AFRICANA

Addis Ababa, ETHIOPIA

P. O. Box 3243

Telephone: 517 700

Fax: 5130 36

website: www.au.int

ASSEMBLY OF THE UNION Twenty-First Ordinary Session 26 - 27 May 2013 Addis Ababa, ETHIOPIA

> Assembly/AU/Dec.474-489(XXI) Assembly/AU/Deci.1-2(XXI) Assembly/AU/Res.1(XXI)

DECISIONS, DECLARATIONS AND RESOLUTION

Assembly/AU/Decl.1(XXI)
Page 1

DECLARATION ON THE REPORT OF THE PEACE AND SECURITY COUNCIL ON ITS ACTIVITIES AND THE STATE OF PEACE AND SECURITY IN AFRICA Doc. Assembly/AU/5(XXI)

The Assembly,

Having reviewed the state of peace and security on the continent and the steps we need to take to hasten the attainment of our common objective of a conflict-free Africa, on the basis of the report of the Peace and Security Council on its activities and the state of peace and security in Africa;

Welcoming the significant progress made in the operationalization of the African Peace and Security Architecture (APSA), the adoption of a number of instruments on democracy, human rights and good governance, which represent a consolidated framework of norms and principles towards the structural prevention of conflicts, the advances in conflict resolution and peace building on the continent, as well as the partnerships built with relevant international stakeholders:

Noting, however, the challenges that continue to be encountered in the full operationalization of the APSA, including key components such as the African Standby Force (ASF), continued prevalence of conflict, insecurity and instability in some parts of the continent, with its attendant humanitarian consequences and socio-economic impact, as well as the resurgence of unconstitutional changes of Government, the frequent recourse to armed rebellion to further political claims, the threats posed by terrorism, hostage taking and the attendant payment of ransoms, illicit proliferation of arms, transnational organized crime, drug trafficking, piracy, and illicit exploitation of natural resources to fuel conflicts;

Noting also the need for increased funding from within the continent to assert Africa's ownership and leadership, as well as the challenges faced in building innovative and flexible partnership with the United Nations and other stakeholders;

Stressing that the 50th anniversary of the OAU/AU offers a unique opportunity to review progress made and challenges encountered, as well as to chart the way forward, and reiterating, in this respect, our determination to address decisively the scourge of conflict and violence on our continent, with the view to bequeath to the next generation of Africans a prosperous continent at peace with itself:

1. RECOMMIT OURSELVES to accelerate the full operationalization of the APSA, including refinement, where necessary, of existing provisions to facilitate their implementation. WE CALL FOR the strengthening of the relations between the AU and the Regional Economic Communities/Regional Mechanisms for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution (RECs/RMs), notably through the effective implementation of the relevant provisions of the PSC Protocol and the Memorandum of Understanding between the AU and the RECs/RMs, bearing in mind AU's primary responsibility in the maintenance of peace and security in

Assembly/AU/Decl.1(XXI) Page 2

Africa. WE ENDORSE the establishment of the Pan-Wise network comprising the Panel of the Wise, similar structures within the RECs/RMs and all other African actors contributing to peace-making through preventive action and mediation, as agreed to during the second retreat of these organs held in Addis Ababa from 11 to 12 April 2013;

- 2. UNDERTAKE to make renewed efforts to address the root causes of conflicts in a holistic and systematic manner, including through implementing existing instruments in the areas of human rights, rule of law, democracy, elections and good governance, as well as programmes relating to cooperation, human development, youth and employment. In this respect, WE CALL ON all Member States that have not yet done so, to become parties to these instruments, by the end of 2013, and REQUEST the Commission to review thoroughly the implementation status of these instruments and programmes and to submit to the Assembly, by January 2014, concrete proposals on how to improve compliance;
- COMMIT OURSELVES, within the framework of the African Solidary Initiative, to extend full support to those African countries emerging from conflict, to assist them to consolidate their hard-won peace and avoid relapse into violence. WE LOOK FORWARD to the convening of the planned African Solidary Conference (ASC), in Addis Ababa, in September 2013, and COMMIT to making significant pledges on that occasion;
- STRESS the need for all Member States to extend full cooperation and support to the PSC, bearing in mind that, in carrying out its duties under the Protocol, the PSC acts on behalf of the entire membership of the AU;
- for Africa truly to own the efforts to promote peace, security and stability on the continent. In this respect, we request the Commission to submit concrete proposals to the Assembly, in January 2014, including with respect to the statutory transfer from the AU regular budget to the Peace Fund. In the meantime, WE ENCOURAGE all Member States to make exceptional voluntary contributions to the Peace Fund on the occasion of the OAU Golden Jubilee, and REQUEST the Commission to report, by January 2014, to the Assembly on Member States response to this appeal;
- 6. STRESS THE NEED to build an innovative, flexible action-oriented and balanced partnership with the international partners, notably the United Nations, to ensure that Africa's concerns and positions are adequately taken into account by the Security Council when making decisions on matters of fundamental interest to Africa, REITERATE the terms of the communiqué issued by the PSC at its 307th meeting held on 9 January 2012, and REQUEST the PSC to convene an open session at Summit level, in order to review the partnership with the United Nations in light of the challenges encountered recently regarding the situation in Mali and other issues related to peace and security on the continent;

- CALL ON the African civil society to continue to play its positive role in promoting peace, security and stability as called for by the PSC Protocol and REQUEST the Commission and the PSC to take all necessary steps to enhance interaction with civil society;
- 8. WELCOME the progress made in the relations between Sudan and South Sudan, with the signing of the Implementation Matrix for the Agreements signed of 27 September 2012 and CALL FOR a transparent inquiry into the killing of the paramount Chief of the Ngok Dinga Community in Abyei, as well as the strengthening and acceleration of the process of resolving the Abyei issue; in Somalia, with the consolidation of the security and political gains recorded over the past few years; the Great Lakes Region, with the signing of Peace, Security and Cooperation Framework; and in Mali, with the liberation of the northern part of the country and on-going efforts for the holding of elections. WE CALL ON all concerned stakeholders to spare no efforts in consolidating these achievements, and addressing the challenges at hand, in line with the relevant PSC communiqués. WE also WELCOME the progress made in peace building and post-conflict recovery in Burundi, Comoros, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Republic of Congo, Liberia and Sierra Leone, ENCOURAGE the countries concerned to pursue their efforts and CALL ON fellow African countries and the rest of the international community to continue assisting them in their efforts;
- 9. REITERATE the AU's concern at the continued challenges in the peace processes between Eritrea and Ethiopia and the relations between Eritrea and Djibouti, and REQUEST the Chairperson of the Commission to take appropriate steps to facilitate progress in these situations, in line with the powers entrusted to her by the PSC Protocol and earlier relevant decisions of the Assembly, and to report to the PSC, no later than October 2013, on the steps taken in this regard. WE ALSO REITERATE OUR CONCERN at the continued impasse in the conflict in Western Sahara, and CALL FOR renewed efforts based on relevant OAU/AU and UN resolutions, in order to overcome this impasse;
- 10. ALSO EXPRESS CONCERN at the prevailing situation in Madagascar and fully support the PSC and SADC decisions on the issue of candidatures to the forthcoming presidential elections. WE CONDEMN the illegal seizure of power in Central African Republic and the serious violations of human rights committed by the Seleka rebel group and in this regard, COMMEND the efforts of the Economic Community of Central African States (ECCAS), ENDORSE the PSC decisions on the matter and CALL FOR renewed efforts to restore security and ensure the return to constitutional order, bearing in mind the relevant PSC decisions and conclusions of the inaugural meeting of the International Contact Group on CAR (ICG-CAR). WE STRESS THE NEED for the early return to constitutional order in Guinea Bissau, noting with satisfaction ECOWAS, AU, CPLP, EU and UN coordinated efforts;

Assembly/AU/Decl.1(XXI)

Page 4

- REITERATE our support to the sovereignty of the Union of the Comoros over the island of Mayotte, as well as the sovereignty of the Republic of Mauritius over the Chagos Archipelago;
- 12. REQUEST the PSC to actively keep under review the implementation of the Declaration and Plan of Action adopted by the Special Session on the Consideration and Resolution of Conflicts in Africa, held in August 2009, at its Summit meeting referred to in paragraph 6 above;
- 13. PLEDGE OUR FULL COMMITMENT to the effective implementation of this Declaration and to adopting new measures, as and of necessary, so as to open a new chapter in our collective action in favor of peace, security, stability and shared prosperity throughout Africa and the rest of the world.

THIRD INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON SMALL ISLAND DEVELOPING STATES

National Report of the Republic of Mauritius

Acknowledgements

The Government of Mauritius would like to express its gratitude to the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs, the United Nations Development Programme Country Office and also to all the Ministries, organisations, major groups' representatives and individuals who have contributed to the preparation of this report.

Table of Contents

Message of Dr. The Hon. Arvin Boole	lessage	of Dr.	The	Hon.	Arvin	Bool	lel
-------------------------------------	---------	--------	-----	------	-------	------	-----

Messa	age of The Hon. Devanand Virahsawmy	6
0	Minister of Environment and Sustainable Development
The R	depublic of Mauritius	7
I.	Introduction	8
II.	Progress in implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action & Mauritius Strategy	13
III.	Gaps and Constraints encountered in BPoA/MSI implementation	20
IV.	New and Emerging Challenges	22
V.	Way Forward and Recommendations	24
VI.	Post 2015 UN Development Agenda	28
VII.	Partnerships for SIDS	29
VIII	Conclusion	30

List of Abbreviations

BPO Business Process Outsourcing BPoA Barbados Programme of Action CEB Central Electricity Board

CERT Computer Emergency Response Team

CFL Compact Fluorescent Lamp DAI Digital Access Index EE Energy Efficiency

ЕЕМО Energy Efficiency Management Office

EEZ Exclusive Economic Zone

ESD Education for Sustainable Development ESTP Economic and Social Transformation Plan

FIT Feed In Tariff

GEF Global Environment Facility

Information and Communication Technology ICT

IOC Indian Ocean Commission LED Light Emitting Diode LTES Long Term Energy Strategy

MID Maurice Ile Durable (Mauritius Sustainable Island)

MSI Mauritius Strategy for Implementation NDS National Development Strategy

NTM Non-Tariff Measure PBB Programme Based Budget RE Renewable Energy S&T Science and Technology

SCP Sustainable Consumption and Production

SDGs Sustainable Development Goals SIDS Small Island Developing States SIPP Small Independent Power Producers SSDGS Small Scale Distribution Generation System

Technology Needs Assessment TNA

UNDESA United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs

UNDP United Nations Development Programme

URA Utility Regulatory Authority

Message by the Hon. Minister of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius is pleased to present this report on the occasion of the Third Global Conference of Small Island Developing States to be held in Samoa in 2014.

As an essential preparatory exercise for the Conference, the Republic of Mauritius has itself undertaken a review of its implementation of the Barbados Plan of Action (BPoA) for the sustainable development of Small Island Developing States adopted at the Global Conference on the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States in 1994 and of the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States adopted at the International Meeting to Review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States in 2005. The national report produced as a result of this review highlights the successes and constraints, the new and emerging challenges, the best practices, the way forward and the vision of the future. This report underscores, in particular, the sustained efforts made by the Republic of Mauritius to build resilience to adapt to unfavourable regional and international conjectures as well as to the negative effects of climate change.

Small Island Developing States remain a special case for sustainable development and continue to face unique and increasing challenges including the negative effects of climate change and a unique vulnerability of natural disasters but also to the degradation of key eco systems. They face built in constraints such as small economies, remoteness and limited fresh water, land and other natural resources. Waste disposal is a growing problem and energy costs are high meaning that more must be done to promote renewable energy. Barely above sea level and remote from world markets, many Small Island Developing States occupy the margins of our global community and for some their very existence is in jeopardy. Average vulnerability of Small Island Developing States has worsened over the last decade because of their high exposure to external shocks such the fuel, food and financial crises – events of a truly global character – combined with lower coping capacity as well as inadequate international support.

As a Small Island Developing State with an export oriented economy, the Republic of Mauritius is both economically and ecologically, fragile and vulnerable. It is therefore essential to frame and implement the right policies and create appropriate conditions and environment so as not only to meet the challenges but also to take advantage of the opportunities offered by this new paradigm of globalization. All this is perfectly in line with the vision of the Government to make the Republic of Mauritius a Modern and Sustainable Society through the Maurice Ile Durable Vision. The Government of the Republic Mauritius, thus, is fully committed to integrating Sustainable Development concepts and norms into its overall projects policies.

We look forward to the outcome of the 2014 Samoa Global Conference on Small Island Developing States to guide us in our efforts towards meeting new and emerging challenges of sustainable development. Finally, I would like to express my sincere appreciation to all those who have contributed to the preparation of this report.

Dr the Honourable Arvin Boolell G.O.S.K, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade

Message by the Hon. Minister of Environment & Sustainable Development

The 3rd Global SIDS Conference will be held in Samoa from 1 to 4 September 2014. The conference will undertake a comprehensive review of the implementation of the Barbados Programme of Action (BPoA) for the sustainable development of SIDS and the Mauritius Strategy (MSI) for further implementation of the BPoA. As an essential preparatory exercise, Mauritius has undertaken, in advance of the conference, a review of the implementation of the BPoA and the MSI with a view to proposing concise, action oriented and pragmatic recommendations for the forthcoming Conference to enhance the resilience of SIDS. The preparation of the National Report has adopted an all-inclusive and broad based approach by involving a range of stakeholders for its preparation.

This National Report takes us through the achievements of the Republic of Mauritius in the quest for a more resilient society. It highlights the resources and investment injected in sustainable development programmes and projects and also the constraints that sometimes stall efforts towards building resilience. Constraints that are heralding our efforts towards sustainable development are essentially related to finance, infrastructural and human capacity, technology, smallness and remoteness of our markets.

Taking these constraints into consideration, the report presents some new and emerging challenges. Those are cross cutting in nature and range from water resources management, food security and global economic crises to migration and development. These constraints and new challenges should however, not dampen down our motivation and drive to seek opportunities in this ever dynamic world.

This is why the report has made pragmatic recommendations for further action as we aim to establish a new agenda for the sustainable development of SIDS. We need to move ahead keeping in mind the immense potential already available among all SIDS and give SIDS/SIDS partnerships an opportunity to flourish. In so doing, we have to be particularly careful in managing our fragile ecosystems and natural resources. We need to continuously table the adverse effects of climate change on our economies and people. We are ready to turn challenges into opportunities and for SIDS; the Ocean Economy is an opportunity that has to be tapped for our future development. We have also pointed out that for an action plan to be successful, it needs to be properly monitored. The setting up of the right institutional framework at national, regional and international levels will help us measure success and take timely action to address hurdles on the way.

Solidarity, collaboration and cooperation among us SIDS will take us a long way towards our destination. We also expect the international community to commit themselves with more tangible support for an effective outcome of the 2014 Samoa meeting.

Devanand Viransawmy, GOSK

Minister of Environment and Sustainable Development

The Republic of Mauritius

The Republic of Mauritius comprises a group of islands in the South West Indian Ocean, consisting of the main island Mauritius and the outer islands of Rodrigues, Agalega, Saint Brandon, Tromelin and the Chagos Archipelago. The total land area of the Republic of Mauritius is 2040 km² and the country has jurisdiction over a large Exclusive Economic Zone of approximately 2.3 million km² with significant potential for the development of a modern and prosperous marine and fisheries-based sustainable industry. The population, estimated at 1.3 million, is composed of several ethnicities, mostly people of Indian, African, Chinese and European descent. Most Mauritians are multilingual and speak and write in English, French, Creole and several Asian languages.

The Republic of Mauritius is a democracy with a Government elected every five years. The 2012 Mo Ibrahim Index of African Governance ranked Mauritius first in good governance. According to the 2012 Democracy Index compiled by the Economist Intelligence Unit and which measures the state of democracy in 167 countries, Mauritius ranks 18th worldwide.

Mauritius has a well-established welfare system. Free health care services and education to the population have contributed significantly to the economic and social advancement of the country. Support to inclusive development, gender equality and women empowerment are being addressed through the development of strategies, action plans and activities geared to meet the social targets set by the Government. To facilitate social integration and empowerment of vulnerable groups, a Ministry of Social Integration and Economic Empowerment has been set up in 2010.

Significant structural changes have been brought to ensure that Mauritius transforms itself from a sugar, manufacturing, tourism economy to a high-tech, innovative financial and business services hub. Policy and institutional reforms programmes have been articulated to enhance competitiveness; consolidate fiscal performance and improve public sector efficiency; improve the business climate and widen the circle of opportunity through participation, social inclusion and sustainability. The adoption of the "Maurice Ile Durable" framework and the Economic and Social Transformation Plan are the new development paradigm for the Republic of Mauritius as they strive to promote sustainable development and transform itself into a middle-income country.

Section I: Introduction

Sustainable development emphasises a holistic, equitable and far-sighted approach to decision-making at all levels. It rests on integration and a balanced consideration of social, economic and environmental goals and objectives in both public and private decision-making.

This concept of sustainability is very important in Small Island Developing States (SIDS) and this was first acknowledged at the Earth Summit in 1992. The vulnerabilities of SIDS arise from a number of physical, socio-economic and environmental factors. SIDS small size, limited resources, geographical dispersion and isolation from markets, place them at a disadvantage economically and prevent economies of scale. For instance, due to the small size of their economies, SIDS are highly dependent on trade but lack the factors that are decisive for competitiveness. Similarly, international macroeconomic shocks tend to have higher relative impacts on SIDS small economies. The combination of small size and remoteness leads to high production and trade costs, high levels of economic specialisation and exposure to commodity price volatility. Furthermore, in SIDS, the following natural resource base: energy, water, mineral and agricultural resources are limited and resource extraction tends quickly to meet the carrying capacities of the small islands. The latter also face unique threats related to global environmental issues, mainly climate change, biodiversity loss, waste management, pollution, freshwater scarcity, and acidification of the oceans.

As a SIDS, much progress has been achieved in Mauritius due to benefits derived from the Welfare State, namely: free access to education from pre-primary to university levels, transport to students and the elderly and health services to all and also from bilateral and multilateral trading agreements, the skilled work force, entrepreneurship, a stable democratic government and peace. However, despite its performance, the country is now facing the brunt of a number of global challenges, namely, the global economic, financial, energy and food security crises. The impacts of climate change, sea level rise, natural disasters and biodiversity loss are also having their toll on progress achieved so far.

Third International Conference on Small Island Developing States

The 3rd International Conference on SIDS to be held from 1 - 4 September 2014 in Apia, Samoa, will seek a renewed political commitment to address the special needs and vulnerabilities of SIDS by focusing on practical and pragmatic actions. Building on assessments of the Barbados Programme of Action (BPoA) and the Mauritius Strategy for Implementation (MSI), the Conference will aim to identify new and emerging challenges and opportunities for sustainable development of those States, particularly through the strengthening of partnerships between small islands and the international community.

In addition, the Conference will provide an opportunity for the elaboration of sustainable development issues of concern to SIDS in the process of charting the Post-2015 Development Agenda, including the sustainable development goals. Towards this end, the Conference is intending to serve as a platform for the international community to strengthen existing partnerships and voluntary commitments, as well as act as a launch pad of new initiatives, all with the common objective of advancing the implementation of the BPoA/MSI.

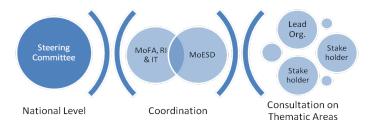

National Preparatory Process

The effectiveness of the Samoa SIDS Conference will depend first and foremost on national level preparations that will feed into the regional, interregional and global processes. National preparations for the 3rd International SIDS Conference are currently underway. The preparatory process has begun with the preparation of a National Assessment Report. The results of the national consultations will in turn feed into the discussions at regional and inter-regional meetings, leading up to the conference itself.

National Steering Committee

Broad based consultation, an inclusive approach and ownership are at the heart of the national preparatory process. To this effect, the Ministries of Environment & Sustainable Development and Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade are jointly chairing a multistakeholder Steering Committee comprising Government, the private sector and civil society representatives¹. The Committee is the platform for the 2014 SIDS meeting and mandated to among others to:

- a) Provide support and guidance for the preparation of the National Report;
- b) Provide guidance on any other matters and activities related to the conference until the Samoa Meeting in 2014; and
- c) Follow up on the 2014 Samoa outcome.

The National Report - The Methodology for the consultative process

The national report is based on both the responses to the guiding questions prepared by the United Nations to steer discussions at the national level and on a bottom-up, inclusive consultative process. This report needs to be read in conjunction with the following documents which provide detailed background information on the actions already undertaken by the Government of Mauritius to implement the BPoA and the MSI and the challenges thereof:

- State of the Environment Report prepared for 1992 UN Earth Summit;
- Report of the International meeting to review the Implementation of the Programme of Action for the sustainable Development of small Islands Developing States 1994;
- Mauritius Staking Out the Future National Report for Mauritius International Meeting 2005;
- The Mauritius Strategy for Implementation National Assessment Report of 2010;
- Mauritius Environment Outlook Report 2011;
- National Synthesis report 2012 for the RIO+20 Conference
- Mauritius Report on the Post 2015 UN Development Agenda The Future we want, and
- Maurice Ile Durable report, June 2013

¹ The list of the members of the National Steering Committee is at Annex 1

A. Summary of the consultations with the 18 thematic focus groups

A series of consultations were undertaken with key stakeholders to ensure cross-sectoral participation and diversity of views. 18 thematic focus groups were set up on the MSI thematic areas. A lead Ministry was identified with regard to each of the 18 thematic themes of the BPoA and MSI:

- 1. Climate Change & Sea Level Rise
- 2. Natural & Environmental Disasters
- 3. Management of Waste
- 4. Coastal & Marine Resources
- 5. Freshwater Resources
- 6. Land Resources
- 7. Energy Resources
- 8. Tourism Resources9. Biodiversity Resources
- 10. Transport & Communication
- 11. Science & Technology

- 12. Trade: Globalization & Trade Liberalization
- 13. Sustainable Capacity Development & Education For Sustainable Development
- 14. Sustainable Production & Consumption
- 15. National & Regional Enabling Environments
- 16. Health
- 17. Knowledge Management & Information For Decision-Making
- 18. Culture

Each focus thematic group was composed of relevant stakeholders from both public and private sector and most of these groups met on at least two occasions². Each group considered the 8 guiding questions and responded accordingly. The main recommendations from the group reports are given under the relevant sections II, III, IV and V of this report.

B. National Consultative Workshops

Three national workshops were held. The first national workshop³ was held on 21 May 2013 and saw the participation of representatives from various sub-sections of society such as the youth, women, NGOs, civil society, trade unionists and local authorities. A second workshop⁴ was held on 11 June 2013 in Rodrigues to ensure that the specific concerns of that particular territory of Mauritius were fed into the process. The Mauritius Private sector was also briefed on the process and their views were sought on 11 June 2013. Finally, a national validation workshop⁵ was held to present the report, and to seek its endorsement from the representatives of all stakeholders who participated in the focus group meetings and consultations.

1) Summary of the National Dialogue with Major Groups

- Weed for better adapted education, employment and a better quality of life, including through the promotion of family values, protection of traditions and cultures;
- Need for increased transparency, equity, security and good governance and in this respect better enforcement of laws and regulations at national level;
- Weed for more education/information on sustainable development since some of the participants had limited knowledge of the existence and implementation of Agenda 21, BPoA, MSI, MDGs and the Post 2015 UN Development Agenda process;
- Need for more information on climate change, Disaster Risk Reduction and its impacts cross-sectorally;
- Concern over unpredictable changes in weather conditions and its consequences and the need for mitigative measures to be taken as well as contingency plans to be prepared;

 $^{^{2}}$ Please see annex 2 for consolidated paper on the themes identified in the Mauritius Strategy.

³ Please see annex 3 for agenda and list of participants

⁴ Please see annex 4 for agenda and list of participants

 $^{^{5}}$ Please see annex 5 for agenda and list of participants

- Concern over waste management, protection of water resources, and the lack of proper urbanisation controls;
- # Concern with regard to the ageing population and the economic and social effects thereof;
- # Concern over the lack of recognition of the important role NGOs play in society and their lack of human and financial support

2) Summary of consultations held in Rodrigues

- Water Resources Management remains their main priority. Water harnessing, storage and distribution is the main island challenge;
- Optimal use of land through judicious planning and zoning is considered essential for sustainable development. Incompatible development has been responsible for severe erosion and coastal siltation and conflictual co-habitation;
- A management strategy and action plan for optimal protection of coastal areas from sea level rise, erosion, inundation etc. (Rodrigues was severely impacted by Tsunami in 2004) and exploitation of marine resources should be prepared and implemented;
- Energy is produced from imported fossil fuel which is expensive and there are concerns over the regularity of supply during cyclonic seasons. There is a need to develop optimally renewable energy from wind and sun. They need affordable resources and technology;
- Waste characterisation has shown new challenges as there an increasing amount of E-waste (batteries, aluminium cans, bottles and plastic waste) entering the waste stream. Lack of capacity and scale of economies are not conducive to recycling and therefore poses serious problem of disposal; and
- The meeting also recognised and recommended that the concept of Education for Sustainable Development should be further strengthened in the formal education curriculum from primary to tertiary levels. Other issues discussed were in relation to the creation of employment, transparency in decision making and governance, security, enhancing equity for all and new and additional funding to attend to the above.

3) Summary of the dialogue with the Private Sector

- The private sector renewed its commitment to partner with the Government of Mauritius in its initiatives to meet the challenges of implementing the BPOA and MSI;
- # The Private sector remains concerned over the poor coordination at the national/regional levels with regard to a holistic implementation of the BPOA and MSI;
- The private sector is keen to work towards sustainable consumption and production as long as this does not negatively impact the competitiveness of Mauritian products which already suffer from diseconomies of scale;
- In this respect, in order to avoid duplicative processes, the private sector would like the national consultative process to include the ideas/views already expressed/submitted through their participation in the 6 working groups working on finalising the national action plan to implement the MID initiative over the long term;
- # The private sector has begun work on an energy efficiency initiative whereby it is working to seek energy conservation in production;
- # The private sector has also embarked on a project to map the carbon footprint of the main industries with a view to reviewing and reducing same.
- The other issues raised were: protection and coastal and marine resources, especially in relation to the fisheries and aquaculture sectors and the need for SIDS to be provided with special trade preferences in order to increase their competitiveness given their remote geographical location from major exporting markets.

4) Summary of issues raised during the National validation Workshop

During the National Validation workshop, six sub-groups were set up to reflect on the six chosen themes and their recommendations were as follows:

A. Climate Change Group

Adaptation would be focused on the following three sectors: health sector; coastal zone sector and infrastructure, in this respect, there would be a need to prepare national plan of action for implementation.

B. Ocean Economy & Development of a land based Oceanic Industry

- Objective: To reduce use and reliance on fossil fuel
- Way and means: Exploitation of deep sea water for cooling systems, generation of power etc.
- Benefit: Provides sustainably; Integrates MDG principle; Fits in national MID policies
- Needed: Funding and transfer of technologies

C. Energy:

Focus should be on having technical and financial assistance with regard to energy auditing, energy efficiency and energy management.

D. Waste Management:

To promote and enhance waste segregation at source for eventual recycling and re-use

E. Food Security:

Make Agriculture more resilient; Involve vulnerable groups in the production chain; provide support to small planters to adapt to new technologies; prime arable land should be protected and used only for agricultural purposes; SIDS to benefit from an Insurance Scheme operated internationally to cater for food shortages resulting from natural disasters.

F. Culture:

Enhancement of cultural Values through education and adoption of the Gross National Happiness Index

Section II: PROGRESS IN BPOA & MSI IMPLEMENTATION

The sustainable development agenda of small islands states like Mauritius has been largely shaped by the BPoA and MSI. Since its adoption in 1994, the BPoA has been to a great extent implemented in Mauritius. As regards the MSI, since 2005, Mauritius has been very committed in implementing this strategy at the domestic level as well as in advocating SIDS issues at regional, multilateral and international levels. Overall, there has been substantial progress in areas such as biodiversity protection and the establishment of terrestrial, coastal and marine protected areas. Political commitment to advance sustainable development has also been observed with the adoption of the new long term vision "Maurice Ile Durable".

National Sustainable Development Frameworks

Mauritius embraced sustainable development as the guiding paradigm to promote national development in the early 90s, with the adoption of the Integrated Management Approach to Sustainable Environmental Management under the in the Environment Protection Act of 1991. With environmental protection at its heart, this approach also had cross-cutting bearings across a range of sectoral concerns, development patterns and in decision making. It promoted broad-based administrative and consultative mechanisms and ensure that all stakeholders were party to decision-making in a structured manner.

In 1997, "Vision 2020: The National Long- Term Perspective Study" was adopted as the core development strategy to promote sustainable development in the country. The Vision 2020 set out the scenario for promoting development based on gains in agricultural efficiency, tourism, industrial production and development of financial and value-added services. As a result, the sugar and textile sectors were restructured; an offshore financial sector was established; the telecommunications system was strengthened and liberalised; new incentive schemes were offered to IT and pioneer firms; a Cyber Park was established, state secondary school capacity was doubled; port facilities were modernised, and a Freeport was established, among others.

In the face of looming global challenges like the triple economic-food-energy crises, in 2008 Government adopted "Maurice Ile Durable" as the new sustainable vision to guide national development. Maurice Ile Durable (MID) can be considered as the ground breaking, unique, innovative milestone project leading to a reinforced integrated, participatory approach to sustainable development and which seeks to include each and every citizen of Mauritius. The MID Policy, Strategy and Action Plan has been developed in a broad-based participatory approach and focuses on 5 sectors, commonly referred to as the 5 Es: Energy; Environment; Employment and Economy; Education; and Equity. The MID goals are as follows:

Energy sector is to ensure that the Republic of Mauritius is an efficient user of energy, with its economy decoupled from fossil fuel. The main targets are to achieve the national target of 35% renewable energy by 2025; and reduce energy consumption in non-residential and public sector buildings by 10% by 2020.

Environment sector is to ensure sound environmental management and sustainability of our ecosystem services. Goals are to meet the environmental sustainability targets of the Millennium Development Goals; and reduce the ecological footprint to be in the upper quartile of performance of similar income nations, by 2020.

Employment/Economy sector is to green the economy with decent jobs, offering long term career prospects. The targets are to increase the percentage of green jobs, from 6.3% in 2010, to 10% by 2020 and maintain or improve position in the World Economic Forum's International Competitiveness Index.

Education sector is to have an education system that promotes the holistic development of all citizens. The goals are to achieve 100% MID literacy by 2020 and be an internationally recognised knowledge hub for sustainable development in the region by 2020.

Equity is to ensure that all citizens are able to contribute to the Republic's continuing growth and share its combined wealth. Specific goals are to improve the position of the Republic of Mauritius in the World Poverty Index and improve current status in the Gini coefficient of income inequality.

Policies and Strategies:

The policy framework of Mauritius is anchored in the concept of sustainable development and incorporates the relevant recommendations of the major international conferences, since the 1992 Rio Earth Summit. In this context, various sectoral policies and strategies have been developed and are being implemented across various thematic areas such as: energy, coastal zone management, land, biodiversity, forests, wastewater, solid waste, and tourism among others. To report on progress achieved in BPoA and MSI implementation, the following cluster has been used:

ENVIRONMENT	EDUCATION	TRADE AND ECONOMY	HEALTH	TRANSPORT & COMMUNICATION
✓ Climate change and sea level rise		✓ Energy resources ✓ Tourism	✓ Health	✓ Transportation & communication
✓ Natural & environmental disasters	education for sustainable development	resources ✓ Trade: globalization &
✓ Management of wastes	•	trade liberalization
✓ Coastal & marine resources	✓ Knowledge management & information for	✓ National & regional enabling
✓ Freshwater resources	decision- making	environments
✓ Land resources✓ Biodiversity	✓ Culture resources ✓ Sustainable production & consumption

1) Climate Change

Fully aware of the possible impacts of climate change on its economy, citizens and their livelihoods, Government of the Republic of Mauritius has made climate change adaptation and mitigation a national priority. This is reflected in the Maurice Ile Durable programme as well as the Government Programme 2010-2015. In this endeavour, Government has adopted a multi-pronged approach to address impacts of climate change and enhance the resilience of Mauritius. To that effect, a climate change mitigation and adaptation framework has been developed. Several priority sectors like disaster risk reduction and management, renewable energy, water, coastal zones, fisheries, tourism, public infrastructure, health and agriculture have been targeted and actions are being taken at different levels ranging from policy and legislative review, application of long term dynamic tools, institutional strengthening, infrastructural works, promotion of research and development, awareness raising, education and training. A Technology Needs Assessment (TNA) has also been undertaken to define a set of clean technologies which are best suited for an enhanced climate change mitigation and adaptation approach. The outcome of this study will help mobilise international funding.

2) Disaster Risks Reduction and Management

In order to make the country resilient to the impacts of extreme events and climate change, a Disaster Risk Reduction and Management project was undertaken. Climate risk analysis, comprising comprehensive climate modelling studies has been conducted for inland flooding, landslides and coastal inundation. National Risk Profiles (Risks and Hazards Maps), Strategy Framework and Action Plan for disaster risk management have been developed under this project. These will contribute to designing robust disaster risk policies, management practices and enhance the country's preparedness in the face of disasters.

3) Management of Waste

A Solid Waste Management Strategy (2011 - 2015) was adopted in 2011 with the overall policy objective of reducing, reusing and recycling waste. Moreover, a number of actions are being taken to reduce the volume of wastes in Mauritius. For example, of the 420,000 tons of wastes being generated annually, about 63,000 tons are composted at the newly established composting plant. It is expected that by 2014, the capacity of the composting plant would be doubled, thus implying that a total amount of 126,000 tons of waste would be diverted from the landfill annually. Government has also embarked on a range of projects since the mid-term review to assess Mauritius Strategy Implementation. These include: Recycling of e-wastes from Government bodies; drafting of a regulation for the registration of recyclers; feasibility Study for the setting up and operation of recycling facilities for used tyres and Compact Fluorescent lamps and feasibility on Anaerobic Digestion for selected wastes such as: food, market and farming waste

4) Coastal and Marine Resources

The regulation of large scale development in the coastal zone is undertaken through the Environment Impact Assessment/Preliminary Environment Report mechanism as well as the Building and Land Use Permit requirements, which take into consideration the provisions of the Planning Policy Guidelines, Outline Schemes on setbacks, plot coverage and development density of coastal development. An Integrated Coastal Zone Management Framework for the Republic of Mauritius was adopted in 2010 and is presently under implementation to ensure effective management of the coastal zone. Coastal protection works, beach re-profiling and other restoration works are being taken to abate the impacts of erosion. Coral reef ecosystem monitoring and lagoonal water quality monitoring are undertaken at various sites across the island.

During the past 20 years, Mauritius has progressively established a system of marine protected areas to include fishing reserves, marine parks and marine reserves in the waters around Mauritius and Rodrigues. This has been done with a view to manage, conserve marine resources, ecosystems, natural habitats and species biodiversity and to enhance fish productivity. The Republic of Mauritius has, so far, proclaimed six Fishing Reserves and two Marine Parks in Mauritius and four marine reserves, one Marine Park and three fisheries reserved areas in Rodrigues. A National Plan of Action to prevent, deter and eliminate Illegal, Unregulated and Unreported, Fishing for Mauritius is being implemented. An Aquaculture Master Plan was prepared to develop marine and inland aquaculture.

5) Freshwater resources

A Master Plan for "Development of the Water Resources in Mauritius" was prepared in 2012 with ultimate objective to satisfy the water demand in the different supply zones for the various sectors of the economy by ensuring continuous supply over the island even during the dry season. According to the Master Plan, the main challenges of the water sector are to identify additional water resources mobilisation options; review the existing legislative framework governing the water resources sector; assess the existing water rights system and present proposals for its rationalisation; and review the institutional set-up governing the water resources sector. In addition to the above, the key long-term national development goals for the water sector comprise of mobilisation of additional water resources through rehabilitation of existing dams and water infrastructures, water management through the use of treated wastewater for irrigation purposes, public water conservation campaigns and reduction of non-revenue water.

6) Land resources

In the Republic of Mauritius, the National Development Strategy (NDS) provides the basis for land use planning. The policies and proposals of the NDS have been successfully translated at the local level through the preparation and approval of local development plans for both Urban and rural areas. A series of Planning Policy Guidance have been prepared to assist developers, local bodies and the general public in complying with principles of good design, appropriate siting and location of activities.

7) Biodiversity resources

To ensure that biodiversity is managed in a sustainable manner, a number of strategies are under implementation. These include the National Biodiversity Strategy and Action Plan (2006 – 2015), National Invasive Alien Species Strategy and Action Plan (2010 – 2019), National Forest Policy 2006, and the Islet National Park Strategic Plan (2004) for 16 offshore islets and a management plan for the shallow water demersal fish species of the Saya de Malha and the Nazareth banks.

Furthermore, in line with its international commitments, Mauritius ratified the Nagoya Protocol in 2013. Mauritius has also been working in close collaboration with the international community and has received funding and technical assistance in the preparation of policy and projects such as National Forest Policy, Sustainable Land Management Project, Forest Land Information System and ongoing NAP alignment as well as preparation of the Management Plans for the inland nature reserves. Moreover, Government is also implementing the Protected Areas Network project to manage the protected areas in collaboration with the private land owners.

To tackle food security, the following plans are also being implemented: Multiannual Adaptation Strategy – Sugar sector Action plan (2006-2015); Food Security Plan (2008-2013); Blueprint for a diversified Agri-Food Strategy for Mauritius (2008-2015) and the Mauritius Food Security Fund Strategic Plan (2013-2015). The Plant Genetic Resources Unit at the Agricultural Services of the Ministry of Agro-Industry and Food Security is also conserving plant genetic resources through in situ and ex situ agro-biodiversity collections. A food security Fund of USD 33 million has been set up.

8) Sustainable consumption and production

Mauritius was the first country in Africa to develop its National Programme on Sustainable Consumption and Production (SCP), under the guidance of UNEP to implement the 10-Year

Framework of Programmes of the Marrakech Process. Adopted in 2008, the National Programme on SCP aspires to decouple economic growth from use of natural resources, bring a change in consumption patterns, promote technological shifts and encourage the adoption of more sustainable lifestyles.

The national programme focuses on 5 priority areas, namely: Resource efficiency in energy, water and sustainable buildings and constructions; Education and communication for sustainable lifestyles; Waste management; Sustainable public procurement, and Market opportunities for sustainable products. To date, 13 projects have successfully been implemented and include among others the development of Minimum Energy Performance Standards for key household appliances, capacity building of Energy Audit providers, Green Building Rating system with Integrated Guidelines to promote sustainable buildings and an Action plan for Green Public Procurement.

9) Sustainable capacity development & education for sustainable development

A range of programmes being offered for teachers at various levels including Special education needs, remedial education, entrepreneurship education. Measures are being taken to ensure equal opportunity, gender equity and provision of appropriate education to bring about appropriate behavioural change among learners (e.g. through ESD related projects). Ongoing capacity building sessions focus on a range of ESD related themes such as HIV and AIDS, Climate change, Disaster Risk reduction and on Education, Communication and Sustainable Lifestyles. At tertiary level, Sustainable Development is being mainstreamed in a range of undergraduate and post graduate programmes.

10) Science & Technology

Science and Technology (S&T) has been mainstreamed in all sectors of the economy. In the Education sector, ICT facilities have been improved in all schools. Government has set up a Ministry, namely the Ministry of Tertiary Education, Science Research and Technology, which has taken a number of initiatives to boost Research in Science and Technology. However, broad-band speed needs to be increased with installation of fibre optics.

Mobile telephony and access to Internet facilities have grown exponentially and has facilitated communication to the world. The Digital Access Index (DAI) for Mauritius was 0.5 in 2011 as compared to Sweden, the leader, which was 0.85. The percentage subscription to Mobile cellular has increased from 14% in 2000 to 92% in 2010. Usage of technology in the Mauritian households as well as offices has also improved in line with international trends. To ensure proper implementation of priority areas of the country, better collaboration between research institutions and public bodies, the Government of the Republic of Mauritius has set up five National Research Groups to address priority issues.

11) Knowledge management & information for decision-making

Government is implementing the National ICT Strategic Plan 2011 - 2014 in order to make the ICT/BPO Sector as one of the main pillars of the economy and develop Mauritius into a Knowledge Hub. In this context, an ICT Skills Development Programme and the ICT Academy are being implemented. Furthermore, coordinated efforts towards Cyber Security threats and incidents are being undertaken and these include: strengthening Mauritian Computer Emergency Response team (CERT); cross border collaboration of issues pertaining to Cyber Security; strengthening and harmonization of Cyber Security Legislations and establishing Regional CERTS.

12) Culture

Mauritius being a multi cultural society, legislations have been enacted to give equal treatment for the preservation and promotion of all cultures and languages of the Mauritian Society. Financial assistance is also provided for the development of the Creative Industries by way of Grants to artists, creators and performers. International exposure is given to them through their participation in events of worldwide repute. Assistance is also provided for the local production of cultural goods. In order to protect author's rights and intellectual property, the Mauritius Society of Authors was set up in 1986.

13) Energy Resources

A long term energy strategy for the period 2009-2025 and an Energy Strategy (Action Plan) 2011-2025 have been adopted by Government. The strategy involves a series of action that pertains to increasing the share of renewable in the energy mix (35% by 2025), energy conservation and energy efficiency. Recently, an Integrated Electricity Plan 2013-2022 has been prepared to address the energy challenges of Mauritius and aiming to create a sufficiently broad energy portfolio that will safeguard the country against energy security concerns and price instability while being sensitive to environmental imperatives.

To allow for the implementation of the Long Term Energy Strategy, an Energy Efficiency Act was promulgated in 2011. This Act paved the way for the setting up a dedicated institution, the Energy Efficiency Management Office (EEMO), for promoting energy efficiency in all economic sectors of the country. Government is also encouraging innovation by households as well as businesses to produce electricity using renewable energy technologies. Small Independent Power Producers (SIPPs) can now produce and use electricity from photovoltaic, micro-hydro and wind turbines through systems not exceeding 50 kW and export the extra electricity to the grid.

14) Tourism resources

Mauritius is predominantly a beach holiday destination and it relies to a large extent on its coastal resources. Both the Tourism Development Plan (2002) and the Tourism Sector Strategy Plan (2009-2015) recommended the introduction of Blue Flag Programme in Mauritius. The Government of Mauritius has embarked on a Blue Flag Programme with the objectives to promote inter-alia the sustainable use of the coastal resources and sound national policies on lagoon water quality, reefs, protection of the beaches and safety. Spatial planning of the lagoons has also become of prime importance, which has prompted the need for the preparation of a master plan for the zoning and sustainable management of the lagoon. To move towards the "greening" of the tourism industry, the Government of Mauritius is in the process of introducing an eco label scheme for the environmental and sustainability of the sector.

The following is a list of some of the Projects / Programmes implemented. This non-exhaustive list is from the feedback received from the 18 thematic groups:

- National Biodiversity Strategy & Action Plan 2006-2015
- # Invasive alien species strategic Action Plan 2010 2019
- # National Forest Policy was formulated and approved by Government in 2006;
- # Forest Land Information System was set up in 2010;
- # Formulation and implantation of a National Forestry Action Programme is in progress;
- $\,\oplus\,\,$ Sustainable Land Management is already integrated in the National Forest Policy;
- A national water policy is being finalised at Ministry of Energy and Public Utilities;
- $^{\oplus}$ Interim Hazardous Waste Storage Facility at La Chaumière, which is expected to come into operation by 2015;

- # From the 420,000 tons of wastes being generated annually, about 63,000 tons p.a. is effectively diverted (taking into account rejects from composting) from land-filling and sent to the composting plant at La Chaumière;
- The National Development Strategy (NDS) provides the basis for land use planning. It was approved in 2003 and subsequently given legal force through proclamation of section (12) of the Planning and Development Act in 2005;
- Mauritius has made significant progress over the past years to implement its renewable energy and energy efficiency policy and strategy as enshrined in the Long Term Energy Strategy (2009-2025) as hereunder:
 - The Energy Efficiency Act has been enacted in 2011;
 - The Utility Regulatory Authority (URA) Act 2004 has been proclaimed.
 - The Energy Efficiency Management Office is operational since December 2011;
 - The "Observatoire de l'Energie" has been set up in 2011 and provides a national database on energy usage.
 - A certification system for energy auditors and energy managers is being developed;
 - Design Guide for Energy Efficient Buildings less than 500 m² have been developed;
 - Energy Efficiency Building Code has been developed for buildings with a surface area of more than 500 m²;
 - A report on Energy Audit Management Scheme for non-residential Buildings has been prepared;
 - A project for the setting up of a "Framework for Energy Efficiency and Energy Conservation in Industries" has been implemented;
 - Mandatory energy audits to be carried out by large consumers of electricity;
 - Small scale distributed generation has been allowed into CEB's grid since 2011. Capacity of SSDGs under the FIT has been increased to 3 MW (incl. 100 kW for Rodrigues);
 - A Renewable Energy Development Plan is being finalized;
 - Grid-connected photovoltaic plants of a total capacity of 25 MW is being set up;
 - 50,000 street lights are being replaced by low energy bulbs in urban and rural areas;
 - Traffic lights have been replaced by LED;
 - A wind farm of 29.4 MW at Plaines Sophie is expected to be operational in 2014;
 - A Landfill Gas to Energy Plant started operation in 2011 and electricity (2 3 MW) is generated;
 - A policy and guidelines on sustainable buildings and a building rating system have been developed;
 - Rs 150 M are provided in 2012 and 2013 as subsidy for the purchase of solar water heaters:
 - A comprehensive national energy savings programme will be implemented by the EEMO to raise public awareness on energy efficiency and to solicit their collaboration in the national endeavour to make the country energy efficient;

Section III: GAPS AND CONSTRAINTS ENCOUNTERED IN BPOA/MSI IMPLEMENTATION

Despite the tremendous efforts showcased above, national consultations have revealed the following constraints/challenges in implementation:

1) Local level

+ Coordination and monitoring

There is a need for enhanced coordination at local level to assess and monitor national progress on the implementation of the BPoA and MSI issues and also the need to streamline these issues in the Programme Based Budgeting of the concerned Ministry. There is also a need for the implementation process to be coherent with the Economic and Social Transformation Plan (ESTP) process.

Motivation for Sustainable Development Initiatives(SDI)

Efforts to implement SDI have had mixed results. There is need for better understanding of the SDI at all levels and to sustain SDI initiatives including a better mechanism to implement same.

Accessing financial resources

The limited access to financial and technical resources has limited Mauritius in its ability to mobilise the necessary funding and technical expertise to fully implement the BPoA and MSI. External support is required but the difficult global economic situation has impacted on the capacity of SIDS like Mauritius to access financing. Most middle-income SIDS do not have access to appropriate preferential treatment, concessionary financing, sufficient Official Development Assistance flows and other special programmes owing to the lack of formal recognition of SIDS and criteria that do not recognise their unique vulnerabilities. Mauritius therefore remains dependent on expensive financing from the international financial institutions, and thus further increasing its vulnerability.

Research and Development technologies

Further research and development both at the national and regional levels is required to promote sustainable development. Transfer of green technology to alleviate dependence on non-renewable energy is limited and there is much need for up scaling investment in R&D.

2) Regional level

regional coordinating mechanism/organisation

The AIMS region to which Mauritius belongs is too dispersed, has no assigned coordinating mechanism. AIMS region has no mechanism to mobilise resources and monitor the implementation of BPoA and MSI.

3) International level

Both the BPoA and the MSI include a wide range of international support measures to support national level action to address the vulnerability and development needs of SIDS. Beyond these, there are several instruments, conventions, agreements and strategies that also tackle challenges directly related to SIDS vulnerabilities SIDS, including the Convention on Biological Diversity, the Hyogo Framework for Action on disaster risk reduction and the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change. But there still remains an urgent need for scaled-up international measures, in some instances, substantially.

- Climate change remains the greatest challenge, as adverse impacts continue to undermine progress towards development. International actions, particularly by developed countries to stabilise greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere at a level that would ensure the survival of SIDS, remain insufficient.
- International support for adaptation strategies has not been adequately forthcoming to enable SIDS increase their resilience to the negative impacts from climate change. In this respect, international support is needed to ensure sustainable financing initiatives such as green-growth policies and climate change adaptation programmes.
- The economies of SIDS remain highly volatile notably due to their openness and smallness and high dependency on imports with high vulnerability to energy and food price shocks. These combined vulnerabilities have been further exacerbated by the global energy, financial and economic crises.
- No SIDS dedicated and effective response measures, such as financing and technology transfer mechanisms, have been established. In this respect, provision and access to affordable and SIDS-adapted technology and financing would catalyse the greening of SIDS economies.
- The international trading system needs to be crafted to address the special and particular needs of SIDS in a more pragmatic manner.
- Access to multilateral financing is difficult owing to eligibility criteria that do not take into account small populations and small size of projects coupled with burdensome application and monitoring requirements.
- Resources from the international community often do not reflect national priorities and needs and are frequently not directed to the implementation of concrete projects at the national level.

Section IV: NEW AND EMERGING CHALLENGES

In addition to the existing challenges facing SIDS as identified in the BPoA, the MSI and in previous national reports, the following challenges also bear heavily on the socio-economic and sustainable development of SIDS, especially in the AIMS region.

1) Water Resources Management

Water plays a critical role in supporting economic development, public health and environmental protection. The sector is closely tied to others such as tourism, waste (wastewater pollution), energy (distribution, hydropower and supplies for cooling) and fisheries (reflected by the health of inland and coastal fisheries, a direct result of water quality).

For SIDS, being able to meet the growing demands for access to clean potable water is one of the greatest challenges faced by this sector. Climate change poses a significant challenge to the management of water resources in SIDS. The islands' dependency on rainfall leaves them vulnerable to both long-term and short-term changes in rainfall patterns.

Furthermore, significant pressure is placed on existing freshwater systems in SIDS by urbanisation, unsustainable agricultural practices, the demands of tourism and deforestation. These pressures exacerbate environmental conditions and ultimately affect the fragile economies of these islands. As water intrinsically links several sectors, without sufficient water quantity and quality, the development of other sectors will be restricted. For this reason, water resources management should be considered in all stages of planning and development and that it is prioritised at national, region and international levels.

2) Food Security

SIDS have felt the impact of increases in global food prices due to decreased levels of production, droughts or disasters, which have resulted in increased protectionism by food exporting countries. The issue of food security is increasingly on the agenda for SIDS.

Mauritius imports about 75% of its food, amounting to 19% of the country's total imports bill. As a Net-Food Importing Developing Country, Mauritius is particularly vulnerable to the rapidly changing global food system resulting from volatile prices of food commodities, climate change and diversion of food crops to bio-fuels.

It is therefore imperative to increase the country's ability to produce its own food. However, competing demands on the limited land resources, decreasing soil fertility, water scarcity as well as insufficient interest of the young generation in agricultural activities, make this a particularly challenging issue. Policies and actions need to be devised as national, regional and international level to tackle this challenge.

3) Global Economic crises

The global financial and economic crisis has had a significant impact on SIDS, which have experienced increasingly limited access to affordable credit. The existing frameworks for evaluating loan eligibility and assessing interest rates for lending are largely based on Gross Domestic Product (GDP) and do not take into account the specific vulnerabilities of SIDS, depriving SIDS of concessionary financing and much needed assistance.

In this context, the international community is urged to consider the special needs of SIDS especially regarding climate change and disaster risks reduction issues and also SIDS stewardship in sustaining global goods, such as the oceans and marine resources.

4) Migration and Development

Migration is an issue that is of concern to many, if most of the SIDS, both with their nationals abroad and non-SIDS nationals on their soil. In most, if not all cases, the reason for that movement is economic, with those individuals trying to find abroad a lifestyle better than the one they would have in their own country. This is a concern that holds true for all migratory movements worldwide and was taken up during the Global Forum on Migration and Development held in Mauritius in October 2012.

SIDS are therefore under pressure to address high unemployment and underemployment, particularly among the urban youth. There is thus a need to develop a proper framework addressing the interface between migration and development.

Section V: Way Forward & Recommendations

Mauritius re-affirms its commitment to meet the sustainable development goals and priorities in the BPoA and the MSI. The successful implementation of the BPoA and MSI, however, depends both on the commitment of individual governments and on the commitment of development partners to support these goals and assist in the implementation of actions to achieve them, particularly through the provision of financial and technical support. This joint commitment should be accompanied by a more coherent, coordinated and collaborative approach to the sustainable development of SIDS more generally.

New, pragmatic way forward

The last 20 years has shown that progress in the implementation of the BPOA/MSI has not been entirely successful. The High-Level Review of MSI+5 once again recalled the unique and particular vulnerabilities of SIDS and clarified that urgent action was required to address those vulnerabilities. The challenges faced by SIDS and the constraints they face in responding to these challenges cannot be addressed without the support of the UN system and the international community

This situation can be explained by the fact that there is an absence of the definition of the SIDS category. The absence of criteria defining "small and islandness" is the fundamental reasons for which countries falling in that category were not able to gain special treatment with the development organisations or donor countries. Considering the exceptional economic disadvantages faced by most SIDS as a result of their permanent handicaps, the notion of special treatment by virtue of SIDS status is important to genuine SIDS in the multilateral trading system and in the area of development financing. Thus, there is a need to do things differently, to explore new more practical, pragmatic and innovative avenues for SIDS to get special and differential treatment.

Recommendations to be taken forward to the 3^{rd} international conference on SIDS:

A. Coordination at Regional level - SIDS as one voice:

AIMS should be endowed with a regional organisation that can truly support and lead the implementation of the AIMS-SIDS programmes in areas such as the Climate Change adaptation, by coordinating the development of adapted technologies, and skills to cope with the fast changing scenarios and models of development in SIDS.

Furthermore, new models of partnerships between private and public sectors, between SIDS and SIDS, between the AIMS/CARIBBEAN/PACIFIC should be enhanced and formalised to enable exchange of proven experiences for the sustainable development of SIDS.

B. Climate Change, Disaster Risk Reduction & Management and Financing for Sustainable Development:

Priorities for implementation are the following:

- Enhance resilience of the Republic of Mauritius in areas related to climate risk management as well as to improve climate prediction ability through the development of national capacities of SIDS;
- 2) Ensure the protection of coastal areas from inundation due to sea level rise;
- 3) Address holistically the relocation of populations from low lying vulnerable areas;
- 4) Develop the SIDS Strategy for Disaster Reduction to contribute to the attainment of sustainable development and poverty eradication by facilitating the integration of disaster risk reduction into development. The Strategy should have the following objectives:
 - a) Increase political commitment to disaster risk reduction
 - b) Improve identification and assessment of disaster risk
 - c) Enhance knowledge management for disaster risk reduction
 - d) Increase public awareness of disaster risk reduction
 - e) Improve governance of disaster risk reduction institutions
 - f) Integrate disaster risk reduction into emergency response management.

Once agreed and adopted, this strategy should be promoted at the forthcoming World Conference on Disaster Reduction to be held in 2015 in Japan.

C. Energy:

To achieve the Mauritian vision of 35% of renewable energy by 2025, the international support to SIDS including through North-South, South-South, SIDS-SIDS and triangular cooperation, aimed at reducing fossil fuel dependency and increasing availability of electric power services, by using more efficient technologies and renewable energy sources needs to be highlighted. Support should be provided to enhance regional and SIDS-SIDS cooperation for research and technological development on SIDS appropriate renewable energy and energy efficiency technologies.

- A hybrid financing mechanism comprising concessionary loans/grants should be made available to SIDS for the implementation of Renewable Energy (RE) projects; SIDS can promote the creation of a pool of certified energy auditors who would be allowed to work in any SIDS;
- 2. A certification body and an accreditation body for all SIDS Energy Auditors can be set up in one of the SIDS' countries, probably on a regional basis;
- 3. SIDS should publish the best practices in RE and Energy Efficiency (EE) in each country on a bi-annual basis;
- 4. Access to efficient technologies such as LED/Solar for lighting can be improved if the cost of these technologies can be made affordable for SIDS;
- 5. SIDS can harmonize the standards of the labels for household appliances, so as to promote efficient appliances only;
- One of the SIDS Universities can provide advanced training for graduates in the field on RE & EE;
- 7. An international carbon financing mechanism should be set up to allow SIDS to decarbonize their energy sectors as much as possible;

- 8. Smart grid technology development to be accelerated to allow adoption in SIDS for greater penetration of RE; development partners can help to allow the development of a pilot smart grid in one of the SIDS;
- 9. To develop an internationally agreed regulatory framework for renewable energy such as a WTO Sustainable Energy Trade Agreement.11

D. Development of an Ocean Economy / Coastal and Marine resources:

The ocean economy will open up untold opportunities such as on the economic front, the Ocean State could be a driver for a foray of new sectors such as Ocean for Energy; Ocean for Food; Ocean for Water; Ocean for Minerals; Ocean for Leisure; Ocean for Health as well as efficient fisheries and for innovation-driven maritime research and exploration.

- 1. Setting up of a dedicated Regional Oceanographic Centre;
- 2. Development of Land Based Ocean Industry including for the generation of renewable energy to replace fossil fuel:
- 3. Increase means and resources at the regional level for research and implementation of plans and strategies on coastal zone management including erosion processes. In this respect it is also important to strengthen the Regional Fisheries Management Organisations.
- 4. Provide assistance to ensure domestic fishing and related industries of SIDS accounts for a greater share of the benefit than is currently realised of the total catch and value, in particular for highly migratory stocks harvested within the EEZs of SIDS and within proximate geographical areas including high seas, as appropriate.
- 5. Eliminate subsidies that contribute to illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing and to over capacity while completing the efforts undertaken at the World Trade Organisation to clarify and improve its disciplines on fisheries subsidies. There is also need for a carve out for subsidies for SIDS to develop its fishing capacity and fish processing plants.

E. Management of Waste:

Waste management in SIDS, is a growing problem because of population growth, urbanisation, changing consumption patterns and the large numbers of tourists. In this context the following needs to be addressed with the support of the International Community:

- Support effective planning and implementation of waste management practices Establish technical cooperation programmes to enable the creation and the strengthening of regional mechanisms to protect the oceans and coastal areas from ship-generated waste and oil spills, among others.
- 3. Setting up of a regional infrastructure for the treatment and disposal of hazardous waste.

F. Trade:

Given the vulnerability of SIDS and their disadvantage with regard to traditional markets, trade policy is instrumental in the developing and strengthening of SIDS resilience. It is therefore recommended to:

- 1. Establish a mechanism to promote intra SIDS movement of goods, capital and professional services with flexible rules of origin.
- 2. Non Tariff Measures (NTMs) present a challenge to small economies in their efforts to compete in foreign markets. Though many NTMs are concerned with justifiable health and related requirements, and others, can be explained as important for standard setting, the increasing number and rising stringency of these standards can be barriers to trade. It is also recommended that the impact of Non Tariff Measures on Small economies be effectively addressed. $^{\mathrm{iii}}$

G. Migration and Development:

Climate Change is already impacting and will impact further on migration, both within a country and between countries. Proactive planning and financing are crucial and in this context, financing and support from international financing agencies would be required to fast-track the regional integration programme with its SIDS counterparts, particularly in the following:

- The Accelerated Program for Economic Integration (APEI) seeks to enhance regional capacity building, by facilitating the export of services and talents. The main objectives of the APEI are to address the poor allocation and mismatch of skills across national borders, to provide a boost to the flow of foreign investment and the export of services and to foster faster economic integration through enhanced growth and employment opportunities.
- 2. The Regional Multi-disciplinary Centre of Excellence (RMCE) aims to improve the capacity for policy making in the Eastern and Southern African region, as well as the small states network, with an emphasis on regional integration. The strategy is based on improving macroeconomic management, trade and transit, cross-border finance and business development and investment. The emphasis is on peer learning and peer support and benchmarking of good performers and adoption of best practices.

Due to its specificities, the RMCE and the APEI complement the initiatives of AFS and ATI. As at date through the PBB 2013-2015, Mauritius has contributed Rs 22 M to RMCE initiatives, with Rs 10 M earmarked for 2014 and Rs 7 M for 2015. To conduct a full-fledge programme under RMCE, we would require at least USD 1 million annually from the international community. For APEI, as at date, Mauritius has secured financial assistance to the tune of USD 3.6 M over three years from World Bank for movement of professionals. However, additional funds are needed to address other pillars under APEI.

H. Setting up of regional /global monitoring system:

The establishment of a robust global monitoring system can help to strengthen accountability at all levels and to ensure adequate and timely analysis of the implementation of the BPoA, MSI and Samoa objectives/outcomes. The monitoring framework should be based on existing regional and national monitoring frameworks. At the same time, the monitoring framework should also fully utilise readily available international data on vulnerabilities, development needs and policy responses relevant for SIDS, including the relevant indicators used in the economic vulnerability index developed by the UN Committee for Development Policy. Adequate resources would be required.

Section VI: POST-2015 UN DEVELOPMENT AGENDA

The outcome of the Samoa meeting needs to be seen as converging with the Post-2015 UN Development Agenda, the Rio +20 process and the proposed Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). Accordingly, the process initiated for the preparation of the SIDS conference should:

- Continue to strengthen national partnerships between governments, private sector, civil society organisations, women, trade unionists, non-governmental organizations, the elderly and the youth in order for the holistic implementation of the goals to be adopted at the Samoa meeting to be fully integrated into the development policies at national and regional levels:
- Encourage the mainstreaming of the concept of Education and culture for Sustainable Development across the globe;
- Indicate in its national post 2015 Development Agenda report, the current MDGs health goals need to be clustered into one goal entitled 'Universal Health Coverage' which would provide a multi-sectoral approach with a view to reducing health inequities. The rapid spread of Non-Communicable Diseases compels urgent global action for the prevention and treatment of these diseases. Universal Health Coverage would imply that people have access to all health services such as Maternal and Child Health, Family Planning, Sexual and Reproductive Health Education, Prevention of and Treatment for Substance Abuse, Occupational and other health hazards, Mental Health, HIV/AIDS, malaria and other emerging/re-emerging diseases;
- Support and recommend the building of resilience and addressing the issue of population dynamics in a future post 2015 international development goals;
- Coordinate through the Delivery As One umbrella a system-wide coherence which will lead to a more coordinated and structured approach at national, regional and international levels;
- Adopt a pragmatic approach with regard to the question of special treatment for financial and technical assistance for SIDS. The much stretched diplomatic and financial resources of SIDS and the generally limited interest shown toward SIDS and their concerns by the international community have added to the inevitable inertia in the international bureaucracy and are likely to make the realisation of the above recommendations a long process. In this context, there is a need for SIDS to gain special recognition within the UN system

Section VII: PARTNERSHIPS FOR SIDS

- The vision of the Government is to promote Mauritius as a Knowledge Hub, the Tertiary Education Sector is being internationalized and more and more international students are now choosing Mauritius for their higher education.
- Mauritius is presently offering 50 scholarships to students from African countries of the African Union, for undergraduate programs and 50 scholarships for post-graduate programs offered on a Distance Learning Mode by the Open University of Mauritius to Commonwealth Countries.
- The GEF Western Indian Ocean Marine Highway Development and Coastal and Marine Contamination Prevention Project is an excellent example of a regional project with 8 countries 6 to bring-up to the same standard and level of preparedness for oil spill, sharing of resources and putting in place a regional collective, pro-active and reactive plan. This project is being replicated in other regions. Similar programs should be undertaken to establish technical cooperation programmes to support SIDS' development of appropriate systems for recycling, waste minimization and treatment, reuse and management; establish and strengthen systems and networks for the dissemination of information on appropriate environmentally sound technologies.

⁶ Comoros, France (Reunion Island), Kenya, Madagascar, Mauritius, Mozambique, Seychelles, South Africa and Tanzania.

Section VIII: CONCLUSION

There are many challenges and obstacles facing Small Island Developing States in reconciling economic and social development and building their resilience in a more sustainable development manner. The various obstacles should be identified and recognized; international cooperation measures should be taken to enable and support the sustainable development efforts. Care should be taken to ensure that the sustainable development concept is well understood to address not only the negative effects of climate change, but to also include the social, equity and development dimensions, including the international provision of finance and technology.

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius is convinced that solidarity amongst SIDS is of paramount importance to successfully address SIDS issues, with international support.

International collaboration has never meant so much in this era of globalization and transboundary challenges.

- i. Building on progress reports already prepared for the MSI+5 and Rio+20, what is the progress made to date and gaps limiting implementation of the BPoA and MSI, that the country wishes to highlight through the SIDS conference preparatory process?
- ii. What progress has been made since 1992 to strengthen the national institutional framework in terms of coordination between sectors and the integration of the 3 pillar of sustainable development? How well are sustainable development principles integrated and mainstreamed in national development planning?
- iii. What new and emerging challenges are likely to affect the prospects for sustainable development in the coming decade? Do the new and emerging challenges pose a fundamental risk to the prospects of economic growth and development in your country? What new and emerging challenges should the SIDS Conference in 2014 enact upon?
- iv. What kind of new and/or additional practical and pragmatic actions are needed to address identified gaps in implementation?
- v. What is the level of awareness at the country level of MDGs, Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and the post-2015 development agenda? What would be your country priorities in elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda?
- vi. How could such identified challenges and opportunities be addressed through collaborative partnerships with the international community? What kind of partnerships have worked or not worked and why? What changes are needed, if any, in how partnerships are forged in the future, in order to strengthen in the way that help address SIDS address the identified challenges and opportunities?
- vii. What is the accountability mechanisms used to monitor performance? What can be done to strengthen national data and information systems, national account systems, national indicators for development, and frameworks for monitoring and evaluation?
- viii. With an eye toward the "concise, focused, forward-looking and action-oriented political document" called for in paragraph 10 of the modalities resolution (A/RES/67/207), what are the key priorities areas (up to five) that your country would like to see addressed, in the national preparations and beyond? The responses here could be most constructive if conceived in terms of key words or short phrases rather than long descriptive paragraphs.

i The guiding questions are the following ii The UN has declared 2012 as the International Year of Sustainable Energy for all and its Advisory Group on Energy and Climate Change has recommended universal access and a 40 per cent increase in energy efficiency in the next 20 years. Cutting energy related emissions in half by 2050 would require decarbonisation of the power sector. To maintain the same level of output, fossil fuel would need to be offset by sustainable energy, the largest increase, according to the World Bank's World Development Report (2010)t, would have to come from renewable energy sources. The World Bank report illustrates the enormous magnitude of the effort to increase the share of low carbon energy to 30-40 per cent by 2050 from present levels of 13 percent. This would imply over the next 40 years deploying annually an additional 17000 wind turbines, 215 million square metres of solar photovoltaic panels, 80 concentrated solar power plants. Domestic Sustainable Energy policies as well as trade policies can both create barriers for supply chain optimisation in the sustainable energy sector. Hence policies that prevent or constrain supply chain optimisation increase costs and consequently process for sustainable energy goods and services. Non tariff trade related barriers to SEGS are diverse. They can range from domestic support measures to export restrictions on critical raw materials as well as restrictions on the modes by which services are supplied across borders. The use of certain types of barriers can be addressed through existing WTO rules or potentially as part of the Doha round of negotiations. However, while WTO rules and disciplines could be evoked in certain cases, they are often ambiguous as far as the energy sector is concerned. It is thus worthwhile to consider a fresh approach that takes a holistic and integrated view of the sustainable energy sector while simultaneously tackling a variety of market and trade related barriers. A Sustainable Energy Trade Agreement could be a way of bringing together countries that are committed to addressing climate change and longer term energy security while maintaining open markets

The WTO's World Trade Report of 2012 dealt quite extensively with the issue, but it did not identify small economies as a group. However, several of its conclusions point to the fact or to the implication that small economies are more adversely affected by NTMs than several other groupings. The requested study helps to supplement the important work already conducted by the WTO, and to focus on the issue from a small economy perspective. Studies by the World Bank in collaboration with ITC (Non Tariff measures- A Fresh look at Trade Policy ed. O Cadot and M. Malouche. World Bank. CEPR, 2012) also show that many NTMs adversely affect the costs of contesting foreign markets by many developing countries. They introduce procedural requirements which add to costs at borders, and sometimes add numerous regulations which sometimes act as barriers to entry. While many product standards and technical regulations are quite reasonable, they can act as trade inhibitors. They can make compliance costs generally higher and can keep small and medium sized enterprises out of international trade. Indeed developing country markets are increasingly constrained by stringent sanitary requirements that are costly to implement. The level of stringency is constantly being raised.

Studies conducted by the World Bank include among NTMs, not only SPS measures but note that NTMs can include several other measures such as quotas, voluntary export restraint, non automatic authorizations, price and quality constraints, anti-dumping safeguards, administrative pricing, duties and trade defensive policies, and pre-shipment inspection. In some cases implementation of these measures require retooling, increased or enhanced product design and testing and confirmation systems, so that productive processes become more expensive and sometimes need to be outsourced. Prima facie indications are that some measures impact more adversely on small economies, but a study on the topic would be required in order to substantiate this position.

The 2012 Report of the WTO, for example, speaks of evidence that TBT/SPS measures have a stronger effect on small rather than large firms (p 10 & p 147). Since small economies are more likely to have mostly small firms, it is useful to explore the extent to which this observation applies to SVEs.

Also, it notes that TBT/SPS measures have prevalently positive effects for more technologically advanced sectors, but negative effects on trade in fresh and processed foods. (p 10). Small economies tend to have sectors which produce fresh and processed foods and less so, technologically advanced sectors.

The Report also suggests that specific provisions in l trading arrangements appear to follow a hub and spoke structure, with the larger partner representing the hub to whose standards the spokes will confirm. Small economies would be considered the spokes in these arrangements. This concept is also worth exploring as it applies to small economies.

The Report notes that when retailers have buying power, private sector food safety standards can become "de facto" barriers to market entry for certain producers. This is particularly the case for developing countries which act as "standard takers" rather than standard makers (p 86). It would seem that small economies, because of their lack of market power, are more easily pushed into being standard takers than most other countries. It would be useful to further examine this observation.

The ITC business surveys also find greater use of TBT/SPS measures by developed countries, than developing countries. Also, it is not mentioned where small economies stand relative to other developing economies in terms of the use of NTMs. (p 115). It is assumed that SVEs as a group also use TBTs and SPSs less than developed countries. This could be usefully confirmed.

The report notes that agricultural products are disproportionately affected by NTMs, and notes further that the evidence that agricultural products are disproportionately affected by non-tariff measures relative to manufacturing is echoed in the ITC business surveys. It is noted that NTMs in agriculture appear to be more restrictive than NTMs in manufacturing (p136). Small economies may well be in the category of exporting more agricultural than manufacturing goods and therefore would fall into the category of having to face more restrictive NTMs. (p117). It would be instructive to examine whether this is in fact the case.

The report also found that TBT/ SPS measures had a negative effect on export market diversification of the countries (i.e. in the product variety of exports to that market). Developed countries tended to have a greater range of TBTs. It suggests that developing countries export diversification becomes more restricted as a result of the TBTs of developed countries, but the study does not mention small economies. The Report also notes that where TBTs/SPS measures have a negative effect, the impact tends to be greater for developing country exports (p153). It would be useful to determine whether it is even more onerous for small economies.

Written Ministerial Statement

8 July 2013

Update on the British Indian Ocean Territory Policy Review

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mark Simmonds): On 20 December last year my Right Hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced that we would take stock of our policy on the resettlement of the British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT). I wish to update the House on this process.

This Government has expressed its regret about the way resettlement of BIOT was carried out in the late 1960s and early 1970s. We do not seek to justify those actions or excuse the conduct of an earlier generation. What happened was clearly wrong, which is why substantial compensation was rightly paid. Both the British courts and the European Court of Human Rights have confirmed that compensation has been paid in full and final settlement.

Decisions about the future of the British Indian Ocean Territory are more difficult. Successive British Governments have consistently opposed resettlement of the islands - on the grounds of both defence and feasibility.

The Government must be honest about these challenges and concerns. Long-term settlement risks being both precarious and costly. The outer islands, which have been uninhabited for 40 years, are low-lying and lack all basic facilities and infrastructure. The cost and practicalities of providing the levels of infrastructure and public services appropriate for a twenty-first century British society are likely to be significant and present a heavy ongoing contingent liability for the UK tax-payer.

However, the Government recognises the strength of feeling on this issue, and the fact that others believe that the resettlement of BIOT can be done more easily than we have previously assessed. We believe that our policy should be determined by the possibilities of what is practicable.

I am therefore announcing to the House the Government's intention to commission a new feasibility study into the resettlement of BIOT.

Whilst we believe that there remain fundamental challenges to resettlement, we are resolved to explore these in partnership with all those with an interest in the future of BIOT. We are determined that this review will be as fair, transparent and inclusive as possible, so that all the facts and factors affecting the issue of resettlement can be shared and assessed clearly.

As part of the process, officials are meeting with a wide range of interested parties, including Chagossian communities in Mauritius, the UK and in the Seychelles. We know that there are strong views and expertise within the House and we welcome contributions from all.

The results of these consultations will inform directly the detailed shape of the new study. Though this will be a study commissioned by the Government, we will ensure that independent views from all interested parties will be used when considering how we take the study forward. Our intention is to make the remit of the study of resettlement as broad as possible, so that all the relevant issues - practical, financial, legal, environmental, and defence matters - are given full and proper consideration.

It is important that we take this forward carefully. The last feasibility study 10 years ago took eighteen months. The new study is unlikely to be concluded any more quickly. I will update the House once the initial consultation has been concluded.

REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS

MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, REGIONAL INTEGRATION AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE

No. 26/2014 (1197/28)

28 March 2014

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and International Trade of the Republic of Mauritius presents its compliments to the Embassy of the United States of America and has the honour to state as follows:

As the Government of the United States of America is aware, the Republic of Mauritius is currently involved in proceedings against the United Kingdom in an arbitration under Annex VII to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, in connection with the United Kingdom's decision in 2010 to declare a 'marine protected area' around the Chagos Archipelago. That case is due to be heard in April and May 2014.

In light of the imminent hearing of the Republic of Mauritius' claim, the Government of the Republic of Mauritius would like to take this opportunity to assure the Government of the United States of America that, as the Republic of Mauritius has previously made clear, it has no objection to the United States of America retaining the military base on Diego Garcia to meet prevailing security needs.

In the event that the Republic of Mauritius prevails in its claim against the United Kingdom, it does not foresee any impact on its relations with the United States of America, or on the ability of the United States of America to retain the military base on Diego Garcia.

The Government of the Republic of Mauritius wishes to confirm that it will be keen to work with the Government of the United States of America to ensure the continued use of the Diego Garcia military base, and that this situation will not be affected by the award of the Arbitral Tribunal.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Regional Integration and Trade of the Republic of Mauritius avails itself of this opportunity to represent the source of the United States of America the assurances of its highest confideration.

Embassy of the United States of America 4th Floor, Rogers House President John Kennedy Street P.O. Box 544 Port Louis

PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION

ARBITRATION UNDER ANNEX VII OF THE 1982 UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION ON THE LAW OF THE SEA

In the Matter of Arbitration Between:

THE REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS,

and

THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND

PCA Reference MU-UK

Volume 1

HEARING ON JURISDICTION AND THE MERITS

Tuesday, April 22, 2014

Pera Palace Hotel Mesrutiyet Cad. No: 52 Tepebasi, Beyoglu Conference Room Galata II & III 34430, Istanbul-Turkey

The hearing in the above-entitled matter convened at 2:30 p.m. before:

PROFESSOR IVAN SHEARER, Presiding Arbitrator

SIR CHRISTOPHER GREENWOOD, CMG, QC, Arbitrator

JUDGE ALBERT J. HOFFMANN, Arbitrator

JUDGE JAMES KATEKA, Arbitrator

JUDGE RÜDIGER WOLFRUM, Arbitrator

Permanent Court of Arbitration:

MR. BROOKS W. DALY Registrar MR. GARTH L. SCHOFIELD PCA Legal Counsel MS. FIONA POON PCA Legal Counsel

Court Reporter:

MR. DAVID A. KASDAN, RDR-CRR Certified Realtime Reporter (CRR) Registered Diplomate Reporter (RDR) Worldwide Reporting, LLP 529 14th Street, S.E. Washington, D.C. 20003 +001 202 544 1903 info@wwreporting.com

- real undertakings to Mauritius in relation to fishing, mineral or other rights but that if it did they had no legal consequences;
- that actually the "MPA" wasn't really established to protect "the environment, flora and fauna of the islands", as the UK said at Paragraph 3.3 of its Counter-Memorial, and it isn't really the "major step forward" proclaimed by Mr. Miliband, but merely a repackaging;
- that the "MPA" is somehow nevertheless a genuine attempt to protect the biodiversity of the marine environment, even though there are no regulations, no budget, and (a single vessel to patrol an area the size of France);
- that in November 2009 there was no commitment from Gordon Brown to Prime Minister Ramgoolam to put the MPA "on hold";
- that the various provisions of UNCLOS one thinks of Article 2(3) don't actually create any obligations, all they are intended to do is describe the situation;
- that the creation of the "MPA" doesn't engage a single provision of UNCLOS, although it covers half a million square kilometres of ocean;
- that even if it does, there is not a single provision of UNCLOS over which the Tribunal has jurisdiction; and, in fact, to cut to the chase;

18

19 20

21

22

23

24

25

- that Mauritius is not entitled to anything under UNCLOS in relation to this area or its own territory.
 - 34. Mr. President, members of the Tribunal, you could, I suppose, suspend disbelief, in relation to all of these matters, you could ignore the historical record, you could put aside all of the evidence, you could interpret the 1982 Convention and its Part XV into a completely meaningless text. That would, of course, have the great merit for the United Kingdom of allowing you to preserve the colonial status quo, an outcome which the United Kingdom tells you, was the intentions of the drafters of this Convention. We say you cannot do any of those things, and that the reading of the United Kingdom pleading leaves the impression of living in a

Mr. Whomersley first, or Mr. Grieve?

MR. WHOMERSLEY: Mr. Grieve.

PRESIDENT SHEARER: Thank you very much.

SPEECH BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL: 22 APRIL 2014

MAURITIUS v. THE UNITED KINGDOM ARBITRATION

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal, the Delegation of Mauritius,

I would like first of all to say how honoured I am to be speaking in front of this distinguished Tribunal and in such pleasant surroundings. It is a pleasure to be here in Istanbul, but particularly here in the Pera Palace Hotel.

I would also like to thank the Permanent Court of Arbitration and its staff for all their hard work in arranging the hearing to date, and I have no doubt that, based on their excellent performance so far, we can expect that the next two and a half weeks should run very smoothly.

Mr. President, as Attorney General of England and Wales, I am here to speak to you this afternoon on behalf of the United Kingdom. From tomorrow, I will hand over to my colleagues to take forward the presentation of the United Kingdom's case. But the Government of the United Kingdom felt that it was right, as a way of demonstrating the importance which we attach to the case, that I should make the opening statement on behalf of my country.

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal, I wish to make five key points on behalf of the United Kingdom in this opening speech. First, I would like to talk about the United Kingdom's approach towards its relations with Mauritius both generally and on the question of the British Indian Ocean Territory. My next point will concern the history of Mauritian interest in British Indian Ocean Territory. Thirdly, I shall explain the position of the Government of the United Kingdom on a matter which, while not part of this case, is clearly part of the background, namely the possible resettlement of the Territory. Fourthly, I want to address the crucial matter of your jurisdiction to deal with the case, particularly insofar as it concerns the issue of sovereignty,

4 5

6 7 8

9

10 11

12 13

14

15

16

17 18

19 20

21

22

23 24

25

which has been clearly raised both in the pleadings but also in the opening speeches, which you've heard before you. I will then say a few words about the Marine Protected Area around the Territory.

Finally, I will try to summarise my key legal submissions to be made to you by my learned colleagues on behalf of the United Kingdom during the course of the hearing as it

So, Mr. President, let me begin by saying that the United Kingdom greatly values its relationship with Mauritius, and I think I can venture to say that, apart from the issue of the British Indian Ocean Territory, relations between the two Governments are excellent and indeed cordial. Moreover, the British Government have always expressed a willingness to cooperate closely with Mauritius over the issue of the British Indian Ocean Territory. We have no doubts about our sovereignty over the Territory, but we have always been clear that the differences between us should not present any obstacle to practical cooperation on matters of common interest between the UK and Mauritius. In particular, we are very willing to talk further to Mauritius about the practical implementation of the Marine Protected Area. This includes a willingness on our part to listen to any points that Mauritius might wish to make about the implementation of the MPA. Indeed my colleague, Mr. Mark Simmonds, one of the Ministers in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, wrote to Mr. Boolell, the Foreign Minister of Mauritius, only last month asking for input from Mauritius on our consideration of improvements to the current framework for managing the Marine Protected Area. I regret to say that Mr. Boolell has declined this invitation. Nevertheless, I am happy to repeat today the assurances about the United Kingdom's willingness to cooperate, which have been made on a number of occasions to our Mauritian colleagues.

And I have obviously noted - and I will come back to this in a moment - the way in which opening its case, it highlighted that in another area of sovereignty dispute with the French with an engagement with another Government against which it has a sovereignty claim in relation to how to manage fisheries and, I think a, if at all possible, Marine Protected Area, although I think in reality if one looks at such documents no such area has yet come into being.

over the island of Tromelin, that the Mauritian Government appears to have been very content

Let me also add that the British Government have always tried to engage with Mauritius in as cooperative manner as possible, without standing on the legal niceties. In many respects we have gone far beyond what any legal obligations would require. I do hope and submit to this Tribunal that we will not be penalised for doing this by suggesting that the result of such action is that we have come under further legal obligations. I say that because in listening very carefully to what Mr. Sands had to say in his opening, it seemed to me that that was at least one of the main thrusts of his argument - that because the United Kingdom had been willing to engage and involve Mauritius in the way in which the Chagos Archipelago and the BIOT was run, that therefore in some way it had shed some essential part of its sovereignty in the process. If the Tribunal did so hold, it would, we submit, discourage States from seeking practical ways to cooperate while leaving aside their legal differences.

Secondly, Mr. President, I think it is important to note that, although Mauritius became independent in 1968, it was not until twelve years later that they first made a claim to the sovereignty of the Territory. It was not until a change of Government in Mauritius in 1982 that Mauritian law was amended to lay a formal claim to British Indian Ocean Territory. Although they sought to explain away this delay, their reasons are frankly unconvincing. The fact is that British Indian Ocean Territory has never been part of the colony of Mauritius – it had been a dependency and ruled by the Governor of Mauritius as a matter of administrative convenience. Perhaps, Mr. President, worth bearing in mind, that we are talking here of a large group of islands which were ceded by the French to the United Kingdom in 1814. Much play was made about maintaining integrity in terms of decolonization, but it is perhaps worth pointing out that those Territories currently constitute two sovereign States: Seychelles and Mauritius; the BIOT, to which Mauritius lays claim and, as we've also heard, the island of Tromelin, which currently is under French sovereignty but to which Mauritius also makes a claim.

And although what was said about British Ocean Territory in the mid-1960s, in the lead-up to Mauritius independence has loomed large in this arbitration, it is also right, I would submit, to point out that it is only with the benefit of hindsight that this has appeared to be a key issue. In fact at the time, there were far more important issues to be considered, most noticeably in how minority rights would be protected in the Constitution, and arrangements about dealing with internal and external threats to Mauritius were met, and that's quite apparent when one looks at the documents that were generated at the time and which appear in your bundles. And finally, I would also say this on this point, it's right to point out that the United Kingdom made clear to the United Nations in 1965 that the islands were attached to Mauritius purely as a matter of administrative convenience; so the suggestion that was made in the opening on behalf of the Government of Mauritius by Mr. Sands that in some way this is a recent concoction by the United Kingdom Government to justify something which they had not previously said is manifestly wrong.

1

2

3

4 5

6

7

8

9

10 11

12 13

14

15

16 17

18

19 20

21

22

23

24

25

Thirdly, Mr. President and Members of the Tribunal, you will have read in the submissions by Mauritius, and quite possibly in the newspapers, about those who lived in the British Indian Ocean Territory prior to 1973. Now, I have to say I was a little startled to hear what Mr. Sands had to say on this point because I can only repeat what the British Government has said on a number of occasions in the past. That is, that we regret very much the circumstances in which they were removed from the islands and recognise that what was done then should not have happened. A substantial sum in compensation was paid to the former inhabitants in the 1980s – a point that was recognised by the European Court of Human Rights in their recent decision. When in Opposition, the political party of which I'm a member said that we would look again at our current policy for BIOT. When we first came into Government, we were constrained by the proceedings in the European Court of Human Rights. But immediately after those proceedings were concluded, my colleague, the Foreign Secretary, announced that we would be looking again at the question of the United Kingdom's policy towards BIOT. As part of that review we are looking again at the question of resettlement. And we hope to be able to reach conclusions in the early part of next year in respect of that. I say all this so that, Mr. President, you and the Members of the Tribunal can be fully informed on the position. It is clear that these issues are not, in fact, relevant to the questions that you will have to address in this claim that has been brought before you. But I think it is important that I put the position of the British Government on these questions on the record. And also I hope to dispel a suggestion that British Government has never expressed any regret in the matter, because it has done so repeatedly.

My fourth point concerns the prospect which Mauritian colleagues have alluringly presented to you, namely that you should be able to decide upon the sovereignty of the British Indian Ocean Territory. As I have said, we are confident of our own sovereignty. But the dispute settlement procedures set out in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which are the ones you have to apply in these proceedings, cannot be used to test the issue through a judicial procedure. On the contrary, I am clear and would submit that it would be dangerous – and I use the word 'dangerous' advisedly – if you were to seek to go down that route. It is clear that the States Parties to the Convention did not intend, when they became a party to it, to confer upon the courts and tribunals referred to in the Convention a general and very wide power to adjudicate upon any dispute about the sovereignty over land territory that happened to have a coast. Mauritius is in effect asking this Tribunal to reach a decision on jurisdiction that would be seen to be perverse. We have no doubt at all that for the Tribunal to seek to apply such a wide ranging jurisdiction would be quite wrong and would call into question the whole system of dispute settlement under the Convention, and with it, the Convention itself. I speak to you bluntly about this because we perceive these to be very serious issues, and it is only right that I should draw your attention to them.

Next, Mr. President, I want to explain to you the Government's attitude towards the establishment of marine protected areas. As the Members of the Tribunal will know, the internationally agreed target is that ten per cent of the world's oceans should be declared as marine protected areas by 2020. In fact, and frankly regrettably, it looks as if this target is not going to be met. But the United Kingdom Government has made it clear that it is keen to do what it can to pursue that objective. Indeed, the Marine Protected Areas around the British Indian Ocean Territory, together with that around another UK territory, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands, are two of the largest marine protected areas in the world. We are proud of the fact that two British territories have marine protected areas around them, and of the contribution they are making to the global public good. I need hardly say therefore that we would greet with considerable alarm any decision by this Tribunal which casts doubt upon the validity of the declarations of marine protected areas, either in general, or around territories where third states may claim sovereignty. We are committed to furthering biodiversity of the oceans, and we believe that one significant way of doing this is through the establishment of marine protected areas.

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal, it is not understating the case to say that the world's oceans are in peril; indeed, that is the term used by various United Nations agencies.²⁹ The UN Secretary-General, Ban Ki-Moon, in his Oceans Compact initiative launched in August 2012 to address ocean health and governance, observed that: "[h]umans ... have put the oceans under risk of irreversible damage by over-fishing, climate change and ocean acidification (from

²⁹ The interagency Report prepared by UNESCO, the IMO, the FAO and UN Development Programme for the 2012 Rio+20 UN Conference on Sustainable Development, "A Blueprint for Ocean and Coastal Sustainability", 2011 ("A Blueprint for Ocean and Coastal Sustainability"), p. 4, http://www.unesco.org/new/fileadmin/MULTIMEDIA/HQ/SC/pdf/interagency blue paper ocean r ioPlus20.pdf

2

3

4

5 6

7 8

9

10

11

12 13

14

15

16 17

absorbed carbon emissions), increasing pollution, unsustainable coastal area development, and unwanted impacts from resource extraction, resulting in loss of biodiversity, decreased abundance of species, damage to habitats and loss of ecological functions".30

The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation said in its 2012 Report on the State of the World's Fisheries that the "state of world marine fisheries is worsening". According to its figures, 87.3 percent of the world's fish stocks are either over-exploited, requiring strict management plans to restore their full and sustainable productivity, or are very close to their maximum sustainable production, requiring effective management to avoid decline.31

According to UNESCO and others, 60% of the world's major marine ecosystems that underpin livelihoods have been degraded or are being used unsustainably³².

And that has a direct impact on the livelihoods and food security of millions, including in particular Low Income Food Deficit Countries, many of which lie in and around the Indian Ocean.

According to 2012 UN figures, around 40 per cent of the world's coral reefs have been lost due to human impacts or are degraded³³. The 2008 Status of the World's Coral Reefs Report gives a figure of around 34%, with another 20% under threat in 20-40 years³⁴. And

^{30 &}quot;The Oceans Compact: Healthy Oceans for Prosperity - An Initiative of the United Nations Secretary-General", July 2012, p. 2, http://www.un.org/depts/los/ocean_compact/SGs%20OCEAN%20COMPACT%202012-EN-low%

²⁰res.pdf
31 The State of World Fisheries and Aquaculture 2012, p. 11, http://www.fao.org/docrep/016/i2727e/i2727e00.htm

³² UNESCO website, "Facts and figures on marine biodiversity", http://www.unesco.org/new/en/natural-sciences/ioc-oceans/priority-areas/rio-20-ocean/blueprint-f or-the-future-we-want/marine-biodiversity/facts-and-figures-on-marine-biodiversity/other estimates are more pessimistic, suggesting the global coral reef ecosystem is on a trajectory to collapse within a human generation³⁵.

³ A Blueprint for Ocean and Coastal Sustainability, above n. 1, p. 14.

³⁴ Koldeway et al, "Potential benefits to fisheries and biodiversity of the Chagos Archipelago/British Indian Ocean Territory as a no-take marine reserve", Marine Pollution Bulletin (2010), vol. 60, p. 1906, UKR, Annex 63, at p. 7 (internal page numbering of version in Annex 63), citing Global Coral Reef Monitoring Network, Wilkinson ed., "Status of Coral Reefs of the World 2008".

Now, Mr. President, I focus on coral reefs because these are the nurseries of tropical coastal fish stocks and a storehouse of biodiversity. Without them, as one expert has put it, "What we will be left with is an algal-dominated hard ocean bottom... with lots of microbial life soaking up the sun's energy by photosynthesis, few fish but lots of jellyfish grazing on the microbes. It will be slimy and look a lot like the ecosystems of the Precambrian era, which ended more than 500 million years ago".36 And all of that is particularly true of the Indian Ocean, which has experienced massive fisheries exploitation since 1950. As a result, Indian Ocean reef fisheries are grossly overexploited³⁷, as is the yellowfin tuna fishery³⁸. 90% of the sharks are gone³⁹. And they are regarded as being great indices of the overall health of the ecosystem. Many representative Indian Ocean ecosystems have been badly damaged⁴⁰ in the "decades of destruction" since the 1970s caused by huge increases in population and pollution, increasing overfishing, and, more recently, the impact of climate change⁴¹. The seas around three-quarters of Indian Ocean islands and the Ocean rim have deteriorated markedly⁴². And 17% of the coral reefs of the Indian Ocean are estimated to have been lost; 22% are in a critical condition; and 32% are threatened⁴³.

1

2

3

4 5

6

7

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16 17

³⁵ See the entry on the Chagos Conservation Trust ("CCT") website: http://chagos-trust.org/news/world-without-coral-reefs. The CCT's members and trustees include scientists working on coral reefs: see http://chagos-trust.org/about/who-we-are.

36 Dr Roger Bradbury, 'A World Without Coral Reefs', The New York Times, 13 July 2012:

http://www.nytimes.com/2012/07/14/opinion/a-world-without-coral-reefs.html?_r=0 "Marine conservation in the British Indian Ocean Territory: science issues and opportunities", Final Report of Workshop held 5-6 August 2009 at the National Oceanography Centre, Southampton ("NOC Report"), UKCM, Annex 102, p. 7.

³ Koldeway et al, above n. 6, p. 3, citing Indian Ocean Tuna Commission figures.

³⁹ NOC Report, above n. 9, p. 6.

⁴⁰ NOC Report, above n. 9, p. 2.

⁴¹ DVD, Chagos Science in Action I, around 1 min 25 sec.

⁴² DVD, Chagos Science in Action I, around 1 min 50 sec.

⁴³ NOC Report, above n. 9, p. 4.

2 3

4 5

6

7 8

9

10

11

12 13

14

15

16 17

18

19 20

21

22

23

If you have not already had the opportunity to do so, I do invite the Tribunal to look at the three ten minute films which we submitted with our Rejoinder. I don't know whether you have yet had an opportunity of doing that. I hope you have seen the footage in the first BIOT Science in Action film which shows the stark contrast between the healthy BIOT reefs and those in Madagascar which have significantly deteriorated as a result of human activities. They are few signs of life and fish in comparison to those in the MPA.

In that context, I was a little startled to see Mr. Sands suggest that the creation of the MPA was in some way a sham and that that could be illustrated by the lack of action that was being taken. He took you to the report of Mr. Sheppard, an environmental expert, that the United Kingdom Government had sent out, in fact, principally to look at the conditions in the lagoon at Diego Garcia, which is outside of the MPA area, but also to make some more general comments. I would strongly submit that if you come and go back to look at that document, far from suggesting that the United Kingdom is doing nothing about the careful management of the MPA, that it actually illustrates really detailed and careful management been carried out, not just within the MPA but within the lagoon as well, to ensure that the near-pristine conditions are maintained, even when there are probably quite minor threats to it from within the operation of Diego Garcia base itself.

Marine protected areas are recognised by scientists and the international community as essential⁴⁴ to promote the conservation and management of oceans and fisheries⁴⁵, as reflected in the internationally agreed target of 10 per cent coverage by 2020⁴⁶. The 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development demanded that all over exploited fish stocks be restored to the level that can produce maximum sustainable yield by 2015. These goals will almost certainly be missed. Certainly, the 2015 target for restoration of overexploited fish stocks is unlikely to be met, according to the FAO.⁴⁷ In 2010, the global MPA coverage was only just over 1% and, as I have already noted, is unlikely to be achieved.

⁴⁴ Koldeway et al, above n. 6, p. 5.

⁴⁵ Johannesburg Plan of Implementation, 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development (UKCM, para. 3.23); FAO report on The State of World Fisheries and Aquaculture 2012, above n. 3, pp. 164-5. 46 UKCM, para. 3.25.

The BIOT MPA is a regionally and internationally critical step in beginning to address the risk of irreversible damage to the oceans. It has substantially increased the global coverage of MPAs. The scientific case for the BIOT MPA is robust actually hasn't been challenged in this case at all. The waters around British Indian Ocean Territory are some of the most pristine in the Indian Ocean, indeed on the planet, and have a genuinely world-wide importance: scientists agree it is an exceptional place and merits protection.

The three short films I have mentioned provide an illustration of this. But perhaps I might interject that, as a diver myself, the films show what for me is a truly remarkable environment and rather different, if may say so, from the very pleasant environment, but nevertheless markedly different, where I was diving only four to five days ago in the Maldives, a mere few hundred miles north of BIOT.

The MPA, because of its size, location, biodiversity, and the near-pristine nature and health of the Chagos coral reefs, is likely to make a significant contribution to the wider biological productivity of the Indian Ocean more generally⁴⁸. Size is important because many conservation-related benefits increase non-linearly with size. Smaller areas are much less effective in maintaining viable habitats or populations of threatened species.⁴⁹

Indeed, large scale MPAs, like the BIOT MPA, are important for protecting migratory and highly mobile pelagic species, as well as those species that remain within the MPA⁵⁰. The bycatch of sharks and rays and other species in the BIOT tuna longline and purse fisheries was ⁴⁷ FAO report on The State of World Fisheries and Aquaculture 2012, above n. 3, p. 11.

⁴⁸ NOC Report, above n. 9, p. 1.

⁴⁹ Ibid., p. 4.

⁵⁰ Ceccarelli, "The value of oceanic marine reserves for protecting highly mobile pelagic species: Coral Sea case study", UKR, Annex 68.

previously significant, especially for sharks, and that happens wherever such fishing takes place⁵¹.

The assessment of the potential benefits to fisheries and biodiversity in the Indian Ocean of the BIOT MPA are there in Doctor Koldeway and her colleagues, in the report published in the peer reviewed Marine Pollution Bulletin, which is amongst your documents, and that concluded that "the closure of Chagos/BIOT to all commercial fishing will eliminate bycatch in the Western Indian Ocean as a whole by providing a temporal and spatial haven" ⁵² and will maintain both fish populations and the near-pristine habitat that exists in the area.

The BIOT MPA safeguards around half the high quality reefs in the Indian Ocean⁵³, and Doctor Koldeway's publication notes the BIOT MPA is particularly important because of the status of the world's reefs.

It also contains an exceptional diversity of deepwater habitat types, 97% of which are unexplored. 54

And a further scientific study published earlier this year has confirmed that the efficacy of MPAs is highly influenced by being no-take, large and isolated.⁵⁵

The MPA also provides a crucial scientific reference site for Earth system science studies and regional conservation. It is one of the world's few remaining examples of what a pristine marine environment ought to be like and the world's biggest coral reef atoll system. Scientists all agree that it is an exceptional place. As such it provides a baseline, an unpolluted reference site for studies elsewhere in the world measuring the effects of pollution, the processes that collectively create climate change and managing the threats climate change poses. It is one of ⁵¹ Koldeway et al, above n. 6, p. 5.

⁵² Koldeway et al, above n. 6, p. 5.

NOC Report, above n. 9, p. 1.

⁵⁴ NOC Report, above n. 9, p. 4.

⁵⁵ Edgar et al, "Global conservation outcomes depend on marine protected areas with five key features", Nature, vol. 506, 13 February 2014, p. 216, UKR, Annex 80.

the few tropical locations where global climate change effects can be separated from those of pollution and exploitation⁵⁶.

Now, Mr. President, as I said, I have only very recently seen some of the great riches of the marine environment in the Indian Ocean, including a rather large shark at probably closer call than I might have necessarily have wished in the last few days, but the thing that strikes one when diving in the Maldives which in location and structure resembles the natural environment of the Chagos Archipelago is that, as good as it is, and despite the very great efforts to preserve it, the effects of human interference in the Maldives are very visible when one dives and also on the surface. The lack of serious adverse human interference in BIOT makes it quite exceptional not just in terms of conservation but also in terms of maintaining and restoring the fish stocks that may then be taken commercially elsewhere.

The BIOT MPA plays a key role as a regional stepping stone and re-seeding source for species in the Indian Ocean, and that stepping stone is critical to the viability of heavily-harvested fish populations elsewhere⁵⁷. It is also the only place in 1000 miles of ocean for seabirds to roost and breed⁵⁸.

Results from the recent scientific research expeditions show it has the cleanest seas in the world.⁵⁹

So, I don't apologize, Mr. President, for belabouring this a little bit because, in sum, the United Kingdom Government is extremely proud of the MPA. The BIOT is one of the very few remaining places on earth and the only remaining place in the Indian Ocean where it is practically possible to protect a large-scale, pristine marine environment for future generations, vital research into climate change, coral reefs and fisheries, and for fisheries conservation

⁵⁶ Koldeway et al, above n. 6, p. 7; NOC Report, above n. 9, p. 1.

⁵⁷ NOC Report, UKCM, Annex 102, p. 5.

⁵⁸ DVD, Chagos Science in Action, II, around 7 mins 10 secs.

⁵⁹ DVD, Chagos Science in Action II, around 7 mins 48 secs.

necessary to the food security of the people who live around the Indian Ocean, and that includes those who live on Mauritius.

Let me nevertheless emphasise this. The United Kingdom acknowledges the special interests of Mauritius and the Chagossian communities in the BIOT. It took them into account as part of its assessment and development of MPA policy. In particular, the MPA does no harm to Mauritius, to the contrary, it is an important regional and international asset from which it benefits. We have also said quite clearly in the Terms of Reference for the Chagossian resettlement Feasibility Study that the MPA is not a barrier to resettlement.

It is a matter of regret that Mauritius doesn't appear to recognise the importance of maintaining the pristine environment of the archipelago and has currently given no commitment to protecting the vulnerable eco-system around the British Indian Ocean Territory when the territory is ceded to Mauritius when it's no longer needed for defence purposes.

Mr. President, I will now set out the most important legal points which will be made by those representing the UK during the hearing:

The first – and we say determinative points – concern your jurisdiction. I have already touched on the absence of jurisdiction to determine the issues of sovereignty that have been raised by Mauritius. I have highlighted this already because of the radical and untenable nature of the jurisdiction that is asserted. But the United Kingdom's objection here also belongs up front because it is the Mauritian claim to sovereignty that is the real issue in and behind the current proceedings. The claim to sovereignty has been put forward here in the guise of a case under UNCLOS. But it is the same underlying claim as has been presented or mooted before other fora and in bilateral exchanges spanning three decades or more. And that dispute as to sovereignty, however it is cast or re-cast, is not a dispute concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention at all. Hence I've submitted this tribunal lacks jurisdiction to determine the issues, such as self-determination and territorial integrity, that are really fundamental to Mauritius' claim. That is, we say, a very unsurprising outcome – and Mauritius – I listened carefully to what was being said – has been unable to point to any provision of the Convention, or any judicial or other decision, or any State practice to suggest that we are wrong on this point.

You will be taken by Mauritius to views – including views of some of the members of this distinguished tribunal – on so-called "mixed disputes" and to the intricacies of article 298(1)(a) of the Convention. But those views have been expressed, I submit, in the very particular context of an incidental jurisdiction to determine disputed territorial matters, where this is necessary for, and incidental to, the resolution of a maritime delimitation case. But that's not this case here: indeed, the BIOT and Mauritius are many hundreds of miles apart and there can be no maritime delimitation between them at all. The territorial sovereignty issues plainly underlie and are fundamental – and are certainly not incidental – to the claims made by Mauritius. And ultimately article 298(1)(a) of the Convention, however interpreted, supports the United Kingdom's position. If there truly were the broad jurisdiction over disputes concerning the sovereignty of the coastal state for which Mauritius contends, then there would surely be the same opt-out from compulsory jurisdiction as in article 298(1)(a). But there is no such opt-out; and that I would submit is because it's perfectly clear there is no such jurisdiction.

Second, even the most cursory analysis of Mauritius' claim to sovereignty over the BIOT confirms that this claim is not a matter falling for resolution under the Law of the Sea Convention. For example, you are asked to rule upon the precise contours of the principle of self-determination in 1965; when precisely the principle became part of customary international law; and when it became binding upon the United Kingdom. In this regard you are taken by Mauritius to resolutions of the UN Security Council and General Assembly, and to political declarations of various international groupings. You are asked to consider questions of duress. You are asked – or at least you were asked – to consider and apply the uti possidetis juris principle to the facts of this case, although it appears that Mauritius lost faith with this line of argument in its Reply. What you are not being asked to do, by contrast, is to really consider the actual provisions of the Convention – save by the sleight of hand of saying that somehow all these principles fit within any given reference in the Convention to the "coastal State".

And that, Mr. President, takes me to the next jurisdictional objection. Consistent with the real dispute being over sovereignty, the first time that the UK learned of the existence of the claim in respect of the MPA was when Mauritius lodged the Notice of Arbitration. Now, I do want to emphasise that the requirements of Article 283, in terms of the existence of a dispute and the obligation to exchange views, go to your jurisdiction. These are not mere formalities, waiting to be bypassed when issue is joined through an exchange of pleadings once an Annex VII proceeding is underway. The pre-conditions in Article 283 are an essential part of States' consent to jurisdiction when becoming parties to UNCLOS.

The recent jurisprudence of the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and the International Court of Justice strongly confirms, we say, our position in this respect, and the particular claims of this case provide a very good illustration of why international tribunals must be right to insist on the fulfilment of all the pre-conditions to compulsory jurisdiction. For example, many of the claims before you go to alleged failures to consult. As such, the allegations could readily have been considered, and addressed as appropriate, if they had been brought to the United Kingdom's attention before the commencement of proceedings, as Article 283 requires. But that in fact never happened, and so we now litigate, at great public expense for both the Mauritian taxpayers and the United Kingdom's, alleged failures to consult that have now taken on a life of their own as claims in international arbitration.

The fourth and final jurisdictional objection concerns the non-sovereignty claims alone. Simply put, the MPA has been implemented through a ban on commercial fishing. This involves the exercise by the United Kingdom of its sovereign rights over conservation and management of not fall within your jurisdiction over environmental disputes under article 297(1) of the Convention. And it is expressly excluded from your jurisdiction over disputes relating to fisheries under article 297(3). Now, Mauritius seeks to get around these two provisions by some more re-packaging – this time, saying that its claim is that a coastal State has acted in contravention of specified international rules and standards for the protection and preservation of the marine environment, and thus falls within article 297(1)(c). But I submit it can point to no such, or has not been able to point to any such specified international rules and standards that are relevant to its claim. That merely demonstrates the artificial nature of the attempt to fit the exercise of sovereign rights with respect to marine living resources, over which an Annex VII tribunal has no jurisdiction, within the strictly delimited confines of article 297(1)(c).

living resources under article 56 of the 1982 Convention. Now, the exercise of those rights does

Mr. President, I do not want to say too much on the merits since we strongly believe that you should never reach that point, which you will appreciate from my submissions, but I will limit myself to three observations on the merits of this case.

Firstly, aside from the sovereignty issue, the claim comes down to a number of after-the-event complaints of a failure to consult and claims to exclusion from alleged fishing rights.

The complaints on consultation also, I think, should not detain the Tribunal very long. There were bilateral consultations in 2009, on that everybody is agreed. We say the United Kingdom wanted further consultations. Again there can be little debate about that, nor about the fact that Mauritius refused to participate in further bilaterals save on terms that the United Kingdom could not accept. It then comes down to a finger-pointing exercise before this tribunal as to who was responsible for the breakdown – we say we are firmly in the right, but this is scarcely a matter which an international tribunal should be troubled with. There is an assertion that a commitment was made by former British Prime Minister Gordon Brown that the MPA would be put on hold. That may be a misunderstanding, but we are quite clear that no such government to government commitment was given.

As to fishing rights, a great deal has now been written by Mauritius in the pleadings in this case, but some perspective I think is called for. Mauritian fishing in the maritime area now within the MPA has, over the past almost 50 years, been on the spectrum from very low to non-existent. When a licence regime was first introduced by BIOT, there was no complaint by Mauritius that this breached alleged fishing rights. Likewise, when the number of available licences was cut from six to four in 1999, there was no complaint that this breached fishing rights. In many of the years, Mauritian-flagged vessels did not apply for any licences at all, or just one. And I should interject here that, in fact, no application by a Mauritian-flagged vessel has ever been turned down when licences were being granted. You have before you a table – and I hope it's in your Arbitrators' folder – a table from the UK Counter-Memorial which demonstrates the very limited Mauritian fishing activity in BIOT waters. And it might, Mr. President, just be worth looking at it very briefly, if you have it. I think it's now on screen as well.

The top table shows fishing licenses issued by BIOT from 1991 to 30th of March 2010, and the red and pink alongside it shows those taken up by vessels from Mauritius. So, the Tribunal will see how it all times it has been a tiny percentage share of the total fishing that has taken place in BIOT, and that, indeed, in 2002, 2005, 2006, 2007, and 2008 there was, in fact, no-takeup at all. And if one looks at the bottom, and it shows simply the Mauritian vessels and shows the same picture. So, the reality is probably due to the vast distance that actually exists between Mauritius and its other islands and the British Indian Ocean Territory, hundreds, if not actually over a thousand miles away certainly between the main island and over I think it's 1200 nautical miles, one of the reasons why, in fact, this offer that was being made in 1965 of free licensing has been only rarely taken up.

1

9

10

11

20

21

Against this unpromising backdrop, an elaborate case has been built in these proceedings by reference to an understanding on "fishing rights" reached in 1965, which I would have to say reached its greatest stridency in the Mauritian Reply, where the United Kingdom was accused of suppressing evidence by certain documents being redacted where the redactions are said to have been unhelpful to the United Kingdom. I can assure you that as the Minister responsible for the Government's Legal Service and indeed for propriety, to an extent, in the way government conducts litigation, I would not countenance such a thing. I'm grateful to the Tribunal for the way that the Tribunal has dealt with that aspect of the matter.

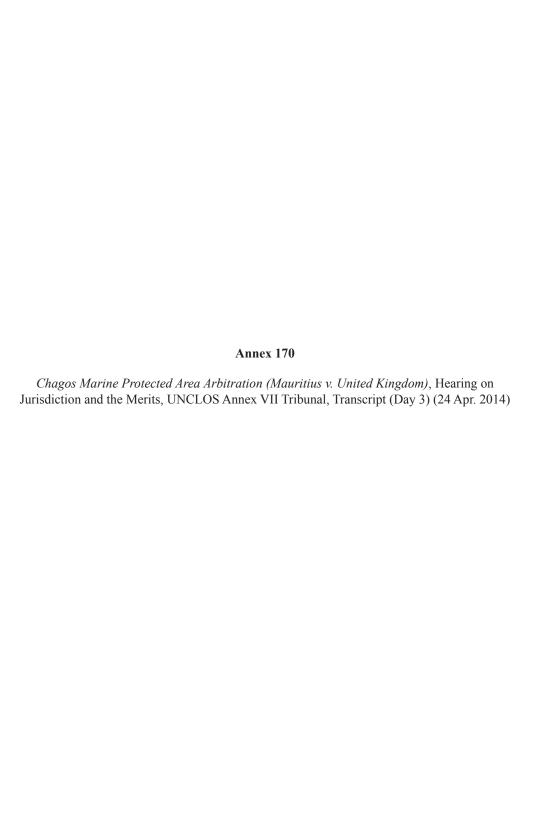

Now the nature, correct interpretation and scope of the 1965 understandings are all matters that, if our jurisdictional objections are surmounted, are indeed for the Tribunal to determine. Mauritius has picked from the disclosure in the domestic judicial review claim those documents that it considers as showing UK personnel taking the view that the 1965 understandings gave rise to binding obligations in respect of fishing rights. When the documentation is looked at in its entirety - and we have a detailed appendix to our Rejoinder devoted to that - what one in fact sees is a broad range of views, none of which are backed up by considered or detailed legal advice, and none of which are relevant and material to the issue which you must now determine. The internal views of officials cannot, we submit, be material to the consideration by an international tribunal of the meaning and effect of a particular document. Were it otherwise, disclosure in state-to-state cases would have taken a markedly different course in arbitration proceedings, and indeed, I do note that Mauritius has disclosed only five internal documents.

Finally, there is the asserted claim by Mr. Sands, of bad faith on the substance - the claims that the MPA is an abuse of rights held under the Convention, ultimately as I said at the start apparently an elaborate charade to prevent the resettlement of BIOT by its former inhabitants. I have already touched on the United Kingdom's policy on resettlement. Issues of potential resettlement played no role whatsoever in the declaration of the MPA. Mauritius now suggests otherwise, and alleges breach of article 300 of the Convention. Yet it does so without any evidence to challenge the scientific basis for the MPA, which I touched on earlier. And I might add, without finding a single document in the UK's extensive disclosure in the domestic judicial review proceedings that suggests that the declaration of the MPA was motivated by anything other than scientific and conservational intent. The United Kingdom as I said is proud of the MPA. Mauritius was initially in favour, and quite rightly so. Its current litigation strategy cannot cut across that. And, in the longer term, it will be Mauritius in particular, as well as the broader global community more generally, that will benefit from this MPA and the preservation of a unique maritime area.

As the tribunal will be aware, the allegation of improper motive was also made in the domestic proceedings. The decision of the High Court is the subject of an appeal to the Court of Appeal, and although the hearing has taken place, the judgment has yet to be handed down. Nevertheless, I would like to quote briefly from the High Court's judgment. It said this: "For the claimant's case on improper purpose to be right a truly remarkable set of circumstances would have to have existed. Somewhere deep in Government a long-term decision would have to have been taken to frustrate Chagossian ambitions by promoting the MPA. Both the administrator of the Territory in which it was to be declared, Ms. Yeadon, and the person who made the decision, the Foreign Secretary, would have to have been kept in ignorance of the true purpose. Someone – Mr. Roberts" – [we have seen referred to in an American memo]? – "would have been the only relevant official to have known the truth. He, and whoever was privy to the secret, must then have decided to promote a measure which could not achieve their purpose, for the reasons explained above, while explaining to all concerned that the MPA would have to be reconsidered in the light of an adverse judgment of the Strasbourg Court. Those circumstances would provide an unconvincing plot for a novel. They cannot found a finding for the claimant on 1 2 this issue." 3 So, Mr. President, to conclude: the United Kingdom takes the strong view that the claims 4 made by Mauritius are not within your jurisdiction and we urge you to dismiss them in their 5 entirety. 6 Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal. You now will have several weeks of detailed 7 legal argument before you, and I am afraid that I am not able to stay, as interesting as it would be 8 for me to do so, but other government business claims me back. But I am very grateful to you to have given me the opportunity to make an opening speech and make these few points. 9 Thank you very much for your attention. 10 11 PRESIDENT SHEARER: Thank you very much, Mr. Grieve. Now, is there a continuation? 12 ATTORNEY GENERAL GRIEVE: Just me. 13 14 PRESIDENT SHEARER: Very good. Thank you. Well, in that case, we can adjourn until 9:30 tomorrow morning, and I hope in the 15 meantime we would be able to do something about the temperature in this room and the extraneous 16 noises, but I hope you bear with us. Thank you very much, and we adjourn until tomorrow 17 18 morning. Thank you. (Whereupon, at 4:58 p.m., the hearing was adjourned until 9:30 a.m. the following 19 20 day.) 21 23 24 25

PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION

ARBITRATION UNDER ANNEX VII OF THE 1982 UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION ON THE LAW OF THE SEA

In the Matter of Arbitration Between:

THE REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS,

and

PCA Reference MU-UK

THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND

Volume 3

HEARING ON JURISDICTION AND THE MERITS

Thursday, April 24, 2014

Pera Palace Hotel Mesrutiyet Cad. No:52 Tepebasi, Beyoglu Conference Room Galata II & III 34430, Istanbul-Turkey

The hearing in the above-entitled matter convened at 9:30 a.m. before:

PROFESSOR IVAN SHEARER, Presiding Arbitrator

SIR CHRISTOPHER GREENWOOD, CMG, QC, Arbitrator

JUDGE ALBERT J. HOFFMANN, Arbitrator

JUDGE JAMES KATEKA, Arbitrator

JUDGE RÜDIGER WOLFRUM, Arbitrator

1	hasn't produced a scrap of legislation to implement.
2	72. Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal, that concludes Mauritius' presentation on the
3	facts.
4	Before I ask you to call on Professor Crawford, may I ask whether any Members of
5	the Tribunal have any questions for me.
6	PRESIDENT SHEARER: It appears not, Ms. Macdonald. Thank you very
7	much.
8	So, I give the floor now to Professor Crawford.
9	PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal.
10	PRESIDENT SHEARER: Professor Crawford, can I ask how long you will be?
11	At the moment the schedule provides for a 15-minute break at 10:30. I leave it to you to decide
12	when we should take that break at a convenient point in your argument.
13	PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Yes, there are various convenient points in the
14	argument, so I will pick one of them.
15	PRESIDENT SHEARER: Very good. Thank you.
16	Mauritius v United Kingdom
17	Speech 7: The United Kingdom is not a coastal State entitled to declare the "MPA" – The
18	Principle of Self-Determination
19	Professor James Crawford AC SC
20	Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal:
21	1. A. Introduction
22	1. We now move to the law. In this presentation, I will discuss the impact of the principle of
23	self-determination on the crucial issue of status - whether the United Kingdom was a coastal
24	State entitled freely to declare an MPA irrespective of the wishes of the government and people
25	of Mauritius. My colleague Mr. Reichler who will follow me will discuss breaches of specific undertakings given to Mauritius: in particular he will argue that Mauritius was and is entitled to the rights of a coastal State based on these undertakings, specifically the undertaking of reversion. But first let me deal with the lex generalis of self-determination. I do so on the footing or on the assumption that there is no relevant jurisdictional limitation in Article 297 of UNCLOS or elsewhere – whether that is a sound footing is of course a question and it will be explored tomorrow.

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal:

- 2. The exercise of certain rights under UNCLOS is premised upon the possession of a particular status. Only a 'coastal State' may exercise sovereign and jurisdictional rights over the territorial sea, the continental shelf and the exclusive economic zone. This is clearly set out in various provisions in the Convention, for example Article 56, which contains a list of the rights that a coastal State enjoys in the exclusive economic zone adjacent to its territory.
- 3. Now, what is a 'coastal State' is not defined by UNCLOS. It is a matter of general international law. Article 56 is not limited to States Parties to UNCLOS, but it is framed in terms of States and their coastlines. Thus, to determine whether a State is the coastal State entitled to exercise rights under the Convention this Tribunal is required to construe the term 'coastal State' in accordance with the 'relevant rules of international law applicable in the relations between the parties', as prescribed in Article 33(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention. Similarly, the applicable law provision in Article 293(1) of the 1982 Convention requires the application of 'other rules of international law' that may be relevant, as other Annex VII Tribunals and ITLOS Tribunals have recognised.
- 4. It is true that this raises jurisdictional difficulties certainly with respect to States which have made declarations under Article 298. The United Kingdom has made no such declaration, and we will come to that issue, as I have said, tomorrow.

3

4 5

6 7

9

11

14

15

16

17 18

19 20

21

22 23

- 5. When the United Kingdom declared an MPA on the 1st of April 2010, it purported to 2 exercise sovereign and jurisdictional rights under Parts V and VI of the 1982 Convention. But the UK may not exercise rights that it does not possess, or is not entitled to assert unilaterally. Our task today is to demonstrate that the UK is not the coastal state having jurisdiction or, at any rate, exclusive jurisdiction, with respect to the protection and preservation of the marine environment of the Chagos Archipelago and adjacent waters under Article 56 UNCLOS. There are two reasons for this. First, by excising the Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965, the UK violated the right to self-determination to which the Mauritian people were then and still are 8 entitled under international law. Second, by having undertaken to 'return' the Archipelago to Mauritius once it is no longer needed for defence purposes and by giving a number of other 10 undertakings relating to natural resources, the UK has recognised, as a minimum, that it does not have unfettered sovereignty over the Archipelago. 12 13
 - In my presentation today I will deal with the first of these arguments, leaving the second to my colleague, Mr. Reichler. I will begin by establishing that at the time of Mauritius' independence - and, for that matter, at the time of the excision of the Archipelago three years earlier - the UK was bound to respect the rights of the people of Mauritius to decide on their own political future, this being the future of the entire territory of Mauritius as a self-determination unit. More than this, as an administering power, the UK was under an obligation to enable Mauritius to exercise its right to self-determination. demonstrate that by excising the Archipelago from Mauritius - with no sufficient regard or no personal regard at all to the opinion of the population or of their representatives - the United Kingdom violated Mauritius' right to self-determination. Because it acquired control over the Archipelago unlawfully in this way, the UK has no valid claim to exercise sovereignty over the Archipelago.

- 7. 1 I must once again draw your attention to the special context, the sui generis context - I 2 accept, of course, that the words sui generis do not add anything to the word 'special' but it comforts us to use it - the sui generis context in which the present dispute arose. Professor 3 Sands explained to you on Tuesday that this is not an 'ordinary sovereignty dispute'. There is 4 5 simply no other case like it, and the United Kingdom has not been able to point to one. As we will demonstrate today, the dispute between Mauritius and the UK concerns a former colony's 6 7 entitlement to the maritime zones around its rightful territory, in circumstances in which the UK has recognised that Mauritius has the attributes, or at least some of the attributes, of a coastal 8 State. 9
 - 2. B. The right to self-determination was clearly established at the relevant period and applicable to the UK

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal:

10

11

12 13

14

15

16

17

18

19 20

21

22

- (i) The emergence of the right to self-determination
- 8. The right to self-determination is a fundamental principle of international law. It has been described by the International Court as an erga omnes right¹ and as, and I quote, 'one of the major developments of international law during the second half of the twentieth century'²(of course in the Kosovo opinion). I do not need to remind you that self-determination provided the legal underpinning for the process of decolonisation carried out under the auspices of the United Nations, which led to the creation of more than half the present number of States. Ever since the United Nations General Assembly adopted Resolution 1514(XV), the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in 1960 I will refer to in short as the 'Colonial Declaration' it has been established that all peoples have the right to 'freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural ¹East Timor (Portugal v. Australia) Judgment, ICJ Reports 1995, para. 29.

²Accordance with International Law of the Unilateral Declaration of Independence In Respect of Kosovo, 22 July 2010, para. 82.

development'. The applicability of this right to colonial peoples finds ample support in the practice and opinio juris of States, and in the jurisprudence of the International Court.

- 9. Now, the standing of the principle of self-determination in current international law is not open to contest, and the UK does not contest it. But our opponents seek to persuade you that the UK was not bound to respect Mauritius' right to self-determination in 1965 or even in 1968 at the date of independence.
- 10. To the UK, the critical date for this purpose is 1965. But it was in 1968 that Mauritius exercised its right to self-determination, opting to become independent. Until 12 March 1968, the UK was directly responsible, under international law, for enabling the people of Mauritius to exercise that right with respect to its entire territory. Up to that date, the United Kingdom had the means to revoke, as a matter of domestic law, the Order in Council that detached the Archipelago from Mauritius. It was in 1968 that the composite act constituting the breach by the United Kingdom as a colonial power was accomplished and that breach has a continuing character.
- 11. But even if this Tribunal was to decide that 1965 is the critical date rather than 1968 I don't think anything turns on it the applicable law would remain exactly the same. Self-determination started to emerge as a legal right already in the early 1950s. At Tab 7.1 of your folders you will find General Assembly Resolution 545(VI)³ [Mauritius Legal Authority 89]. It is at page 317. In this Resolution, adopted on the 5th of February 1952, the General Assembly decided to include in the International Covenants on Human Rights, which were then under development, an article 'on the right of all peoples and nations to self-determination in reaffirmation of the principles enunciated in the Charter of the United Nations'. This same resolution makes the connection between the right of self-determination and the obligations of administering powers in relation to Non-Self-Governing Territories. I stress this was in 1952.

³ GA res. 545 (VI) (1952).

It is not new. That is Tab 7.1 There are not very many tabs in this speech, I am relieved to say but there are some. This time I draw the purple color.

- 12. Now, in the Rejoinder the United Kingdom points to the fact that Resolution 545 and other early resolutions relied upon by Mauritius were adopted with a number of States voting against or abstaining. In fact, Resolution 545 was adopted by 42 votes in favour, 7 against and 5 abstentions. Diverging opinions on the character of self-determination were voiced, and the solution that the great majority of States favoured, was clear from the outset. Resolution 545 demonstrates that even in 1952 State practice was pointing the direction in which the right to self-determination would go.
- 13. The position of principle expressed in these resolutions was further strengthened by the subsequent practice of the General Assembly and the Security Council. And if there are any doubts that self-determination had become a legal right, they were dispelled by the powerful and unequivocal statement contained in the Colonial Declaration, which was adopted by 89 votes in favour, no votes against and 9 abstentions. It affirms that, and I quote, 'all peoples have the right to self-determination'— not a principle of self-determination; all peoples don't have a principle of self-determination they have a right to self-determination.⁴ And the practice that followed from that moment until the excision of the Chagos Archipelago and the independence of Mauritius serves only to corroborate the view that the right to self-determination was already well established in customary international law by the early 1960s.
- 14. The right to self-determination was described in those terms by authoritative contemporaneous sources. For example, Rosalyn Higgins not a tear-away radical I think it would be fair to say writing in 1963, affirmed that the Colonial Declaration, and I quote, 'taken together with seventeen years of evolving practice by United Nations organs, provides ⁴ GA res. 1514 (XV) (1960).

3

4

6 7

8

9

10

11

12

13 14

15

16

17 18

19 20

21 22 ample evidence that there now exists a right of self-determination'. 5 That is in her book, Development of International Law Through the Political Organs of the United Nations at page 103 — early '60s. Remarkably, because the controversy about peremptory norms was just cranking up, other authoritative contemporaneous sources described self-determination not just as an ordinary rule of international custom, but also as a peremptory norm. In 1963, the International Law Commission referred to the principle as a contender for peremptory status. Peremptory status was itself a contender for peremptory status at the time. self-determination was there at the beginning of that process. The first edition of Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law, published in 1966, stated, and I quote, 'certain portions of jus cogens are the subject of general agreement, including... self-determination'. 6 That's in 1966. As indicated in Mauritius' pleadings, there are other distinguished writers to the same effect. The United Kingdom stresses that these, however distinguished they may be or have become, these writers do not make international law. Well, no doubt they do not, unaided. But the views of so substantial a body of distinguished scholars and practitioners, read in the light of practice and authoritative articulations such as Resolutions 1514 and 1541 of the same year, should be regarded as authoritative in stating what the law is. The problem with the UK's position is that it takes an excessively formalistic and static view of how international law - and customary international law in particular - emerges and International law is a dynamic system, and its dynamic in relation to self-determination was evident well before 1965. In 1960 alone, 17 African colonies achieved independence, increasing the membership of the United Nations by over 20 per cent, from 83 to

99 members. Over a dozen new States were created by decolonisation in the five years that followed the adoption of the Colonial Declaration and prior to the excision of the Archipelago.

⁵ Rosalyn Higgins, Development of International Law through the Political Organs of the United Nations (1963), p. 103.

⁶ Clarendon Press 1966, p. 418.

⁷ UKR, p. 96, fn 445.

The process of Mauritius' decolonisation must be viewed in this context.

16. In 1971, the International Court confidently affirmed, in the Namibia opinion, and I quote: 'the subsequent development of international law in regard to non-self-governing territories – Mauritius was a non-self-governing territory – as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, made the principle of self-determination applicable to all of them'. It did not hesitate to take into consideration the changes which had 'occurred in the supervening half-century' – that's a half-century prior to 1971 – changes that it considered to be well-established – even in interpreting a mandate agreement that had been concluded in 1919.

17. So we don't need the benefit of hindsight. It's impossible to look back to the 1960s and view what was happening as anything but the achievement of independence on the basis of the exercise of the legal right categorically affirmed by the General Assembly in 1960. It makes no sense to postpone to the 1970s the date when the right to self-determination can be said to have emerged. So it is far-fetched to argue, as the United Kingdom does, that it was not under an obligation to respect the right of the Mauritian people to freely determine their political status in the period 1965 to 1968.

(ii) The UK cannot claim to have been a persistent objector

18. Then we have another claim by the United Kingdom which is that the right of self-determination that may have emerged by the early '60s was not opposable to it. The United Kingdom attempted in its written pleadings to acquire the status — one might describe it as a retrospective status — of a persistent objector. It persists in seeking to be persistent half a century too late. But it cannot have been — and in fact did not even seek to qualify — as a persistent objector at the time when the right to self-determination emerged. This is for three reasons.

⁸Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (South West Africa) notwithstanding Security Council Resolution(1970), Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports 1971, para. 52.

9

10

11

12

13

16

17 18

19 20

21

1 19. First, as the United Kingdom itself argued before the International Court in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, a State cannot be a persistent objector to a 'fundamental principle' of international law. In that case, the UK was referring to the drawing of baselines and the delimitation of the territorial sea. Now, one might doubt – as the Court in North Sea Continental Shelf doubted – that the rules on delimitation ever had such a fundamental character.

But if ever there was a fundamental principle of international law, then and now

But if ever there was a fundamental principle of international law, then and now,

7 self-determination is one.

20. Secondly, the record shows that the UK was not an objector, let alone a persistent one, by the 1960s. If it was trying to be a persistent objector, it made an incredibly poor job of doing so. In fact, the main piece of evidence the UK produced in support of its claim to be a persistent objector is an internal document, 'Report of a Working Group of Officials on the Question of Ratification of the International Covenants on Human Rights' – which is Counter-Memorial, Annex 27.¹⁰

Well, internal documents do not establish persistent objection. They may establish the queries of officials, but that's a different matter. The position the UK adopted in international debates was thoroughly ambivalent, and fell far short of meeting the strict requirements of the persistent objector rule, assuming for the sake of argument that such a rule exists. For example, in the plenary debates that preceded the adoption of the Colonial Declaration, the United Kingdom conceded that there was, and I quote, 'no argument about the right of the people [of colonial territories] to independence' and 'no argument whether the people will be independent or not'. 11 But the crucial factor to consider is the position the UK adopted when the Colonial Declaration was put to the vote at the General Assembly. It abstained. If it really were a ⁹Fisheries (United Kingdom v Norway), Reply of the United Kingdom (28 November 1950), Pleadings, vol. II, p. 429.

¹⁰ Report of the Working Group of Officials on the Question of the Ratification of the International Covenants on Human Rights, 1 August 1974 (UKCM, Annex 27).

Covenants on Human Rights, 1 August 1974 (UKCM, Annex 27).

11 Official Records of United Nations General Assembly, Fifteenth Session, 925th Plenary Meeting, 28 November 1960, 10.30 a.m., UN Doc. A/PV.925, para. 50.

persistent objector seeking to avoid the binding application of the right to itself, it should have voted against. I would refer you to Tab 7.2 of your folders which contains the record of the 947th Plenary Meeting of the General Assembly on the 14th of December 1960, and I apologize that this was not put in to the legal authorities; it should have been. It is a public document of course. It contains part of the procedure by which the Colonial Declaration was adopted. It is at page 319. You will find there the British Delegation's explanation of vote in relation to the Colonial Declaration. Most of the objections of the UK concerned what it considered to be implied criticism of its policies as a colonial power. The key paragraph is paragraph 53, which is at page 323 of the folder, and I will read it:

"The United Kingdom, of course, subscribes wholeheartedly to the principle of self-determination set out in the Charter itself, and we feel that we have done as much to implement this principle during the past fifteen years as any delegation in this Assembly. Nevertheless, members of the Assembly will be familiar with the difficulties which have arisen in connexion with the discussion of the draft International Covenants on Human Rights and in defining the right to self-determination in a universally acceptable form. These difficulties have not yet been finally resolved by the Assembly, and we feel that it might have been better not to make the attempt now in a rather different context."

Well, that is not the Superman of persistent objection. It is the mild-mannered reporter. No sign of a phone box.

22. As a colonial power watching its Empire dissolve, it was not surprising that the UK would be careful in debates leading to the articulation of self-determination as a legal right. It was affected by those debates. But the UK did not deny the existence of the right. It only expressed doubts of an indefinite kind in relation to its content. That does not come even close to meeting the onerous burden of persistent objection in international law.

¹² United Nations General Assembly, 947th Plenary Meeting, 14 December 1960, GAOR, p. 1275, para. 53 (emphases added).

2

3

4 5

6 7

8

9

10

11

12 13

14

15

16

17 18

19 20

21

23. Third reason, by 1967 it was possible to discern a shift in the position of the United Kingdom in international forums-from ambivalence, in the passage I just read, to stronger support for the notion that self-determination constituted a right. And as we know, the position of the United Kingdom on key disputes at present is founded on self-determination. This is evident in the records of the preparatory work for the 1970 Friendly Relations Declaration. The UK made a proposal to the Special Committee which was working on the Declaration, in which it affirmed the 'duty to respect the principle of equal rights and self-determination' and made it clear that the principle was applicable 'in the case of a colony or other non-self-governing territory'. 13 Discussing this proposal at a meeting of the Special Committee - this was in 1967 - the UK representative stated that the position that the UK had held 'in the past' - one of opposition to defining self-determination as a right - was being 'held in abeyance'. 14 One year later, in 1968, the United Kingdom signed the two human rights Covenants, both of which recognise in Article 1, pursuant to that decision of 1952, the right of peoples to self-determination by which 'they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development'. It's true that the United Kingdom made a declaration to common Article 1, a declaration that maintained on ratification in 1976, that in the event of conflict between 'Article 1 of the Covenant and the United Kingdom's obligations under the Charter (in particular, under Articles 1, 2 and 73 thereof) [its] obligations under the Charter shall prevail'. But this would have been true in any event by virtue of Article 103 of the Charter, and it hardly amounted to an objection, persistent or otherwise, relevant to the present case. It affirmed Article 73.

¹³ United Nations General Assembly, Report of the Special Committee on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States (1969), UN Doc. A/7619, 71.
¹⁴ United Nations General Assembly, Report of the Special Committee on Principles of International Law

⁴ United Nations General Assembly, Report of the Special Committee on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States (1969), Summary Record of the Sixty-Ninth Meeting, 4 August 1967, 10.30 a.m., UN Doc. A/AC.125/SR.69, p. 18.

- 1 24. In short, the UK was not a persistent objector to the right to self-determination, which 2 was well established as a matter of international law in the early 1960s. The record indicates
 3 that, although the United Kingdom may have shown some hesitation in characterising
 4 self-determination as a right, this hesitation was far too vague and inconsistent to have had the 5 effect of precluding the binding application of this fundamental principle to the United Kingdom
 - 25. In the Rejoinder, the UK responds to Mauritius' attack on the persistent objector argument by suggesting that it had not shown that the UK had 'agreed' that the right of self-determination reflected international law.¹⁵ This is neither true nor to the point: by 1965 self-determination as a principle was well-established: even if its earlier arrival had been accompanied by a grumble of dissenters. By the 1960s this grumble of dissenters did not include any consistent voice from Her Majesty's Government.
 - 3. C. By Excising the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius the UK breached Mauritius' right to self-determination

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal:

- 26. I turn from these remarks on the standing of the right of self-determination to the specific question of how the United Kingdom breached it when it partitioned the territory of Mauritius in 1965 by excising the Chagos Archipelago.
- 27. If what I've said is right, then at the time of the excision, Mauritius had the right to exercise self-determination and to freely determine its political status in respect of the entirety of its territory, which included the Archipelago. Yesterday, Ms. Macdonald established that the Archipelago was and remains an integral part of Mauritius. As such, it was and remains protected by the principle of territorial integrity, stated in paragraph 6 of the Colonial in 1965.

¹⁵ UKR, para. 5.21.

Declaration, reproduced at Tab 7.3 of your folders, page 333. [MM Annex 1] Paragraph 6 of course prescribes, and I quote:

"Any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations." ¹⁶

28. I should clarify two points here. First, the territorial integrity of non-self-governing territories is an essential aspect of the right to self-determination, which can only be waived by the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned. The colonial power did not have the right or the authority arbitrarily to dismember a non-self-governing territory before the people had had any chance to exercise the right to decide on its own political future. Affirming otherwise would deprive the right to self-determination of its meaning; it would also negate the obligations that a colonial power has to enable the exercise of the right.

29. This interpretation is confirmed by numerous resolutions adopted by the General Assembly. For example, Resolution 2232(XXI), which I discussed yesterday and which is reproduced at Tab 4.13 of your folders [MM Annex 45]. You do not need to turn it up again. Referring to the situation of various non-self-governing territories including Mauritius, the Assembly confirmed the applicability of paragraph 6 of the Colonial Declaration to colonies and reiterated that, and I quote:

"Any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of colonial Territories... is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV).¹⁷"

30. In its written pleadings the United Kingdom has sought to downplay the relevance of General Assembly resolutions, noting that they are not binding or dispositive. Well, that's true; they're not binding as such, as a general matter. The position that the Assembly has taken on ¹⁶ GA res. 1514 (XV) (1960).

¹⁷ GA res. 2232 (XXI) (1966).

questions of self-determination is authoritative, as the Court recognised in Western Sahara. The Court there referred to the 'measure of discretion' that the Assembly enjoys in determining 'the forms and procedures' for the fulfilment of the right. It noted that the right to self-determination of the people of Western Sahara-constituted 'a basic assumption of the questions put to the Court'. 18 The General Assembly had a special role in developing and implementing the right, and some of its resolutions have been universally regarded as law-making particularly in this field, like the Colonial Declaration; others are regarded as determinative in the implementation of self-determination, as the Court noted in Western Sahara. 31. Resolutions of the General Assembly not only confirm that the territorial integrity of non-self-governing territories is an essential element of self-determination—the Assembly specifically concluded that the excision of the Chagos Archipelago constituted a breach of the right of self-determination. That was in Resolution 2066(XX), tab 4.12 of your folders. I read the relevant paragraph yesterday, and I won't read it again. The Assembly further reaffirmed the 'inalienable right of the people of the Territory of Mauritius to freedom and independence'. 32. Finally I should refer to the United Kingdom's argument that Mauritius has failed to address the allegation that the UK has not relinquished sovereignty since the islands were ceded from France in 1814. I hope I have stated that argument accurately because I find it incomprehensible; this may be a weakness of mine. As we have shown, the Chagos Archipelago was part of the colony of Mauritius in 1945. The principle of self-determination was applied to its territory as such, far flung though it was. No distinction has ever been made in international practice based on different modalities of the acquisition of colonial territory, whether by cession or otherwise. It is true that there is a disputed body of practice dealing with colonial territories claimed by third States, but the Archipelago was not so claimed at any time after 1945, or for that matter after 1814. Paragraph 6 of the Colonial Declaration applies to all

1 2

3

4

5

6 7

8

9

10

11

12 13

14

15

16

17

18

19 20

21

22 23

¹⁸ Western Sahara, Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports 1975, para. 70.

¹⁹ UKR, para. 5.7.

19 20

21

22 23

2 territories might initially have been acquired by the colonizer - and that point was confirmed by the Court in Western Sahara. 3 Mr. President, this would probably be the first of the convenient moment to break 4 5 PRESIDENT SHEARER: Very good, Professor Crawford. The Tribunal will break for 15 minutes. We will return at 10:45. 6 7 Thank you. (Brief recess.) 8 PRESIDENT SHEARER: Yes, thank you, Professor Crawford. 9 PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Thank you, sir. 10 33. The conclusion - that the excision of the Archipelago was a breach of international law 11 and specifically of paragraph 6 of the Colonial Declaration - is not affected by the International 12 13 Court's recent pronouncement on the principle of territorial integrity in the Kosovo opinion, as 14 the UK suggests in its pleadings. In the Kosovo opinion in 2010 the Court clarified, and I 15 quote, 'the scope of the principle of territorial integrity is 'confined to the sphere of relations between States'.20 But the Court was not making this point in connection with any claim of 16 self-determination, the application of which to Kosovo was of course controversial. Serbia was 17 18 not administrator of a non-self-governing territory and there was no claim that a colonial power colonial territories identified as such pursuant to Resolution 1541(XV), irrespective of how those independence coming from internal territorial units.

had attempted to breach the territorial integrity of Serbia by excising Kosovo from it. Serbia sought to invoke the principle of territorial integrity as a defence against an attempt by one of its constituent units to separate and become an independent State. The Court's dictum stands for the proposition that States may not invoke territorial integrity as a legal barrier to declarations of ²⁰Accordance with International Law of the Unilateral Declaration of Independence in Respect of Kosovo, Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports 2010, para. 80.

34. The situation that stands before you in the present case is quite different. From the perspective of international law, the relations between a colonial power and one of its non-self-governing territories are not purely 'domestic constitutional relations'. They're not within the reserved domain of domestic jurisdiction. They were and are in key respects analogous to the 'relations between States' to which the Court referred in the Kosovo opinion. This is so because while international law does not, generally speaking, govern the relations between constituent units within a State, the law of self-determination by the early 1960s directly governed the relations between metropolitan States and their colonies and included a guarantee of territorial integrity for the colonial territory. If metropolitan States could lawfully dismember the territory of the colonies for the administration of which they are responsible, the right of self-determination would be an empty shell. Metropolitan States could keep the bits they wanted and discard the rest. Territorial integrity may not protect States against internal attempts at separation, but it surely protects a colony against decisions of the colonial power that affect the territory with respect to which the right of self-determination is to be exercised.

35. Likewise, the right of the people of Mauritius to exercise self-determination with respect to its entire territory is not prejudiced by the principle uti possidetis juris. In our Memorial, we made a passing reference to the principle of stability of boundaries to highlight that territorial integrity shares a common rationale with uti possidetis – that of safeguarding the right to self-determination. Territorial integrity preserves the exercise of self-determination before independence is achieved, protecting the non-self-governing territory from prejudicial territorial changes that the metropolitan State may seek to enforce. Uti possidetis protects self-determination after independence, as the International Court noted in Burkina Faso/Mali.²¹

36. In its written pleadings, the UK attempts to turn Mauritius' argument upside down. It claims that uti possidetis 'fully supports' its own position by protecting the administrative boundaries existing at the time of Mauritius' independence in 1968.²²But this is disingenuous. First, the creation of the "BIOT" did not involve the emergence of a newly independent State, but the retention of part of the territory of a colony by the colonial power. As the International Court made clear, uti possidetis is 'logically connected' with the emergence of States through decolonization.²³Again, that's Burkina Faso/Mali. Secondly, uti possidetis cannot be construed as protecting international boundaries unlawfully established through a serious breach of the right of self-determination. This would be diametrically opposed to the rationale and purpose of uti possidetis, which is to promote the stability of the boundaries of lawfully created States whose peoples have expressed the wish to become independent as a unit.

²¹ Burkina Faso/Mali, ICJ Reports 1986, para. 25.

4. D. The people of Mauritius did not waive their right to territorial integrity by a free expression of their wishes

I turn to the third part of this presentation, which concerns the question whether the people of Mauritius waived their right to territorial integrity through a free expression of their wishes.

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal:

37. The right that the people of a non-self-governing territory enjoys to 'freely determine [its] political status' corresponds to the obligation, on the part of the colonial power, to ensure that the people in question is in a position to freely express its wishes. This is what the law as reflected in the Colonial Declaration requires, no more and no less. The Court stated this obligation in even clearer terms in the Western Sahara opinion, when it said, and I quote, 'the application of the right of self-determination requires a free and genuine expression of the will of the peoples concerned'.²⁴

23 Burkina Faso/Mali, ICJ Reports 1986, para. 23.

²² UKR, para. 5.8.

Western Sahara, Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports 1975, para. 55.

1 38. Now, our opponents of course argue that the representatives of Mauritius 'agreed' to the 2 detachment of the Chagos Archipelago, at the fourth Constitutional Conference in 1965 and
3 subsequently. What they cannot demonstrate is that this 'agreement' constituted a free and
4 genuine expression of the will of the people of Mauritius.

- 39. I explained yesterday in detail how it was that the United Kingdom obtained the 'agreement' of the Mauritian ministers to excision. The decision to excise was made by the UK unilaterally in advance, with no consultation with the people. It was not beneficial to Mauritius or in its interest. It fulfilled Anglo-American security interests in the Indian Ocean, involving the construction of a military base in Diego Garcia as well as the removal of the Archipelago's population. The UK took advantage of this Constitutional Conference, in which the political future of Mauritius was on the agenda, to induce the Mauritian delegates not to oppose the partition of the colony.
- 40. We looked carefully at the record yesterday. The evidence shows two things. First, at the Constitutional Conference, United Kingdom made it clear that the excision of the Chagos Archipelago was non-negotiable. Prime Minister Wilson and Colonial Secretary Greenwood were caught on record informing Mauritius that it was a legal right to detach the islands, and that the United Kingdom would do so by an Order-in-Council whether or not Mauritius gave its consent.
- 41. Secondly, the United Kingdom made it known to the Mauritians that they must consent to the excision if they wanted to see any progress in the negotiations leading to independence. I won't go back to the documents which established that yesterday. While the UK made an effort in its pleadings to portray the questions of independence and partition as separate, it is quite clear that they were not.
- 42. What it comes down to is this. The agreement to dismemberment of the territory of Mauritius was obtained in a situation amounting to duress, or at least analogous to duress. It completely contradicted the position that the Mauritian representatives had always defended.

The outcome was pre-determined, independence was at stake, and preserving the territorial integrity of the colony was not an option available to the Mauritian ministers.

- 43. The UK responds to the allegation of duress by referring to the criteria laid down in Articles 51 and 52 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, on coercion of a representative of a State and coercion of a State itself by the threat or use of force. It says, and I quote: '[i]f a deployment in negotiations between political leaders of their respective understandings of the domestic political position and ambitions were to amount to duress or coercion for the purposes of international or domestic law, all politics and all negotiations between governments would infringe these principles'. Once again, the UK views the relations between the British and Mauritian authorities with no regard to the context in which it took place, or to the applicable legal framework.
- 44. This calls for two comments. First, your Tribunal should be careful I say this with all respect not to approach these exchanges as negotiations between equal parties. At the one end of the table was a powerful colonial power with far more leverage than the representatives of the colony sitting at the other end of the table.
- 45. Second, at the moment in which the UK came to the table it committed a serious breach of its obligations to give effect to the right of self-determination of the people of Mauritius by insisting that excision was a certain outcome. There was no choice whether or not to allow the detachment. The reason that the UK wanted the assent of the Mauritian authorities was not concern that the detachment was in accordance with the wishes of the people of Mauritius. It needed the agreement because it feared criticism.
- 46. The questions that stand before you are thus the following: does an agreement given to a measure that was not proposed but imposed, and required in return for independence to which ²⁵ UKCM, para. 7.38, fn 570.

²⁶ UKR, para. 5.25.

Mauritius was already entitled, constitute a genuine expression of the will of the people? Did the UK comply with its obligations under the law of self-determination when it obtained the agreement in such a way? In its Counter-Memorial, the United Kingdom concedes, as if it was not at all problematic, that 'the Council of Ministers [of Mauritius] secured benefits – a "deal" – in return for their consent, in full knowledge of the fact that the excision would have been effected without their consent, and without any benefits to Mauritius'. That's at paragraph 2.61 of the Counter-Memorial. Is this the type of 'deal' that a colonial power can procure in accordance with the law of self-determination? The question answers itself.

- 47. The UK gave priority to its security interests in preference to the right of the people of Mauritius to self-determination. It cornered the representatives of Mauritius, and made sure that they acquiesced to a deal which neither they nor the people of Mauritius wanted.
- 48. That this is an accurate version of the facts is demonstrated by the international community's condemnation of the excision, notably in resolution 2066 (XX), to which I took you yesterday. The United Nations was not rightly convinced that the deal had been reached in accordance with the requirements of self-determination.
- 49. The same position was taken by the vast majority of States in a variety of forums, including the Non-Aligned Movement, the Group of 77, the African Union and so on.
 - 50. The view held by so many States as to the illegality of the partition of the territory of Mauritius discredits the United Kingdom's version of the facts. So does Mauritius' repeated attempts to resume exercising de facto the sovereignty to which it is entitled de jure. And you have in the record the various accounts of Mauritius' protest, which again I dealt with yesterday.
 - 51. I need only add that in addressing the issue of the occasional failure of protest after independence, the Tribunal should, with respect, apply the standard articulated by the International Court in the Certain Phosphate Lands case. There the Court had to deal with a somewhat analogous argument of acquiescence based on delay. It said — this is at paragraph 36 of the judgment:

²⁷ UKCM, 2.61.

"The Court... takes note of the fact that Nauru was officially informed, at the latest by letter of 4 February 1969, of the position of Australia on the subject of rehabilitation of the phosphate lands worked out before 1 July 1967. Nauru took issue with that position in writing only on 6 October 1983."

It's only 16 years later.

"In the meantime ... the question had on two occasions been raised by the President of Nauru with the competent Australian authorities."

But not in writing.

"The Court considers that, given the nature of relations between Australia and Nauru, as well as the steps thus taken, Nauru's Application was not rendered inadmissible by passage of time. Nevertheless, it will be for the Court, in due time, to ensure that Nauru's delay in seising it will in no way cause prejudice to Australia with regard to both the establishment of the facts and the determination of the content of the applicable law."²⁸.

It's a very carefully considered paragraph.

It is true that that decision was made at the preliminary objections stage, and that acquiescence by Nauru could still formally have been pleaded by Australia as somehow relevant to the merits. But in light of the Court's approach, can there be any doubt as to what the result would have been? Yet Nauru's silence on the rehabilitation of the phosphate lands mined before independence lasted rather longer than there was the case here.

5. E. Conclusion

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal:

²⁸ ICJ Reports 1992 p. 240 at p. 254-5 (para. 36) (emphasis added); see also ibid., p. 255 (para. 38).

52. For the reasons given, Mauritius is the only state entitled to exercise sovereign and jurisdictional rights over the Archipelago under UNCLOS. The basis on which the United Kingdom now purports to establish a Marine Protected Area reflects back to a serious breach of a fundamental principle of international law.

- 53. The sovereignty the United Kingdom had over Mauritius as a colonial power prior to independence was qualified not displaced but qualified by Mauritius' right to self-determination. When Mauritius became an independent state, the sovereignty that the UK continued to exercise over territory unlawfully detached became legally untenable. That breach has a continuing character. It will only cease when the Archipelago is returned to Mauritius or the dispute otherwise settled.
- 54. If your Tribunal decides that the United Kingdom is entitled to declare an MPA with respect to the Archipelago, it will, with great respect, contribute to consolidating an unlawful situation that denies the right of Mauritius to self-determination and to its territorial integrity. On that basis, Mauritius respectfully requests the Tribunal to declare that the United Kingdom was not entitled to declare an MPA.

Mr. President, this is a convenient moment to respond to two questions asked yesterday by Judge Greenwood and Judge Wolfrum. Judge Greenwood asked two questions, one about the legal status of the Lancaster House commitments in international law, and one about their content. Mr. Reichler will deal with the latter question. I'm going to deal with the former question.

Judge Greenwood asked, and I quote: "What is the legal basis on which Mauritius says these undertakings are binding because, of course, whatever form they took, they were given at a time when Mauritius was still a colony? So, is Mauritius' case that they're a treaty or the otherwise binding is some form of international law agreement, or are you looking to another legal system, or are you saying that their nature changed over the years?" That was the question.

The answer emerges from what I just said about the role of the international law of self-determination. In 1965, as the process of the move to independence was underway, the relations between Mauritius and the United Kingdom were not matters of United Kingdom domestic jurisdiction insofar as they concerned the exercise of the right to self-determination, including the territorial integrity requirement. In principle, international law required free consent of the people concerned or their representatives to any dismemberment of a Chapter XI territory.

Now, that consent could be given on condition; and, in this case, as I've shown earlier, the consent was obtained in conditions of duress. Such consent as was given was given on condition, notably the reversion condition, and the other condition as Mr. Reichler discussed yesterday.

This was not a treaty, but it was a binding commitment by the United Kingdom intended to procure consent.

Now, the United Kingdom cannot be in a better position as to the binding character of the commitments it made in 1965 because the General Assembly judged – and maybe this Tribunal will also judge; we submit that it should – that the consent was obtained by duress or improper pressure. In either case, the commitment is binding.

Further, the commitment was confirmed by U.K. Ministers and senior officials following the independence of Mauritius. There was no discontinuity. One notable example is the assurance given by the United Kingdom Minister Mr. Rollins in 1975, which is at Annex 78 of the Reply. He wrote on 23 March 1975 to the High Commissioner of Mauritius: "To repeat my assurances Her Majesty's Government will stand by its undertakings reached with the Mauritian Government concerning the former Mauritian islands now formally part of the British Indian Ocean Territory and in particular" – in particular, it wasn't the only assurance – "they would be returned to Mauritius when they're no longer needed for defence purposes."

 Such statements by the United Kingdom Ministers made in the context of State-to-State relations, of course, confirm the binding commitments made before independence and represent the repetition of undertakings under international law which are binding on the Nuclear Tests principle.

We note that successive lawyers in the legal advisers' office, including Sir Arthur Watts, as he would become, characterize the situation as giving rise to rights for Mauritius and correspondingly its obligations to the United Kingdom. We have not been able to see the detailed legal reasoning behind that conclusion, but it was consistent over many decades. In the circumstances of the case, the United Kingdom is either precluded by operation of law in accordance with the good faith principle or estopped by its own conduct from treating the undertakings it then made as not giving rise to rights of Mauritius.

I should say that we referred to the international practice, which was contemporaneous with the excision, in particular Paragraph 526 of our Reply. I won't go through those details, but I refer you to it for more detail on the point.

In this context, I should also deal with Judge Wolfrum's question put to Mr. Reichler but ceded kindly to me. This is not a case of return or reversion. There has been a detachment of the question. Unlike Mauritius, I genuinely and without duress consented to that.

Judge Wolfrum asked, "could you give us a qualification of the consent" – this is the question from the Transcript – "given by the Ministers of Mauritius to separate the Chagos Archipelago, was that a legal commitment or how would you qualify it? I should very much like an assessment, a legal assessment of that, qualification of the consent given."

4

6 7

8

9

11

13 14 15

16 17

19 20

21

18

22 23 24

25

As I said yesterday, a form of consent was given, but it was given under circumstances amounting to duress. It was therefore not a valid consent for purpose of international rules embodied in the Colonial Declaration adopted by the General Assembly.

Mr. President, that's all I have to say on self-determination, unless there are any questions from the Tribunal. If not I would ask you to call on Mr. Reichler.

 $PRESIDENT\ SHEARER: \quad Very\ good. \quad Thank\ you,\ Professor\ Crawford.$

So, I give the floor now to Mr. Reichler.

Thank you.

THE LEGAL IMPLICATIONS OF

THE UNITED KINGDOM'S UNDERTAKINGS TO MAURITIUS

Paul S. Reichler

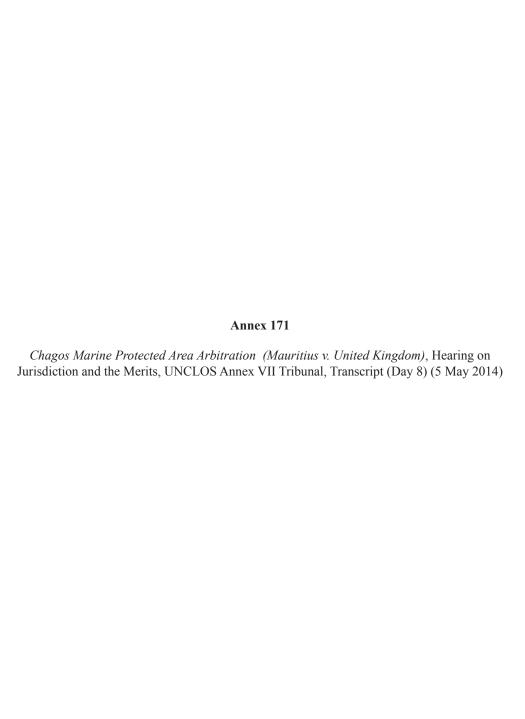

24 April 2014

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal, good morning.

Yesterday I presented the facts regarding the undertakings made by the United Kingdom to Mauritius in September 1965, the repeated renewal and reconfirmation of those undertakings by the U.K. in subsequent years, and the U.K.'s fulfillment of them over the 45-year period between September 1965 and April 2010. Today, as I indicated at the end of yesterday's remarks, I will address the legal implications of these undertakings.

There are two. First, the undertakings are legally binding on the United Kingdom. Second, they irrevocably endow Mauritius with the attributes of a coastal State under the 1982 Convention. I will address each of these conclusions in turn, and show how the second flows inevitably from the first.

Mauritius and the United Kingdom are agreed on the applicable rule of law that determines whether the undertakings are binding. As the United Kingdom stated in its Rejoinder: "What matters in this, as in any case, is whether there was the requisite intent to be bound so as

PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION

ARBITRATION UNDER ANNEX VII OF THE 1982 UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION ON THE LAW OF THE SEA

In the Matter of Arbitration Between:

THE REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS,

and

PCA Reference MU-UK

THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND

Volume 8

HEARING ON JURISDICTION AND THE MERITS

Monday, May 5, 2014

Pera Palace Hotel Mesrutiyet Cad. No:52 Tepebasi, Beyoglu Conference Room Galata II & III 34430, Istanbul-Turkey

The hearing in the above-entitled matter convened at 9:30 a.m. before:

PROFESSOR IVAN SHEARER, Presiding Arbitrator

SIR CHRISTOPHER GREENWOOD, CMG, QC, Arbitrator

JUDGE ALBERT J. HOFFMANN, Arbitrator

JUDGE JAMES KATEKA, Arbitrator

JUDGE RÜDIGER WOLFRUM, Arbitrator

Mauritius v United Kingdom 1 Second Round 2 The Creation of the "MPA", and Article 283 3 Alison Macdonald 4 5 Introduction 1. Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal, as Professor Sands explained, my part of Mauritius' 6 7 submissions in reply will deal firstly with the creation of the "MPA", and secondly with the requirements of Article 283 of the Convention. 8 The Creation of the "MPA" 9 Nature of the "MPA" 10 2. On the "MPA", my submissions are in two parts. Firstly, I will look again at the question of 11 what the "MPA" actually is, and what happens or does not happen there. And, secondly, I 12 13 will return to the key aspects of the chronology and to the manner in which the decision was 14 taken. 15 3. On the first issue, the nature of the "MPA", we now have the UK's answers to the written questions posed by Judge Wolfrum. We note that the UK has not disclosed any 16 documentation in support of those answers, despite our request that it do so. As Professor 17 Sands mentioned, in a late attempt to bolster its position on the scientific justification for the 18 "MPA", you will recall that on Friday, the UK provided you with a written submission which 19 it had put together during the course of these proceedings, it seemed, dated the 1st of May, 20 headed "Biological effects of the marine reserve in BIOT (Chagos)". 15I don't ask you to go to 21 that now. It's in the UK folder at Tab 74. You will probably have noticed, if you have had a 22 23 chance to study this document, that it claims on the first page that, I quote, "A clear scientific case for [the MPA] has been made in the peer reviewed scientific literature". If you follow 24

¹⁵ UK Folder Tab 74

a piece by Professor Sheppard, himself, the scientific adviser engaged by the administration of the so-called "BIOT", as do a large proportion of the other footnotes. The UK, we would suggest, seemed less than clear about the underpinnings of its scientific case, with Mr. Boyle offering, you will remember, late on Friday, to try to find additional scientific material to support the UK position.

4. On the question of the enforcement of the "MPA", Ms. Nevill said that: "Although Mauritius that up to the end of the document, if you follow the footnotes, you will see that this refers to

- seeks to make mileage out of the fact that there is only one BIOT patrol vessel, it provides no evidence that enforcement of the MPA is in fact deficient."¹⁷ Well, on that point, Mauritius simply notes the fact that the "MPA" covers an area of 640,000 square kilometres, and asks the UK to produce evidence of any assessment which it has carried out to establish the patrol needs of such a vast area. As with so much about the "MPA", we simply do not know what assessments, if any, have been undertaken in this regard. And, in relation to funding for enforcement, much of which we are told is private, as you pointed out, Mr. President, we still do not know what conditions attach to the private portion of funding, since the UK has not answered Judge Greenwood's question on that point. ¹⁸So we await the answer.
- 5. As for the absence of regulations, Judge Wolfrum asked for the reason for this in his eighth written question. The terse answer given¹⁹ was that, I quote, "No additional legislation was found to be necessary to enforce the prohibition on commercial fishing. The existing BIOT legislation is sufficient for this purpose." And we know that already the UK has been able to decide, within the existing framework of the EPPZ, simply not to issue any new licences. We understand that. But we understood Judge Wolfrum to be asking why no additional legislation has been enacted, although it is said to be forthcoming. And the UK gave no ¹⁶ Transcript, p. 906/19-22.

¹⁷ Transcript, p. 589/12-14.

¹⁸ Transcript, p. 592/21-23.

¹⁹ UK Folder Tab 1.

| TL

answer to this, saying simply that "recent legislation in BIOT has streamlined the fisheries enforcement powers [this is a reference to the recent Ordinance at Tab 2 of the UK folder, which provides for fixed penalties for carrying out commercial fishing without a licence in the Marine Protected Area...] and work is continuing on a consolidation of the relevant BIOT legislation." So the answer boils down to "we're working on it". No indication of why that task has not been completed in the last four years, or when it might be.

The process by which the "MPA" decision was taken

- 6. After those observations on the nature of the "MPA" and its enforcement, I turn to the second part of my submissions on this issue the process by which the "MPA" decision was taken. My submissions on this point are, of course, also relevant to the Article 283 question, which is why we have decided, in the interests of economy, to address both issues together in this second round.
- 7. The United Kingdom through Ms. Nevill made much of the fact that the group of 'interested stakeholders' who were consulted at an early stage were all, in her words, "UK bodies whose support would be essential if the idea was to make any progress." We consider that this underlines Mauritius' point about its exclusion from the early stages of the process. Was Mauritius' support not considered to be essential if the idea was to make any progress? Apparently the UK thought that the project could not survive its formative stages without the support of, among others, the British Geological Survey, but it could survive without the support of Mauritius.
- 8. Now, in fact, the UK did make some attempts to find out what Mauritius might think about the idea, but surreptitiously, and we see this from the email at page 278 of Mauritius' folder for the first round²¹ I don't ask you to pull it out now this is the email sent by Mr. Allen to Ms. Yeadon about the agenda for the January 2009 talks. Mr. Allen describes the agenda item 'fishing rights / protection of the environment' as, in his words, "Means of discussing current / possible Mauritian rights in BIOT waters and introducing discussion of Pew ideas, if not name." So it seems from that that the UK was trying in January to get an idea of Mauritius' likely reaction to the project, while not telling them what it was up to. It can hardly count as consultation, we say, if the State concerned does not know what it is being consulted about.

²⁰ Transcript, p. 551/20-21.

²¹ Mauritius Folder Tab 6.1

- 9. Ms. Nevill emphasised that NGOs, and not the Government, were the source of the February 2009 article in the Independent, through which Mauritius learned for the first time of the MPA proposal.²² But does this make the situation any better, we ask? What the UK is saying here is that, if it had been left up to it, Mauritius would have found out nothing for another three months, when the Foreign Secretary took his 'formal decision' to pursue the project.
- 10. The Foreign Secretary's decision to, in Ms. Nevill's words, "move forward" with the proposal followed, you will recall, Mr. Roberts' briefing paper of the 5th of May 2009²³, in which he observed that the MPA could "create a context for a raft of measures designed to weaken the movement" which supported Chagossian resettlement.
- 11. Professor Crawford will come back to Mr. Roberts' remarks later in the context of Article 300. For now I will simply note that, when you come to look again at the remarks recorded in the Wikileaks cable²⁴, but denied by Mr. Roberts, you will see that he is saying essentially the same thing as in the 5th of May document. In each case the import of his remarks is that the MPA will help the UK in its continued efforts to prevent the Chagossians from achieving resettlement in the Archipelago.
- 12. You heard the UK say, through Ms. Nevill, that it was not required to consult Mauritius until a formal Ministerial decision had been taken to pursue the proposal on the 6th of May 2009.

²² Transcript, p. 553/3-7.

Mauritius Folder Tab 6.2, p. 284.

²⁴ Mauritius Folder Tab 2.13

1 Sh 2 pr 3 M

 She told you that "Officials simply would not have engaged in formal discussions on the proposal with third States until the policy to move forward with it had been adopted by Ministers."²⁵

13. But by that time, as we see from the email of the 7th of May 2009 – I pause to say that all the references to the transcripts and materials that I refer to in my speech will be in the transcripts for you – we see that the Foreign Secretary was "fired up" and his Private Secretary is telling Mr. Roberts to "keep the timelines taut, keep him involved, and [...] ensure that the creation / announcement of the reserve is scheduled within a reasonable timescale."

14. The UK took issue with my interpretation of that email as showing a certain determination to ensure that the MPA proposal came to pass. We simply invite you to read the documents again during your deliberations, and we suggest that what the correspondence, viewed as a whole, and very much including this email, shows is that if the "MPA" was not a fait accompli at that point, it was well on its way to becoming one. This shows the very real danger, we suggest, of leaving Mauritius out of the discussion until the process had gained a critical momentum.

15. We now come to the July 2009 talks. You have the record of those talks,²⁷ you have been taken through them by the parties, and I do not propose to go through them again. Professor Boyle made the surprising submission on Friday afternoon that if, which he denied, the UK had any legal obligation to consult Mauritius at all about the MPA proposal, then the July 2009 talks were, in themselves, sufficient to fulfill this obligation. He said:

"In our view, the July meeting was timely. It ensured that Mauritius was fully informed about the MPA proposal, including the proposed ban on commercial fishing, and it was at an early enough ²⁵ Transcript, p. 554/3-5.

Mauritius Folder Tab 6.3.

²⁷ UKCM Annex 101; MR Annex 144

stage to allow Mauritius to ask for further information – as it did – and to make meaningful representations. And what was the outcome of that July bilateral meeting? It was a Joint Communiqué in which the Government of Mauritius welcomed in principle the MPA proposal.

4 [UK Tab 56 / M Tab 6.5]",28

- 16. Now going to the Communiqué itself, Professor Boyle stated that "If you read that, you will see there were no complaints about inadequate consultation. There were no complaints that Mauritius could not get its views across or had been ignored." And he went on to say that "the subsequent contacts between the two governments are not relevant to the question whether there was consultation", and that "in our view the necessary consultations took place in July, and what occurred after that is not material to Mauritius' case." 30
- 17. Now, Mr. Loewenstein will look at the legal merits of these assertions later on when he replies on that aspect of the case. But Professor Boyle's analysis does also merit examination as part of the "MPA" chronology. The UK appears to be saying, in all seriousness, that it was required to do nothing more by way of involvement of Mauritius in the process after July 2009; in other words, that it stepped out of those talks having heard all it needed to hear from Mauritius. Well, we would suggest that you only have to look at the Joint Communiqué of that meeting, to which you have been taken many times, to see why we were surprised by Professor Boyle's argument. Quite clearly that document records the start of a process, not the end of it. Mauritius' position, as recorded there in black and white, was that it "welcomed, in principle, the proposal for environmental protection and agreed that a team of officials and marine scientists from both sides meet to examine the implications of the concept with a view to informing the next round of talks."

²⁸ Transcript, p. 880/6-13.

²⁹ Transcript, p. 880/13-15.

³⁰ Transcript, p. 881/14-16.

³¹ Mauritius Folder Tab 6.5.

2
3

18. This might be an appropriate moment to examine the words used by the UK in the record of the July meeting, that 'no decision had yet been taken'.³² Ms. Nevill said that the inclusion of these words "runs completely counter to Mauritius' argument that the decision to go ahead with the MPA was made earlier by the Foreign Secretary on the 7th of May."³³

19. You already have my submissions on the 7th of May email about the Foreign Secretary being "fired up". The point I want to make at this stage is that the fact that the UK repeatedly told Mauritius that no decision on the "MPA" had been taken does not of course prove that this was the case. As I indicated before, the evidence shows that, if no final decision had been taken, the project certainly had a very great deal of momentum by that point. The reason I focus on the words "no decision has yet been taken" particularly is that, as you have seen and I'll touch on briefly later, the UK kept repeating those exact words to Mauritius right up until six days before the "MPA" decision was taken. And we would suggest that the credibility of those words diminished over time.

20. We now come to the period between July 2009 and the announcement —

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Ms. Macdonald, I'm sorry to interrupt you.

MS. MACDONALD: Yes.

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: But isn't what you're saying difficult to reconcile with the fact that the exchanges of emails between Mr. Allen, Mr. Roberts, Ms. Yeadon, and the Foreign Secretary's private office during that critical period of 29 to 31 March show that the officials didn't think that the decision had been taken and indeed it looks to me as though they were a bit surprised by where the Foreign Secretary came out.

MS. MACDONALD: Yes. Well, I'm certainly not saying that – of course, the formal decision to defer the MPA was taken by the Foreign Secretary in that final 48-hour period, and clearly, and one thing that we made clear in the first round, was that that was very much – and in our written pleadings – was that what appears from the correspondence is that was very much over the objections or at least if not objections, serious concerns of the officials concerned. And when I'm talking about the decision being taken, I'm referring particularly to the 7th of May email as well, what we were referring to is Foreign Secretary-level momentum and a certain determination that that is the course that should be gone down, although of course it was not ratified until the final date. And of course, as you point out, over the serious concerns of the officials. So we're certainly not saying that a final decision was taken, but we are saying, and I'm drawing attention particularly to the words used in July, back in July 2009, that no decision had been used in the letter of the 26th of March 2010, we say that the credibility of that – of course, the Final Decision had not been signed off at that point, but we say that telling Mauritius that no decision had yet been taken and that the process was not supposed to in any way cut cross the bilateral talks, et cetera, as we see in the 26th of March letter, by that point they were stretching it when the decision was about to be taken six days later.

³² UKCM Annex 101

³³ Transcript, p. 560/9-10.

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Well, that decision was about to be taken six days later or at some point in the very near future, I quite understand.

MS. MACDONALD: Yes.

 ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: But one doesn't have to be aficionado of "Yes Minister" to realize that Ministers in the British Government system quite often get fired up and excited about ideas but are sometimes talked out of those ideas by their officials, and quite often talked out of those ideas by their officials. And the picture that seems to me to emerge from those emails is that the British Government collectively really hadn't made up its mind until the late afternoon on the 31st of March. That's actually quite surprising, the chronology to me, but they hadn't made a decision until that critical point. It wasn't simply that there was a formal decision still to come. There was no substantive decision, either.

MS. MACDONALD: Well, of course, the Tribunal's reading of emails would be 1 2 definitive, and I'm not sure that there is anything necessarily between us on that. But certainly I wasn't seeking to suggest that, and I think I said specifically a few minutes ago, that there was no 3 set fait accompli as of 7th of May 2009, July 2009. But what I said was that we see from the 4 5 Private Secretary's email of the 7th of May that certainly the Foreign Secretary was "fired up". The officials who were involved were advised to keep the timelines taut, ensure the 6 7 announcement within a reasonable time, so there was a lot of enthusiasm and a very significant degree of momentum that the proposal had at that point. But, of course, you're correct that final 8 decision was not taken, and politicians can be quixotic and, as we know nothing is set in stone 9 until it's set in stone. So we fully accept the decision wasn't taken. 10 The question is when was Mauritius brought in, and was it brought in early 11 enough to shape the thinking, or had the proposal really got quite strong legs by the time they 12 13 were told anything about it. And thereafter, were they kept - were they really genuinely and ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Just to make clear for the record that "quixotic" is your term, not mine.

MS. MACDONALD: Absolutely. I was attempting to paraphrase your question.

So, looking a bit at the period that has just been canvassed in answer to Judge Greenwood's questions, and briefly, Judge Greenwood, that might be – I've touched on this a little, but he posed a question last week to the UK but really to both Parties about the relationship between the public consultation and the bilateral talks.³⁴

21. There seems to be a fair degree of consensus between the Parties that the reason why the third round of talks did not take place was because Mauritius took the view that it was not properly consulted and kept informed.

_

14

15

16

17 18

19 20

21

22 23

³⁴ Transcript, p. 592/5-14.

appropriate for that round to take place without the public consultation having been halted. And Ms. Nevill said, "If there was any lack of consultation with Mauritius, this was because it refused to proceed unless the UK halted the public consultation, which was a wholly unreasonable expectation in all of the circumstances. The public consultation did not cut across consultations with Mauritius." And Professor Boyle put it more graphically, saying that "you might say that Mauritius was putting a gun to the Foreign Secretary's head." 36

- 22. So the dispute between the Parties on this point is not primarily, it seems to us, about the factual position. The United Kingdom thought that it was acceptable to be talking to Mauritius about the proposal while consulting with the rest of the world at the same time. And Mauritius, for the reasons expressed in the many communications which you have seen, did not. Whether its position on this issue amounted to putting a gun to the Foreign Secretary's head will for you to decide.
- 23. According to Ms. Nevill,³⁷ the exchanges show that Mauritius was "offered involvement" in the public consultation. She did not make clear what she meant by this. And indeed there is some tension between this submission and Ms. Nevill's subsequent point that Mauritius "was kept fully apprised of the fact that the public consultation would go ahead before the talks and could not be delayed."³⁸ And the first dates offered by the UK for the next round of talks were the 4th and 5th of November 2009. The public consultation opened on the 10th of November. How, exactly, were the talks supposed to feed into the consultation in the intervening five days? As you have seen, the first that Mauritius saw of the Consultation Document was with the rest of the world on the 10th of November 2009.

³⁵ Transcript, p. 590/8-11.

³⁶ Transcript, p. 884/4-5.

³⁷ Transcript, p. 564/7.

³⁸ Transcript, p. 564/10-11.

- 24. On that date, the UK Foreign Secretary called the Mauritian Prime Minister to brief him.³⁹

 You have the UK submission on this, namely that "quite simply, the Prime Minister did not ask for the public consultation to be withdrawn.
- 25. We were not quite sure that we understood that point. When Prime Minister Ramgoolam said that he "did not want the MPA consultation to take place outside of the bilateral talks between the UK and Mauritius on Chagos", on our reading, he was quite clearly saying that the bilateral talks and the consultation process were mutually incompatible.
- 26. Separately to that, as you have seen, Mauritius wrote to the UK on the same day to point out that the Consultation Document inaccurately presented Mauritius' position on the MPA.
- 27. I don't propose to take you through the next few rounds of correspondence in any detail, because you have seen them a number of times by now.

28. Ms. Nevill took you to the Mauritius' Note Verbale of the 23rd of November 2009⁴⁰ in which it stated that "since there is an on-going bilateral Mauritius-UK mechanism for talks and consultations on issues relating to the Chagos Archipelago and a third round of talks is envisaged early next year, the Government of the Republic of Mauritius believes that it is inappropriate for the consultation on the proposed Marine Protected Area, as far as Mauritius is concerned, to take place outside this bilateral framework." Repeating the words used by the UK in the Rejoinder⁴¹, Ms. Nevill said that "These were somewhat belated objections, given that the public consultation had by then been underway for nearly two weeks." As I said in the first round, however, the "two week' point is not entirely understood. Although Mauritius, through its Prime Minister, made clear its opposition to the consultation on the very day that it was published, clearly it still spent some time trying to persuade the UK that the bilateral talks were the appropriate way of consulting on the issue, but in vain.

³⁹ UKCM Annex 106

⁴⁰ MM Annex 155

⁴¹ UKR 3.13

⁴² Transcript, p. 575/10-11.

- 29. Then, of course, there was the meeting of the 27th of November between the two Prime Ministers. The United Kingdom Agent described this as a "private" meeting. 43 This implies, perhaps, some form of casual encounter. But this is not an accurate description as Prime Minister Ramgoolam makes clear in his statement, 44 the meeting was a formal one, pre-arranged by both Governments, and attended in the background by Dr. Boolell, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Mr. Kundasamy, the Mauritian High Commissioner in London.
 - 30. Now, at the end of round one, what has the UK said about this meeting? Ms. Nevill told you that "The UK has never suggested that UK officials were not aware that a misunderstanding had arisen. It is clear that it had, and it is not uncommon in any conversation between two individuals. The UK does not seek to suggest that Prime Minister Ramgoolam's stated understanding and recollection as to what was said was not genuine, nor to make light of it, but it does not accept that that was what was said by Prime Minister Brown. The Attorney General last week assured the Tribunal that he was satisfied that no commitment to put the MPA 'on hold' had been given by the Prime Minister."
 - 31. So, the UK uses words like "does not accept". But as I asked previously, what evidence are those assertions based on? It is simply not enough, we say, for a party to assert that it "does not accept" evidence which is unhelpful to it.
 - 32. The UK presents the letter of the 15th of December 2009⁴⁶ as an attempt to clear up what it describes, rather condescendingly perhaps, as the "confusion". But you will note that the letter does not refer to the meeting between the two Prime Ministers.
 - 33. You will recall that Ms. Nevill went on to claim that none of Mauritius' subsequent communications referred to Mr. Brown's undertaking of the 27th November.⁴⁷ But of ⁴³ Transcript, p. 502/8.

⁴⁴ Mauritius Folder Tab 2.8, para. 8

⁴⁵ Transcript, p. 576/14-21.

⁴⁶ MM Annex 156

course, as we have now seen, the Mauritian Foreign Minister raised it in clear terms in the letter of the 30th of December 2009.⁴⁸ And successive counsel for the UK were pressed to tell the Tribunal whether the UK ever answered that letter. Ms. Nevill and Mr. Wordsworth were reluctant to commit to an answer, so the task finally fell, late on Friday, to Professor Boyle. The straightforward answer, we say, is "no". But relying on what he described as a British culture of understatement,⁴⁹ Professor Boyle tried ingeniously to present the UK's Note Verbale of the 15th of February⁵⁰ and its letter of the 19th of March⁵¹ as answers to the point, but we suggest that this attempt failed.

8 9

34. Mauritius observes that, regardless of whether or not the UK hoped that the matter would be discussed in some further round of talks, it is very surprising that it did not see fit to place something on the written record in response to this very serious claim.

10 11 12

13

14

15

16

17 18

19

20

21 22 35. Then on Saturday, the United Kingdom produced a series of emails which touch on the conversation between the two Prime Ministers. Mauritius was greatly troubled that new evidence should be introduced at this very late stage, particularly when it must have been available to the United Kingdom throughout these proceedings. But Mauritius did not object to the admission of this evidence, as we did not wish the Tribunal to be denied the benefit of further information on the point, however belatedly supplied. Since this could and should have been addressed during the first round, however, we are grateful to the Tribunal for giving us the opportunity to hear first what the United Kingdom says about these before we respond ourselves. Because that procedure has been adopted, I will not address the emails in any detail at this stage, although we do have points to make about them. I simply note that they underline the fact that Prime Minister Ramgoolam was extremely clear with UK

١

¹⁷ Transcript, p. 578/8-12.

⁴⁸ MM/157

⁴⁹ Transcript, p. 887/24-25.

⁵⁰ MM Annex 161

⁵¹ MM Annex 163

officials at the time about the content of Mr. Brown's undertaking at the meeting of the 27th of November, just as he has described it in his Witness Statement. And Mauritius regrets that the UK has sought to address this serious matter through the belated submission of fragmentary emails and not by way of signed witness evidence.

- 36. Moving towards the final "MPA" decision, we have seen that the consultation closed on the 5th of March. And we have also seen that, as late as the letter of the 26th of March, the UK was claiming that "no decision on the creation of an MPA has been taken yet", and that "the United Kingdom is keen to continue dialogue about environmental protection within the bilateral framework or separately. The public consultation does not preclude, overtake or bypass these talks." ⁵²
- 37. But the letters are partly discussed in answer to Judge Greenwood's questions. This letter really fails to give any idea of how imminent a decision on this subject was, and you've seen from Prime Minister Ramgoolam's statement how surprised was when he received Mr. Miliband's telephone call on the 1st of April. If, as the UK now seems to argue, it was serious about obtaining Mauritius' views on the "MPA" at a third round of talks, then, judged on the 26th of March, when exactly were those talks supposed to take place? In the five days between that and the 1st of April?
- 38. Now, the United Kingdom told you that the consultation response was the biggest one ever for a UK government consultation, involving some 250,000 people. We understand that that doesn't mean 250,000 individual responses, because some responses came by way of petitions or, for example, submissions that were signed by a number of individuals, but is was still a very substantial number of individual responses. And one would think, therefore, and there is this outstanding question from the Tribunal, about the report, the assessment report, that was done on those consultation responses. One would think it would have taken some time to assess their answers and to think the matter through. We await the answer to the question of when the analysis of the consultation responses was completed. But as you have seen, in fact, the UK moved with extraordinary speed, announcing the "MPA" only 26 days after the response closed. And this prompted Judge Greenwood to ask Ms. Nevill, "What was the hurry?"

⁵² MM Annex 164

39. Mr. President, that was a question which was also asked in the UK Parliament. The 1st of April 2010 fell during the Easter Parliamentary recess. On the very first day sitting day after Easter, the 6th of April, members of both Houses insisted on having the matter debated as a matter of urgency. We referred to this debate at paragraph 4.81 of the Memorial, and we have included its text at Tab 2.1 of your new folder for today. The debates make interesting reading, and we invite you to look through them fully in due course, but for now I'll draw your attention to some key passages.

40. I should just explain this is cut and pasted from the Hansard web site on Parliament's own web page but that doesn't produce a very legible readout, so we've reformatted it so that you can actually see the text more clearly. So we see that Jeremy Corbyn, who is a Labour Member of Parliament and the chair of the All-Party Parliamentary Group on Chagos, has tabled the urgent question to ask the Foreign Secretary if he will make a statement on the declaration of a Marine Protected Area around the Chagos islands, and what consultation took place before the announcement was made. There is an initial statement by the Minister, but the passage I would then take you to is just below the second hole punch. Mr. Corbyn says, "The Minister must be aware that on 10 March I was given an undertaking in a Westminster Hall debate that consultation with interested parties, Members of Parliament and the Chagossian community would take place before an announcement was made. No such consultation has taken place, and there has been no communication with me as chair of the ⁵³ Transcript, p. 593/2.

All-Party Group on the Chagos islands or with the Chagossian communities living in Mauritius, the Seychelles or this country."

 Territory."

- 41. If we go over the page, and I apologize for just skipping along but just in the interest of time, I will take you to what we consider as some of the most helpful passages if we go over the page, Mr. Bryant, we see has an answer, and there is a passage which we take you to. It's the third paragraph down, beginning "I apologise to my hon. Friend and to the House...".

 He says, "I apologise to my hon. Friend and to the House because it became clear to us that, notwithstanding the commitment made to him in the debate" that's the debate of the 10th of March "no further information could have come in that would have made any difference to the decision on the protection of the marine environment in the British Indian Ocean
- 42. And Mr. Corbyn pressed Mr. Bryant on whether the Foreign Affairs Committee had been consulted about the decision, to which Mr. Bryant answered, if we skip over to page 4, and again I apologize, this is all interesting reading but in the interest of time, I'm just taking it quite quickly. If we go across to page 4, following the red number in the bottom, this again is Mr. Bryant, 8 lines down, after the word "interruption", and it seems from the transcript that this was a fairly heated debate at some points: "The hon. Gentleman asks from a sedentary position whether the Foreign Affairs Committee was consulted. The whole House was consulted, the country was consulted, and we extended the consultation process by weeks so that others could take part."
- 43. This appears to be a statement that, in the view of the Foreign Office, everybody in the world had been consulted in the sense that they were free to file their own response to the Consultation Document. It appears from this perhaps slightly evasive answer that the Foreign Affairs Committee was not specifically consulted on the decision and, indeed, we don't see a trace in the emails of the 30th of March to the 1st of April of any indication that that

1	committee, or any other Parliamentary committee, had been consulted before the decision
2	was taken.
3	44. Now, at the same time as this was happening, the matter was being debated in the House of
4	Lords. And if we go forward a few pages to page 9, we've included the transcript of the
5	debate in the House of Lords. Lord Wallace, a Liberal Democrat peer, tables the question:
6	"To ask Her Majesty's Government why the Foreign Secretary announced the
7	establishment of a marine protected area in the British Indian Ocean Territory during the
8	Easter Parliamentary Recess."
9	45. The representative of the Government in that debate was Baroness Kinnock of Holyhead,
10	who was the Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. And she responded
11	to the question posed by the Lord Wallace of Saltaire which you see about halfway down.
12	She elaborates on the question which he has tabled, and he says, "I thank the Minister for her
13	reminder that this was a 1 April announcement. Does she recall that in the 10 March debate
14	in the other place the Foreign Office Minister who replied promised to keep Parliament
15	informed before a final decision was taken? Does she also recall that the head of the
16	consultation exercise is on record as saying that it would take three months after the closure
17	of the consultation to complete a report? Is she also aware that a European Court of Human
18	Rights assessment is still pending on this and that the Government have not yet given any
19	indication as to how they will manage to enforce this MPA? What then is the hurry, with 20	these many uncompleted consultations and questions, for the Government to rush this out on
21	Maundy Thursday?"
22	46. Well, before I go to Baroness Kinnock's answer, we have before that, if you go over the page
23	to page 10, we have another peer, Lord Howell of Guildford saying: "One body feeling that
24	they were not well consulted or worked with over the marine park project are the
25	Government of Mauritius, in whose territory part of the marine park lies. Is the noble

Baroness aware of the considerable anger and dismay that has been expressed by Mauritian 1 2 government authorities about how they were not consulted and not involved in the whole process that the Minister described, and will she comment on that?" 3 4 47. And the answer given by Baroness Kinnock is in the paragraph immediately following: 5 "My Lords, I am aware that that has caused considerable discussion in the lead-up to an election in Mauritius. They consider the impact on Mauritius to be extremely serious, but" - and 6 7 then here we see the point that's been made by the UK on a number of occasions - "the establishment of an MPA would have no effect on our commitment to cede the territory to 8 Mauritius when it is no longer needed for defence purposes." - the stock words that we've seen 9 so many times before. - "I know that that is a sensitive issue, and, indeed, an election issue, but 10 our commitment to Mauritius remains unaffected." Just for completeness at the next tab -11 ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Ms. Macdonald, I'm sorry to interrupt you 12 13 again. 14 MS. MACDONALD: Yes. 15 ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: This is always one of the difficult things with British parliamentary figures because they go to the House of Lords and they change their 16 names. 17 MS. MACDONALD: Yes. 18 ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: But can I just be clear about two of the people 19 20 who feature in this. The first is in the Lords' debate, Lord Howell of Guildford. Am I right in thinking that's the Lord Howell who became a Minister at the Foreign Office in the coalition a 21 22 few weeks later? MS. MACDONALD: Yes. I believe that to be the case. 23 ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Thank you. 24

	•
1	And then in the House of Commons debate, there's a question asked by Meg Munn, who was a
2	Labour MP.
3	MS. MACDONALD: She was.
4	ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: The name is familiar. There is something in
5	one the emails earlier on about I suggest you send this, these details to Meg Munn.
6	And from that I had assumed she was a PPS or something like that, but the
7	question is asked as though she's just a back-bencher.
8	MS. MACDONALD: Yes, she does feature in the emails, and I haven't
9	cross-checked that reference.
10	ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Well, I don't suggest you try to do it on your
11	feet.
12	MS. MACDONALD: Yes.
13	ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: I'm trying to avoid -
14	MS. MACDONALD: I did spend some time over the weekend Googling these
15	various individuals in this debate, just to understand who they were, but we will check up and
16	find on the point of Ms. Munn –
17	ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Thank you. The United Kingdom would be
18	able to clarify the matter as well. It's just a matter of curiosity and to make sure I've properly
19	understood who is who in this.
20	MS. MACDONALD: It did strike me when I was just - I mean, obviously
21	sometimes – I apologize, it's in the UK's dramatis personae. I don't have a copy of that in front
22	of me. Oh, sorry, it's in Mauritius' dramatis personae. So, hopefully that has been answered.
23	What we do see - I mean obviously sometimes Hansard particularly in the 24	Commons is easier because it indicates party affiliations. But what we see when we investigate
25	affiliations of those speaking in the House of Lords as well is that there was real cross-party criticism being raised of the measure. It doesn't appear to divide at all along party political lines, but politicians of all three main political parties were joining in expressing their serious concern about what had taken place.

48. So we have included the 10 March debate just at Tab 2, and that's longer debate, and we certainly do not ask you to look at it all now. We just put it in there for completeness because there's reference obviously that you're seen on the 6th of April.

Is there an empty tab in Judge Hoffman's folder?

So are you missing the previous documents as well?

(Pause.)

I apologize for that, and we'll ensure that you are provided - I'm sorry that I hadn't picked up when I had been speaking that you didn't have those in front of you. I apologize.

We put this in for completeness simply because you see on the 6th of April politicians referring back to this debate on the 10th of March and the commitment which they considered to have been broken. And where we see the commitment being recorded is on page 29, if we follow the red letters. As I say, it's a lengthy debate. But we see a Mr. Lewis, that's Ivan Lewis, a Foreign Office Minister, saying, and this is the second-to-last paragraph, which starts with "I'm not being coy": "I am not being coy when I say that the consultation genuinely closed last Friday," – that was the 5th – "and we are not in a position at this stage to announce its outcome or how we intend to proceed. However, I would like to place on record that it is important that hon. Members are briefed – I suspect that this may be the responsibility of someone else, who will, I hope, come from the Labour party – when the Government decide what to do next about the marine protected area. I am cognisant of the fact that hon. Members feel that there was not sufficient consultation with parliamentarians on the Chagossians in the past before apparently unilateral decisions were made. I therefore put on record a commitment to make sure, wherever possible, that interested hon. Members are briefed before we make final decisions on the marine protected area."

- 49. Of course, as it turned out the Government broke that promise, and Parliament was never briefed before the decision was taken, which is what led to the anger and dismay expressed in the debates of the 6th of April. And the promise given by the Government on the 10th of March was broken because, as Mr. Bryant explained and as you've seen, on the 6th of April, in his view, after 10th of March "it became clear to us that, notwithstanding the commitment made to him that is to the hon. Member in the debate, no further information could have come in that would have made any difference to the decision on the protection of the marine environment in the British Indian Ocean Territory."
- 50. "No further information could have come in that would have made any difference" perhaps those words mark a convenient point to turn to Article 283.

Article 283

51. The UK devoted a whole speech to the legal requirements of that Article, and although Mr. Wood accused Mauritius of a "cavalier" attitude to its requirements, ⁵⁴ on careful analysis we would submit that the United Kingdom has said nothing to persuade you that the hurdle should be any higher than Mauritius has described it. Mr. Wood explained that Article 283 was part of the "package deal" and was included in order to secure acceptance by reluctant States of the Convention's compulsory dispute resolution procedures. So far so good – there is no dispute about any of that. But Mr. Wood engaged very little with the actual caselaw on Article 283, describing it as "not entirely satisfactory". ⁵⁵ and saying that the direct Article 283 cases "turn on their own particular facts and do not assist [Mauritius'] case." Now every case turns on its own facts, in one sense, but this tends to be the phrase that advocates

⁵⁴ Transcript, p. 748/8.

⁵⁵ Transcript, p. 737/9.

⁵⁶ Transcript, p. 738/8-9.

Convention and should be applied..."

use to describe cases which are not helpful to their argument. Instead, Mr. Wood relied heavily on the Anderson article at Tab 55 of the UK folder. I don't ask you to turn that up just now, but I would, in due course, draw your attention to the very final paragraph of that article, which Mr. Wood didn't take you to, and that paragraph says: "Both the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea and arbitral tribunals have shown a reluctance to find that article 283 has not been complied with. [...] The requirement imposed by article 283 is not to enter into a lengthy discussion or to make genuine attempts to reach a compromise over the means of settlement. The obligation is simply to exchange views or to consult, and to do so expeditiously. So long as the applicant can produce some evidence of relevant exchanges, article 283 is unlikely to act as a bar to proceedings. However, it forms part of the

- 52. So the parties agree that Article 283 forms a threshold jurisdictional requirement, and Mauritius must satisfy it. Mauritius has not sought to ignore it or to circumvent it. But the UK showed you no authority, judicial or otherwise, to indicate that the hurdle is a high one, and even the article relied on so heavily by Mr. Wood indicates the hurdle's very modest height. It can be stepped over lightly, we would suggest it does not need to be jumped. In my submission, there is nothing in this article or indeed in the caselaw to detract from the propositions which I put to you in the first round and which I do not repeat here.
- 53. Possibly the only area of implicit legal disagreement between the Parties relates to the need to refer to a specific treaty or its provisions. The UK's factual submissions on Article 283, advanced by Mr. Wordsworth, were replete with criticism of Mauritius for not referring to UNCLOS and its specific provisions. In arguing in this way, the UK appears to ignore the clear words of the International Court in Georgia v Russia that "it is not necessary that a State must expressly refer to a specific treaty in its exchanges with the other State to be able later to invoke that instrument before the Court."⁵⁷ It follows from this, of course, that a State need not refer to specific treaty articles either. Rather, as the Court went on to say, "the exchanges must refer to the subject-matter of the treaty with sufficient clarity to enable the State against which a claim is made to identify that there is, or may be, a dispute with regard to that subject-matter."⁵⁸

54. Now, I can deal with these legal issues briefly because this is not, in our submission, a complex or a difficult point of law. The real question is the application of the principles that Mauritius has identified to the facts. On that you were addressed by Mr. Wordsworth. He sketched out a highly formalistic legal framework⁵⁹ which, on the facts of this case, would mean that nothing said or done by Mauritius before the 1st of April 2010 can in any way contribute to fulfilling the requirements of Article 283. On this analysis, you can simply disregard the record before that date. We say that this approach is unrealistic and finds no support in the caselaw. And indeed, Mr. Wordsworth cited no authority for his analysis.

55. So, although the UK's position is therefore that everything before the 1st of April 2010 is entirely irrelevant to Article 283, Mr. Wordsworth went on to carry out a good deal of textual analysis of the record before that date. His position seems to be that Mauritius' communications in that period are simultaneously irrelevant and deficient.

56. Before addressing those criticisms, briefly, a word about the UK's selection of documents. They placed in Tab 56 of their folder, the documents to which I specifically referred in my Article 283 oral submissions, ostensibly to help you in assessing the strength of Mauritius' case on the point. This would be a sensible approach if the written pleadings did not exist, and if we had not made extensive speeches on the facts before I addressed you on Article 283. But as I emphasized to you in my submissions on Article 283, that they were not intended to supplement or replace either the written pleadings or the factual speeches and nor could they have done, given the time available and our desire not to bore you with repetition.

⁵⁷ Georgia v Russia, para. 30. UKCM, Authority 37.

⁵⁸ Georgia v Russia, para. 30. UKCM, Authority 37.

⁵⁹ Transcript, p. 745/3 - 753/18.

- 57. The proper approach, in Mauritius' view, is to approach the record as a whole. The UK's approach does very little justice to this complex, long-running dispute. Mauritius' repeated references to its specific rights in the Archipelago, including its fishing rights, are dismissed by the UK as simply part of its overarching claim to sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago. But even then on what it calls "the sovereignty claim" in truth a claim concerning whether the UK is or is not "the coastal State" the UK will not accept that the requirements of Article 283 have been met, even in the face of documents where Mauritius specifically said that the UK was not the coastal State for the purposes of declaring maritime zones. And the UK still offers no explanation for the volte face on this point between its pleadings at bifurcation stage and its Counter-Memorial.
- 58. Mr. President, I do not propose to go back through the record at this stage. But what it shows, I would submit, is that by the time Mauritius initiated these proceedings, the "MPA" had been unilaterally imposed on it, in violation of a commitment given at Prime Ministerial level. Mauritius had made it clear for a long period of time that, in its view, the UK lacked any sovereign rights over the Chagos Archipelago, including the right to declare maritime zones. It had made it clear that such a measure would violate rights which Mauritius had asserted for many years, of which the UK was fully aware, and which in many cases were self-evidently incompatible with a no-take MPA.
- 59. The UK takes issue with Mauritius' assessment that, by the time it brought this claim, further exchanges were futile. But that is the judgment that Mauritius made, and I would suggest that it was entirely reasonable in the circumstances. The "MPA" had been rushed through. The ⁶⁰ Letter dated 1 December 2005 from the Prime Minister of Mauritius to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, MM, Annex 132; Letter dated 4 January 2006 from the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to the Prime Minister of Mauritius, MM, Annex 133.

1	new Government was keeping it in place. And it had become clear, we say, that if this
2	important, long-running dispute was to be resolved, it would have to be resolved in this
3	forum, before you, and not in meeting rooms in Port Louis or London.
4	60. Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal, in my submission there is nothing to suggest that the
5	framers of the Convention, or those who have subsequently shaped and developed its
6	caselaw, would intend Article 283 to pose any barrier to an examination of the merits of this
7	case.
8	60. Mr. President, that concludes my submissions, happily within time.
9	61. Can I ask whether members of the Tribunal have any questions?
10	PRESIDENT SHEARER: No, I think not, Ms. Macdonald.
11	MS. MACDONALD: In that case I thank you, Mr. President. We can take the
12	break now –
13	PRESIDENT SHEARER: Take the break now.
14	MS. MACDONALD: And after that I would ask you to call Professor
15	Crawford.
16	PRESIDENT SHEARER: Thank you very much.
17	Well, I think it will be a 20-minute break, rather than 15, and we'll resume at five
18	past 11.
19	Thank you.
20	(Brief recess.)
21	PRESIDENT SHEARER: Mr. Crawford, before you begin, the Tribunal notes
22	that there's been a change in your status, too, since our last meeting in Dubai, and it congratulates
23	you on the Award of the Companion of the Order of Australia.
24	PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Thank you.
25	Thank you, Sir, no longer Australia's highest civic honor. That's an in-joke.

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal, just to respond to Judge Greenwood's 1 2 question before the break, Ms. Munn was the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, UK Foreign and Commonwealth Office, in our dramatis personae. 3 ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Thank you. I gather she left office in 4 5 October 2008, which explains why she's asking a question as a back-bencher in the debate. That's what was puzzling me. 6 7 Crawford statement Mauritius v United Kingdom 8 Reply of Mauritius 9 Speech 3: The United Kingdom is not the coastal State: Merits 10 Professor James Crawford AC SC 11 Introduction I. 12 13 Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal: 14 I will deal with three questions in this reply: first, the status of the Chagos Archipelago as 15 part of Mauritius before 1965; secondly, the applicability of the law of self-determination at that time, and thirdly, the validity of Mauritius' purported consent to excision. Professor Sands, who 16 follows me, will deal with your jurisdiction to decide these questions. 17 The status of the Chagos Archipelago as part of Mauritius before 1965 18 Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal: 19 20 2. The Chagos Archipelago formed part of the territory of Mauritius. You've only to read the documentary record to see that all parties proceeded on the basis that the Archipelago was 21 being separated from the colony. To take only one example, the minutes of the meeting of the 22 Defence and Overseas Policy Committee held on the 23rd of September 1965, at 4:00 p.m., 23 produced by the United Kingdom last Friday, refer to the 'detachment of the islands' and to their 24 being handed 'back' to Mauritius. You cannot detach something not previously attached whether

- it's a retina or an archipelago. You cannot hand something back if it did not originate there—whether an island to a colony or a letter proposing marriage to a rejected suitor. No one at the time pretended that the excision was okay because it was not an excision.
 - 3. The UK repeated last week its argument that the Archipelago was attached to Mauritius merely 'for reasons of administrative convenience, not because it was seen as part of a territorial unit.' I pause, at Ms. Macdonald's request, to correct Sir Michael's allegation that she mistakenly asserted that this argument was concocted for the purpose of the case. That's not what she said: she drew attention to the fact that the argument was, 'taken directly from the bygone world of 1960's British colonialism, and it is no more justified now than it was then.'
 - 4. The burden of Sir Michael's remarks was that because the UK termed the Archipelago a dependency before 1965, you should not consider it a part of Mauritius for the purposes of the law of self-determination. In response I would make two points. First, the internal law and practice of the UK was not consistent: the UK regarded Mauritius as including the Archipelago for many purposes. Secondly, whatever the position under what Sir Michael himself describes as the 'finer points of British colonial constitutional law,'64 the reality was that the Archipelago was treated as a part of Mauritius by the UK so far as the outside world was concerned.
 - 5. As to my first point, the status of the Archipelago under British colonial law and practice does not support the UK position. Even Sir Michael acknowledges that 'for certain purposes ... the Chagos Archipelago seems to have been treated as part of the territory of Mauritius.' 65
 - 6. In fact, successive constitutions of the colony of Mauritius defined it as including its dependencies. For example, the Constitution of 1964 the last before the excision has a definition of Mauritius which reads: "Mauritius" means the island of Mauritius and the ⁶¹ Transcript, Day 5, p. 511, lines 10-11.

⁶² Transcript, Day 5, p. 511, line 1.

⁶³ Transcript, Day 2, p. 84, lines 22-23.

⁶⁴ Transcript, Day 5, p. 511, line 6.

⁶⁵ Transcript, Day 6, p. 640, lines 23-25.

Dependencies of Mauritius. 66 Persons born in the Archipelago were citizens of Mauritius. This contrasts with the usual relationship between the UK and its direct dependencies, where a separate citizenship is provided for the dependency. Further, the law of the Archipelago was essentially the law of Mauritius: the Governor of Mauritius extended laws of Mauritius to the Archipelago, and there was no separate law-making body. After it was excised it had to be made into a separate colony.

- 7. In fact, the UK seems to have been liberal with the term 'dependency' even Rodrigues, itself a dependency, was given its own dependencies⁶⁷- dependencies are dependencies, perhaps they should have been excised back to Mauritius- even though these were tiny uninhabited islands. Whether an island was determined a part of the main island or a dependency seems to have been fairly arbitrary. The convenience of administering the Archipelago together with Mauritius must have been real, since it was done for 150 years. But whether or not bureaucratic inertia contributed to that position, the close connection between Mauritius and the Archipelago for such a length of time would undoubtedly have resulted in the Archipelago becoming independent as part of Mauritius, but for the excision.
- 8. My second point is that in truth these subtleties of UK colonial constitutional law, even if they were real, which they're not, were not determinative. The UK treated the Archipelago as part of Mauritius in its dealings with the outside world. Sir Michael Wood conceded the distinction between what was done internally and what was done externally. For example, when the UK extended the application of treaties to its overseas territories, a reference to Mauritius in the relevant list of territories would be taken as extending the treaty to the Archipelago and not simply the main island. This is illustrated by the extension of the European Convention on Human ⁶⁶ Section 90(1).

⁶⁷ The Interpretation and General Clauses Ordinance 1957: section 3(1), "Rodrigues" means the Island of Rodrigues with the Dependencies thereof'.

⁶⁸Transcript, Day 5, p. 517, lines 8-9.

 $^{^{69}}$ Transcript, Day 6, p. 642, lines 9-11.

Rights to Mauritius. As the UK accepted in its pleading in the recent case in Strasbourg, the notification extending the Convention to Mauritius included the Archipelago though there was no express mention of it.⁷⁰

9. Crucially, when the excision proposal was under consideration the UK continued to treat the Archipelago as a part of Mauritius. Indeed, otherwise, its actions were incomprehensible. While affirming the legal right to detach the Archipelago unilaterally and without the consent of the Council of Ministers, the UK went to great lengths to try and secure this consent. It gave Mauritius £3 million in compensation – compensation for loss of territory, not for resettlement of the residents, and certainly not for the purposes of 'securing a new source of income for their economy', as Sir Michael so unfortunately asserted; it gave undertakings with regard to fishing, mineral and oil rights. Most curious of all – if the UK did not regard the Archipelago as belonging to Mauritius – it promised that the Archipelago would 'revert' to Mauritius when it was no longer needed for defence purposes. It was in Mauritius that the majority of the inhabitants were resettled, and the UK made legal provision for them to become Mauritian citizens on independence. The reality was that the Archipelago was treated as part of the territory of Mauritius, and it is as an integral part of Mauritius that it must be regarded for the purpose of the law on self-determination. I turn to that law.

III. Status and effect of the law of self-determination at the time

10. In his presentation last week, Sir Michael repeated the UK's contention that the right to self-determination in respect of colonial territories was not part of customary international law at the time of the excision or even at the time of Mauritius' independence. His view of custom, I must say, is static to the point of catalepsy. Sir Michael is now trying to persuade you that it was only in 1970, with the adoption of the Friendly Relations Declaration, that the right was established in international law.⁷¹ He might have been tempted to push that arbitrary line even further into the future if the International Court's clear affirmation of the legal character of self-determination in the Namibia advisory opinion a year later (with its reference to previous practice) did not debar him from doing so.

⁷⁰ Transcript, Day 6, from p. 641, line 25, to p. 642, lines 1-4.

⁷¹ Transcript, Day 6, p. 710, lines 4-6.

11. So Sir Michael adopted 24 October 1970 as the date on which self-determination emerged, like Athena, fully formed and fully-armed into the world. The implication is that it only became a legal right applicable in the colonial context once decolonization was more or less over and the international community had little need for it – like an exhausted marathon runner arriving at the stadium to find only the cleaners cleaning it up. The creation of dozens of newly independent States through decolonization in the 1960s apparently had nothing to do with the law of self-determination. Indeed, he might add, the colonial powers – which he cutely reclassifies as 'specially affected States' — only recognised the right to independence of peoples under their domination applies ex post facto. According to Sir Michael, independence was granted ex gratia – there speaks the colonial voice – because the right that everyone recognises today did not form part of the actual process of granting of independence to the great majority of non-self-governing territories. It was as if the non-self-governing territories gate-crashed a diplomatic reception, to which, it was afterwards conceded, they should have been invited!

- 12. Mr. President, I have addressed the Tribunal on this question in the first round, and I do not need to repeat myself. I will simply focus on a particular point that was central to the UK's case as put last week: the attempt to undermine Resolution 1514. I'll make three responses.
- 13. First, Sir Michael refers to the jurisprudence of the Court, especially the Wall opinion, to suggest that it was the Friendly Relations Declaration, not the Colonial Declaration, that fully articulated the right to colonial self-determination in international law.⁷³ Now, the Wall opinion concerned a situation of foreign occupation, the occupation of Palestine territories by Israel. It should come as no surprise that in a case concerning foreign occupation the Court and the ⁷² Transcript, Day 6, p. 707, line 22.

⁷³ Transcript, Day 6, p. 709, lines 1-18.

16

17

18

19 20

21

22 23

Declaration, which is more general than the Colonial Declaration and had a quite different 2 agenda. 3 14. In contrast, in the Western Sahara advisory opinion – a central case on decolonization – it 4 5 was the Colonial Declaration that the Court applied as the main benchmark for its analysis. The Court begins by noting that '[t]he principle of self-determination as a right of peoples, and its 6 7 application for the purpose of bringing all colonial situations to a speedy end, was enunciated in [the Colonial Declaration]'. 74 The Colonial Declaration, the Court added at paragraph 57, 8 'provides the basis for the process of decolonization which has resulted since 1960 in the creation 9 of many States which are today Members of the United Nations'. 75 Sir Michael may try to 10 persuade you that 'the basis' does not mean the 'legal basis': the judges in 1975 would have been 11 perplexed by that suggestion. Later in the opinion, the Court also refers to the Friendly Relations 12 13 Declaration, but this is only to reiterate the rules enunciated in the Colonial Declaration for colonial territories and to establish the continuity between the two instruments.⁷⁶ 14 15 15.

participants in the proceedings would find it more helpful to refer to the Friendly Relations

15. Secondly, Sir Michael has pointed to 'substantive differences' between the Colonial Declaration and the Friendly Relations Declaration. These are said to demonstrate that, '[it] cannot be said that the customary law of self-determination became established in the course of the decade of the 1960s'.⁷⁷ He first claims that while the Colonial Declaration is absolute in its prescription of independence, the Friendly Relations Declaration is flexible, envisaging different modalities for implementation of the right. But this is to ignore General Assembly Resolution 1541(XV), the twin sister of the Colonial Declaration, adopted on 15 December 1960. Resolution 1541 lays down in Principles VI to IX the modalities of the exercise of self-determination to which the Friendly Relations Declaration later referred – independence, free ⁷⁴Western Sahara, Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports 1975, para. 55.

⁷⁵lbid, para. 57.

⁷⁶lbid, para 58.

⁷⁷Transcript, Day 6, p. 710, lines 10-11.

association, integration with an independent State. In 1970, the Friendly Relations Declaration added to this list the choice to adopt 'any other political status freely determined by a people'. But there's full continuity between the two instruments, a point the Court in Western Sahara made when it noted that the 'any other political status' proviso merely 'reiterates the basic need to take account of the wishes of the people concerned'. 79

16. A further 'substantive difference' that Sir Michael identified in the Friendly Relations Declaration is 'remedial self-determination'. 80 He was of course referring to the saving clause according to which self-determination is without prejudice to the territorial integrity of 'sovereign and independent States conducting themselves in compliance with the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples'. The Colonial Declaration does not contain a similar reference, as Sir Michael pointed out.

17. But this only serves to demonstrate that the Friendly Relations Declaration was part of a very different agenda when compared to the Colonial Declaration. By the late 1960s, it was beyond question that self-determination applied in the colonial context so as to confer a right on peoples to decide on their political status including a right to independence. Hence the unequivocal reaffirmation in the Friendly Relations Declaration of the rules already proclaimed in the Colonial Declaration. By the late 1960s, the law of self-determination was facing a new question, whether the right to self-determination applied outside the colonial context. That saving clause hinting at remedial self-determination in the Friendly Relations Declaration does not cast any doubt on the rules laid down for non-self-governing territories in the Colonial Declaration.

18. Third, Sir Michael failed to remind you that the 1982 Convention itself makes no less than three references to the Colonial Declaration. The first of these is in Article 140, entitled 'Benefit of Mankind', which prescribes:

⁷⁸ UNGA Res 2625(XXV).

⁷⁹ Western Sahara, Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports 1975, para 58.

⁸⁰ Transcript, Day 6, p. 710, lines 22-23.

'[a]ctivities in the Area shall ... be carried out for the benefit of mankind as a whole, irrespective 1 of the geographical location of States... and taking into particular consideration the interests and 2 needs of developing States and of peoples who have not attained full independence or other 3 self-governing status recognized by the United Nations in accordance with General Assembly 4 5 Resolution 1514 (XV) and other relevant General Assembly resolutions.' The other two references are in Article 305, which refers to 'all self-governing associated States 6 7 which have chosen that status in an act of self-determination supervised and approved by the United Nations in accordance with General Assembly Resolution 1514, and 'all territories which 8 enjoy full internal self-government, but have not attained full independence in accordance with General Assembly Resolution 1514'. 10 Then there is Resolution III appended to the Final Act of the Conference, which states in 19. 11 paragraph 1(a) that: 'In the case of a territory whose people have not attained full independence 12 13 or other self-governing status recognized by the United Nations, or a territory under colonial 14 domination, provisions concerning rights and interests under the Convention shall be 15 implemented for the benefit of the people of the territory with a view to promoting their well-being and development.' [emphasis added] 16 Churchill and Lowe characterise this as a '[s]pecial provision ... concerning the beneficial 17 ownership of the resources of maritime zones of non-independent territories'.81 18 Now, it's not necessary to go into the controversial history of Resolution III, which – in its 19 prior incarnation as Article 136 of the ISNT – was in Rosenne's words 'a highly divisive issue'. 82 20 Mauritius does not need to rely substantively on that proposal or on Resolution III; we rely on 21 specific and binding commitments. We don't need general auditory phrases. But the totality of 22 23 these provisions demonstrate that the drafters of the 1982 Convention did not share to any degree $^{^{81}}$ R.R. Churchill & A.V. Lowe, The Law of the Sea (3rd. ed.), 1999, p. 157.

⁸² Center for Oceans Law and Policy, University of Virginia Law School, United Nations Convention On The Law Of The Sea 1982: A Commentary, Vol. V, p. 482.

Sir Michael's scepticism about the status and significance of the Colonial Declaration. They recognised that, as regards issues of decolonization and the self-determination of colonial peoples, the Colonial Declaration was and is the controlling text.

21. Before moving on, a quick word on territorial integrity, uti possidetis and persistent objection. In my presentation in the first round I established that the territorial integrity of colonial territories is a guarantee attached to the right of colonial self-determination. This is, of course, reflected in the Colonial Declaration, paragraph 6, and it was applied contemporaneously by the General Assembly in Resolution 2066(XX). Territorial integrity is a logical consequence of the right to self-determination – if the law were to authorise colonial powers to dispose of colonial territory in the lead-up to independence as they please, the right to self-determination would be frustrated or denied to that extent. Sir Michael has not confronted this argument. He replied by challenging the resolutions which we invoked.⁸³ He referred you to a table included in the Rejoinder, displaying the voting records in those resolutions.⁸⁴

22. Here two points must be made. The first, the table shows that the United Kingdom voted against only three of the relevant resolutions. These three concerned disputes in which the UK was involved or had a direct interest. Resolution 2238 on the situation in Oman, condemned the UK not only for breaching the principle of self-determination, but also for concessions given to foreign monopolies and the maintenance of military bases. Resolution 2353 (XXII) (1967) concerned the dispute between the UK and Spain over Gibraltar. Resolution 1899 involved the condemnation of South Africa for not implementing the Charter in relation to South West Africa. The inconsistency the UK sees in these voting records in no way implicates the integrity of territorial colonies, or suggests that, as a matter of principle, it was being called into question.

23. My second point is that the Friendly Relations Declaration, which Sir Michael is happy to recognise as restating customary international law, provides: 'The territory of a colony or ⁸³ Transcript, Day 6, pp. 711-713, paras. 37-38.

⁸⁴ UKR, pg. 101.

15

16

17

18

19 20

21 22

other Non-Self-Governing Territory has, under the Charter, a status separate and distinct from the 1 territory of the State administering it; and such separate and distinct status under the Charter shall 2 exist until the people of the colony or Non-Self-Governing Territory have exercised their right to 3 self-determination in accordance with the Charter, and particularly its purposes and principles.'85 4 5 The UK has given various examples of territories which were carved up by colonial administrators.⁸⁶ But our concern is not with administrative rearrangements during the long 6 7 course of colonial rule; it's with the division of colonial territories for such purposes as the removal of the entirety of their population for the creation of military bases in the run-up to 8 independence. As to these, the territorial integrity rule was applied, there was international 9 scrutiny, and the UK was well aware of the constraints. They rushed to get the excision 10 through in the days before the General Assembly could consider 'The Question of Mauritius,' 11 and they were criticised precisely on the apprehended grounds in Resolution 2066. 12 13

25. With respect to uti possidetis, Sir Michael continues to insist that it 'fully supports the United Kingdom's position,' ⁸⁷ referring again to Burkina Faso/Mali. But uti possidetis, the Chamber then said, 'is logically connected with the phenomenon of the obtaining of independence, whenever it occurs, wherever it occurs': its 'obvious purpose is to prevent the independence and stability of new States being endangered by fratricidal struggles provoked by the challenging of frontiers following the withdrawal of the administering power'. ⁸⁸ Uti possidetis may well be invoked by a newly-independent State against a self-determination claim made by another newly-independent State. But it cannot be invoked by a colonial power against a self-determination claim made by a former colony. The implication of the United Kingdom's argument is that by granting independence a colonial power ceases to be responsible for any ⁸⁵ UNGA Res 2625 (XXV).

⁸⁶ Transcript, Day 6, pp. 643-645.

⁸⁷ Transcript, Day 6, p. 698, lines 19-20.

⁸⁸ Burkina Faso/Mali, ICJ Reports 1986, para. 23.

breaches of the law of self-determination that it may have committed before then. That is not the function of the uti possidetis doctrine.

As to persistent objection, Sir Michael has suggested that the UK 'did not then - that is in 26. 1965 or 1968 – accept the right of self-determination as a rule of international law'. 89 But a State cannot avoid the application of a customary rule by simply saying that it doesn't 'accept' it. The burden of persistent objection - if it exists in international law, and that is controversial - is onerous. Sir Michael describes the points I made in the first round as 'pretty unconvincing', 90 but offered no response to them. The record speaks for itself, but I would just cite from a 1966 memorandum of an unnamed British official writing about the excision, and this is quoted in two of the Bancoult cases in the UK: 'We', that is the British Government, 'could not accept the principles governing our otherwise universal behaviour in our dependent territories; we could not accept that the interests of the inhabitants were paramount and that we should develop self-government there.' He's talking about Mauritius. 'We therefore consider that the best way in which we can satisfy these objectives [I interpolate that by objectives he meant the objectives of getting the Archipelago, removing its population and using it as a military base], when our action comes under scrutiny in the United Nations, would be to assert from the start, if the need arose, that this territory did not fall within the scope of Chapter XI of the United Nations Charter.'91

That's the language of evasion; it's not the language of persistent objection.

IV. The UK breached the law of self-determination by excising the Chagos Archipelago

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal:

27. I turn now to the argument on the character of the 'consent' given to the excision –

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Professor Crawford, before you do that, may I just ask a question. I understand that Mauritius' principal position is that, as of 1965, the principal

1 2

3

4 5

6 7

8

9

10

11

12 13

14

15

16

17 18

19 20

21

22 23

⁸⁹ Transcript, Day 6, p. 707, lines 22-23.

⁹⁰ Ibid, line 23.

⁹¹ Cited in Rv. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs ex parte Bancoult [2006] EWHC 1038 (Admin) para. 27, available at: http://www.bailii.org/ew/cases/EWHC/Admin/2006/1038.html.

 stated in Paragraph 6 of Resolution 1514 already formed a part of customary international law and that the United Kingdom had not established itself as a persistent objector to that; that's right, is it not?

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: That's right.

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: But let us suppose for the sake of this discussion that the critical date of which – perhaps "critical date" is not the right expression – the date at which 1514 Paragraph 6 comes to reflect customary international law is after 1965, but before independence in 1968. Did I understand you to be saying in the first round that even then it would apply to render the excision a breach of international law?

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Yes, I said that, sir, and I meant it. For example, the United Kingdom might have had second thoughts and returned the Archipelago to Mauritius or done other equivalent things. It did that with the three Seychelles islands which were taken away and then returned before independence. In that situation, there will be no breach of the principle because there was a locus poenitentiae in effect between 1965 and 1968. The crucial date is the date of independence because that's the date the excision has definitive effect.

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Well, help me a little bit as to how that happens. I take your point about if the United Kingdom had had second thoughts, but, of course, the United Kingdom didn't have second thoughts. On the hypothesis I put to you, the excision of the Archipelago in 1965 would not have been a violation of international law. Therefore, at the time of independence, Mauritius would not have included the archipelago, so, how does — how is the excision retrospectively undone, as it were? Would you undo it so far back as the excision of the Seychelles from Mauritius in 1903? Obviously not. I'm just puzzled as to how that alternative line of argument works.

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Sir, customary international law doesn't develop by legislation. It develops by the instantiation of its principles in practice over time. The territorial integrity rule was articulated as a rule of law as part of the law of self-determination in 1960, and it was applied consistently by the General Assembly in the sense that there was international scrutiny of every case to which it was applicable subsequent to that. The fact that on the first or second occasion when a situation arises and when a question of the application of a rule comes to be examined there might be doubts about it doesn't stop customary international law from working. Or in that case customary international law would be always there after the event, like the exhausted marathon runner. Customary international law is part of the practice of States which evolves through being done, the appetite comes through eating, if I could quote an Italian maxim, which is perhaps inapplicable. The situation is that the United Kingdom in 1965 apprehended very clearly, as you saw from the passage I just read, that the principle would be applied, and it was applied. There wasn't a date between 1965 and 1968 in which the law had changed. The law had been developing, in fact, ever since the enactment of the conclusion of the Charter being articulated through the fifties and coming to effective fruition in 1960.

So, my first response is to deny the hypothesis on which the question is put. My second response is to say it follows from the character of customary international law that you can't point to a precise day on which a particular rule is to be applied. The rule is part of the system, and it's applied through the way States respond to given situations, in the same way that you can't say that the Truman Proclamation was customary international law the day after, but you can't say it wasn't. The question is when the issue did arise.

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Well, I understand that, Professor Crawford, and I grant you that you don't accept the hypothesis, but let's just stick with the hypothesis for a moment. It's also a well-established principle of international law that the legality of an action has to be judged by the law as it stood at the date that the action took place. So, surely the question has to be, was the excision a violation of international law at the time the excision took place, which is November 1965.

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Sir, the proposition that the law has to be applied at the date at which an event takes place assumes that you know for certain on the day that an event takes place what the law is. But with customary international law, because it evolves on a continuing basis, you can't know for certain what it is on the same day. You didn't know about the legality of the Truman Proclamation. If the Truman Proclamation was unlawful, then how could it produce legal effects? It was the first time the issue had been raised. What mattered in processing the legality of the Truman Proclamation was the reaction of States to that Declaration, and the reaction was generally favorable or not unfavorable, so we now say the Truman Proclamation was the beginning of a process. We don't have to say that for the territorial integrity rule because the territorial integrity rule had already been articulated in 1960, and when the issue arose in 1965 and then arose in some other cases in the 1960, the rule was applied.

So, in that situation, we can say in retrospect that the rule already existed in 1960, but you can say that because you know what States did at the time. Customary international law was applied as a process of doing things, and the things were done here, and they were apprehended. It was apprehended by the United Kingdom that it would be done. There is no question of reliance by the United Kingdom on the legality of conduct in 1965. There was no reliance at all. There was evasion.

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Thank you. I'm grateful to you for clarifying what Mauritius' argument was. I wasn't clearly clear about it at the end of the first round.

 $\label{eq:president} \mbox{PRESIDENT SHEARER:} \ \ \mbox{I'm sorry, Professor Crawford.} \ \ \mbox{Judge Wolfrum has a}$ question, too.

ARBITRATOR WOLFRUM: Professor Crawford, I have a follow-up question, if you don't mind. You have so far spoken, if I understood you correctly, with the excision of the Chagos Islands and on the basis of territorial integrity referring to Resolution 1514, but you have not touched upon the taking away of the population from the island at that moment. How do you see that? Shouldn't we separate between the territorial aspect and the aspect concerning the population?

Thank you.

 PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Sir, it was known at the time that the excision was being carried out for purposes of establishing a military base and for eliminating the population, and you see that in the passage I just took you to. It was an aspect of the illegality.

One might take another case where there was, say, a bona fide territorial dispute between two neighbouring colonies as you could have, and the metropolitan State corrected that situation prior to independence. It would be reacting bona fide in the interest of preventing a further future conflict. The situation was quite different, and the expulsion of the population, which was envisaged in 1965, was an aspect of the illegality. It wasn't a separate illegality. We have never pleaded it as a separate illegality because in that case it wouldn't, especially if it occurred at a later time, necessarily affect the sovereignty issue, and Mauritius' claim is to sovereignty over the Archipelago. Of course, there are associated questions of resettlement, and that was part of the agenda, and of the events, but the principal complaint was of the excision of the Archipelago and associated conduct.

ARBITRATOR WOLFRUM: Perhaps I didn't make myself fully understood. We are sitting here just by chance in an area where, after the First World War, actually in 1920, there was a huge repopulation/resettlement program took place — I don't want to go into that. Hasn't already since then a public international opinio iuris formed that such resettlements should not take place?

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: There was a great deal of controversy about the exchange of Greek and Turkish populations. Of course, that was done pursuant to a Treaty at a time when that opinio iuris had not formed. The application of the rule in the post-1945 period is, of course, another question. We don't need to take a position for the purposes of this case on the independent illegality of the expulsion of the population because that's not the question that's stated in this case. The question that's at stake in this case is the "MPA".

For the purposes of the Article 300 argument, it could be more relevant because the Article 300 argument implies that when you do something, you do it at least with some relationship to the stated purpose, and as I will say tomorrow, there exists some evidence that one of the stated purposes behind the "MPA" was to prevent the resettlement of the Archipelago under British rule, which would be an unlawful act because it affects Mauritius, independent of the sovereignty dispute. So, we would say that it's relevant, and I will make that point tomorrow in relation to Article 300.

But the Archipelago could be resettled, and the Attorney General said it might be resettled even under British rule, and Mauritius' primary case is that the excision was in itself unlawful, for reasons associated with self-determination in respect of the entire population of Mauritius, though the resettlement was an aspect of the conduct which made things worse, if I could put it in those terms.

ARBITRATOR WOLFRUM: Thank you.

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: So, I return – perhaps I should say 'revert' – to Sir Michael's argument on the character of the 'consent' given to the excision. The strategy was to fixate on the single word 'duress' and to steer your attention away from the legal framework which applied to the events of 1965. He did not want you to think about the 'deal' that was reached in 1965 or the alleged 'consent' that was given from the perspective of the law of self-determination, because that makes it impossible to justify the 'deal' and the 'consent.' So he invited you to apply the strict standard of duress applicable in the law of treaties, notably under Articles 52 and 53 of the Vienna Convention. 92

⁹² Transcript, Day 6, pp. 714-715.

28. Replying to Judge Wolfrum's question, Sir Michael told you that Prime Minister Wilson's 1 veiled threat of withholding independence on 23 September 1965 'doesn't begin to approach the 2 kind of act ... that vitiates consent. Negotiations, after all, can be tough, things are said, threats are 3 made.⁹³ He said that if pressure during the negotiation of a treaty could be subsequently raised to 4 vitiate consent, 'that would be an extremely serious state of affairs' for the stability of treaties. 94 5 29. Here the Tribunal should be – if I may say so with respect – extremely cautious. The 6 7 Vienna Convention does indeed place great weight upon the stability of treaties. The grounds of invalidity it sets out are numerus clausus according to Article 42(1). The foundations of the treaty 8 system are the principle of sovereign equality and the corollary pacta sunt servanda. States are 9 very different from each other in reality, and we all know that powerful States such as the UK are 10 in a position to put great pressure on newly independent States, especially small ones such as 11 Mauritius, and even on not so newly independent states. They can even tell tribunals under Part 12 13 XV what is acceptable to them and what is not. But as a matter of law, because States share the 14 attribute of sovereign equality, it's only in the most extreme circumstances that the law will 15 repudiate agreements between States. 30. But the events of 1965 did not concern two independent States. The negotiations did not 16 take place in the realm of sovereign equality. When we look at the events of 1965, we are looking 17 18 at the relations between a colony and its metropolitan State, a point made by you, Judge Kateka, on Friday. As to these relations, it is not the legal regime of the Vienna Convention that applied. 19 20 International law has developed a protective regime in relation to colonial peoples. Under this 21 protective regime, metropolitan States are not at liberty to 'frighten' their colonies with hope of independence, nor are they at liberty to impose terms that compromise an ability to decide on the 22 23 political future of the colony. Under the law of self-determination, the position of the colonial power is one of responsibility as well as authority. The UK emphasises its authority to the point of denying entirely its responsibility, to the point indeed – you heard Mr. Wordsworth on Friday – of incoherence.

24

⁹³ Transcript, Day 6, p. 715, lines 19-21.

 $^{^{94}\,}$ Transcript, Day 6, from p. 715, line 25 to p. 716, line 1.

31. We must have clarity as to the applicable legal framework. The basis of our claim is not that consent was vitiated by duress as identified in Articles 52 and 53. Though we stand by the proposition that the term 'duress' provides an apt description of what happened, we have never suggested that the 'agreement' of 1965 was a treaty. You cannot make a treaty with yourself, which is why all of my promises to lose weight are completely ineffective. The Council of Ministers, which signed off on the excision (subject to conditions), was a body presided over by a British official, one which contained nominees as well as elected representatives. Our legal claim is that the 'consent' purportedly given by the Mauritian Ministers did not meet the requirements of the law of self-determination, and is therefore vitiated. Under the law of self-determination with its accompanying guarantee of territorial integrity, the people of Mauritius had the right to decide whether or not to relinquish the Archipelago by expressing its free and genuine will. Under the law of self-determination, the United Kingdom had the obligation to enable the people to make this decision freely and to respect it.

32. Now, our case rests on two factual premises. The first is that consent was given not in accordance with self-determination because the representatives were denied a choice whether or not to retain the Archipelago. Second, consent was not in accordance with self-determination because it was procured by threatening to withhold independence. These premises are interrelated, but they constitute independent grounds for our case. If either of them is true – and we submit they both are – you should conclude that the consent of the representatives was vitiated.

Let me address each of them in turn.

33. A question of fact, which is not disputed by the parties – the UK has conceded it over and over again – is that the representatives of Mauritius were not given a choice whether to retain the Archipelago. Whether or not they agreed, the Archipelago would be detached unilaterally by

1 Order in Council. That was what Prime Minister Wilson told Premier Ramgoolam on 23

2 September 1965. That was what Colonial Secretary Greenwood reiterated that same afternoon at the meeting at Lancaster House. That's what the UK affirms in its Rejoinder. That's what Sir

4 Michael told you last Thursday when he said in response to Judge Wolfrum's question, 'As a

5 matter of pure law '-pure law means British law, the embodiment of everything that's excellent, I suppose –, 'As a matter of pure law, it was always possible for the United Kingdom under its legislation to divide territories, to adjust boundaries, to do whatever it liked.'95 That's pure law.

34. But reliance on pure law allowing the UK to do 'whatever it liked,' is incompatible with the international law of self-determination. From the perspective of international law, it's not pure law. It's incompatible law.

3

7

8

9

10

14

15

16

18

20

21

22

23

11 35. The question before you is whether the consent given by the representatives of a colonial

12 territory to the metropolitan State in a negotiation the outcome of which was predetermined satisfies the requirements of the genuine consent of the people under the law of self-determination.

Was it open to the UK to deny a choice to the representatives of Mauritius regarding the excision?

I posed these questions in the clearest terms during the first round. Sir Michael spoke about the law of treaties very largely.

17 36. If Mauritius had been offered the opportunity to retain the Archipelago, then it would be open for the UK to persuade you that the 'consent' was given in accordance with the law of 19 self-determination. As things stand, the negotiations were doomed from the very beginning.

37. Sir Michael has instead repackaged the records and retold the story of the struggle for independence as a story of struggle for money. '[T]he meeting was all about money, all about compensation, and very understandably so.'96 $\,$ Those were his words. He said: '[i]f sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago was of concern to them' - the Mauritian representatives - 'they ⁹⁵Transcript, Day 5, p. 537, lines 22-24.

⁹⁶Transcript, Day 5, p. 529, line 11.

2

3

4 5

6

7

8

9

10

11

12 13

14

15

16

17 18

19 20

21

22 23

24

signally failed to mention it during the meeting'. This ignores the passages through which I took you during the first round. I'll refer you to Tab 3.2 of your folder, which is behind the gray tab, but you've seen it before. 98 At page 34 of your folder, the red page number 34, last paragraph, Premier Ramgoolam says, 'we are not interested in the excision of the islands and would stand out for a 99-year lease.' That's at page 34. On the next page, he says the alternative was to give Mauritius independence and let it negotiate the arrangements with the US directly(page 35). At page 37, he 'repeated that the matter should be considered on the basis of Chagos being made available on a 99-year lease.' That's the position the representatives of Mauritius took from the very beginning as regards the Archipelago. The account of the 20 September meeting given by Sir Michael is misleading. Mauritius 38. came to the table suggesting a lease. It was not unsympathetic to the plans to establish a base on Diego Garcia. It is not unsympathetic even today. But it expected – quite properly – to receive continuing compensation for the use of its territory. That was what the 'money talks' to which Sir Michael refers were about - they were 'development talks.' You can see going through the record the concerns by the Mauritian Ministers about the future of the colony. 39. Sir Michael referred you to page [8] of the record, which is at page 40 of your folder, and told you that 'the Colonial Secretary concluded' the meeting by summarising the points that are at the bottom of the page, the first one alluding to Mauritius' willingness to detach the Archipelago. Two clarifications must be made. First, the Colonial Secretary's view on the 'attitude' of the Ministers is not justified by what they had said. Sir Seewoosagur had firmly opposed excision twice at that same meeting. Nothing the Ministers said indicates that they were open to excision. And secondly, that was not the conclusion of the meeting – there were three further pages of minutes in which the Mauritians try to improve the conditions for their agreement, and they were still talking about a lease. The only time that the possibility of excision is mentioned by the ⁹⁷ Ibid, lines 13-15.

⁹⁸ MM, Annex 16.

Mauritians is at pages [10-11] of the record, pages 42 and 43 of the folder. Sir Seewoosagur suggested a figure for yearly payments to be made by the US, and then he added, at page 43, that he was 'talking in this connection in terms of a lease but if the islands were detached then different figures could easily be calculated'. In other words, if the talks were about excision rather than a lease, the compensation would have to be at a completely different dimension. The Mauritian leaders were simply doing their best in difficult circumstances to secure the economic survival of the new State. They did not freely consent to something as to which they were, explicitly, given no choice. 40. Well, you know how the negotiations ended. They received £3 million in return for the 40. Well, you know how the negotiations ended. They received £3 million in return for the excision of the Archipelago, plus the undertakings given in 1965 – undertakings which, according to Mr. Wordsworth, the UK did not intend and didn't give and which are not binding on them! The 3 million they have claimed is less than half of the annual £7 million that the representatives of Mauritius had asked for a lease of the Archipelago, and less than half of what the Seychelles received for the excision of the three islands that were later reverted to them. It was not much more than the £1 million the UK had initially offered, a sum which vexed Sir Seewoosagur so much that he would prefer to give the islands ex gratia rather than take it. Does this outcome reflect the UK's portrayal of the Mauritian ministers as greedy politicians looking for money? There was one price that the representatives of Mauritius were ready to pay, when all the cards were put on the table. That was independence.

 41. The negotiations that took place have to be viewed in their proper context. The Mauritians had been informed that excision would be carried out with or without consent. The only option that remained was to try to secure the greatest number of benefits that the UK was willing to agree to. Failing to give formal consent would not have prevented excision and would have resulted in the Ministers returning to Mauritius with empty hands, without the islands, without the undertakings. This was the deal of 1965.

2

3

4 5

6 7

8

9

10

11

12 13

14

15

16

17 18

19 20

21

22

23

24

- Sir Michael said, 'there was hard bargaining on both sides, leading to agreement.'99 There 42. was hard bargaining leading to certain conditions being accepted in relation to the outcome the UK had predetermined and which Mauritius had no possibility to oppose. Was any of this compatible with the obligation on colonial powers to respect the genuine will of the self-determination unit with regard to the dismemberment of colonial territory? The answer is emphatically 'no.'
 - 43. I turn to deal with the threats to withhold independence.
 - 44. Sir Michael said last week that it appeared 'unambiguous' from the records 'that there were no conditions of independence'. 100 That's a remarkable claim. In my first presentation, I showed you that until the end of the Constitutional Conference the position of the Ministers was contrary to excision: 'unambiguous' might well apply here! Mauritius was - and remains sympathetic to the security interests of the UK and the US in the Indian Ocean, but it rejected the notion of detachment and it favoured instead a lease. This position did not change until the meeting at 10 Downing Street on the morning of 23 September. We reviewed the covering note prepared by the Private Secretary pointing out to Prime Minister Wilson that the object of the meeting was to frighten Premier Ramgoolam with hope of independence, and to make the point that the Archipelago could be excised unilaterally by Order-in-Council. We saw how Prime Minister Wilson not so subtly pointed to 'the number of possibilities' that the Premier faced, including the possibility of leaving the Conference with independence or without it. He did not fail to point out that the solution which would make everyone happiest would be for the Premier to leave London with the independence of his fractured homeland secured. And then Colonial Secretary Greenwood said: 'take it or leave it - before 4 p.m.'!
 - 45. Sir Michael says that the record tells a different story. Never mind the note by the Private Secretary - it does not reflect State policy. Never mind the transcript of the meeting at which Prime Minister Wilson clearly connects the questions of independence and excision. Sir Michael concedes that there was, it is true, a connection between independence and excision, but he says it was 'one of timing,' not one of 'substance'. ¹⁰¹ We respectfully disagree.

Transcript, Day 5, p. 536, lines 16-17.
 Transcript, Day 5, p. 523, lines 9-10.

Sir Michael ignored a key document which I bring again to your attention, an omission 46. which is eloquent. You should – with respect – consider this document carefully. It's the 'top secret' minute of the meeting of the Defence and Oversea Policy Committee - held on 25 May 1967, which is at Tab 3.3 of your folder. 102 The meeting concerned the upcoming disclosure of the US' contribution to the compensation paid to Mauritius and the Seychelles for dismemberment. At page 48 of the folder, first paragraph, second sentence, Herbert Bowden, then the Commonwealth Secretary, says the following: 'At the time when the agreement for the detachment of BIOT was signed in 1965, Mauritian Ministers were unaware of our negotiations with the United States Government for a contribution by them towards the cost of compensation for detachment. They were further told there was no question of a further contribution to them by the United States Government since this was a matter between ourselves [that is, the United Kingdom] and Mauritius [that's at page 48], that the £3 million was the maximum we could afford, and [I stress], that unless they accepted our proposals we should not proceed with the arrangements for the grant to them of independence.'

47. This is a candid account of a high-ranking British official of what happened in 1965. This meeting concerned specifically the excision of the Archipelago. There is no room to argue that 'our proposals' signifies guarantees for minorities or electoral reforms. Mr. Bowden was Anthony Greenwood's successor.

48. Of course, he didn't participate in the Constitutional Conference. But attending the meeting in 1967 was someone deeply familiar with the events of 1965, the Prime Minister himself.

1

2

3

4 5

6

7

8

10

11

12 13

14

15

16

17 18

19 20

21

¹⁰¹ Transcript, Day 5, p. 527, line 4.

¹⁰² Extract from Minutes of 20th Meeting of Defence and Oversea Policy Committee held on 25 May 1967 (MR, Annex 59).

He did not point out to the Commonwealth Secretary: 'you've got it wrong, I didn't frighten Sir Seewoosagur with hope of independence'.

49. Sir Michael makes much of Sir Seewoosagur's subsequent statements in parliamentary debates. I've explained to you in the first round what the context in which those statements were made was, and I won't repeat myself. To the present members of the Tribunal, since it falls within your jurisdiction, I leave it in your hands to weigh the evidence from the documents referring to the 'package deal;' the minutes of the parallel meetings at the Constitutional Conference; the covering note; and the unambiguous minutes of the 1967 Cabinet meeting against the speeches that Sir Seewoosagur made years later, in public in the highly politicised context of

50. I've also explained the reasons why Mauritius did not formally protest against the excision in the first years of independence, and again I won't repeat them. I leave you to consider the lessons of the Nauru case in this regard: the International Court expressly took into account the character of relations between a former administering authority and a small island State and, we

51. Finally, counsel referred to the General Elections held in Mauritius in 1967, which, they said, ratified the excision. But the excision was already a fait accompli so far as the electorate was concerned. They had many other issues to face, including the choice between independence and free association. The Mauritian opposition, which favoured free association, was equally opposed to excision. ¹⁰⁴ In the circumstances, if the Council of Ministers was not free to reject excision neither was the electorate.

V. Conclusion

the legislative debates in Mauritius.

suggest, you should do likewise.

Mr. President, Members of the Tribunal:

¹⁰³ Transcript, Day 6, p. 719, lines 11-17.

¹⁰⁴ Cf. e.g. Extract from Minutes of 20th Meeting of Defence and Oversea Policy Committee held on 25 May 1967 (MR, Annex 59), p. 2.

- 52. You have the arguments on consent. You have experience in inter-colonial and 1 international relations. You can assess for yourselves whether consent was truly given. But what 2 is particularly remarkable is that the United Kingdom now treats the whole exercise as a charade. 3 For we are told there cannot have been an agreement between Her Majesty's Government and the 4 5 colonized, even in the negotiations for independence. The members of the Tribunal will be familiar with the 'clean slate' theory espoused by many African States at the end of decolonization 6 7 and reflected to a degree in the 1978 Vienna Convention on Succession with respect of Treaties. This is perhaps the first time that the colonial power has argued for a clean slate! The UK now 8 says it came free from Mauritius' independence. Independence was to make the colony free, but it 9 made Britain free, free from any commitments it made, with a slate wiped clean of prior 10 understandings. And the UK says that it is still free of them because, on the Nuclear Tests 11 principle, there was no new undertaking after 1968. There didn't need to be. There was 12 13 reaffirmation of a prior undertaking. 14 53.
 - 53. The true position, as we have said and we said it in the first round, so that Mr. Wordsworth's incomprehension of the point is all the more surprising is that these understandings or commitments were most certainly articulated by the United Kingdom as the quid pro quo for the 'consent' given. You may still judge that the 'consent' was not given in accordance with the applicable standards for the treatment of a colonizer towards an independence movement. Even so, the conditions remain, and they are, as I have said, and as Mr. Reichler demonstrated in our first round, conditions that were repeatedly referred to with reference back to the events of 1965 in the subsequent inter-State relations of Mauritius and the United Kingdom. For the United Kingdom now to seek to deny them is nothing short of astonishing. Mr. President and Members of the Tribunal, that concludes this presentation.

16

17 18

19 20

21

22 23

24

ARBITRATOR WOLFRUM: Thank you, Mr. President.

 Professor Crawford, let's leave aside for a moment that this consent was given, as you say, due to some pressure put upon the Mauritian Ministers. Let's just talk about the consent. How would you qualify the consent legally? That's the first part of my question.

Has it still, even today, an ongoing effect in international law?

Thank you.

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Sir, the consent was vitiated by the circumstances in which it was given. I use the word 'vitiated' carefully because, in the law relating to consent, you have degrees of consent, and that's for the Tribunal to assess. What is absolutely clear is that the consent was given, if it was given at all, on conditions — conditions which the United Kingdom now seeks to trivialize or deny or to remain silent about.

In a situation in which an excision has occurred, which is vitiated by conduct analogous to by, let's say, coercion—I won't use the word duress—or by circumstances amounting to a failure to allow people to make a real choice, it's possible for subsequent conduct of a person when it becomes sui juris, so to speak, for that defect to be repaired or to be waived. We say that nothing that happens subsequently, silence for a period of time and so on, amounts to waiver. As we said, nothing that Nauru did...Sorry, I've got the wrong 'we': as counsel argued in the Nauru case, nothing that happened after independence amounted to a waiver of a claim to rehabilitation of the lands. I have given you the standard to be applicable in determining whether there has been waiver, and it is for you to apply. We say there has been no waiver. There was no waiver by silence, and rights of this character which are very important rights are not to be deemed to have been waived by silence.

I'm not sure I can take matters further. We do not deny that the Council of Ministers gave a sort of consent, and I didn't deny that in the first round. What we said is the circumstances under which that consent was given and the very character of the Council of Ministers was that the consent was vitiated by the applicable law. It is for you to work out the consequences of that in light of the subsequent relations between the States at a time when there 1 2 was sui juris... ARBITRATOR WOLFRUM: Mr. Crawford, this doesn't answer my second part 3 of the question. 4 5 PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Sorry, sir, I was focusing on the first. ARBITRATOR WOLFRUM: Whether such a consent has an ongoing effect. 6 7 PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Well, if the consent had no effect ab initio, it's that the only – I mean, it was part of what happened. It's part of the res gestae. 8 ARBITRATOR WOLFRUM: I was working under the assumption it had an 9 effect at the beginning, that it was a theoretical case. Would it then have an ongoing effect. 10 PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: You might have a situation in which an entity under 11 disability gave consent in circumstances where the consent was vitiated, but there is something 12 13 written down. It remains defective until cured, and it can be cured in a variety of ways, so we 14 would say that whatever deficiency existed in 1968, we say still exists because it hasn't been 15 waived. But we say further to that, assuming ex hypothesi that you don't have jurisdiction to determine whether the consent was given because it's associated with a jurisdictional lacuna or gap 16 in your competence, what is perfectly clear is that the conditions that were attached to the events as 17 18 occurred and which were reaffirmed by the United Kingdom, reaffirmed on the multiple occasions are still binding, and we say you have jurisdiction to determine that in any event. 19 20 The case is difficult because of the interplay between questions of jurisdiction and questions of substantive law. And I will return to that tomorrow in various ways. 21 22 PRESIDENT SHEARER: Thank you very much, Professor Crawford. No 23 further questions. Oh, sorry, you have a question, Judge Greenwood. 24

 ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Professor Crawford, it seems to me that this is a somewhat unusual case in that you are saying that – both parties are saying there was an agreement of some kind in 1965. I heard you say that you don't – in both rounds, you don't deny that some agreement was reached. That Mauritius' position appears to be that it is not bound by what it agreed to, but the United Kingdom is bound by its undertakings.

The United Kingdom is saying Mauritius is bound by what its Ministers agreed to and the United Kingdom is not bound by what its Ministers had said. You will appreciate, as I'm sure the United Kingdom does, that for the Tribunal, the path to either of those conclusions is going to be a rather difficult one. I just want to try and sort out precisely what the case is as a matter of law on each side without entering into the question of whether the rhetoric behind it is overblown.

It seems to me that in 1965, there could not have been an internationally binding – sorry, an agreement binding in international law concluded between a colony and a metropolitan power because Commonwealth and colonial law at that stage did not provide that agreements of that kind were treaties or equivalent treaties. And since both the Parties concerned were negotiating within the framework of the United Kingdom Commonwealth and colonial law, one has to start from that standpoint. But if I'm wrong in that, I'd be grateful if you'd explain the basis on which I'm wrong. If I'm right, then it must presumably follow that the character of the Agreement as binding in international law must derive from something that happened after independence in 1968.

Now, that, I suppose, could have been a reaffirmation after independence of what was said by the two Parties prior to independence, or it could have been a unilateral undertaking along what can loosely be described as the Eastern Greenland/Nuclear Tests line of authorities, and I'd just like you please to sketch out whether I'm wrong in my premise which is only a provisional one, and if I'm right in my premise, which of the two courses you are relying on for the post-1968 period.

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: With respect, sir, you're wrong on your premise. For the United Kingdom to say that consent could have been given which is legally effective in international law in relation to the excision of territory – because, as Judge Wolfrum pointed out earlier, we're talking about the sovereignty of the territory, we're not talking about the inconceivable possibility of a suit for breach of contract after 1968 –assuming that that's right, it was possible for the representatives of a non-self-governing territory to agree to a course of conduct in the context of the negotiation of independence provided they did so freely, and that agreement could have legal effects after independence. It's not a clean slate to the extent that nothing done before independence can have effect.

The United Kingdom, on independence, not after independence – on independence – retained the Archipelago. It therefore affirmed the conditions on which it had come to receive the Archipelago, even if the consent given was vitiated.

Let's assume I'm your grandfather, sir, and I live in a nice house, and you rather like my house, and I'm a bit frail and you come to me and you say 'I want to take over your house, but you can have the upstairs granny flat'. And I say 'this is very unfair', and I don't want to be thrown out in the streets, and you deny me access to my great grandchildren, so I sign the piece of paper and go and live in the granny flat. The position is, under any civilized system of law, that that agreement is vitiated by the circumstances in which it is made, undue influence, improper pressure or whatever you call it.

There is an agreement, but it's defective.

The United Kingdom's position is that they can throw me out of the granny flat and keep the house.

 ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: So, what you're saying is, irrespective of whether the Agreement is valid, to the extent the United Kingdom retains the benefit, it must also carry the burden.

....

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: That's exactly right, sir.

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Now, just explain – I understand that. Just explain to me, please, how you latch that on to public international law. Was that the case – was that an internationally – was that an agreement binding under international law between November 1965 and March 1968, or does it only acquire that character after the I think it's the 12th of March 1968?

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: It was not a treaty, nor was it intended as a binding arrangement under British law for the reason stated by Mr. Wordsworth. It was an arrangement made in the context of negotiations for independence which take some time between persons who knew what they were doing in virtue of independence. It's a bit like a pre-incorporation contract, not nothing. The role of domestic analogies in this area is obviously an issue, but the example I've given you shows that there is something to the humanity of the situation, even if we're dealing with States.

At the very second of independence, when the excision was affirmed by the continued presence of the United Kingdom in the Archipelago, the United Kingdom disabled itself from denying the conditions attached to its presence. It would have been open, I suppose, for the representatives of the people in the period from 1965 to 1968 to try and reverse the excision. I don't know what efforts were made in that regard, but they certainly weren't bound to accept an agreement obtained in the circumstances in which it was obtained. After independence, they were sui juris and free to accept, but there's a presumption that they didn't do so, and there's some tolerance for silence in that period. So I would say this is a situation in which the colonial authority exercising its power assumed a responsibility which it affirms not after independence, but on independence, the very second of independence, because otherwise it would have to hand the territory back. We don't suggest that there's an obligation of reversion after reversion has occurred, but we do say that, in the circumstances, the United Kingdom is bound by the obligations it assumed while it holds on to the territory in the same way that my hypothetical grandchild is obliged to allow me to occupy the granny flat while he occupies the house.

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Of course, as I am a grandfather, I listen with great interest, and I will take it into account as planning advice for my own future.

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: There is a law about these arrangements in many countries, which are quite common.

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Let me see if I've understood the point all right because I think this is very important for this arbitration. Mauritius is not saying that there was a treaty or something akin to a treaty in 1965, nor is it basing its case on events that took place after independence, though they may be relevant in showing the nature of what had happened before. Essentially what you're saying is that where in the process of moving to independence the colonial power gives "undertakings" in exchange for "consent" to a territorial change, then on independence that, on those undertakings, assumed the character of a commitment binding under international law between the colonial State and the newly independent State.

PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Sir, that's what we're saying, and we're saying that for various reasons, including the possibility of a reversal of the situation between the time the original consent is given and independence, as happened in the case of the Seychelles, but the very act of conferring independence in those circumstances affirms the obligations. There is a law of obligations beyond the law of treaties, just as there is in domestic law.

ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: That's very helpful, Professor Crawford.

Thank you.

1	ARBITRATOR WOLFRUM: Thank you, Mr. Crawford. Indeed, I join Sir
2	Christopher's remark. That was extremely helpful as a discourse.
3	Let me just add a small point: What you're referring to after independence, is that
4	a situation you would qualify under estoppel?
5	PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Estoppel is, of course, an English law concept, and
6	it's been received into international law more or less as it stands in English law. It has quite strict
7	requirements: representation, reliance, detriment.
8	What we say happened after independence was reaffirmation, recognition,
9	acknowledgment of an obligation already existing. It already existed at independence. There
10	was no second after independence when it didn't exist. And, therefore, Mr. Wilberforce's analysis
11	of the de novo in a Nuclear Tests situation is inappropriate.
12	I think that's probably all I need to say.
13	ARBITRATOR GREENWOOD: Mr. Wordsworth –
14	PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: We're talking about freedom, but probably not that
15	sort of freedom. I apologize to Mr. Wordsworth.
16	PRESIDENT SHEARER: I'm sorry to extend this discussion on this, but as Judge
17	Greenwood has said, this is a really vital question. I just wonder whether another possible
18	interpretation is that when a self-determination unit approaches independence, there is a sort of a
19	period of quasi-sovereignty that occurs. I think I mentioned before the practice in the Application
20	of treaties as a self-determination, as internal self-government develops and one approaches
21	independence, the colonial territory had a say in what Treaty should be applied to it and so on.
22	Could that be any part of your argument, or is that irrelevant?
23	PROFESSOR CRAWFORD: Well, sir, we don't have to argue that there was a
24	State instatunascendi in 1965. That would be going too far. But in some situations there is; in
25	some situations there was national liberation, for example. But we do say that a government which represented the people - the people who, after all, is the right holder in relation to 1 self-determination - could give valid consent in the pre-independence situation, if it was not 2 coerced. If there had been a free choice, they could have given valid consent, and that consent 3 would have been binding on the people after independence. International law is, after all, 4 5 fundamentally a system of representation, and it's not limited to the representation of States. PRESIDENT SHEARER: Very good, Professor Crawford. Thank you. That's 6 7 very helpful. And now I gather that we will hear from Professor Sands; is that correct? 8 Yes, thank you. Thank you very much. 9 PROFESSOR SANDS: Sir, it is correct, by my watch, we've got only seven or 10 eight minutes left. I'm in your hands. I can make a start on set of submissions that are essentially 11 inviting you to continue the conversation over the next period because you have jurisdiction, we 12 13 say, to have this conversation on this vitally important issue, but I'm not sure whether it's sensible 14 for me to start now, run for a few minutes or break now and keep it coherent. I'm in your hands, 15 whatever is convenient for the Tribunal. PRESIDENT SHEARER: Thank you, Mr. Sands. I think probably, as you 16 implied, it doesn't make much sense to make a short start and then have to break. So, I think it 17 would be a good idea if we did adjourn at this point, and we return at 2:00 p.m. for the special 18 procedures that we outlined at the beginning. Thank you very much. 19 20 PROFESSOR SANDS: Thank you very much, Mr. President. PRESIDENT SHEARER: We'll adjourn until 2:00. 21 (Whereupon, at 12:22 p.m., the hearing was adjourned until 2:00 p.m., the same 22 23 day.)

EXTRACT

17th Mid-Term Ministerial Meeting of the Non-Aligned Movement

Algiers, Algeria

26-29 May 2014

FINAL DOCUMENT

Chagos Archipelago

307. The Ministers reaffirmed that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised by the former colonial power from the territory of Mauritius in violation of international law and UN Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Mauritius.

308. The Ministers further noted with grave concern that despite the strong opposition expressed by the Republic of Mauritius, the United Kingdom purported to establish a marine protected area around the Chagos Archipelago, further infringing the territorial integrity of the Republic of Mauritius and impeding the exercise of its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago as well as the exercise of the right of return of Mauritian citizens who were forcibly removed from the Archipelago by the United Kingdom.

309. Cognizant that the Government of the Republic of Mauritius is committed to taking all appropriate measures to affirm the territorial integrity of the Republic of Mauritius and its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago under international law, the Ministers resolved to fully support such measures including any action that may be taken in this regard at the United Nations General Assembly.

Annex 173

Group of 77 and China, Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Group of 77, Declaration: For a New World Order for Living Well (14-15 June 2014)

EXTRACT

Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Group of 77

For a New World Order for Living Well

Santa Cruz de la Sierra, Plurinational State of Bolivia, 14 and 15 June 2014

Declaration

237. We reaffirm the need to find a peaceful solution to the sovereignty issues facing developing countries, including the dispute over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised by the United Kingdom from the territory of Mauritius, prior to independence, in violation of international law and General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965. Failure to resolve these decolonization and sovereignty issues would seriously damage and undermine the development and economic capacities and prospects of developing countries. In this regard, we note with great concern that despite the strong opposition of Mauritius, the United Kingdom purported to establish a "marine protected area" around the Chagos Archipelago, which contravenes international law and further impedes the exercise by Mauritius of its sovereign rights over the archipelago and the right of return of Mauritius citizens who were forcibly removed from the archipelago by the United Kingdom.

Annex 174 Group of 77 and China, 38th Annual Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, Ministerial Declaration (26 Sept. 2014)

EXTRACT

THIRTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL MEETING OF MINISTERS FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE GROUP OF 77 AND CHINA New York, 26 September 2014

MINISTERIAL DECLARATION

45. The Ministers reaffirmed the need to find a peaceful solution to the sovereignty issues facing developing countries, including the dispute over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised by the United Kingdom from the territory of Mauritius, prior to independence, in violation of international law and General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965. Failure to resolve these decolonization and sovereignty issues would seriously damage and undermine the development and economic capacities and prospects of developing countries. In this regard, they noted with great concern that despite the strong opposition of Mauritius, the United Kingdom purported to establish a "marine protected area" around the Chagos Archipelago, which contravenes international law and further impedes the exercise by Mauritius of its sovereign rights over the archipelago and the right of return of Mauritius citizens who were forcibly removed from the archipelago by the United Kingdom.

Assembly/AU/Res.1(XXV) Page 1

RESOLUTION ON CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO Doc. EX.CL/901(XXVII)

The Assembly,

Recalling the unlawful excision of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, from the territory of Mauritius by the United Kingdom, the former colonial power, prior to the independence of Mauritius, in violation of international law and UN Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965 which prohibit colonial powers from dismembering colonial territories prior to granting independence, as well as UN Resolutions 2232 (XXI) of 20 December 1966 and 2357(XXII) of 19 December 1967;

Reaffirming that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Mauritius;

Deploring the continued unlawful occupation by the United Kingdom of the Chagos Archipelago, thereby denying the Republic of Mauritius the exercise of its sovereignty over the Archipelago and making the decolonization of Africa incomplete;

Recalling in this regard, inter alia:

- Resolution Assembly/AU/Res. 1 (XVI) of January 2011 of the Assembly of the African Union held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia;
- ii) the Malabo Declaration adopted by the Third Africa-South America Summit held in Malabo, Equatorial Guinea in February 2013;
- Declaration Assembly/AU/Decl.1 (XXI) of May 2013 of the Assembly of the African Union held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia;
- iv) the Solemn Declaration on the 50th Anniversary of the OAU/AU adopted by 21st Ordinary Session of the Assembly of the African Union held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia in May 2013.

Reiterating its grave concern that the United Kingdom purported to establish a 'marine protected area' ('MPA') around the Chagos Archipelago, in a manner that was inconsistent with its international legal obligations and which further impeded the exercise by the Republic of Mauritius of its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago;

Noting that the purported 'MPA' has been ruled to be illegal by the Arbitral Tribunal constituted under Annex VII to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea in the case brought by the Government of the Republic of Mauritius on 20 December 2010 against the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland;

Welcoming the confirmation by two members of the Arbitral Tribunal that the Republic of Mauritius is the "coastal State" in relation to the Chagos Archipelago;

Assembly/AU/Res.1(XXV) Page 2

Considering that the Government of the Republic of Mauritius is resolutely committed to taking all appropriate measures for the effective exercise by the Republic of Mauritius of its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, in keeping with the principles of international law:

- WELCOMES the Award of the Arbitral Tribunal constituted under Annex VII to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, which is binding on the United Kingdom, and the confirmation that the purported 'MPA' has been unlawfully established under international law;
- REAFFIRMS that the United Kingdom is not to be treated as the "coastal State" in relation to the Chagos Archipelago and that any attempt by the United Kingdom to claim such a status in any international forum is to be treated as contrary to international law and opposed;
- REITERATES its support to the Republic of Mauritius in its legitimate pursuit to effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia;
- RENEWS its call on the United Kingdom to expeditiously end its unlawful occupation of the Chagos Archipelago with a view to enabling the Republic of Mauritius to effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Archipelago;
- 5. URGES the United Kingdom, pending the return of the Chagos Archipelage to the effective control of the Republic of Mauritius, not to take any measures or decisions that might affect the interests of the Republic of Mauritius without the latter's full prior involvement, in accordance with the Award of the Arbitral Tribunal and international law; and
- 6. FULLY SUPPORTS further efforts and actions in accordance with international law, including those of a diplomatic and legal nature at the level of the United Nations system, which may be taken by the Government of the Republic of Mauritius for the early and unconditional return of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, to the effective control of the Republic of Mauritius

Annex 176 Shabtai Rosenne, The Law and Practice of the International Court, 1920-1996, Vol. II, Jurisdiction (1997)

THE GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY LAW LIBRARY

THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT, 1920–1996

THIRD EDITION

VOLUME II JURISDICTION

by

SHABTAI ROSENNE

MARTINUS NIJHOFF PUBLISHERS
THE HAGUE / BOSTON / LONDON

FEB 1999

Reserve

KZ SALATO

6275 A C.I.P. Catalogue record for this book is available from the Library of Congress

. RGT

1997

V.3

C. 2

ISBN 90-411-0264-7 (Set)

Published by Kluwer Law International, P.O. Box 85889, 2508 CN The Hague, The Netherlands.

Sold and distributed in the U.S.A. and Canada by Kluwer Law International, 675 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, MA 02139, U.S.A.

In all other countries, sold and distributed by Kluwer Law International, Distribution Centre, P.O. Box 322, 3300 AH Dordrecht, The Netherlands.

Printed on acid-free paper

All Rights Reserved
© 1997 Kluwer Law International
Kluwer Law International incorporates the publishing programmes of Graham & Trotman Ltd, Kluwer Law and Taxation Publishers, and Martinus Nijhoff Publishers.

No part of the material protected by this copyright notice may be reproduced or utilized in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without written permission from the copyright owner.

Printed in the Netherlands

CONTENTS

Contents	v
Note on documents and abbreviations	xxi
VOLUME I The Court and the United Nations
CHAPTER 1 INTRODUCTION
I.1. The political and legal in the settlement of disputesI.2. Arbitration and judicial settlement comparedI.3. The dissolution of the Permanent CourtI.4. An appreciation	1 10 16 19
CHAPTER 2 THE ESTABLISHMENT AND CONSTITUTION OF COURT	тне
 I.5. The outbreak of the War I.6. Early inter-Allied discussions I.7. The Dumbarton Oaks proposals I.8. The Washington Committee of Jurists I.9. The San Francisco Conference I.10. The International Court of Justice—A new Court I.11. The United Nations Preparatory Commission I.12. The opening of the new Court I.13. The functional continuity of the two Courts I.14. Problems of interpretation I.15. Political interpretation I.16. Judicial interpretation I.17. State practice I.18. Travaux préparatoires I.19. Non-judicial precedents I.20. Amending the Statute 	41 45 51 55 57 66 71 72 74 77 80 83 89 90 93 95 pending between two or more States, where the Eastern Carelia principle applies, and a dispute between a State and the United Nations on a matter of internal United Nations law. In that type of case the Court's standing as the principal judicial organ permits it to give an opinion despite the unwillingness of the State concerned. Nevertheless, the early precedents date to the period before disputes between a State and an international organization had assumed any prominence. There is no reason why the Eastern Carelia doctrine should not also apply when an advisory opinion is requested in relation to a dispute actually pending between a State (whether a member or not of the organization in question) and an international organization, identified, for this purpose, by those States which voted in favour of the request. This is a matter which deserves further attention whenever Article 102, paragraph 2, of the Rules is reviewed by the Court.

II.248. DISCRETION BASED ON THE COURT'S STATUS AS A PRINCIPAL ORGAN. The second principle regarding the consequences on the advisory jurisdiction of the Court's discretion deriving from its status as a principal organ of the United Nations first appeared in the Peace Treaties opinion. Here the Court explained that its opinion, given to the requesting organ, 'represents its [the Court's] participation in the activities of the Organization, and, in principle, should not be refused'.67 In the ILOAT (UNESCO) opinion the Court, after extending the scope of the duty to include co-operation with specialized agencies authorized to request advisory opinions, reformulated it as follows: 'Notwithstanding the permissive character of Article 65 of the Statute in the matter of advisory opinions, only compelling reasons could cause the Court to adopt in this matter a negative attitude which would imperil the working of the regime established by the Statute of the Administrative Tribunal for the judicial protection of officials.'68 This was followed in the Certain Expenses opinion which also illustrates how the Court in a case put to it by the General Assembly examines whether any such compelling reasons exist. The combination of the substantive discretion of Article 65 with the procedural discretion of Article 68, to which allusion was made in the Peace Treaties opinion, was formally recognized in the following passage in the Reservations opinion:

^{67 [1950]} at 71.

⁶⁸ [1956] at 86. For a recapitulation of the case-law, see Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons advisory opinion, [1996] 8 July (para. 14).

A reply to a request for an Opinion should not, in principle, be refused. The permissive provision of Article 65 of the Statute recognizes that the Court has the power to decide whether the circumstances of a particular case are such as to lead the Court to decline to reply to the request for an Opinion. At the same time, Article 68 of the Statute recognizes that the Court has the power to decide to what extent the circumstances of each case must lead it to apply to advisory proceedings the provisions of the Statute which apply in contentious cases. ⁶⁹

Those opinions bring out one important factor. Owing to the organic relation now existing between the Court and the United Nations, the Court regards itself as being under the duty of participating, within its competence, in the activities of the Organization, and no State can stop that participation. This emerges from the Charter of which the Statute is an integral part. 70 The Rules of Court, which lay down a special procedure where the request for the advisory opinion relates to a legal question pending between two or more States, are subordinate to the Charter and the Statute. Yet the finding of the Court in the Peace Treaties opinion that the opposition of those States to the request did not, in the circumstances of the case, constitute any reason why the Court should abstain from replying to the request, should not have led the Court to refrain from considering the extent to which it recognized the provisions of the Statute which apply in contentious cases as guiding it in the present case. The duty of the Court to act in this way is contained not in the Rules of Court but in Article 68 of the ⁶⁹ [1951] at 19.

⁷⁰ Cf. J.-F. Lalive's doctrinal note on the Peace Treaties opinion in 77 Journal du Droit International 1246, 1248 (1950).

Statute. The Court's conclusion that it had the power to answer the questions put to it, and was under a duty to do so, does not in itself provide an answer to the question whether the contentious procedure should be followed. To the extent that the Court refrained from considering this aspect, the question remains an open one from the point of view of the development of the Court's case-law.

Clearly, in this type of problem the Court is compelled to deviate from any general approach of considering the questions as abstract in the limited sense in which that term is used in connection with advisory cases. The Court's interpretation of Articles 65 and 68 of the Statute specifically requires it to examine whether the circumstances of the case should lead it to decline to give an answer to the questions put to it. However, a reading of the opinions in the Peace Treaties and Reservations cases leads to the conclusions that this circumstantial examination will be confined within the narrowest limits, and that once the jurisdictional issue is settled the tendency towards the abstract (in the sense previously mentioned) will, if appropriate, again assert itself.

In the Peace Treaties and Reservations cases, issues relating to the Court's discretion were presented in another form. In those cases it was argued on various grounds that the action of the General Assembly in dealing with the agenda item out of which the requests emerged, or the decision to request the opinion itself, were ultra vires the General Assembly. In the Peace Treaties advisory opinion, that view was based on the contention that in dealing with the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in what were then the ex-enemy States, the General Assembly was contravening the domestic jurisdiction provisions of the Charter. This argument had been put forward in the General Assembly, where it had been rejected. In similar vein, the domestic jurisdiction clause was cited as a direct impediment to the exercise of jurisdiction by the Court. A more subtle variation of this argument, put forward by Hungary, said that no right to control the execution of its provisions was conferred by the Peace Treaty on the General Assembly. In the Reservations case it was argued that the request for the opinion constituted an inadmissible interference by the General Assembly and by States hitherto strangers to the Convention, as only States which are parties to the Convention are entitled to interpret it or to seek an interpretation of it. The Court gave different, but similar, answers to those contentions.

The object of the request (in the Peace Treaties case) was directed solely to obtaining from the Court certain clarifications of a legal character regarding the applicability of the procedure for the settlement of disputes under the terms of the Peace Treaties which, for this purpose, conferred certain functions upon the Secretary-General of the United Nations. (The question arose of the possible performance of those functions by the Secretary-General, and it was in connection with that possibility that the General Assembly was directly involved in the matter. The Court did not refer to this very material aspect in either of its advisory opinions, although it declared, in the second, what the Secretary-General was not authorized to do.) As to the right of the General Assembly to concern itself with this matter having regard to the domestic jurisdiction clause, the Court contented itself with quoting the manner in which the General Assembly itself had justified its own resolution, that is by reference to Article 55 of the Charter. This justification was only made 'for the purposes of the present opinion'. The opinion therefore does not consist of a general exegesis on the scope of Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter. As for the Court, the interpretation of the terms of a treaty for this purpose could not be considered as a question essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of a State. It is a question of international law which, by its very nature, lies within the competence of the Court.71 The Court continued:

These considerations also suffice to dispose of the objection based on the principle of domestic jurisdiction and directed specifically against the competence of the Court, namely, that the Court, as an organ of the United Nations, is bound to observe the provisions of the Charter, including Article 2, paragraph 7.⁷²

⁷¹ This principle was first enunciated by the Permanent Court in the Tunis and Morocco Nationality Decrees advisory opinion. B4 (1923) at 24. This was cited in oral argument, but not by the Court.

^{72 [1950]} at 71.

1024

In the Reservations opinion the Court followed a similar line of reasoning, although the connection between the General Assembly and this Convention was very different from and more direct than its connection with the Peace Treaties. The Court pointed out that not only did the General Assembly take the initiative in respect of the Genocide Convention, draw up its terms and open it for signature and accession, but that express provisions of the Convention associate the General Assembly with the life of the Convention; and finally that the General Assembly had actually associated itself with it by certain actions it had taken.

In these circumstances, there can be no doubt that the precise determination of the conditions for participation in the Convention constitutes a permanent interest of direct concern to the United Nations which has not disappeared with the entry into force of the Convention.

The Court also indicated that the power of the General Assembly to request an advisory opinion in no way impaired the rights of the parties to the Convention in the matter of its interpretation. This right is independent of the General Assembly's power and is exercisable in a parallel direction. Furthermore, States which are parties to the Convention can invoke the contentious jurisdiction of the Court in accordance with the Convention.⁷⁵

⁷¹ [1951] 19-20. See further at ch. 14, § II.238 n. 50 above. In dealing with the substance the Court again pointed out, on p. 27, that a divergence of views as to the admissibility of a reservation could always be submitted to the Court by special agreement or by invoking the compulsory jurisdiction clause of the Convention. This may be another hint of the preference of the Court that the advisory procedure be reserved for 'abstract' questions, so far as is possible, leaving concrete questions to the contentious procedure. Nevertheless the wisdom of encouraging parallel recourse to the advisory and contentious procedure is questionable, for the possibility of conflicting opinions by the Court may lead to unnecessary uncertainty as to the law. Furthermore, in contentious cases, Article 59 of the Statute limits the extent of the application of a judgment of the Court. For an illustration of the invocation of the Convention in contentious proceedings between two States, see the Application of the Genocide Convention case. And note the comments of a Member of the Court (not in his judicial capacity) on the

§ II.248. Discretion based on the Court as a principal organ 1025

In neither of these cases did the Court go so far as to deny, as a matter of principle, the validity of arguments advanced against the jurisdiction of the Court based upon an alleged incompetence of the General Assembly to deal with the item which led it to request the advisory opinion. What the Court did was to demonstrate the inapplicability of those arguments in the cases under discussion. Having regard to the very wide competence of the General Assembly under the Charter, it is difficult to conceive of cases in which a request for an advisory opinion would be ultra vires the competence of the General Assembly, except, perhaps, where competence is specifically given by the Charter to another organ, or where the General Assembly had acted say in violation of a provision such as Article 12 of the Charter.

On the other hand, when an organ or specialized agency which is authorized by the General Assembly to request advisory opinions on matters arising within the scope of its activities makes the request, then, obviously, the question of the competence of that organ to request the opinion and, by derivation, of the Court to give it, may arise, as occurred in the Threat or Use by a State of Nuclear Weapons in Armed Conflict advisory opinion, requested by the World Health Assembly. The Court's dicta in the Peace Treaties and Reservations advisory opinions are useful clarifications of the manner in which the Court will approach this problem. On the other hand, it is doubtful if they establish any new principle of law, except in a general way to emphasize that while the Court has to be satisfied that the organ requesting the opinion was competent to do so, the States represented in an organ of the United Nations may have their own reasons for being interested in the matter, those reasons having a broad basis in the Charter and in the activities of the organ making the request, and which may exist independently of the actual placing of the item on the agenda out of which the decision to request the opinion emerged.

relation of the Court to the International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) as regards the Genocide Convention. G. Guillaume, 'La Cour internationale de Justice: Quelques propositions concrètes à l'occasion du Cinquantenaire', RGDIP 1996 323, 330.

1026

An objection put forward in the Peace Treaties case was to the effect that were the Court to exercise its advisory jurisdiction, the advisory procedure would take the place of the procedure instituted in the Peace Treaties for the settlement of disputes. In the Reservations case this line of argument was developed more forcefully, even if contradictorily. There one State contended that as the Genocide Convention has its own compromissory clause conferring jurisdiction on the Court, and as there was no dispute in the present case, the effect of the compromissory clause was to deprive the Court not only of any contentious jurisdiction, except in conformity with that clause, but also of any power to give an advisory opinion. Another State urged that precisely because of the existence of a dispute the Court was not empowered to exercise its advisory jurisdiction.74 The Court pointed out in its reply that so far as the Peace Treaties were concerned, the object of the request was to facilitate the application of the disputes articles by seeking information for the General Assembly as to their applicability in the circumstances of the case.75 This line of argument was further developed in the Reservations advisory opinion, in the passage quoted at n. 73 above. In the Peace Treaties case it was argued that as some of the States concerned were not members of the ⁷⁴ The blatant contradiction between these two arguments based on the same elements of fact in this case illustrates the possibility of serious confusion under the present procedure, in which the preliminary questions in an advisory case are discussed and decided simultaneously with the substantive question, although occasionally by a separate vote. The effective functioning of a judicial organ requires a procedure which avoids confusion about uncontested facts and makes the definition of the different issues possible. In the written proceedings in the Reservations case, Israel and Poland specifically based their written statements on the assumption that there was no concrete dispute. The Philippines announced that it was then a party to a dispute. (Incidentally, that dispute ceased to exist when the correspondence addressed to the Registrar by the Australian and Philippines Governments, to which the advisory opinion refers on p. 69, was received. Cf. also annexed letter No. 16A to the oral statement of the representative of the Secretary-General, I. Kerno, and his remarks in his oral statement. Pleadings 326, 445.) There was no further reference to this in the oral statements of in the advisory opinion itself.

^{75 [1950]} at 71.

United Nations or parties to the Statute of the Court, the Court could not exercise its advisory jurisdiction. The Court dismissed this argument summarily in the course of its discussion of the objection based on the judicial character of the Court, examined in § II.247 n. 63 above.

This case-law taken as a whole shows that only one circumstance has been recognized as requiring the Court to exercise its discretion and refrain from giving the opinion requested. That has been when the Court was satisfied that the question put to it was directly related to the main point of a dispute actually pending between two States when there was no agreement that the dispute should be settled by the Court, so that answering the question would be substantially equivalent to deciding the dispute and that at the same time the question raised issues of fact which could not be elucidated without hearing both parties (the Eastern Carelia case). The Permanent Court itself, in the Interpretation of the Treaty of Lausanne advisory opinion, had made it plain that the mere absence of the consent of one of the States directly concerned was not in itself sufficient to prevent the giving of an advisory opinion on a question of procedure and the interpretation of the Covenant, and it was probably on that basis that the present Court was able to distinguish the Peace Treaties case from the Eastern Carelia case. 76 On the other hand, despite the powerful trend manifested by the Court in rejecting all suggestions that it should exercise its discretion and decline to render a requested opinion, it has on the whole been careful to limit the apparent generality of its observations by relating them closely to the circumstances of each concrete case, including the asserted purposes for which the request was made. Perusal of the individual opinions in all these cases brings out the difficulties of attempting to establish rules for a matter which essentially is decided, in each case, on the basis of a subjective weighing of the issues by the Court. That subjective element is of the essence of judicial discretion, in international as in national judicial practice, especially when that judicial discretion is deliberately written into the Statute.

⁷⁶ B12 (1925). The record of the discussion in the League Council does not indicate any vote on this request, but later the representative of Turkey, not a member of the Council, stated that he had voted negative. Hudson, Permanent Court 491. Given the major differences between the Covenant and the Charter on this aspect, that can hardly be regarded as controlling today.

The repeated affirmation of the Court of its duty, in principle, to reply to a request as its participation in the activities of the United Nations, an affirmation which is not entirely free from ambiguity, cannot be accepted uncritically. It implies two presumptions, that the resolution adopting the request was intra vires the requesting organ, and that the question was a legal question. But clearly, the assertion of this principle does not diminish the Court's responsibility to establish that its jurisdiction exists in terms of Article 65 of the Statute, and there is no indication that the Court has intended otherwise. On the other hand, the introduction of this principle into the Court's case-law can be interpreted as meaning that the Court will not question the propriety of the requesting organ's action, but without prejudice to the Court's own statutory responsibilities in this regard. Such an interpretation would accord with the view that each organ is master of its own proceedings. In this way, the conclusion is reached that even if the dicta of the Court have had the effect of restricting the area within which the advisory competence of the Court can be challenged, they have not closed it entirely. The presumptions are rebuttable. Operative only so long as they are not sought to be rebutted, once its competence is challenged, the Court must adopt positive arguments to establish it. In all the cases to date, the underlying issue contained in the request was whether an organ of the United Nations, and notably the Secretary-General, could, as a matter of law, undertake functions which he was required to do either by a specific provision of a treaty, or as a matter of direct concern to the United Nations (or possibly a combination of both).

The discussions in the Special Committee on Review of Administrative Tribunal Judgments, established by the General Assembly in resolution 888 (IX), 17 December 1954, to study the question of the establishment of procedure to provide for review of judgments of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal, led to an important public airing of the issue of propriety. When the Special Committee was considering the possibility of conferring reviewing functions upon the Court through the advisory procedure, some members thought that this would be contrary to the spirit of the Statute of the Court. The sponsors of this proposal then suggested that the Secretary-General should, before the tenth session of the General Assembly, transmit the text of the proposal to the President of the Court for his views on whether the Court would be prepared to exercise the functions proposed to be conferred upon it, and could do so in a manner completely fair to the parties concerned. (This referred to the ability of the individual staff members to bring their views to the notice of the Court.)⁷⁷ However, it is doubtful if this procedure for seeking the views of the Court was compatible with the Statute, and the tenth session discussed the issue without being acquainted with the Court's attitude. It adopted a procedure for the review of Administrative Tribunal judgments similar to that advanced by the Special Committee.78

II.249. JURISDICTION IN SPECIAL ADVISORY PROCEEDINGS. The General Assembly, in resolution 957 (X), 8 November 1955, amended the Statute of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal (UNAT) by providing for a system of recourse through the advisory competence of the Court if a judgment of the Tribunal was challenged on the ground that the Tribunal had succeeded its jurisdiction or competence, or that it had failed to exercise jurisdiction vested in it, had erred on a question of law relating to ⁷⁷ See in detail the Report of the Special Committee, 10 GAOR (X) Annexes, a.i. 49 (A/2909). The debate was substantially repeated in the Fifth Committee. See Report of the Fifth Committee, ibid. (A/3606).

⁷⁸ Resolution 937 (X), 8 November 1955. In the course of the discussions in the plenary meetings it was proposed to seek an advisory opinion on the question of propriety, but this was rejected. It was explained by the opponents of the suggestion to request the advisory opinion that the Court would be able to decide the issue of propriety and of compatibility with the Statute when faced with a concrete case. See 10 GAOR Plenary 277 ff. That the Court did later, in the ILOAT (UNESCO) advisory opinion, and again in the advisory opinions on review of judgements of UNAT, discussed in § II.249 below.

REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS

MAURITIUS IN FIGURES

2016

Statistics Mauritius Ministry of Finance & Economic Development

MAURITIUS IN FIGURES is published yearly since 1995 by Statistics Mauritius

LIC Centre

1, John Kennedy Street

Port Louis

Mauritius

Tel: (230) 208 1800 Fax: (230) 211 4150

Email: statsmauritius@govmu.org

Website: http://statsmauritius.govmu.org

Symbols & abbreviations

- Nil

... Data not available

n.a not applicable

000 Thousand

000,000 Million

Gg Gigagram (000 Tonne)

GWh Million kilowatt hour

c.i.f. Cost, insurance and freight

f.o.b. Free on board

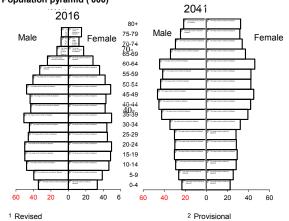

Printed by The Government Printer Republic of Mauritius June 2017

2. POPULATION & VITAL STATISTICS

	2011	2015	2016
Total mid-year resident	1.252.4	1,262.6	1,263.5
population ('000)	, -	•
Male	619.6	624.8	625.2
Female	632.8	637.8	638.3
Age composition (%)
under 15 years	21.7	19.6	19.0
(15-59) years	65.8	65.6	65.6
(60-64) years	4.6	5.4	5.4
65 years and over	7.9	9.4	10.0
Median age (years)	33.4	35.3	35.7
Dependency ratio	420.4	408.6	408.6
Population density (per km²)	636	638	639
Mid-year geographical distribution ('000)
Port Louis	121.4	120.0	119.6
Pamplemousses	137.0	139.8	140.3
Riv. du Rempart	107.2	108.0	108.0
Flacq	137.0	138.5	138.5
Grand Port	112.3	113.0	113.0
Savanne	68.7	68.7	68.5
Plaine Wilhems	369.2	369.0	368.6
Moka	82.3	83.2	83.3
Black River	76.8	80.6	81.4
Rodrigues	40.4	41.9	42.3
Vital statistics
Live births	14,701	12,738	13,082
Deaths	9,170	9,747	10,174
Marriages	10,499	9,709	10,042
Divorces	1,788	2,161	1,910

	2011	2015	2016
Vital statistics (contd.)
Crude birth rate	11.7	10.1	10.4
Total fertility rate	1.6	1.4	1.4
Crude death rate	7.3	7.7	8.1
Marriage rate	16.8	15.4	15.9
Divorce rate	2.9	3.4	3.0
	2021	2031	2041
Projected population ('000)	1,263.5	1,238.0	1,163.7
Male	625.7	613.3	577.4
Female	637.8	624.7	586.3
Age composition (%)
under 15 years	16.6	14.7	13.3
15-59 years	64.9	60.9	57.9
60-64 years	6.1	6.3	7.7
65 years and over	12.4	18.1	21.1

Population pyramid ('000)

Trovisional

9

BIOT Resettlement Policy Review: Summary of Responses to Public Consultation

Background

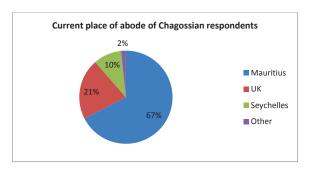

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office conducted a public consultation about a potential resettlement of the British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT) between 4 August 2015 and 27 October 2015. The consultation sought the views of Chagossians and others on three questions: the likely demand for resettlement; the UK Government's assessment of the likely costs and liabilities to the UK taxpayer; and alternative options not involving resettlement that could respond to Chagossian aspirations. A direct questionnaire was also used to obtain further information on these issues. The consultation emphasised that the description of resettlement was not a statement of UK Government policy but represented the most realistic scenario in which resettlement might take place. This document summarises the responses received as Ministers prepare to take a decision on whether to permit some form of resettlement.

Types of responses

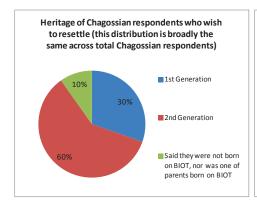

During the consultation period, we received 844 individual responses from Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Mauritius, Reunion Island, Seychelles, Switzerland, Thailand, the USA and the UK. 832 (98%) of the individual respondents described themselves as Chagossians, with 11 other responses from other individuals. In addition to these 844 returns from individuals, 6 replies were received from organisations including the UK Foreign Affairs Committee, and 1 from a foreign Government – the Government of Mauritius. Government Officials held 5 meetings with Chagossians in group settings in Mauritius, Seychelles, Manchester and London.

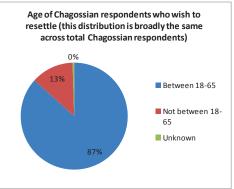

Individual responses from Chagossians Chagossian respondents

The majority of Chagossians who responded are currently living in Mauritius.

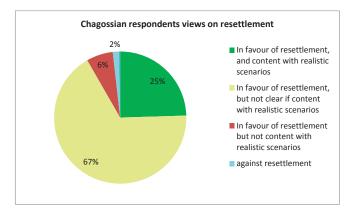

Most Chagossian respondents are of working age and have a connection to BIOT through their parents (what we define as "2nd Generation" in the table below) rather than having been born there themselves.

Views on resettlement

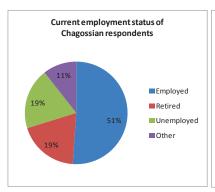

Though the vast majority of Chagossians were in favour of resettlement in principle, there were more nuanced views about the scenarios that were presented in the consultation document as the most realistic description of how it might work.

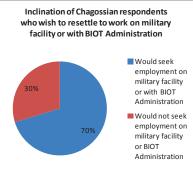

Employment opportunities in any resettlement

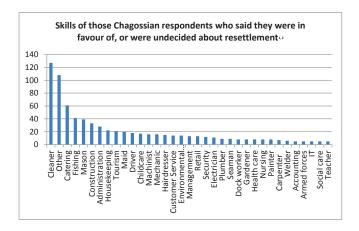

Around half of Chagossians who wanted to return are currently in employment (see chart overleaf). Of those who responded to the questionnaire, over 1,000 additional dependents were indicated, though it is impossible to determine whether some of these dependents are also respondents themselves.

Most respondents who were in favour of resettling said they would be inclined to seek jobs either on the military facility or with the BIOT Administration.

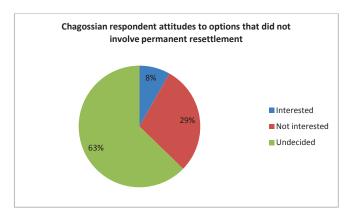

A range of practical skills were declared by Chagossians in their responses, though many indicated they would seek training in other areas including tourism, environmental management, and Territory administration.

Alternatives to resettlement

Responses from Chagossians indicated a degree of uncertainty about alternatives to resettlement while around a third were clear they would not wish to participate in such options.

Note that some Chagossian respondents declared multiple skills, so total skill responses do not sum to total Chagossian responses; Officials have consolidated skill descriptions used by Chagossians into broad subjects to provide meaningful statistical analysis "Skills recorded as "Other" are. Kejirotlutre, Cashier, Communits yupport, Secretarial skills, Student, Tailor, Copra Industry, Dressmaker, Languages, Maintenance. Police, Textile, Training, Beauty, Cabin Crew, Communications skills, Crane operator, Decorator, Forklift Driver, Handicraft, HR, Nursing, Receptionist, Sewing, Shippin, Social work, Solderer, Air freight, Blacksmith, Building draughtsman and Quantity Surveyor, Caretaker, Childicare, Command, Containering, Conselling, Draftman, Factory worker, Fish processing, Fishing, Good communication skills, Health & Safety, Housekeeping, Lawyer, Licence, Loader, Meteorologist, Musician, Planning and Development Surveyor, Port worker, Printing agent, Professional Sega Dancer, "Ratbun" maker, Skill worker, "Supenser", "Caussten", Supervisor, Taxi Driver, Technician, Telephonist, Textile, Transport, Waltress

Responses from non-Chagossian individuals

All non-Chagossian responses from individuals came from yachters who had some experience of passing through BIOT's outer islands for the purposes of safe passage (tourism is not permitted). Overwhelmingly, they said they supported resettlement but also the idea of some form of Chagossian engagement in limited tourism of the outer islands and restoration of historic structures on these islands.

Organisational Responses and Meetings

Government of Mauritius

The Government of Mauritius told the UK Government that it rejected the consultation exercise on the basis that it felt it was the only party which had the lawful authority to determine and discuss issues relating to the Chagos Archipelago, including resettlement.

UK Parliament Foreign Affairs Committee

The Foreign Affairs Committee confirmed that it did not intend to provide a response to the public consultation.

UK Chagos Support Association (UKChSA)

UKChSA said that the consultation document failed to provide enough information for Chagossians to make a fully informed choice on return. And that the consultation document did not offer a 'meaningful choice' due to the closed questions in the questionnaire.

As follow-up, officials met with six UKChSA representatives to explain, as they had in other meetings, and subsequently by letter circulated to all stakeholders, that the consultation document and the questionnaire sought qualitative views on all aspects of the scenarios, and responses need not be limited to binary responses. Further feedback was received from the representatives:

- UKChSA criticised what they perceived to be a sense of the resettlement options being developed as a "business model" where Chagossians were viewed according to their ability to support an economy.
- Representatives of UKChSA said there was anxiety about what will happen next the UKChSA representatives were likely to recommend that people in their community should not fill out the questionnaire for fear of being committed to a course of action.
- UKChSA representatives said that they wanted a timeline for decisions on connected matters such as citizenship and their immigration status under resettlement.

Royal Society for the Protection of Birds (RSPB)

RSPB said that they took no view on the policy question of potential resettlement but expressed the need for comprehensive Environmental Impact Assessments, and a Strategic Environmental Assessment as appropriate, to be undertaken prior to any detailed planning of a resettlement. They stated that the costs of carrying out such assessments and funding any mitigation that they identify must be properly built into the cost projections for all infrastructure development.

5

Chagos Refugees Group (CRG)

CRG believed that there is a lack of clarity in the consultation about most of the basic requirements of a settled community, including jobs, employment conditions, salaries, housing, pensions, education, visits from wider family members, and transport.

CRG suggested that current and expected returnees exceeds the Medium Option of 500 people, and therefore more land will be required than is provided for in that option. CRG suggests that further planning must include Diego Garcia and Peros Banhos/Salomon Groups.

CRG state that the capital costings in the consultation document ignore the availability of alternative funding from sources such as the European Development Fund, the USA, sovereign wealth funds and partnership funding from commercial enterprises.

Chagos Conservation Trust (CCT)

CCT commented on the need to conduct environmental assessments of all construction work that might be done before construction commenced. They said that neglect of these and of the ability of such assessments to direct impact-free constructions is the main cause of tropical coastal environmental degradation worldwide, to the detriment of people.

CCT pointed out that even low level reef fishing causes damage to coral reef fish biomass and reef health and that climate change consequences must be taken into account if substantial cost later on is to be avoided. They recommend that well-documented scientific findings regarding climate change and sea level rising in BIOT, food sustainability and potential damage from construction are used for decision making.

The Linnean Society of London

The Society response was to endorse the comments from the Chagos Conservation Trust.

United Micronations Multi-Oceanic Archipelago (UMMOA)

UMMOA urged the United Kingdom to try to make right the wrongs that were done against the Chagossians, and allow them to return. They also hoped that sustainable fishing by Chagossians would be allowed as part of managing the Marine Protected Area in the future.

BIOT Deputy Commissioner meeting with Chagossians in Mauritius

Chagossians at the meeting expressed unhappiness with the consultation document and the options outlined. However, the Deputy Commissioner assessed that Chagossians wanted to engage in the consultation.

First generation Chagossians expressed a desire to spend time on the islands they were born on and conclude their lives there. The potential security restrictions on visits by friends and family to Diego Garcia were deemed unacceptable by the Chagossians.

There was a low degree of interest in employment opportunities on the military facility because wages might be lower than on Mauritius and there was a high likelihood they could have to leave family and friends behind.

BIOT Deputy Commissioner meeting with Chagossians in Seychelles

Chagossians suggested developing a tourist industry on the outer islands and that heritage visits are crucial.

BIOT Administrator meeting with Chagossians in Crawley

Chagossians expressed anxiety about the length of time that resettlement could take. Those who want to go back did not want to wait several years without any change to their situations in the UK, which they consider to be unacceptable.

Chagossians were keen to know more about employment on BIOT, including the training that would be made available. They were also keen to know how issues like citizenship would be addressed, though as the consultation document says, this was not possible before a decision in principle on resettlement by Ministers.

BIOT Administrator meeting with Chagossians in Manchester

The Chagossians were keen that a decision account for the fact that there was no "one size fits all" for the community. Some would want to return and some would not, and they wanted a decision that was not one or the other.

There was some anxiety about the need to leave families behind in any model, particularly a pilot. Many Chagossians were interested in training, both for resettlement or in the UK as an alternative to it. Chagossians were keen to create a sustainable economy and not remain dependent on UK taxpayers.

Chagossians were very keen to conserve the culture of the Chagossians, and protecting the "relics" in the Territory so they were not lost to time. They thought this was important as part of any heritage activity even if a resettlement did not take place.

The Chagossians were worried about the prospect of Mauritius taking on the islands in the future, after they had resettled. Several criticised Mauritius for their current situation.

There was determination that resettlement should not be focussed entirely on those who were born in the Territory, but other generations should have the chance to return.

Annex 179
African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States, Declaration of the 8th Summit of Heads of State and Government of the ACP Group of States: Port Moresby Declaration (31 May-1 June 2016)	e)

EXTRACT

DECLARATION OF THE 8TH SUMMIT OF ACP HEADS OF STATE AND GOVERNMENT OF THE ACP GROUP OF STATES

PORT MORESBY DECLARATION

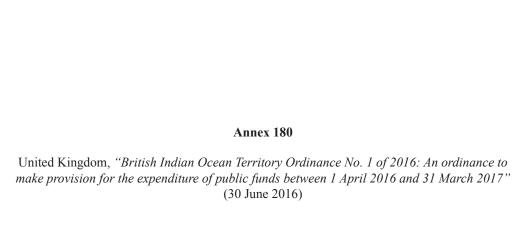

I. PREAMBLE

We, Heads of State and Government of the African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States (ACP Group), meeting at our 8th Summit in Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea on 31 May and 1 June 2016 under the theme "Repositioning the ACP Group to respond to the challenges of sustainable development",

. . . .

HEREBY DECLARE:

21. We recognise that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised by the former colonial power from the territory of Mauritius prior to its independence in violation of international law and UN Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Mauritius and are resolved to support Mauritius in its efforts to effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago.

BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY

ORDINANCE No. 1 OF 2016

An ordinance to make provision for the expenditure of public funds between 1 April 2016 and 31 March 2017.

Enacted by the Commissioner for the British Indian Ocean Territory.

30 June 2016

Peter Hayes Commissioner

port title and ommencement. 1. This Ordinance may be cited as the Appropriation (2016-17) Ordinance 2016 and shall come into force forthwith.

of £4,225,000.00 for the financial car 2016/17 2. The Commissioner may cause to be issued out of the public funds of the Territory and applied to the service of the financial year beginning on 1 April 2016 a sum not exceeding £4,225,000.00 which sum is granted for, and shall be appropriated to the purposes of, and to defray the charges of, the several services specified in the schedule to this Ordinance that will come in the course of payment during that period of the financial year.

SCHEDULE

Summary of Expenditure

Marine	£3,405,000.00
Legal	£150,000.00
Commercial	£11,000,00
Science	£90,000.00
Finance	£3,000.00
Diego Garcia	£120,000.00
Administration	£446,000.00
Total	£4,225,000,00
Diego Garcia Expenditure ($853,820.24 @ 0,674)	£575,474.00

THE BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY. THE CORONERS (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE 2016

Ordinance No. 2 of 2016

An Ordinance to amend the Coroners Ordinance 1985.

يان ند	Arrangement of sections.
Section		Page
1,	Citation and commencement.
2.	Definition.	Ž,
3.	Amendment of section 4(4)(b) of the Principal Ordinance.	2. 9.

Enacted by the Commissioner for the British Indian Ocean Territory

-14-7

05 August 2016

Commissioner

THE BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY

Ordinance No. 2 of 2016

Citation and 1. This Ordinance may be cited as the Coroners (Amendment) commencement. Ordinance 2016 and shall come into force forthwith.

Definition.

2. "The Principal Ordinance" means the Coroners Ordinance 1985.

Amendment of section 4(4)(b) of the Principal Ordinance.

3. Section 4(4)(b) of the Principal Ordinance is amended by deleting this subsection and replacing it with:

"(b) This section shall also be read subject to The United Kingdom Forces (Jurisdiction of Overseas Territories' Courts) Order 2015."

THE BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY.

THE MARRIAGE (AMENDMENT) ORDINANCE 2016

Ordinance No. 3 of 2016

An Ordinance to amend the Marriage Ordinance of 1984.

	Arrangement of sections.
ection		Page
1,	Citation and commencement.
	Definition.	5
2. 3.	Repeal of sections 2, 5 and 6 of the Principal Ordinance.	2. 2. 2.
4.	Amendment of section 3 of the Principal Ordinance.
5.	Amendment of section 4 of the Principal Ordinance.	2. 2. 2.
62	Amendment of sections 13, 18 and 19 of the Principal Ordinance	2
7.	Amendment of section 16 of the Principal Ordinance.	7
8.	Repeal of Schedules I and 2 of the Principal Ordinance.	3.
9.	Amendment of Schedules 3 and 4 of the Principal Ordinance	3.
10.	Amendment of Schedule 4 of the Principal Ordinance.	7

Enacted by the Commissioner for the British Indian Ocean Territory

15 December 2016

John Kittmer

Commissioner

THE BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY

Ordinance No. 3 of 2016

Citation and commencement. 1. This Ordinance may be cited as the Marriage (Amendment) Ordinance 2016 and shall come into force forthwith.

Definition.

2. "The Principal Ordinance" means the Marriage Ordinance 1984.

Repeal of sections 2. 5 and 6 of the Principal Ordinance

3. Sections 2, 5 and 6 of the Principal Ordinance are hereby repealed.

Amendment of section 3 of the Principal Ordinance.

4. Section 3 of the Principal Ordinance is hereby amended by deleting the words "the commencement of this Ordinance" in subsection (a) and the proviso, and "commencement of this Ordinance" in subsection (b) and replacing them with "1st June 1984".

Amendment of section 4 of the Principal Ordinance.

5. Section 4 of the Principal Ordinance is hereby amended by deleting it and replacing it with the following:

4. The law of England, as for the time being in force in England, relating to -

"Law relating to capacity to marry, etc.

(a) the capacity of a person to marry.(b) the capacity of persons to marry each other;(c) the requirement for the prior consent of a person to be given to the marriage of another person; and (d) the legal effect, in the case of any purported marriage, of the absence of such capacity or such consent shall be the law relating to those matters in force in the Territory."

Amendment of sections 13, 18 and 19 of the Principal Ordinance.

6. Sections 13, 18 and 19 of the Principal Ordinance are hereby amended by deleting the sums shown in column I and replacing them with the sums shown in column 2.

Column 1	Column 2
£200	£2000
£500	£5000
£500	£5000

Amendment of section le of the Principal Ordinance.

7. Section 16 of the Principal Ordinance is hereby amended by deleting the words "one copy shall be given to the husband" and replacing them with "one copy shall be given to one of the parties to the marriage".

Repeal of Schedules I and 2 of the Principal

8. Schedules 1 and 2 of the Principal Ordinance are hereby repealed.

Amendment of Schedules 3 and 4 of the Principal Ordinance.

Ordinance.

9. Schedules 3 and 4 of the Principal Ordinance are hereby amended by deleting the word "Christian" wherever it appears and replacing it with the words "name." or "names" as the context shall require.

Amendment of Schedule 4 of the Principal Ordinance. 10. Schedule 4 of the Principal Ordinance is hereby amended by deleting the words "One shall be given to the husband" and replacing them with "One shall be given to one of the parties to the marriage".

THE BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY

THE LAW REVISION (MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS) ORDINANCE 2016

Ordinance No. 4 of 2016

An Ordinance to amend existing laws to ensure that they correctly correlate to each other, to increase the maximum penalties for specific offences and to remove or otherwise amend outdated or incorrect provisions.

Arrangement of sections.

112	Market Sell Line			Page.
1.	Citation and commencement		2	2
2	Amendment of existing laws.	V		2

Bracted by the Commissioner for the British Indian Ocean Territory

15 December 2016

John Kithmer Commissioner

THE BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY

THE LAW REVISION (MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS) ORDINANCE 2016

Ordinance No. 4 of 2016

Custion and commencement.

1. This Ordinance may be cited as the Law Revision (Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance 2016 and shall come into force on 1st April 2017.

Amendment of existing laws.

2. For each of the laws specified in the Schedule, the items listed in Column 1 shall be replaced, or otherwise amended by the corresponding items in Column 2.

SCHEDULE

Column 1	Column 2
Protection and Preservation of Wild Life
Ordinance 1970
Section 2	. **
"Imports and Exports Control Officer"	Replace with "Customs Officer"
"Imports and Exports Control Ordinance	Replace with "Imports and Exports Contro
1984"	Ordinance 2009"
"Outer Islands (Services for Visiting Vessels) Ordinance 1993"	Replace with "Visitors and Visiting Vessel
"Immigration Ordinance 2000"	Ordinance 2006" Replace with "British Indian Ocean
2334	Territory (Immigration) Order 2004"
"Fisheries (Conservation and Management)	Replace with "Fisheries (Conservation and Ordinance 1998"	Management) Ordinance 2007"
Section 3(2)(g)
£500	£5000
A STATE OF THE STA	day and second and the second and an arrange of the second and are second as a second and a second and a second
The Firearms Ordinance 1970
A STATE OF THE STA	direction of the second of the
Section 3(8)
"Imports and Exports Control Ordinance 1984"	Replace with "Imports and Exports Control
"Imports and Exports Control Officer"	Ordinance 2009" Replace with "Customs Officer"
Lapans voille Ostive	Reputer with Customs Comeer
The Taxation Ordinance 1981
The 1axeson Ordinance 1981
Section 3
Section 3(2) of the British Indian Ocean	Replace with "Section 3(2)(a) of the British
Ferritary Order 19767	Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order
	2004
The Penal Code 1981
Section 5
Courts Ordinance 1976*	Replace with "Courts Ordinance 1983"
Section 51(1)
750	£5000
Section 51(2) 375	cacaa
313	£2500

Section 7.1(4)
£750	£5000
Section 78
£750	£5000
Section 101	The state of the s
£150	£1000
Section 102(2)	Security Control
£75	£500	-
Section 111
£375	£2500
Section 139(3)
£1000	£5000
Section 160(4)
£75	£500
£375	£2500
Section 163(2)
E750	£5000
Section 165(1)
E750	£5000
Section 166
E150	£1000
Section 168(1)	and the second s
U5	£500
Section 168(3)
£150	£1000
Section 168(4)
300	£2000
Section 171 A(13)(a) 1100	none .
Section 216	£500
750	£5000
iection 246(4)	13000
75	£500
iection 261(1)	£750
75	£500
lection 261(2)	£-368
375	£2.500
Section 262(1)	the ANY
375	£2500
ection 262(2)	#2.709
375	£2500
ection 296	- Action
1500	£10000
ection 306(1)	- Anna
750	£5000
ection 314	Secretar
4500	£20000
ection 315	FEASON.
7500	£30000
ಸ್ವಾಪ್ತಾಪ್ತಾಣ '	*20010

The Courts Ordinance 1983	#.
Section 3(2)(a)	##
After "Order 1976"	Insert "or The British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004" and replace or' with a comma before "section or.
Section 4(2)
Delete "section 9" to "1976"	Replace with "section 10 of the British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Orde 2004
Section 10
£500	£5900
£500 Section 23	£5000
£250 Section 40	£2500
E100 Section 41	£1000
£100	£1000
Section 42	C WHOME SA PACTOR.
£10,000 (in each of the seven instances where this figure appears) Section 42(5) & (6)	£100,000
£500	£5000
Section 43 E500	£5000
Section 48(2)
£200 (in the two instances where this figure	• appears)	£2000
£500	£5000
The Administration of Estates Ordinance 1983
1.703
Section 11(2)	, in the second
E1000	£5000
Section 12	The second secon
ES00	£2500
The Births and Deaths Registration Ordinance 1984
Section 15(2)
6100	£1000
Section 18	, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,

125 Section 19 5250	£2500 £5000
The Emergency Powers Ordinance
Section 3(2)(j)	* ***
£500	£5000
The Employment Ordinance 1984
Section 21(3)
£50	£500
	3.300
The Explosives Ordinance 1984
Section 10(1)(a)
£1000	£5000
Section 10(1)(b)	2
£100	£1000
The Criminal Procedure Code 1986
Section 20(1)
20	£200
Section $1(2)(a)
The Immigration Ordinance, 1971."	Replace with "The British Indian Ocean
MARKET STATE OF THE STATE OF TH	Territory (Immigration) Order 2004"
The Fishery Limits Ordinance 1992"	Replace with "The Fisheries (Conservation
ection 31(2)(c)	and Management) Ordinance 2007 ¹⁵
Motor Vehicles Ordinance, 1981	Replace with "Road Traffic Ordinance
· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	1998
ection 68	्या अन्तर
50	£500
ection 141 200	have the
200 action 162	£2000
250	ETEOR
vetion 167 _{(2)(a)}	£2500
250	£2500
ection 167(2)(d)	**************************************
50	£500
ection 167(4)	A
100 ection 176(1)	£1000

"section 27 of the Motor Vehicles Ordinance, 1981" "28 or 29"	Replace with "section 26 of the Road Traffic Ordinance 1998" "27 or 28"
Section 176(2) "section 28 of the Motor Vehicles Ordinance, 1981" "29"	Replace with "section 27 of the Road Traffic Ordinance 1998"
Section 215(2) £25 £25 £50 £50 £200 £200 £500 £500 £1000 £500 £1000 Section 226(1) £500 £200 Section 226(2) £500 £200 Section 231 £1000 Section 232(1)(b) £20 Section 263(1) £200 Section 271(1)(a)(i) £500 Section 271(1)(a)(i)	£100 £100 £250 £250 £500 £500 £1000 £1000 £2500 £1000 £500 £1000 £1000 £1000 £5000 Replace with "The Misuse of Drugs Ordinance 1992"
The Public Funds (Procedures) Ordinance 1992 Section 1 "; and" and (definition of Crown Agents) Section 3(4) "or with the Crown Agents"	Repeal "; and" and definition of Crown Agents, insertion of full stop after "March" Repeal "or with the Crown Agents"
The Charges for Services Ordinance 1992 Section 3(4) k1000	£5000

The Misuse of Drugs Ordinance 1992
Section 4(4) "Imports and Exports Control Ordinance 1984" Section 18(1) £1000 Section 18(3) £2000 £1000	Replace with "Imports and Exports Contr Ordinance 2009" £5000 £10000 £5000
Interpretation and General Provisions Ordinance 1993
Section 6 "section 9(2) and (3) of the British Indian Ocean Territory Order 1976" Section 8 "British Indian Ocean Territory Order 1976" Section 8 Definition of the Crown Agents Bection 8 British Indian Ocean Territory Order 1976"	Replace with "section 10(3) and (4) of the British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004" Replace with "British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004" Repeal definition of the Crown Agents Replace with "British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004"
he Criminal Proceedings (Tape ecording of Interviews) Ordinance 1994
ection 2 imports and Exports Control Officer* timports and Exports Control Ordinance 184* Tisheries (Conservation and Management) rdinance 1991*	Replace with "Customs Officer" Replace with "Imports and Exports Control Ordinance 2009" Replace with "Pisheries (Conservation and Management) Ordinance 2007"
ne Ozone Layer Protections Ordinance 94
ction 2 nports and Exports Control Ordinance 84" ction 4	Replace with "Imports and Exports Control Ordinance 2009"
nports and Lixports Control Ordinance 84"	Replace with "Imports and Exports Control Ordinance 2009"

"Imports and Exports Control Officers" "Imports and Exports Control Ordinance 1984"	Replace with "Customs Officers" Replace with "Imports and Exports Cont Ordinance 2009"
The Diego Garcia Conservation (Restricted Area) Orthognes 1994
Section 5(4) £500	£2000
Section 8
"Immigration Ordinance 1971"	Replace with "British Indian Ocean Territory (Immigration) Order 2004"
"Immigration Ordinance 1971"	Replace with "British Indian Ocean. Territory (Immigration) Order 2004"
The Prevention of Oil Pollution Ordinance 1994
Section 7(2)
5800 £500	£2000
The BIOT Waters (Regulation of Activities) 1997
Designation of the
Section 2(1) "Imports and Exports Control Ordinance	Replace with "Imports and Exports Contr
1984	Ordinance 2009
"Fisheries (Conservation and Management)	Replace with "Fisheries (Conscrvation an Ordinance 1991"	Management) Ordinance 2007"
"Outer Islands (Services for Visiting	Replace with "Visitors and Visiting Vesse
Vessels) Ordinance 1993	Ordinance 2006"
Section 2(2)(b) Pisheries (Conservation and Management)	Danisha with Wish at 100
Ordinance 1991*	Replace with "Fisheries (Conservation an Management) Ordinance 2007"
Section 2(2)(c)	A STATE OF THE STA
Outer Islands (Services for Visiting	Replace with "Visitors and Visiting Vesse
Vessels) Ordinance 1993"	Ordinance 2006*
Section 2(3)	Market and the Control of the Contro
Fisheries (Conservation and Management) Ordinance 1993*	Replace with 'Pisheries (Conservation and
Section 6	Management) Ordinance 2007"
Immigration Ordinance 1971*	Replace with "British Indian Ocean Territory (Immigration) Order 2004"
Pisheries (Conservation and Management)	Replace with "Fisheries (Conservation and
Ordinance 1991"	Management) Ordinance 2007"
Outer Islands (Services for Visiting	Replace with "Visitors and Visiting Vesse
Vessels) Ordinance 1993"	Ordinance 2006"

"Immigration Ordinance 1971"	Replace with "British Indian Ocean Territory (Immigration) Order 2004"
The Road Traffic Ordinance 1998
Section 2
"Nava! Discipline Act 1957 or the Army	Bullion Market Street
Act 1955 or the Air Porce Act 1955"	Replace with "Armed Forces Act 2006"
Section 4(3)
£200	£1000
Section 5(2)
£200	£1000
Section 6(2)	***************************************
CONTROL OF THE CONTRO	insert "37(6)," between "30(2)" and "38(4)
Section 6(7)	managed and and and a state with the control of the
(The whole subsection)	Repeal whole subsection
Section 6(8)	•
£1000	£5000
Section 7(2)
£1000	£5000
Section 13(5)	state and and a
200	£1000
Section 17	- I mare
£200	£1000
Section 18(1) E200	00013
Section 18(2)	13,000
E200	£1000
Section 22(1)	St. Mary
200	£1000
Section 27(5)	TANK TO THE PARTY OF THE PARTY
30	£150
Section 23(3)	Times.
500	£2500
lection 23(5)	1
200	£1000
Section 26
five"	"fourteen"
ection 28	· Luz anima
500	£2500
Section 29(1)	PINKA
2000	£10000
Section 29(2) :1000	rsono
Section 30(1)	£5000
2 0 00	£10000
iection 30(2)	W AGAA
1000	£5000
Section $1(9)	quantum Mi

ection 19 Fisher ics (Conservation and Management) refinance 1998*	Replace with "Fisheries (Conservation and Management) Ordinance 2007" lection 3(2) Imports and Exports Control Officer* Imports and Exports Control Ordinance 984* Fisheries (Conservation and Management) Indinance 1998*	Replace with "Customs Officer" Replace with "Imports and Exports Control Ordinance 2009" Replace with "Fisheries (Conservation and Management) Ordinance 2007" isitors and Visiting Vessels Ordinance
ils.	£60
200 Section 48(4)	£1000
25 Pection 47	£100
550 Section 46(5)	£100 £200
- 10 Section 45(3) - 20	£50
£100 Section 44(2) £10	£500
Section 43(1) E50	£250
£20 £40	£100 £200
£100 Section 42(1)	£500
Section 41 £50	£250
Section 40 £200	£1000°
Section 39(1) £200	£1000
Section 38(4) £200	£2006
Section 37(6) £200	£230
Section 36(3) £50	£10000
Section 12(3) £2000	£10000

Trade in Endangered Species (Control) Ordinance 2007
Section 3(5) £1(6)0 Section 3(7) £1000	£5000
Section 8(2) "Imports and Exports Control Ordinance 1984"	Replace with "Imports and Exports Contro Ordinance 2009"
Fisheries (Conservation and Management) Ordinance 2007
Section 5(5)(c) Imports and Exports Control Officer* Imports and Exports Control Ordinance 1984*	Replace with "Customs Officer" Replace with "Imports and Exports Contro

BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY

Statutory Instrument No. 1 of 2016

The Delegation of Powers (Appointment of Customs Officers) Order 2016

- 1. This Order may be cited as the Delegation of Powers (Appointment of Customs Officers) Order 2016.
 - 2. In exercise of the power in that behalf vested in me by section 28 of the Interpretation and General Provisions Ordinance 1993, I hereby delegate to the Commissioner's Representative the Commissioner's authority and powers to appoint Customs Officers pursuant to section 3(a) of the Imports and Exports Control Ordinance 2009.
 - 3. This Order shall come into force forthwith and may be revoked at any time, for any reason.
 - 4. For the avoidance of doubt, this delegation shall not preclude the Commissioner from himself exercising the powers or discharging the duties set out in paragraph 2 whenever he sees fit.

Peter Hayes Commissioner British Indian Ocean Territory

Dated: 08 March 2016

BRITISH INDIAN OCEAN TERRITORY

Statutory Instrument No. 2 of 2016

The Delegation of Powers (Electronic Communications Ordinance 2009) Order 2016

- 1. This Order may be cited as the Delegation of Powers (Electronic Communications Ordinance) Order 2016.
- 2. In exercise of the power in that behalf vested in me by section 28 of the Interpretation and General Provisions Ordinance 1993, I hereby delegate the Commissioner's authority and powers set out in paragraph (a) to the Commissioner's Representative where the criteria set out in paragraph (b) apply.
- (a) The powers and duties of the Commissioner set out in sections 4(1), 4(5)(b), 4(5)(c), 4(5)(d), 4(6) and 4(7) of the Electronic Communications Ordinance 2009.
- (b) A person present in the British Indian Ocean Territory has made an application for a licence, pursuant to section 4(1) of the Electronic Communications Ordinance 2009, for the purposes of using radio equipment:
 - (i) for self-training in radio communications (including technical investigation), and
 - (ii) as a leisure activity, and not for commercial purposes of any kind.

- This Order shall come into force forthwith and may be revoked at any time, for any reason.
- 4. For the avoidance of doubt, this delegation shall not preclude the Commissioner from himself exercising the powers or discharging the duties set out in paragraph (a) whenever he sees fit.

Peter Hayes Commissioner

British Indian Ocean Territory

Dated: 03 June 2016

United Nations TD/507

Distr.: General 19 July 2016

Original: English

Fourteenth session

Nairobi 17–22 July 2016

Ministerial Declaration of the Group of 77 and China to UNCTAD XIV

From decisions to actions

We, the Ministers of the Member States of the Group of 77 and China, meeting in Nairobi on the occasion of the fourteenth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD XIV),

Express our appreciation and gratitude to the Government and people of Kenya for hosting the ministerial meeting, and for the warm hospitality and the excellent organization from which we have benefited since our arrival,

Reaffirm our support for the outcomes of previous UNCTAD ministerial conferences, in particular, the Doha Mandate of 2012 and the Accra Accord of 2008,

Also reaffirm previous declarations of the Group of 77 and China; in particular, the declaration emanating from our ministerial meeting held in Doha on the margins of UNCTAD XIII in 2012, and the Ministerial Declaration of the thirty-ninth Annual Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs held in New York in 2015, as well as the declaration "For a new world order for living well" adopted by the Summit of Heads of State and Government on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Group of 77 in Santa Cruz, Bolivia, in 2014,

Welcome all decisions made at the international level in 2015 that underscore the crucial role of the United Nations in sustainable development and in enhancing international economic and financial governance, in particular, the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, the Addis Ababa Action Agenda, the Sendai Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction, the Paris Agreement under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, as well as the decisions reached at the Tenth Ministerial Conference of the World Trade Organization (WTO),

Reaffirm the importance of the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries for the Decade 2011–2020 (Istanbul Programme of Action), the ¹ The Republic of Nicaragua is not a party to the Paris Agreement.

Vienna Programme of Action for Landlocked Developing Countries for the Decade 2014–2024 (Vienna Programme of Action) and the Small Island Developing States Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway, as well as Agenda 2063 of the African Union and the New Partnership for Africa's Development, Underscore the importance of public-private partnerships for infrastructure development and ask UNCTAD to take note in its work of the outcome documents of the other United Nations bodies in this regard,

We must now focus on moving from decisions to actions

In this regard:

- 1. We stress that the ambitious collective outcomes reached in 2015 represent both opportunities and challenges for developing countries, and that the call for the universality of the challenges should be fully cognizant of the respective capabilities and specific circumstances of developing countries, which poses particular challenges to them in dealing with issues such as industrialization and macroeconomic stability, climate change, health and achieving poverty eradication and sustainable development, and that dealing with those challenges requires a global enabling environment that ensures the effective transfer of technology on preferential terms and sustainable, predictable and adequate flows of finance to support the national efforts of developing countries.
- 2. We reaffirm the need for committed multilateralism with an architecture that is truly fair, inclusive, democratic and supportive of sustainable development; an architecture that focuses on enabling developing countries to achieve prosperity and well-being for their people by fulfilling their development goals.
- 3. We call for the reform of global economic and financial governance structures with the participation of all, on an equal footing, as being crucial to development and to the implementation of the Sustainable Development Goals and demand that efforts to sideline multilateral processes and institutions must be avoided.
- 4. We reaffirm that planet Earth and its ecosystems are our home and that Mother Earth is a common expression in a number of countries and regions; and we agree to deepen engagement with our partners and stakeholders in support of sustainable development efforts and to address our development needs.
- 5. We confirm that the right to development is an inalienable human right and that equality of opportunity for development is a prerogative both of nations and of individuals who make up nations.
- 6. We recognize that practical and pragmatic steps must be taken to address challenges consistent with the profile, needs and development goals of individual developing countries in a people-centred manner, eschewing a one-size-fits-all approach.
- 7. We underscore that adhering to principles such as equity, inclusiveness, common but differentiated responsibilities, special and differential treatment, less than full reciprocity and the right to development, are crucial to strengthening the role of developing countries in the global economy.
- 8. We recognize that the potential of women to engage in, contribute to and benefit from sustainable development as leaders, participants and agents of change has not been fully realized. We support prioritizing measures to promote gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls in all spheres of our societies. We resolve to unlock the potential of women as drivers of sustainable development through many measures and commit to creating an enabling environment for improving the situation of women and girls everywhere, particularly in rural areas and local communities among indigenous peoples and ethnic minorities.

- 9. We stress the need to build strong economic foundations for all our countries, and recognize, in this context, that, since our meeting in Doha, developments at the global level have created new and aggravated existing challenges for the entire international community, in particular, the peoples of the developing world.
- 10. We reiterate that the global economic, financial and trading system, including the multilateral trading system, remains unbalanced; that global inequality remains with many still in the abyss of poverty; that the high volatility of food and commodity prices is a persistent challenge and that, furthermore, the impact of the global economic and financial crisis has revealed new vulnerabilities, affecting, in particular, developing countries.
- 11. We also recognize that new opportunities have emerged, and resolve that developing countries should intensify efforts to take advantage of these opportunities, while underscoring the importance of a conducive international environment to complement these efforts.
- 12. We stress the importance of multilateral efforts to tackle increasingly complex cross-border challenges that have serious effects on development, such as financial market volatility and spillovers to developing countries, illicit capital and financial flows, tax evasion and tax avoidance, sovereign debt crisis prevention and resolution, cyber security, the influx of refugees, foreign terrorist fighters and bribery, as well as the need for technology transfer, absorption and its financing, and commend UNCTAD for its work, as appropriate, regarding addressing these challenges and other systemic issues, and request UNCTAD to strengthen such work.
- We recall that sovereign debt matters should concern both developed and developing countries. This should be considered as a matter that has the potential to adversely impact the global economy and the achievement of the Sustainable Development Goals if left unchecked. We recognize the need to assist developing countries in attaining long-term debt sustainability through coordinated policies aimed at fostering debt financing, debt relief, debt restructuring and sound debt management, as appropriate. We reiterate our concern about the activities of so-called vulture funds and their actions of a highly speculative nature, which pose a risk to all future debt-restructuring processes for developing countries. We urge all United Nations Member States to further discuss sovereign debt restructuring and management processes, with active, inclusive participation and engagement by all relevant stakeholders, in order to nurture and strengthen these processes to make them more effective, equitable, durable, independent and development-oriented, and reaffirm the roles of the United Nations and the international financial institutions in accordance with their respective mandates. We also welcome the adoption of General Assembly resolution 69/319 on basic principles on sovereign debt restructuring processes on 10 September 2015 as an important step.
- 14. We take note of the increasing calls by ordinary citizens across geographic regions and within developed and developing countries, for their Governments to secure adequate policy space within the context of bilateral, regional and international agreements and commitments, in order to ensure their well-being. In this regard, we therefore demand that international rules must allow for policy space and policy flexibility for developing countries, which are crucial to enabling our countries to formulate development strategies, in accordance with their sovereign right, that reflect national interests and differing needs, which are not always taken into account by international economic policymaking in the process of integration with the global economy.
- 15. We stress the importance of respecting policy space, recognizing national priorities and leadership to formulate, identify and pursue the most appropriate mix of economic and social policies to achieve equitable and sustainable development, understanding that national ownership is key to achieving development.

- 16. We stress that unilateral coercive measures and legislation are contrary to international law, international humanitarian law, the United Nations Charter, the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States and the rules and principles of the World Trade Organization. These measures impede the full achievement and further enhancement of the economic and social development of all countries, particularly developing countries, by imposing unconscionable hardships on the people of the affected countries.
- 17. We stress that effective taxation, including combating tax evasion and reducing opportunities for tax avoidance by multinational corporations, will be critical in the mobilization of resources for the implementation of the Sustainable Development Goals and the overall economic advancement of developing countries, and hence requires collective and inclusive, democratic action with the active participation of developing countries, at the global level, while respecting the policy space of countries.
- 18. We call for economic structural transformation that strengthens productive capacities, productivity and productive employment; financial inclusion; sustainable agriculture, rural and fisheries development; sustainable industrial development; universal access to affordable, reliable, sustainable and modern energy services; sustainable transport systems; and infrastructure that is resilient and of a high standard. We reaffirm the importance and crucial and effective role of the State in leading and promoting development, even as efforts to strengthen the contribution of all stakeholders, including the private sector and civil society, are enhanced.
- 19. We express serious concern over the widening income and other inequalities between the developed and developing countries. We, therefore, reaffirm the Group's objective to nurture a community of the shared future of humankind through a new type of international relations based on win-win cooperation to ensure inclusive development for this purpose, we call upon the international community to intensify development cooperation, make financial resources available for development, build a more vigorous multilateral partnership and create a better enabling environment for development, as well as prevent the politicization of the international trading system, depriving many developing countries of the opportunity to be integrated into, and benefit from, the multilateral trading system.
- 20. We reiterate the importance of achieving, in particular, targets for official development assistance of 0.7 per cent of gross national income as official development assistance to developing countries and 0.15 per cent to 0.2 per cent of gross national income as official development assistance to the least developed countries, as well as further enhancing the resources for the least developed countries.
- 21. We call for active and strong global partnerships and cooperation and for greater focus on building productive capacities to address the main challenges to our achievement of sustainable and inclusive socioeconomic development, including poverty, hunger, food insecurity, unemployment, inequality, the lack of access to renewable energy and relevant technologies, the adverse effects of climate change and burgeoning debt levels, as well as the promotion of industrialization, the diversification of economies, the promotion of value addition, the implementation of national and regional hubs of innovation and development and the realization of the modern and successful infrastructure of communications. We request UNCTAD to continue capacity-building activities, including TrainForTrade and in the framework of paragraph 166 of the Bangkok Plan of Action.
- 22. We recognize that achieving sustainable economic growth requires the talents, creativity and entrepreneurial vigour of the entire population, as well as supportive policies towards micro, small and medium-sized enterprises, skills development, capacities to innovate and absorb new technologies and the ability to produce a higher quality and greater range of products, infrastructure and other investments.

4

- 23. We call for continued and enhanced North-South cooperation, which is the core of the Global Partnership for Sustainable Development and remains critical in overcoming global development disparities, and recognize its importance, along with triangular cooperation.
- 24. We recognize that global challenges and opportunities have reinforced the need for continued and enhanced cooperation and solidarity among developing countries; it is in this spirit that we also call for enhanced South–South cooperation, including the sharing of home-grown approaches and best practices in sustainable development and governance; increased dialogue and coordination in major regional and international issues; strengthening of South–South business initiatives; and enhanced cooperation in areas such as agriculture, education, industrialization and infrastructural development, as an important element of international cooperation for development as a complement, not a substitute, to North–South cooperation.
- 25. We note that the digital economy is an important and growing part of the global economy, and that information and communications technologies have a great potential to create jobs, enhance innovation and enhance market access, in particular for developing countries.
- 26. We express concern that a digital divide remains between developed and developing countries, and that many developing countries lack affordable access to information and communications technologies, which remains a critical challenge to many developing countries, which needs to be addressed through, among others, international cooperation and technology transfer, including through the effective participation of developing countries in research and development, equal participation in Internet governance forums and stronger commitment from the private sector in the developed countries to support the private sector in developing countries.
- 27. We stress that the expeditious and effective transfer, dissemination and diffusion of appropriate technology to developing countries, on favourable terms, including on concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, respect for policy space to build technological and absorptive capacities and the promotion of innovation in developing countries remain important. This is most important as we recognize the opportunities and challenges posed by rapid advances in information and communications technology and the need to address the digital divide and other systemic and entrenched inequalities within the sphere of information and communications technology, including the Internet.
- 28. We call, in this regard, for the enhanced support and cooperation of key partners, such as UNCTAD and the International Trade Centre, the Group of 15 and the South Centre, as well as other multilateral and regional institutions and stakeholders, in advancing our goals and objectives.
- 29. We express our continued support to the Secretary-General of UNCTAD and look forward to the strengthening of the bond between UNCTAD and the Group of 77 and China.
- 30. We reaffirm the central role of UNCTAD as the focal point within the United Nations for the integrated treatment of trade and development and interrelated issues, including in the areas of finance, debt, technology transfer, transit and transport issues, regional and global value chains, the international investment regime and sustainable development.

- 31. We call for the strengthening of the mandate of UNCTAD and its three pillars of research and analysis, consensus-building and technical cooperation, as well as the intergovernmental machinery, recognizing its central role as the focal point within the United Nations for the integrated treatment of trade and development and interrelated issues such as those within the areas of finance, technology, investment and sustainable development. In this context, the outcome of UNCTAD XIV should identify key issues where consensus would be built in the period between UNCTAD XIV and the following session, with a view to specific and measurable intergovernmental action. A benefit would be that intergovernmental decisions and agreements would form a coherent and holistic body of work that would serve as an important input in the preparation for the following session. To this end, adequate and additional budgetary and human resources should be provided to UNCTAD from the United Nations regular budget to enable UNCTAD, as a body of the General Assembly, to effectively and fully carry out its mandate under its three pillars.
- 32. We recognize the vital role of investment in support of sustainable development and will work intensively with UNCTAD, as well as other multilateral and regional institutions and stakeholders, to reform the international investment regime, improving the development dimension of international investment agreements, ensuring a balance between investor rights and obligations and safeguarding the right of States to regulate in the public interest, including through alternative approaches to dispute settlement, to better serve and reflect the new context of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. In this regard, we take note with appreciation of the Report of the Group of 77 Meeting on Investment for Sustainable Development, held from 4 to 5 May 2016 in Pattaya, Thailand.
- 33. We express serious concern at the lack of meaningful progress in the WTO Doha Round, particularly on domestic support and market access issues of interest to developing countries and the efforts by some members to undermine the commitments contained in the Doha Development Agenda, while welcoming the commitment of the Tenth Ministerial Conference to maintain development at the centre of future negotiations and its reaffirmation of the principles of special and differential treatment, flexibilities for developing countries and collective commitment to advancing on the Doha Round issues. In this context, we urge all WTO members to uphold and reiterate their commitment to promote an apolitical, universal, fair and balanced, open, inclusive, non-discriminatory, transparent, equitable, rules-based and predictable multilateral trading system, that has developed countries, to secure a share in the growth of international trade commensurate with the needs of their economic development and to fully integrate into the multilateral trading system.
- 34. We underscore the need to improve global economic governance by, among others, strengthening the multilateral trading regime and increasing the representation and voice of developing countries in the international system with equal rights to participate in international rule-making. In this regard, we endeavour to enhance the participation in and role of developing countries in the areas of trade, investment and development in international economic forums, including the Group of 20.
- 35. We emphasize the need to focus on analysing and monitoring how subsidies and various forms of market access restrictions from developed countries have historically affected and continue to undermine the development of productive capacities in the agricultural sector of developing countries.
- 36. We underscore the importance of collective international action towards achieving the graduation of half of the least developed countries by 2020, as envisioned in the Istanbul Programme of Action.

- 37. We emphasize the importance of facilitating accession to WTO, especially for developing countries, recognizing the contribution that this would make to the rapid and full integration of these countries into the multilateral trading system. In this regard, we urge that the accession process be accelerated without political impediments and in an expeditious and transparent manner for developing countries that have applied for WTO membership, and reaffirm the importance of the WTO decision of 25 July 2012 on accession by the least developed countries. We also underscore and commend the pivotal role of UNCTAD in this regard, particularly through its technical assistance and capacity-building to developing countries before, during and after the process of accession to WTO. We call upon UNCTAD to strengthen this work. We welcome the results from WTO accessions so far. These results have contributed to the strengthening of the rules-based multilateral trading system.
- 38. We will continue to fight against all threats to economic growth and development, including all forms of protectionist measures and unilateral economic pressures, especially by the leading industrial economies, while preserving our policy space.
- 39. We, therefore, firmly reject the imposition of laws and regulations with extraterritorial impact and all other forms of coercive economic, financial and trade measures, including unilateral sanctions against developing countries, and urge the international community to take urgent and effective actions to eliminate the use of such measures.
- 40. We call upon UNCTAD to enhance its work towards addressing the trade and development challenges of all developing countries and, in so doing, to strengthen its work on the special problems of the least developed countries; African countries; landlocked developing countries; small island developing States; structurally weak, vulnerable and small economies and the related problems and challenges faced by middle-income countries, as well as to assist transit developing countries with their specific needs and challenges, particularly in relation to infrastructure development and transport.
- 41. We further call upon UNCTAD to provide the appropriate support necessary to contribute to the implementation of specific actions requested in the Addis Ababa Action Agenda, the Istanbul Programme of Action, the Vienna Programme of Action and the SAMOA Pathway. UNCTAD should also support the implementation of Agenda 2063 of the African Union and the New Partnership for Africa's Development. In this regard, adequate and additional resources should be provided to UNCTAD.
- 42. We call for the allocation of additional human and budgetary resources from the United Nations regular budget to enable UNCTAD to implement its mandate, which has a great relevance for all countries and in particular for developing countries, including its work on systemic issues, global macroeconomics and finance, debt, taxation, investment, trade and development and technology transfer.
- 43. We reaffirm our commitment to strengthen our ability as a Group to collectively promote our interests, particularly within multilateral trade and development forums, and commit, in this context, to ensuring that the Group continues to be a proactive force in the global effort to solve global issues, building on its solidarity, maximizing its competitive advantage and applying its collective capacity. We welcome steps taken to enhance coordination among Group chapters, and urge that these efforts be deepened.
- 44. We reiterate our call for support to the Palestinian people to be sustained by relevant research, policy analysis, advisory services and effective technical cooperation activities to alleviate the adverse economic impact of the unbearable conditions imposed by the prolonged Israeli occupation; and urge UNCTAD to strengthen and intensify its programme of assistance to the Palestinian people with adequate resources; and support paragraphs 9 of General Assembly resolutions 69/20 and 70/12, which request UNCTAD to report to the General Assembly on the economic cost of occupation for the Palestinian people and exert all efforts to secure the resources required to fulfil these resolutions.

- 45. We reaffirm the need for the Government of Argentina and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland to resume negotiations in accordance with the principles and the objectives of the United Nations Charter and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, in order to find, as soon as possible, a peaceful solution to the sovereignty dispute relating to "the Question of the Malvinas Islands", which seriously damages the economic capacities of Argentina and the need for both parties to refrain from taking decisions that would imply introducing unilateral modifications in the situation while the Islands are going through the process recommended by the General Assembly.
- 46. We reaffirm the need to find a peaceful solution to the decolonization and sovereignty issues affecting developing countries, recognizing that failure to resolve these issues will seriously damage and undermine the development and economic capacities and prospects of these countries. In this context, recalling the concerns expressed by the Summit of Heads of State and Government and the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 and China in their previous declarations regarding the dispute over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised by the United Kingdom from the territory of Mauritius prior to independence, and the "marine protected area" that was declared by the United Kingdom around the Chagos Archipelago, we take note of the ruling of the Arbitral Tribunal in the case brought by Mauritius against the United Kingdom under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea that the "marine protected area" was unlawfully established under international law.
- 47. We urge UNCTAD and other partners in the international community to assist developing countries facing specific circumstances, in particular related to terrorism, increasing numbers of displaced populations or hosting large numbers of refugees in protracted situations, in addressing the challenges they face in the implementation of national development goals and the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

8

Annex 182 17th Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Non-Aligned Movement, Chagos Archipelago, No. NAM 2016/CoB/DOC.1. Corr.1 (17-18 Sept. 2016)

NAM 2016/CoB/DOC.1. Corr.1 Original: English

17th Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Non-Aligned Movement

Island of Margarita, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela 17 - 18 September 2016

FINAL DOCUMENT

Margarita, B.R. Venezuela 17-18 September 2016

NAM 2016/CoB/DOC.1. Corr.1

rejects any form of permanent settlement or local integration in Lebanon, they called for increased international efforts in order to mitigate the impact of the humanitarian crisis in expediting the only durable solution for those temporarily displaced into Lebanon, which is their safe return to their homeland and livelihoods;

- 332. The Heads of State or Government supported the efforts of the Lebanese Government to save Lebanon from all threats to its security and stability, and expressed their understanding of the policy the Government pursues vis-à-vis the developments in the Arab region;
- 333. The Heads of State or Government commended Lebanon's generosity in hosting refugees from Syria, reiterated the importance to continue supporting Lebanese government institutions in this regard, and expressed the need for the international community to intensify efforts to provide appropriate assistance to those refugees during their temporary stay and to their host communities. They emphasized the importance of reaching a political solution to the crisis in Syria, which will expedite the safe and dignified return of those refugees to their homeland and livelihoods:

Africa

- 334. The Heads of State or Government acknowledged the adoptions of the Agenda 2063 by the 24th ordinary session of the Heads of State or Government of the Assembly of the African Union held from 30 to 31 January 2015 in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia and expressed their support for effective implementation of this initiative in order to promote peace, stability and socio-economic development in Africa.
- 335. The Heads of State or Government welcomed the successful third Arab–African Summit held in Kuwait on 19 November 2013 under the title "Partners in Development and Investment. They welcomed as well all initiatives to strengthen the historic relations, solidarity and cooperation between the two regions.

Chagos Archipelago

- 336. The Heads of State or Government reaffirmed that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised by the former colonial power from the territory of Mauritius in violation of international law and UN Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Mauritius.
- 337. The Heads of State or Government further noted with grave concern that despite the strong opposition expressed by the Republic of Mauritius, the United Kingdom purported to establish a "marine protected area" ("MPA") around the Chagos Archipelago, further infringing the territorial integrity of the Republic of Mauritius and impeding the exercise of its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago as well as the exercise of the right of return of Mauritian citizens who were forcibly removed from the Archipelago by the United Kingdom. In this regard, they welcomed the ruling of the Arbitral Tribunal in the case brought by the Republic of Mauritius against the United Kingdom under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea that the "MPA" was unlawfully established under international law.
- 338. The Heads of State or Government also noted that on 18 March 2015, following proceedings initiated by Mauritius against the United Kingdom under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS) to challenge the legality of the "MPA", the Arbitral Tribunal set up under Annex VII to UNCLOS, unanimously ruled that the "MPA" violates international law
- 339. Cognizant that the Government of the Republic of Mauritius is committed to taking all appropriate measures to affirm the territorial integrity of the Republic of Mauritius and its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago under international law, the Heads of State or

NAM 2016/CoB/DOC.1, Corr.1

Government resolved to fully support such measures including any action that may be taken in this regard at the United Nations General Assembly.

340. The Heads of State or Government also took note of the concern expressed by the Republic of Maldives regarding the legal and technical issues arising from the United Kingdom's illegal decision in 2010 to declare a "MPA" in the Chagos Archipelago which overlaps the exclusive economic zone of the Republic of Maldives as declared in its Constitution without prejudice to future resolution of maritime delimitations.

Libya

- 341. The Heads of State or Government welcomed the signing on 17 December 2015 of the Libyan Political Agreement of Sokherat, Morocco and urged UNSMIL, the neighboring countries, the League of Arab States and the African Union to assist the Libyan Parties in the full implementation of the Agreement. They affirmed their support to the Authorities emanating from the Agreement as the legitimate Authorities of Libya, and encouraged them to work in a consensual way to end the division, ensure security and stability of the country and provide the Libyan People with the necessary services.
- 342. The Heads of State or Government reiterated their commitment to the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Libya and called on all states to refrain from interfering into the internal affairs of Libya, including by supplying arms to armed groups in violation of Security Council resolutions, using mass media to incite to violence and attempts to undermine the political process.
- 343. The Heads of State or Government called on the Parliament and Presidential Council to meet their commitments in accordance with the Libyan political agreement to expedite the process of approval of the Government of National Accord (GNA) to be proposed by the presidential council of the GNA as soon as possible, in order to achieve security and stability in Libya and to its people.

Tunisia

- 344. The Heads of State or Government welcomed the completion of the transition in Tunisia, with the holding, in November and December 2014, of presidential election; Commends all Tunisian social and political actors for a peaceful and consensual transition, and for their maturity, which allowed for a peaceful and consensual transition, and Underscores the exemplary nature of the Tunisian experience, Appeals to the international community to provide Tunisia with economic and financial support necessary for consolidation of democracy.
- 345. The Heads of State or Government condemned the recent terrorist attacks in Bardo Museum on the 18 March 2015 in Tunis and expressed their sincere condolences to the families of victims. The Heads of State or Government pledged their continued solidarity with the people and government of Tunisia in the fight against terrorism and stressed that no terrorist attack can reverse the path of Tunisia towards democracy and all efforts directed towards economic recovery and development".

Somalia

346. The Heads of State or Government reaffirmed their respect for the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence and unity of Somalia, consistent with the Charter of the United Nations;

Annex 183 Group of 77 and China, 40th Annual Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, Ministerial Declaration (23 Sept. 2016)

EXTRACT

FORTIETH ANNUAL MEETING OF MINISTERS FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE GROUP OF 77 AND CHINA New York, 23 September 2016

MINISTERIAL DECLARATION

- 150. Ministers reaffirmed the need to find a peaceful solution to the sovereignty issues facing developing countries, including the dispute over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised by the United Kingdom from the territory of Mauritius, prior to independence, in violation of international law and General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965. Failure to resolve these decolonization and sovereignty issues would seriously damage and undermine the development and economic capacities and prospects of developing countries. Ministers noted with great concern that despite the strong opposition of Mauritius, the United Kingdom purported to establish a "marine protected area" around the Chagos Archipelago, which contravenes international law and further impedes the exercise by Mauritius of its sovereign rights over the archipelago and the right of return of Mauritius citizens who were forcibly removed from the archipelago by the United Kingdom. In this regard, they noted the ruling of the Arbitral Tribunal in the case brought by the Republic of Mauritius against the United Kingdom under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea that the "MPA" was unlawfully established under international law. Ministers resolved to support Mauritius in its endeavor to affirm its territorial integrity and sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago.
- 151. The Ministers also took note of the concern expressed by the Republic of Maldives regarding the legal and technical issues arising from the United Kingdom's illegal decision in 2010 to declare a "MPA" in the Chagos Archipelago which overlaps the exclusive economic zone of the Republic of Maldives as declared in its Constitution without prejudice to future resolution of maritime delimitations.

Annex 184

U.N. General Assembly, 71st Session, Agenda of the seventy-first session of the General Assembly, U.N. Doc. A/71/251 (16 Sept. 2016)

A/71/251* United Nations

Distr.: General 16 September 2016

Original: English

Seventy-first session

Agenda of the seventy-first session of the General Assembly

Adopted by the General Assembly at its 2nd plenary meeting, on 16 September 2016

- 1. Opening of the session by the President of the General Assembly.
- Minute of silent prayer or meditation.
- Credentials of representatives to the seventy-first session of the General Assembly:
 - (a) Appointment of the members of the Credentials Committee;
 - (b) Report of the Credentials Committee.
- Election of the President of the General Assembly. 1
- Election of the officers of the Main Committees. 1 5.
- Election of the Vice-Presidents of the General Assembly.1 6.
- Organization of work, adoption of the agenda and allocation of items: reports of the General Committee.
- General debate.

Promotion of sustained economic growth and sustainable development in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and recent United Nations conferences

- Report of the Economic and Social Council.
- 10. Implementation of the Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS and the political declarations on HIV/AIDS.
- 11. Sport for development and peace.

In accordance with rule 30 of the rules of procedure, the General Assembly will hold these elections for its seventy-second session at least three months before the opening of that session.

^{*} Reissued for technical reasons on 10 October 2016.

^{} Organized under headings corresponding to the priorities of the Organization.

A/71/251

- 2001-2010: Decade to Roll Back Malaria in Developing Countries, Particularly in Africa.
- 13. Integrated and coordinated implementation of and follow-up to the outcomes of the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields.
- 14. Culture of peace.
- 15. The role of the United Nations in promoting a new global human order.
- 16. Information and communications technologies for development.
- 17. Macroeconomic policy questions:
 - (a) International trade and development;
 - (b) International financial system and development;
 - (c) External debt sustainability and development.
- 18. Follow-up to and implementation of the outcomes of the International Conferences on Financing for Development.
- 19. Sustainable development:
 - (a) Implementation of Agenda 21, the Programme for the Further Implementation of Agenda 21 and the outcomes of the World Summit on Sustainable Development and of the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development;
 - (b) Follow-up to and implementation of the SIDS Accelerated Modalities of Action (SAMOA) Pathway and the Mauritius Strategy for the Further Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Sustainable Development of Small Island Developing States;
 - (c) Disaster risk reduction;
 - (d) Protection of global climate for present and future generations of humankind;
 - (e) Implementation of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification in Those Countries Experiencing Serious Drought and/or Desertification, Particularly in Africa;
 - (f) Convention on Biological Diversity;
 - (g) Report of the United Nations Environment Assembly of the United Nations Environment Programme;
 - (h) Harmony with Nature;
 - (i) Promotion of new and renewable sources of energy;
 - (j) Sustainable mountain development.
- Implementation of the outcomes of the United Nations Conferences on Human Settlements and on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development and strengthening of the United Nations Human Settlements Programme (UN-Habitat).

- 21. Globalization and interdependence:
 - (a) Globalization and interdependence;
 - (b) International migration and development.
- 22. Groups of countries in special situations:
 - (a) Follow-up to the Fourth United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries;
 - (b) Follow-up to the second United Nations Conference on Landlocked Developing Countries.
- 23. Eradication of poverty and other development issues:
 - (a) Implementation of the Second United Nations Decade for the Eradication of Poverty (2008-2017);
 - (b) Industrial development cooperation.
- 24. Operational activities for development:
 - (a) Operational activities for development of the United Nations system;
 - (b) South-South cooperation for development.
- 25. Agriculture development, food security and nutrition.
- 26. Social development:
 - (a) Social development, including questions relating to the world social situation and to youth, ageing, disabled persons and the family;
 - (b) Literacy for life: shaping future agendas.
- 27. Advancement of women.

B. Maintenance of international peace and security

- 28. Report of the Security Council.
- 29. Report of the Peacebuilding Commission.
- 30. The role of diamonds in fuelling conflict.
- 31. Prevention of armed conflict.
- 32. Protracted conflicts in the GUAM area and their implications for international peace, security and development.
- 33. Zone of peace and cooperation of the South Atlantic.
- 34. The situation in the Middle East.
- 35. Question of Palestine.
- $36. \quad The \ situation \ in \ Afghanistan.$
- 37. The situation in the occupied territories of Azerbaijan.

A/71/251

- 38. Question of the Comorian island of Mayotte.²
- 39. Necessity of ending the economic, commercial and financial embargo imposed by the United States of America against Cuba.
- The situation in Central America: progress in fashioning a region of peace, freedom, democracy and development.³
- 41. Question of Cyprus.4
- 42. Armed aggression against the Democratic Republic of the Congo.⁴
- 43. Question of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas).4
- 44. The situation of democracy and human rights in Haiti.⁴
- 45. Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security.⁴
- 46. Consequences of the Iraqi occupation of and aggression against Kuwait.⁴
- 47. Effects of atomic radiation.
- 48. International cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space.
- United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.
- Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories.
- 51. Comprehensive review of the whole question of peacekeeping operations in all their aspects.
- 52. Comprehensive review of special political missions.
- 53. Questions relating to information.
- 54. Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter of the United Nations.
- 55. Economic and other activities which affect the interests of the peoples of the Non-Self-Governing Territories.
- 56. Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations.
- Offers by Member States of study and training facilities for inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories.

At its second meeting, on 16 September 2016, the General Assembly decided to include this item on its agenda on the understanding that there would be no consideration of the item by the Assembly until further notice.

³ In accordance with decision 60/508, this item remains on the agenda for consideration upon notification by a Member State.

⁴ In accordance with paragraph 4 (b) of the annex to resolution 58/316, this item remains on the agenda for consideration upon notification by a Member State.

- 58. Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.
- 59. Permanent sovereignty of the Palestinian people in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and of the Arab population in the occupied Syrian Golan over their natural resources.
- Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, questions relating to refugees, returnees and displaced persons and humanitarian questions.
- 61. Peacebuilding and sustaining peace.

C. Development of Africa

- 62. New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support:
 - (a) New Partnership for Africa's Development: progress in implementation and international support;
 - (b) Causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa.

D. Promotion of human rights

- 63. Report of the Human Rights Council.
- 64. Promotion and protection of the rights of children:
 - (a) Promotion and protection of the rights of children;
 - (b) Follow-up to the outcome of the special session on children.
- 65. Rights of indigenous peoples:
 - (a) Rights of indigenous peoples;
 - (b) Follow-up to the outcome document of the high-level plenary meeting of the General Assembly known as the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples.
- 66. Elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance:
 - (a) Elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;
 - (b) Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action.
- 67. Right of peoples to self-determination.
- 68. Promotion and protection of human rights:
 - (a) Implementation of human rights instruments;

16-16019 5/15

- (b) Human rights questions, including alternative approaches for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms;
- Human rights situations and reports of special rapporteurs and representatives;
- (d) Comprehensive implementation of and follow-up to the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action.

E. Effective coordination of humanitarian assistance efforts

- 69. Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance:
 - (a) Strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations;
 - (b) Assistance to the Palestinian people;
 - (c) Special economic assistance to individual countries or regions;
 - (d) Strengthening of international cooperation and coordination of efforts to study, mitigate and minimize the consequences of the Chernobyl disaster.

F. Promotion of justice and international law

- 70. Report of the International Court of Justice.
- Report of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991.
- 72. Report of the International Criminal Court.
- 73. Oceans and the law of the sea:
 - (a) Oceans and the law of the sea;
 - (b) Sustainable fisheries, including through the 1995 Agreement for the Implementation of the Provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea of 10 December 1982 relating to the Conservation and Management of Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks, and related instruments.
- 74. Responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts.
- 75. Criminal accountability of United Nations officials and experts on mission.
- Report of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law on the work of its forty-ninth session.
- 77. United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law.
- 78. Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its sixty-eighth session.
- 79. Diplomatic protection.

- Consideration of prevention of transboundary harm from hazardous activities and allocation of loss in the case of such harm.
- Status of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and relating to the protection of victims of armed conflicts.
- 82. Consideration of effective measures to enhance the protection, security and safety of diplomatic and consular missions and representatives.
- 83. Report of the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization.
- 84. The rule of law at the national and international levels.
- 85. The scope and application of the principle of universal jurisdiction.
- 86. The law of transboundary aquifers.
- Request for an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965.⁵

G. Disarmament

- 88. Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency.
- 89. Reduction of military budgets.
- 90. African Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone Treaty.
- 91. Consolidation of the regime established by the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean (Treaty of Tlatelolco).
- Maintenance of international security good-neighbourliness, stability and development in South-Eastern Europe.
- 93. Developments in the field of information and telecommunications in the context of international security.
- 94. Establishment of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in the region of the Middle East.
- Conclusion of effective international arrangements to assure non-nuclearweapon States against the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons.
- 96. Prevention of an arms race in outer space:
 - (a) Prevention of an arms race in outer space;
 - (b) No first placement of weapons in outer space.
- Role of science and technology in the context of international security and disarmament.

16-16019 7/15

⁵ At its second meeting, on 16 September 2016, the General Assembly decided to include this item on its agenda on the understanding that there would be no consideration of the item by the Assembly before June 2017 and that thereafter it may be considered upon notification by a Member State.

A/71/251

- 98. General and complete disarmament:
 - (a) Treaty banning the production of fissile material for nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices;
 - (b) Further measures in the field of disarmament for the prevention of an arms race on the seabed and the ocean floor and in the subsoil thereof;
 - (c) Nuclear disarmament;
 - (d) Notification of nuclear tests;
 - (e) Relationship between disarmament and development;
 - (f) Regional disarmament;
 - (g) Transparency in armaments;
 - (h) Conventional arms control at the regional and subregional levels;
 - (i) Convening of the fourth special session of the General Assembly devoted to disarmament;
 - (j) Nuclear-weapon-free southern hemisphere and adjacent areas;
 - Observance of environmental norms in the drafting and implementation of agreements on disarmament and arms control;
 - Follow-up to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legality of the threat or use of nuclear weapons;
 - (m) Consolidation of peace through practical disarmament measures;
 - Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction;
 - (o) Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol;
 - (p) Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction;
 - (q) Assistance to States for curbing the illicit traffic in small arms and light weapons and collecting them;
 - (r) Treaty on a Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zone in Central Asia;
 - (s) Reducing nuclear danger;
 - t) The illicit trade in small arms and light weapons in all its aspects;
 - Towards a nuclear-weapon-free world: accelerating the implementation of nuclear disarmament commitments;
 - (v) Mongolia's international security and nuclear-weapon-free status;
 - (w) Missiles;
 - (x) Disarmament and non-proliferation education;
 - (y) Promotion of multilateralism in the area of disarmament and non-proliferation;

- Measures to prevent terrorists from acquiring weapons of mass destruction;
- (aa) Confidence-building measures in the regional and subregional context;
- (bb) The Hague Code of Conduct against Ballistic Missile Proliferation;
- (cc) Information on confidence-building measures in the field of conventional arms;
- (dd) Transparency and confidence-building measures in outer space activities;
- (ee) Preventing the acquisition by terrorists of radioactive sources;
- (ff) The Arms Trade Treaty;
- (gg) Effects of the use of armaments and ammunitions containing depleted uranium:
- (hh) United action with renewed determination towards the total elimination of nuclear weapons;
- (ii) Preventing and combating illicit brokering activities;
- (jj) Women, disarmament, non-proliferation and arms control;
- (kk) Taking forward multilateral nuclear disarmament negotiations;
- (II) Follow-up to the 2013 high-level meeting of the General Assembly on nuclear disarmament:
- (mm) Countering the threat posed by improvised explosive devices;
- (nn) Humanitarian consequences of nuclear weapons;
- (oo) Humanitarian pledge for the prohibition and elimination of nuclear weapons;
- (pp) Ethical imperatives for a nuclear-weapon-free world;
- (qq) Implementation of the Convention on Cluster Munitions.
- Review and implementation of the Concluding Document of the Twelfth Special Session of the General Assembly:
 - (a) United Nations disarmament fellowship, training and advisory services;
 - (b) United Nations Disarmament Information Programme;
 - (c) Convention on the Prohibition of the Use of Nuclear Weapons;
 - (d) United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Africa;
 - (e) United Nations Regional Centre for Peace, Disarmament and Development in Latin America and the Caribbean;
 - (f) United Nations Regional Centre for Peace and Disarmament in Asia and the Pacific;
 - (g) Regional confidence-building measures: activities of the United Nations Standing Advisory Committee on Security Questions in Central Africa;
 - (h) United Nations regional centres for peace and disarmament.

A/71/251

- 100. Review of the implementation of the recommendations and decisions adopted by the General Assembly at its tenth special session:
 - (a) Report of the Conference on Disarmament;
 - (b) Report of the Disarmament Commission.
- 101. The risk of nuclear proliferation in the Middle East.
- 102. Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects.
- 103. Strengthening of security and cooperation in the Mediterranean region.
- 104. Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty.
- 105. Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction.

H. Drug control, crime prevention and combating international terrorism in all its forms and manifestations

- 106. Crime prevention and criminal justice.
- 107. International drug control.
- 108. Measures to eliminate international terrorism.

I. Organizational, administrative and other matters

- 109. Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization.
- 110. Report of the Secretary-General on the Peacebuilding Fund.
- 111. Notification by the Secretary-General under Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations.
- 112. Elections to fill vacancies in principal organs:
 - (a) Election of five non-permanent members of the Security Council;
 - (b) Election of eighteen members of the Economic and Social Council.
- 113. Appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
- 114. Elections to fill vacancies in subsidiary organs and other elections:
 - (a) Election of seven members of the Committee for Programme and Coordination:
 - (b) Election of the members of the International Law Commission;
 - (c) Election of five members of the Organizational Committee of the Peacebuilding Commission;
 - (d) Election of fourteen members of the Human Rights Council.

10/15

- 115. Appointments to fill vacancies in subsidiary organs and other appointments:
 - (a) Appointment of members of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;
 - (b) Appointment of members of the Committee on Contributions;
 - (c) Confirmation of the appointment of members of the Investments Committee;
 - (d) Appointment of members of the International Civil Service Commission;
 - (e) Appointment of members of the Independent Audit Advisory Committee;
 - (f) Appointment of members and alternate members of the United Nations Staff Pension Committee;
 - (g) Appointment of members of the Committee on Conferences;
 - (h) Appointment of members of the Joint Inspection Unit;
 - Appointment of members of the Board of the 10-Year Framework of Programmes on Sustainable Consumption and Production Patterns;
 - (j) Confirmation of the appointment of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme;
 - (k) Confirmation of the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development;
 - (1) Appointment of the judges of the United Nations Dispute Tribunal.
- 116. Admission of new Members to the United Nations.
- 117. Follow-up to the outcome of the Millennium Summit.
- 118. The United Nations Global Counter-Terrorism Strategy.
- 119. Commemoration of the abolition of slavery and the transatlantic slave trade.
- 120. Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations.
- 121. Revitalization of the work of the General Assembly.
- 122. Question of equitable representation on and increase in the membership of the Security Council and other matters related to the Security Council.
- 123. Strengthening of the United Nations system:
 - (a) Strengthening of the United Nations system;
 - (b) Central role of the United Nations system in global governance.
- 124. United Nations reform: measures and proposals.
- 125. Multilingualism.
- 126. Cooperation between the United Nations and regional and other organizations:
 - (a) Cooperation between the United Nations and the African Union;
 - (b) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of Islamic Cooperation;

16-16019

A/71/251

- (c) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Organization;
- (d) Cooperation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States;
- (e) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Latin American and Caribbean Economic System;
- (f) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization of American States;
- (g) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe;
- (h) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Caribbean Community;
- Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Cooperation Organization;
- Cooperation between the United Nations and the International Organization of la Francophonie;
- (k) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Preparatory Commission for the Comprehensive Nuclear-Test-Ban Treaty Organization;
- (1) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Council of Europe;
- (m) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Economic Community of Central African States;
- (n) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons;
- (o) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Black Sea Economic Cooperation Organization;
- (p) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Community;
- (q) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Pacific Islands Forum;
- (r) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations;
- (s) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Eurasian Economic Community;
- Cooperation between the United Nations and the Community of Portuguese-speaking Countries;
- Cooperation between the United Nations and the Shanghai Cooperation Organization;
- (v) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Collective Security Treaty Organization;
- (w) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Central European Initiative:

12/15

- (x) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Organization for Democracy and Economic Development — GUAM;
- (y) Cooperation between the United Nations and the Commonwealth of Independent States;
- (z) Cooperation between the United Nations and the International Organization for Migration.
- 127. Global health and foreign policy.
- 128. International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991.
- 129. International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals.
- 130. Investigation into the conditions and circumstances resulting in the tragic death of Dag Hammarskjöld and of the members of the party accompanying
- 131. Global awareness of the tragedies of irregular migrants in the Mediterranean basin, with specific emphasis on Syrian asylum seekers.
- 132. Financial reports and audited financial statements, and reports of the Board of Auditors:
 - (a) United Nations;
 - (b) United Nations peacekeeping operations;
 - (c) International Trade Centre;
 - (d) United Nations University;
 - (e) Capital master plan;
 - (f) United Nations Development Programme;
 - (g) United Nations Capital Development Fund;
 - (h) United Nations Children's Fund;
 - (i) United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;
 - (j) United Nations Institute for Training and Research;
 - (k) Voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;
 - (1) Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme;
 - (m) United Nations Population Fund;
 - (n) United Nations Human Settlements Programme;
 - (o) United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime;
 - (p) United Nations Office for Project Services;
 - (q) United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women);

16-16019

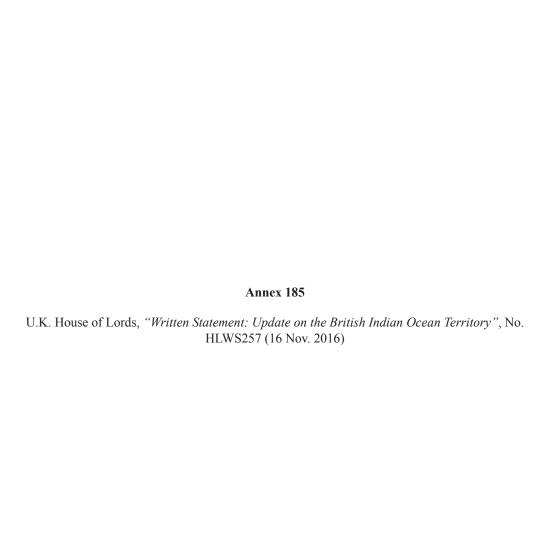

A/71/251

- (r) International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994;
- (s) International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991;
- (t) International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals;
- (u) United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund.
- 133. Review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations.
- 134. Programme budget for the biennium 2016-2017.
- 135. Programme planning.
- 136. Improving the financial situation of the United Nations.
- 137. Pattern of conferences.
- 138. Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations.
- 139. Human resources management.
- 140. Joint Inspection Unit.
- 141. United Nations common system.
- 142. United Nations pension system.
- 143. Administrative and budgetary coordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency.
- 144. Report on the activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services.
- 145. Administration of justice at the United Nations.
- 146. Financing of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States between 1 January and 31 December 1994.
- 147. Financing of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991.
- 148. Financing of the International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals.
- 149. Administrative and budgetary aspects of the financing of the United Nations peacekeeping operations.
- 150. Financing of the United Nations Interim Security Force for Abyei.

14/15

- 151. Financing of the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in the Central African Republic.
- 152. Financing of the United Nations Operation in Côte d'Ivoire.
- 153. Financing of the United Nations Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus.
- 154. Financing of the United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.
- 155. Financing of the United Nations Mission in East Timor.
- 156. Financing of the United Nations Stabilization Mission in Haiti.
- 157. Financing of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo.
- 158. Financing of the United Nations Mission in Liberia.
- Financing of the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali.
- 160. Financing of the United Nations peacekeeping forces in the Middle East:
 - (a) United Nations Disengagement Observer Force;
 - (b) United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon.
- 161. Financing of the United Nations Mission in South Sudan.
- 162. Financing of the United Nations Mission for the Referendum in Western Sahara.
- 163. Financing of the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur.
- 164. Financing of the activities arising from Security Council resolution 1863 (2009).
- 165. Report of the Committee on Relations with the Host Country.
- 166. Observer status for the Cooperation Council of Turkic-speaking States in the General Assembly.
- 167. Observer status for the Eurasian Economic Union in the General Assembly.
- 168. Observer status for the Community of Democracies in the General Assembly.
- 169. Observer status for the International Conference of Asian Political Parties in the General Assembly.
- 170. Observer status for the Conference of Ministers of Justice of the Ibero-American Countries in the General Assembly.
- 171. Observer status for the International Youth Organization for Ibero-America in the General Assembly.
- 172. Observer status for the Pacific Islands Development Forum in the General Assembly.
- 173. Observer status for the International Chamber of Commerce in the General Assembly.

16-16019

Written statements

WS

Foreign and Commonwealth Office

Made on: 16 November 2016

Made by: Baroness Anelay of St Johns (The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs)

Lords HLWS257

Update on the British Indian Ocean Territory

On 24 March 2016 the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend East (James Duddridge) informed the House that the Government would be carrying out further work on its review of resettlement policy in the British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT). I would now like to inform Parliament of two decisions which have been made concerning the future of BIOT.

Parliament will be aware of the Government's review and consultation over the resettlement of the Chagossian people to BIOT. The manner in which the Chagossian community was removed from the Territory in the 1960s and 1970s, and the way they were treated, was wrong and we look back with deep regret. We have taken care in coming to our final decision on resettlement, noting the community's emotional ties to BIOT and their desire to go back to their former way of life.

This comprehensive programme of work included an independent feasibility study followed by a full public consultation in the UK, Mauritius and the Seychelles.

I am today announcing that the Government has decided against resettlement of the Chagossian people to the British Indian Ocean Territory on the grounds of feasibility, defence and security interests, and cost to the British taxpayer. In coming to this decision the Government has considered carefully the practicalities of setting up a small remote community on low-lying islands and the challenges that any community would face. These are significant, and include the challenge of effectively establishing modern public services, the limited healthcare and education that it would be possible to provide, and the lack of economic opportunities, particularly job prospects. The Government has also considered the interaction of any potential community with the US Naval Support Facility – a vital part of our defence relationship.

The Government will instead seek to support improvements to the livelihoods of Chagossians in the communities where they now live. I can today announce that we have agreed to fund a package of approximately £40 million over the next ten years to achieve this goal. This money addresses the most pressing needs of the community by improving access to health and social care and to improved education and employment opportunities. Moreover, this fund will support a significantly expanded programme of visits to BIOT for native Chagossians. The Government will work closely with Chagossian communities in the UK and overseas to develop cost-effective programmes which will make the biggest improvement in the life chances of those Chagossians who need it most.

Parliament will also be aware that the agreements underpinning the UK/US defence facility will roll over automatically on 31 December if neither side breaks silence. In an increasingly dangerous world, the defence facility is used by us and our allies to combat some of the most difficult problems of the 21st century including terrorism, international criminality, instability and piracy. I can today confirm that the UK continues to welcome the US presence, and that the agreements will continue as they stand until 30 December 2036.

This statement has also been made in the House of Commons: HCWS260

EXTRACT FROM FINAL DOCUMENT ADOPTED BY 17TH SUMMIT OF HEADS OF STATE AND GOVERNMENT OF THE NON-ALIGNED MOVEMENT, 17-18 SEPTEMBER 2016, ISLAND OF MARGARITA, VENEZUELA

Chagos Archipelago

- 336. The Heads of State or Government reaffirmed that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, which was unlawfully excised by the former colonial power from the territory of Mauritius in violation of international law and UN Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965, forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Mauritius.
- 337. The Heads of State or Government further noted with grave concern that despite the strong opposition expressed by the Republic of Mauritius, the United Kingdom purported to establish a "marine protected area" ("MPA") around the Chagos Archipelago, further infringing the territorial integrity of the Republic of Mauritius and impeding the exercise of its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago as well as the exercise of the right of return of Mauritian citizens who were forcibly removed from the Archipelago by the United Kingdom. In this regard, they welcomed the ruling of the Arbitral Tribunal in the case brought by the Republic of Mauritius against the United Kingdom under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea that the "MPA" was unlawfully established under international law.
- 338. The Heads of State or Government also noted that on 18 March 2015, following proceedings initiated by Mauritius against the United Kingdom under the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS) to challenge the legality of the "MPA", the Arbitral Tribunal set up under Annex VII to UNCLOS, unanimously ruled that the "MPA" violates international law.
- 339. Cognizant that the Government of the Republic of Mauritius is committed to taking all appropriate measures to affirm the territorial integrity of the Republic of Mauritius and its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago under international law, the Heads of State or Government resolved to fully support such measures including any action that may be taken in this regard at the United Nations General Assembly.
- 340. The Heads of State or Government also took note of the concern expressed by the Republic of Maldives regarding the legal and technical issues arising from the United Kingdom's illegal decision in 2010 to declare a "MPA" in the Chagos Archipelago which overlaps the exclusive economic zone of the Republic of Maldives as declared in its Constitution without prejudice to future resolution of maritime delimitations.

Annex 187

African, Caribbean and Pacific Group of States, 104th Session of the ACP Council of Ministers, Support for the Claim of Sovereignty of Mauritius over the Chagos Archipelago, Decision No. 7/CIV/16 (29-30 Nov. 2016)

DECISION No.7/CIV/16 OF THE 104th SESSION OF THE ACP COUNCIL OF MINISTERS HELD IN BRUSSELS, BELGIUM, FROM 29 TO 30 NOVEMBER 2016

SUPPORT FOR THE CLAIM OF SOVEREIGNTY OF MAURITIUS OVER THE CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO

The ACP Council of Ministers.

Meeting in Brussels, Belgium, from 29th to 30 November 2016,

HAVING REGARD to the provisions of the Georgetown Agreement, including consolidating and strengthening the solidarity of the ACP Group;

HAVING REGARD to the Declaration of the 8th Summit of Heads of State and Government of the ACP Group of States adopted on 01 June 2016 in Port Moresby, Papua New Guinea:

RECALLING the unlawful excision of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, from the territory of Mauritius by the United Kingdom, the former colonial power, prior to the independence of Mauritius, in violation of international law and UN Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965 which prohibit colonial powers from dismembering colonial territories prior to granting independence, as well as UN Resolutions 2232 (XXI) of 20 December 1966 and 2357(XXII) of 19 December 1967;

REAFFIRMING that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Mauritius;

DEPLORING the continued unlawful occupation by the United Kingdom of the Chagos Archipelago, thereby denying the Republic of Mauritius the exercise of its sovereignty over the Archipelago and making the decolonization of the Republic of Mauritius and of Africa incomplete;

CONSIDERING that the Government of the Republic of Mauritius has protested strongly against the recent unilateral decision of the Government of the United Kingdom aimed at denying Mauritian citizens of Chagossian origin their legitimate right of return to the Chagos Archipelago and reiterated that the denial of the right of Mauritians, particularly those of Chagossian origin, to settle in the Chagos Archipelago is a manifest breach of international law and outrageously flouts their human rights;

CONSIDERING also that the Government of the Republic of Mauritius is resolutely committed to taking all appropriate measures for the completion of the decolonization process of the Republic of Mauritius and the effective exercise by the Republic of Mauritius of its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, in keeping with the principles of international law;

ACP/25/017/16

Final version

ENG

HEREBY DECIDES TO:

- Reiterate its support to the Republic of Mauritius in its legitimate pursuit to complete its decolonization process and effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia;
- Support the calls of Mauritius on the United Kingdom to expeditiously end its unlawful occupation of the Chagos Archipelago so that the decolonization process of the Republic of Mauritius can be completed and the Republic of Mauritius can effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago;
- Fully support all appropriate measures that the Government of the Republic of Mauritius is committed to take, including at the UN General Assembly, to complete the decolonization process of the Republic of Mauritius, thereby enabling the Republic of Mauritius to effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipeiago.

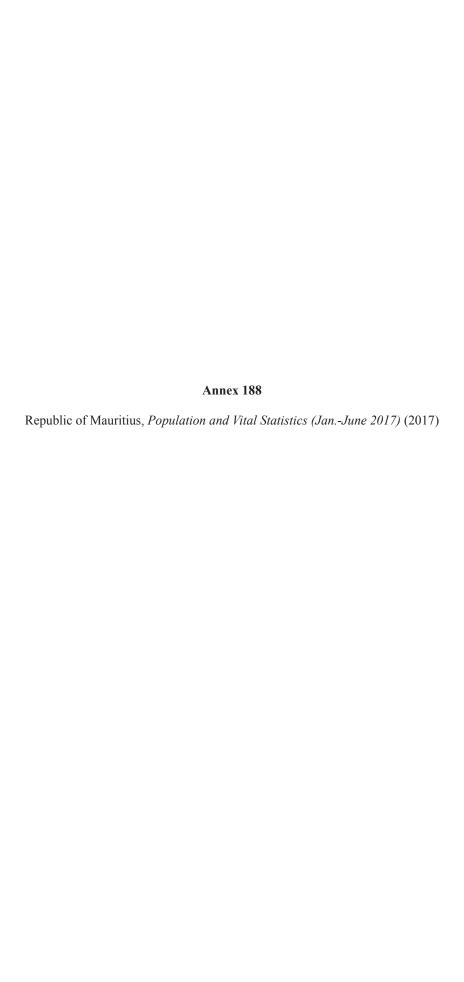

Done at Brussels, 30th November 2016

Honourable Undsay F.P. Grant Minister of Tourism, International Trade, Industry and Commerce of St Kitts and Nevis President of ACP Council of Ministers

ACP/25/017/16

Final version

ENG

POPULATION AND VITAL STATISTICS REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS, JANUARY – JUNE 2017

1. Introduction

This issue of the Economic and Social Indicators presents provisional population estimates for mid-year 2017 and vital statistics for the first semester of 2017. Forecasts of vital events and rates for the year 2017 are also included.

It is to be noted that preliminary data for the compilation of vital statistics have been extracted from the computerised system in place at the Central Civil Status Office.

Definitions of terms used are at Annex.

2. Key points

- The population of the Republic of Mauritius grew at a rate of 0.1% (+1,140) since mid-2016 and was estimated at 1,264,887 as at 1st July 2017.
- As at mid-2017, the female population outnumbered the male population by 13,085.
- The expected number of live births for the Republic of Mauritius for year 2017 is 13,100, corresponding to a crude birth rate of 10.4 per 1,000 mid-year population, same as in 2016.
- The estimated number of deaths for 2017 is around 10,030, giving a crude death rate of 7.9 per 1,000 mid-year population, compared to 8.1 in 2016.
- The forecast for the number of infant deaths for the Republic of Mauritius in 2017 is around 150, representing an infant mortality rate of 11.5 per 1,000 live births, compared to 11.8 in 2016.
- The number of still births for 2017 is estimated at 120, giving a still birth rate of 9.1 per 1,000 total births, compared to 9.6 in 2016.
- The expected number of marriages for 2017 is 9,860, corresponding to a marriage rate of 15.6 persons married per 1,000 mid-year population, against 15.9 in 2016.

3. Estimated resident population

Table 3.1 - Estimated resident population by sex, Republic of Mauritius, 1st July 2017

Island	Both sexes	Male	Female	Sex ratio
Island of Mauritius	1,221,975	604,780	617,195	98.0
Island of Rodrigues	42,638	20,947	21,691	96.6
Agalega and St. Brandon	274	174	100	174.0
Republic of Mauritius	1,264,887	625,901	638,986	98.0

As at 1^{st} July 2017, the population of the Republic of Mauritius was estimated at 1,264,887, of whom 625,901 were males and 638,986 females. There were 98 males for every 100 females.

The population of the Islands of Mauritius and Rodrigues were estimated at 1,221,975 and 42,638 respectively. In both islands, females outnumbered males.

Agalega and St. Brandon had an estimated population of 274, with 74 more males than females.

Table 3.2 - Population density, Republic of Mauritius, 1st July 2017

Island	Both	Area	Density
	sexes	(km²)	per km ²
Island of Mauritius Island of Rodrigues Agalega and St. Brandon	1,221,975	1,868.4	654
	42,638	110.1	387
	274	28.7	10
Republic of Mauritius	1,264,887	2,007.2	630

The Republic of Mauritius, with a total land area of 2,007.2 square kilometres, had a population density of 630 persons per square km as at mid-2017. The population densities of the Island of Mauritius and the Island of Rodrigues were 654 and 387 respectively.

Table 3.3 - Estimated resident population by sex and sex ratio, Republic of Mauritius, 2015 - 2017 (mid-year estimates)

Year	Both sexes	Male	Female	Sex ratio
2015	1,262,879	624,943	637,936	98.0
2016	1,263,747	625,380	638,367	98.0
2017	1,264,887	625,901	638,986	98.0

In the above table, population estimates and sex ratios for the past three years are given for comparative purposes. From 2015 to 2017, the sex ratio remained at 98.0.

4. Population growth

Table 4.1 - Population change, Republic of Mauritius, 1^{st} July 2016 and 1^{st} July 2017

Island	Popu	lation	Growth
Island	1st July 2016	1st July 2017	Number	%
Island of Mauritius	1,221,213	1,221,975	762	0.1
Island of Rodrigues	42,260	42,638	378	0.9
Agalega and St. Brandon	274	274	0	0.0
Republic of Mauritius	1,263,747	1,264,887	1,140	0.1

The population of the Republic of Mauritius increased by 1,140 (0.1%) from mid-2016 to mid-2017. The growth rate for the Island of Mauritius was 0.1% compared to 0.9% for the Island of Rodrigues.

Table 4.2 - Components of population growth during the first semester of 2016 and 2017, Republic of Mauritius¹

Components of population growth	2016	2017
Resident population as at beginning of year	1,262,588	1,263,546
Natural increase, January-June	1,860	1,992
Live Births, January-June	6,858	6,810
Deaths, January-June	4,998	4,818
Net international migration, January-June	-975	-925
Resident population as at mid-year	1,263,473	1,264,613

¹ excluding Agalega and St Brandon

Population growth has two components: natural increase (the number of live births minus the number of deaths) and its net international migration (the net movement of residents).

During the first semester of 2017, the population registered a natural increase of 1,992, which was the result of an addition of 6,810 live births and a subtraction of 4,818 deaths. For the same period, the net international migration of residents was estimated at -925.

5. Vital statistics and rates

5.1 Live births and crude birth rate

Table 5.1 - Live births registered and crude birth rate, Republic of Mauritius, 2016 and 2017^1

	N	Crude birth rate
Island	2016		2017
	Jan - June	Year	Jan - June	Year ¹	2016	2017 1
Island of Mauritius	6,462	12,330	6,387	12,300	10.1	10.1
Island of Rodrigues	396	752	423	800	17.5 *	18.8
Republic of Mauritius	6,858	13,082	6,810	13,100	10.4	10.4

¹ Forecast

For the first six months of the current year, 6,810 live births were registered in the Republic of Mauritius, compared to 6,858 for the corresponding period of 2016. For the year 2017, the number of live births is estimated at 13,100, resulting in a crude birth rate (i.e, live births per 1,000 mid-year population) of 10.4, same as in 2016. The forecast for the Island of Mauritius is 12,300 live births (rate of 10.1), and for Rodrigues it is 800 (rate of 18.8).

^{*} Provisional

5.2 Deaths and crude death rate

Table 5.2 - Deaths and crude death rate, Republic of Mauritius, 2016 and 2017¹

		Number	of deaths		Crude death rate
Island	2016		2017			1
	Jan - June	Year	Jan - June	Year ¹	2016	2017 1
Island of Mauritius	4,884	9,920	4,717	9,800	8.1	8.0
Island of Rodrigues	114	254	101	230	5.7 *	5.4
Republic of Mauritius	4,998	10,174	4,818	10,030	8.1	7.9

¹ Forecast

The number of deaths registered during the first semester of 2017 in the Republic of Mauritius was 4,818, compared to 4,998 for the corresponding period of 2016. The forecast for 2017 is 10,030 deaths, representing a crude death rate of 7.9 per 1,000 mid-year population. The expected number of deaths for the Island of Mauritius for 2017 is 9,800 (rate of 8.0) and that for Rodrigues is 230 (rate of 5.4).

5.3 Infant deaths and infant mortality rate

Table 5.3 - Infant deaths and infant mortality rate, Republic of Mauritius, 2016 and 2017¹

	Number of infant deaths				Infant mortality rate
Island	2016		201	7	2016	1
	Jan - June	Year	Jan - June	Year ¹	2016	2017 1
Island of Mauritius	90	143	70	130	11.6	10.6
Island of Rodrigues	6	11	10	20	17.5 *	25.0
Republic of Mauritius	96	154	80	150	11.8	11.5

¹ Forecast

During the first semester of the year 2017, 80 infant deaths were registered in the Republic of Mauritius compared to 96 for the same period in 2016. 150 infant deaths are expected to occur in the Republic of Mauritius in 2017, giving an infant mortality rate of 11.5 infant deaths per 1,000 live births against 11.8 in 2016. The number of infant deaths forecast for the Islands of Mauritius and Rodrigues are 130 (rate of 10.6) and 20 (rate of 25.0) respectively.

^{*} Provisional

^{*} Provisional

5.4 Still births and still birth rate

Table 5.4 - Still births and still birth rate, Republic of Mauritius, 2016 and 2017¹

	Number of still births			Still bir	th rate
Island	2016		2017
	Jan - June	Year	Jan - June	Year ¹	2016	2017 1
Island of Mauritius	63	117	62	110	9.4	8.9
Island of Rodrigues	8	10	5	10	11.9 *	12.3
Republic of Mauritius	71	127	67	120	9.6	9.1

¹ Forecast

During the first six months of 2017, 67 still births were registered in the Republic of Mauritius compared to 71 for the same period in 2016, i.e. a 5.6% decrease. The expected number of still births for the Republic of Mauritius for 2017 is 120, giving a still birth rate of 9.1 still births per 1,000 total births against 9.6 in 2016. Forecasts for the Islands of Mauritius and Rodrigues for the year 2017 are 110 (rate of 8.9) and 10 (rate of 12.3) respectively.

5.5 Marriages and crude marriage rate

Table 5.5 - Marriages and crude marriage rate, Republic of Mauritius, 2016 and 2017^1

	Number of marriages			Crude marriage rate
Island	2016		2017			1
	Jan - June	Year	Jan - June	Year ¹	2016	2017 1
Island of Mauritius	4,629	9,882	4,428	9,700	16.2	15.9
Island of Rodrigues	66	160	69	160	7.5 *	7.5
Republic of Mauritius	4,695	10,042	4,497	9,860	15.9	15.6

¹ Forecast

A total of 4,497 marriages were registered in the Republic of Mauritius during the first semester of 2017, representing a decrease of 4.2% over the number registered (4,695) during the same period in 2016. The expected number of marriages for 2017 is 9,860, giving a crude marriage rate of 15.6 persons married per 1,000 mid-year population against 15.9 in 2016. The expected number of marriages for 2017 for the Island of Mauritius is 9,700 (rate of 15.9) and for the Island of Rodrigues is 160 (rate of 7.5).

^{*} Provisional

^{*} Provisional

6. International comparison of vital rates

Vital statistics for different countries in the world are published in the UN publication "The Demographic Yearbook" and the United Nations Population and Vital Statistics Report. The table below displays some comparative figures available from the latest United Nations Population and Vital Statistics Report (2001 - 2015).

Table 6.1 - Vital rates for selected countries

Country	Year	Crude Birth rate	Crude death	Infant mortality rate
Mauritius	2015	10.0	7.7	13.7
Reunion	2014	16.8	5.2	6.1
Australia	2014	12.8	6.5	3.4
United States	2014	12.5	8.2	5.8
India	2014	21.0	6.7	39.0
Germany	2015	9.1	11.4	3.2 *
France	2015	11.8	9.1	3.3 *

Source: United Nations Population & Vital Statistics Report Vol LXIX

It is to be noted that the crude birth/death rates are strictly not comparable between countries as it is affected by the age structure of the population. For instance, the crude death rate for Mauritius is lower than that for France. This can be explained by the fact that Mauritius has a relatively young population compared to France and hence proportionately fewer deaths are expected.

Statistics Mauritius, Ministry of Finance and Economic Development Port Louis August 2017

Contact person: Mrs C. Martial, Statistician Demography Unit Statistics Mauritius LIC Centre John Kennedy Street Port Louis Tel: 208 0859

Email: cso_demography@govmu.org

^{*} Refers to the year 2014

Annex

Definition of terms

1. Vital Statistics	The statistics pertaining to vital events which include live births, deaths, still births, marriages and divorces.
2. Population density	The number of persons per square kilometre.
3. Dependency ratio	The child population under 15 years of age and the elderly population aged 65 years and above per 1,000 population aged 15-64 years.
4. Sex ratio	The number of males to every 100 females.
5. Natural increase	The excess of live births over deaths.
6. Crude birth rate	The number of live births in a year per 1,000 mid-year population.
7. Crude death rate	The number of deaths in a year per 1,000 mid-year population.
8. Infant mortality rate	The number of deaths in a year of infants aged under one year per 1,000 live births during the year.
9. Still birth rate	The number of still births in a year per 1,000 total births (live births and still births) during the year.
10. Marriage rate	The number of persons married in a year per 1,000 mid-year population.

Note: The vital rates for Rodrigues are usually calculated as an average for three years in order to remove wide fluctuations in the yearly data. The rates for the year 2017 are however calculated on the basis of data for the year only.

EX.CL/Dec.943(XXX) Page 1

DECISION ON THE 2016 ANNUAL REPORT OF THE CHAIRPERSON OF THE AU COMMISSION Doc. EX.CL/994(XXX)

The Executive Council,

- TAKES NOTE of the Report of the Commission for the Period January to December 2016 and the observations and comments made by the Member States;
- EXPRESSES APPRECIATION to the outgoing Commission for its sterling contributions towards the realization of the goals and objectives of the Union;
- COMMENDS the Commission for its efforts so far in the implementation of Agenda 2063 and its First Ten-Year Implementation Plan, and CALLS UPON the Chairperson of the Commission to utilize the resources available to speed up the implementation process;
 - CALLS UPON all Member States to fully support the action initiated by the Government of the Republic of Mauritius at the level of the United Nations General Assembly with a view to ensuring the completion of the decolonization of the Republic of Mauritius and enabling the Republic of Mauritius to effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago including Diego Garcia;
- ALSO CALLS UPON all Member States to participate at the African Economic Platform scheduled to take place on 20-22 March 2017 in the Mauritius.
- 6. DIRECTS the Commission to:
 - Transform the "Annual Report on Activities of the Commission" to an "Annual Report on the Activities of the Union and its Organs" as provided for in Article 8 (1)(t) of the Statutes of the Commission;
 - ii) Broaden the Indicators of the Gender Score Card for more inclusiveness;
 - iii) Prepare and submit a Progress Report on the Implementation of the 2016 AU Theme: "The African Year of Human Rights with particular focus on the Rights of Women":
 - iv) Expedite the establishment of the High Level Panel of Eminent Persons to champion the fast tracking of the Continental Free Trade Area (CFTA);
 - Develop a roadmap for the implementation of the Campaign to "Relegate the Handheld Hoe to the Museum" by 2025.
 - A. ON EXTENDING THE TERM OF THE CURRENT AU CHAMPION ON NUTRITION
- ACKNOWLEDGES and COMMENDS the role of His Majesty King Letsie III of the Kingdom of Lesotho as AU Champion on Nutrition from 2014-2016;

- NOTES that, in the light of the ambitious targets of the Ten Year Implementation Plan of Agenda 2063 on Hunger and Nutrition, there is a need for continuous advocacy on programmes in this area;
- RECOMMENDS to the Assembly that the mandate of His Majesty King Letsie III, of the Kingdom of Lesotho as the AU Nutrition Champion be extended from January 2017 to January 2020.
 - B. ON IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SENDAI FRAMEWORK FOR DISASTER RISK REDUCTION IN AFRICA
- 10. TAKES NOTE of the Report of the Fifth High-level Meeting and the Sixth Session of the Africa Regional Platform on Disaster Risk Reduction held in Balactava, in the Republic of Mauritius from 22-25 November 2016 and ENDORSES the recommendations contained therein;
- 11. ENDORSES the Programme of Action for the Implementation of the Sendai Framework for Disaster Risk Reduction 2015-2030 in Africa, and The 'Mauntius Declaration on the Implementation of the Sendai Framework in Africa';
- 12. REQUESTS the Commission in consultation with Member States and the Regional Economic Communities (RECs) to develop an Africa Position for the Global Platform for Disaster Risk Reduction, scheduled to take place in Cancun, Mexico in May 2017.
 - C. ON GRANTING THE PAN AFRICAN WOMEN'S ORGANISATION (PAWO) AND THE AFRICAN CAPACITY BUILDING FOUNDATION (ACBF) STATUS OF SPECIALISED AGENCY OF THE AU
- 13. NOTES that the Pan African Women's Organization (PAWO) is one of the first Pan African Organizations, established in 1962, and which played a critical role in mobilizing women in the struggles against colonialism and apartheid, in the development of the continent and the building of a non-sexist Africa:
- 14. APPRECIATES the continued role of the PAWO in the mobilization of women and men for the implementation of Agenda 2063, and for women and girls empowerment;
- 15. FURTHER NOTES the innovative and cutting edge support on capacity development provided by the African Capacity Building Foundation (ACBF) in Africa, including the pivotal role in helping the Commission define the capacity imperatives for Agenda 2063;
- 16. RECOGNISES the role of ACBF in establishing a strong accountability framework and coordinated platform for capacity development interventions on the continent;

EX.CL/Dec.943(XXX) Page 3

- RECOMMENDS, that the Summit agrees to grant specialized agency status to the Pan African Women's Organization (PAWO), the African Capacity Building Foundation (ACBF);
- 18. REQUESTS the Commission to carry out an assessment of the legal, structural and financial implications, as well as definition of criteria to grant the status of Specialized Agency to organizations, and submit a report to the Executive Council through the PRC in July 2017 Summit.

Annex 190

African Union, 28th Session, Resolution on Chagos Archipelago, Doc. EX.CL/994(XXX), Assembly/AU/Res.1 (XXVIII) (30-31 Jan. 2017)

Assembly/AU/Res.1(XXVIII)
Page 1

RESOLUTION ON CHAGOS ARCHIPELAGO Doc. EX.CL/994(XXX)

The Assembly,

- TAKES NOTE of the Report of the Chairperson on the activities of the AU Commission;
- 2. HAVING REGARD to the unlawful excision of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, from the territory of Mauritius by the United Kingdom, the former colonial power, prior to the independence of Mauritius, in violation of international law and UN Resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965 which prohibit colonial powers from dismembering colonial territories prior to granting independence, as well as UN Resolutions 2232 (XXI) of 20 December 1966 and 2357(XXII) of 19 December 1967;
- REAFFIRMS that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, forms an integral part of the territory of the Republic of Mauritius and that the decolonization of the Republic of Mauritius will not be complete until it is able to exercise its full sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago;
- 4. RECALLS In this regard the previous resolutions adopted by the Assembly in particular, Resolution Assembly/AU/Res.1(XXV) of June 2015 of the Assembly of the African Union held in Johannesburg, South Africa, expressing its full support to the efforts and actions in accordance with international law, including those of a diplomatic and legal nature at the level of the United Nations system, which may be taken by the Government of the Republic of Mauritius for the early and unconditional return of the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, to the effective control of the Republic of Mauritius;
- 5. NOTES that at the request of the Government of the Republic of Mauritius, an item entitled "Request for an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965" has been included in the agenda of the 71st Session of the United Nations General Assembly and that action on that item is likely to be taken in June 2017.
- 6. RESOLVES to fully support the action initiated by the Government of the Republic of Mauritius at the level of the United Nations General Assembly with a view to ensuring the completion of the decolonization of the Republic of Mauritius and enabling the Republic of Mauritius to effectively exercise its sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia;
- DECIDES to remain seized of the matter and REQUESTS the Commission to report on progress and the implementation of this decision to the Assembly in July 2017.

Annex 191

Letter from H.E. Mr Jagdish Koonjul, Ambassador and Permanent Representative of the Republic of Mauritius to the United Nations, to H.E. Mr Peter Thomson, President of the 71st session of the United Nations General Assembly (1 June 2017)

PERMANENT MISSION OF THE REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS TO THE UNITED NATIONS

MISSION PERMANENTE DE LA REPUBLIQUE DE MAURICE AUPRES DES NATIONS UNIES

1 June 2017

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to item 87 which the General Assembly, at its second meeting on 16 September 2016, decided to include on the agenda of its 71st Session, on the understanding that there would be no consideration of the item by the Assembly before June 2017 and that thereafter it may be considered upon notification by a Member State.

In accordance with your expectations, Mauritius has engaged in good faith in talks with the United Kingdom. However, these talks have not been successful. Mauritius has therefore no choice but to ask for the consideration of item 87 by the General Assembly at the earliest date possible.

In this regard, I wish to officially request you to set a date for the consideration of item 87 by the General Assembly and action on a draft resolution which Mauritius will be tabling shortly.

Please accept, Excellency, the assurance of my highest consideration.

Jagdish D. Koonjul, G.O.S.K Ambassador

Permanent Representative

H.E. Mr. Peter Thomson President of the 71st session of the United Nations General Assembly

211 East 43rd Street • New York City, NY 10017 • Tel: (212) 949 0190 • Fax: (212) 697 3829 • E-mail: Mauritius@un.int

Annex 192

Letter from H.E. Mr Peter Thomson, President of the 71st session of the United Nations General Assembly, to all Permanent Representatives and Permanent Observers of the United Nations in New York (1 June 2017)

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

1 June 2017

Excellency,

In connection with item 87 of the agenda (Request for an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965) I refer to General Assembly decision 71/504 of 16 September 2016, in which the Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee (A/71/250), decided to include the item in the agenda of its seventy-first session on the understanding that there would be no consideration of this item by the General Assembly before June 2017 and thereafter it may be considered upon notification by a Member State.

Through the attached letter, H.E. Ambassador Jagdish D. Koonjul, Permanent Representative of Mauritius to the United Nations, has requested that a date be set for the consideration of this item by the General Assembly.

Therefore, I have decided to convene a plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 22 June 2017 at 10 a.m. for the consideration of item 87. It is my understanding that the Permanent Mission of Mauritius will be submitting a draft resolution to the Secretariat shortly. More information will be provided in the Journal.

Please accept, Excellency, the assurances of my highest consideration.

Peter Thomson

To All Permanent Representatives and Permanent Observers of the United Nations New York

PERMANENT MISSION OF THE REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS TO THE UNITED NATIONS

MISSION PERMANENTE DE LA REPUBLIQUE DE MAURICE AUPRES DES NATIONS UNIES

1 June 2017

Excellency,

I have the honour to refer to item 87 which the General Assembly, at its second meeting on 16 September 2016, decided to include on the agenda of its 71st Session, on the understanding that there would be no consideration of the item by the Assembly before June 2017 and that thereafter it may be considered upon notification by a Member State.

In accordance with your expectations, Mauritius has engaged in good faith in talks with the United Kingdom. However, these talks have not been successful. Mauritius has therefore no choice but to ask for the consideration of item 87 by the General Assembly at the earliest date possible.

In this regard, I wish to officially request you to set a date for the consideration of item 87 by the General Assembly and action on a draft resolution which Mauritius will be tabling shortly.

Please accept, Excellency, the assurance of my highest consideration.

Jagdish D. Koonjul, G.O.S.K Ambassador Permanent Representative

H.E. Mr. Peter Thomson President of the 71st session of the United Nations General Assembly

211 East 43rd Street • New York City, NY 10017 • Tel: (212) 949 0190 • Fax: (212) 697 3829 • E-mail: Maurillus@un.int

Annex 193
Letter from the Prime Minister of the Republic of Mauritius to the President of the United States (11 July 2017)

Prime Minister Republic of Mauritius

11 July 2017

Dear Mr President,

It gives me immense pleasure to convey to you, on behalf of the Government and the People of the Republic of Mauritius and in my own name, our sincere congratulations on the occasion of the celebration of the 241st Anniversary of the Independence of the United States of America.

I am convinced that under your Presidency, the long-standing bonds of friendship existing between our two countries, which date back to 1794 when President George Washington appointed Mr William Macarty as the first Consul of the United States to Mauritius, will be further strengthened.

Indeed, since Mauritius attained its independence in 1968, our bilateral relations have been further enriched and reinforced for the mutual benefit of the people of our two countries. This privileged partnership is also strongly embedded in shared values like democracy, good governance, rule of law, human rights and peaceful co-existence of different cultures and traditions.

In line with its aspiration for a safer world, Mauritius would like to reaffirm that it has no objection to the continued operation of the military base in Diego Garcia after the completion of its decolonisation process under an agreed framework.

.../2

Prime Minister's Office New Treasury Building Intendance Street Port Louis Republic of Mauritius Tel. : (230) 207 9400 Fax : (230) 201 2976 E : privateoffice@govmu.org Please accept, Dear Mr President, the assurances of my highest consideration and my best wishes for your personal well-being and for the progress and prosperity of the people of your country.

Pravind Kumar Jugnauth
Prime Minister

His Excellency Mr Donald Trump
President of the United States of America
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue N.W.
Washington, DC 20500
United States of America

POLITICAL DECLARATION OF NEW YORK

The Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Non-Aligned Movement (NAM), gathered on 20 September 2017, in New York, on the margins of the High Level Segment of the 72 Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, undertook a review of the state of the international situation, particularly on the "Promulgation and Implementation of Unilateral Coercive Measures, in violation of International Law and the Human Rights of the Peoples subjected to them", and declared:

- To reaffirm and underscore the Movement's abiding faith in and strong commitment to its founding principles, ideals and purposes, particularly in establishing a peaceful and prosperous world and a just and equitable world order as well as to the purposes and principles enshrined in the United Nations Charter.
- To reaffirm the positions contained in its Final Document, as adopted by the Heads of State and Government of the Movement, during the XVII Summit of Island of Margarita.
- 3. To reaffirm the provisions of the Declaration of Havana on the Purposes and Principles and the Role of the Non-Aligned Movement in the Current International Juncture (2006), as well as of the Declaration of Island of Margarita (2016).
- 4. To reaffirm the purposes and principles of the UN Charter and the principles and rules of international law, which are indispensable in preserving and promoting peace and security, the rule of law, economic development and social progress, and human rights for all. In this context, UN Member States, including those Member States of the Security Council, should renew their commitment to respect, defend, preserve and promote the UN Charter and international law, with the aim of making further progress to achieving full respect for international law.
- 5. To reaffirm their commitment to the promotion, protection, and fulfillment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, without discrimination, and to this end emphasize that all human rights: civil, cultural, economic, political and social are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, and that they must be treated globally in a fair and equal manner, on the same footing, and with the same emphasis; and also underline that the core values and principles of democracy, sustainable development and the respect of all human rights, including the right to development, are all closely related and mutually reinforcing.

- 6. To reaffirm their opposition to unilateralism and unilateral coercive measures imposed by certain States, including those of an economic, financial or trade nature not in accordance with international law, the Charter of the United Nations and the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States, which can lead to the erosion and violation of the UN Charter, international law and human rights, the use and threat of use of force, and pressure and coercive measures as a means to achieving their national policy objectives, including those measures used as tools for political or economic and financial pressure against any country, in particular against developing countries. They further expressed their concern at the continued imposition of such measures which hinder the well-being of population of the affected countries and that create obstacles to the full realization of their human rights.
- 7. To reaffirm their commitment to initiate further vigorous transparent and inclusive initiatives to achieve the realization of multilateral cooperation in the areas of economic development and social progress, peace and security, and human rights for all and the rule of law, including through enhancing the Movement's unity, solidarity and cohesiveness on issues of collective concern and interests with the aim of shaping the multilateral agenda to embrace development as a fundamental priority, which should take into account the need for the developing and developed countries, and international institutions to intensify partrerships and coordinate their efforts and resources to effectively address all imbalances in the global agenda.
- 8. To reaffirm their commitment to the promotion, preservation and strengthening of multilateralism and the multilateral decision making process through the United Nations, by strictly adhering to its Charter and international law, with the aim of creating a just and equitable world order and global democratic governance.
- 9. To reaffirm that solidarity, the highest expression of respect, friendship and peace among States, is a broad concept encompassing the sustainability of international relations, the peaceful coexistence, and the transformative objectives of equity and empowerment of developing countries, whose ultimate goal is to achieve the full economic and social development of their peoples.
- 10. To reaffirm their determination to refrain from recognizing, adopting or implementing extraterritorial or unilateral coercive measures or laws, including unilateral economic sanctions, other intimidating measures, and arbitrary travel restrictions, that seek to exert pressure on Non-Aligned Countries threatening their sovereignty and independence, and their freedom of trade and investment and prevent them from exercising their right to decide, by their own free will, their own political, economic and social systems, where such measures or laws constitute flagrant violations of the UN Charter, international law, particularly the principles of non-intervention, self-determination and independence of States subjects to such practices, and the multilateral trading system, as well as the norms and principles governing friendly relations among States; and in this regard, oppose and condemn these measures or laws and their continued application, persevere with efforts to effectively reverse them and urge other States to do likewise, as called for by the General Assembly and other UN organs; request States applying these measures or laws to revoke them fully and immediately.

- 11. To reaffirm their strong condemnation to the unilateral application of economic and trade measures by one State against another that affect the free flow of international trade, which is not in accordance with international law, the Charter of the United Nations and the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States. They called for the immediate elimination of such measures and urged States that have and continue to apply such laws and measures to fully comply with their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and international law, which, inter alia, reaffirm the freedom of trade and navigation, and accordingly refrain from promulgating and application of such unilateral economic and trade measures against other States.
- 12. To reaffirm the objective of making the right to development a reality for everyone as set out in the UN Millennium Declaration, in the UN Declaration on the Right to Development and in the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, and give due consideration to the negative impact of unilateral economic and financial coercive measures on the realization of the right to development.
- 13. To reaffirm that food should not be used as an instrument for political and economic pressure. They reaffirmed the importance of international cooperation and solidarity, as well as the necessity of refraining from undertaking unilateral coercive measures with general impact that endanger food security and are note in accordance with international law, including the general welfare and advancement of social development for communities in developing countries, with a view to mitigate the vulnerabilities particularly faced by women and children.
- 14. To reaffirm their determination that if any Member of the Movement suffers harm, whether this is economic, political or military in nature, or in terms of its security, as well as from the politicization of human rights, or if a Member suffers harm as a result of the imposition of unilateral sanctions or embargos that are not in accordance with international law, the Charter of the United Nations and the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States, the Movement should express its solidarity with the affected country through the provision of political, moral, material and other forms of assistance.

- 15. To reaffirm and stress their principled positions concerning peaceful settlement of disputes, in accordance with international law, the Charter of the United Nations and the norms and principles governing peaceful relations among States, and on the non-use or threat of use of force, including through the promotion of political understanding and constructive dialogue among States, on the basis of mutual respect.
- 16. To reaffirm their opposition to all attempts of uniculturalism or the imposition of particular models of political, economic, social, legal or cultural systems, and promote dialogue among civilizations, culture of peace and inter-faith dialogue, which will contribute towards peace, security, stability, sustainable development and promotion of human rights.
- 17. To reaffirm their determination to continue opposing any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity or territorial integrity of a State, as well as their commitment for the respect of the sovereignty, the sovereign equality of States, the non-intervention in the internal affairs of States, the peaceful settlement of disputes, and the abstention from the threat or use of force, in accordance with the UN Charter.
- 18. To reaffirm their determination to advance in the enhancement of the status and role of Non-Aligned Movement (NAM) as an anti-war peace-loving force, including through its instrumentalization as a Front for World Peace, and in favor, in particular, of the respect of the right to life and the inalienable right of the peoples to their self-determination and independence.
- 19. To take note of the adoption by the UN General Assembly on 22 June 2017 of resolution 71/292 requesting an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965 and encourage members to make written submissions in support of the completion of the decolonization of Mauritius to the Court within the prescribed time frame of 30 January 2018.
- 20. To reaffirm that terrorism should not be equated with the legitimate struggle of peoples under colonial or alien domination and foreign occupation for self-determination and national liberation. The brutalization of people remaining under foreign occupation should continue to be denounced as the gravest form of terrorism, and that the use of State power for the suppression and violence against peoples struggling against foreign occupation in exercising their inalienable right to self- determination should continue to be condemned. In this regard and in accordance with the UN Charter, international law and the relevant UN resolutions, the struggle of peoples under colonial or alien domination and foreign occupation for self-determination and national liberation does not constitute terrorism (A/RES/46/51 of 9 December 1991).

- 21. To reaffirm that terrorism cannot and should not be associated with any religion, nationality, civilization or ethnic group, and that these attributions should not be used to justify terrorism or counter-terrorism measures that include, inter alia, profiling of terror suspects and intrusion on individual privacy.
- 22. To reaffirm their strong and unequivocal condemnation, as criminal, and reject terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, as well as all acts, methods and practices of terrorism wherever, by whomever, against whomsoever committed, including those in which States are directly or indirectly involved, which are unjustifiable whatever the considerations or factors that may be invoked to justify them, and in this context, reaffirm their support for the provisions contained in General Assembly resolution 46/51 of 9 December 1991 and other relevant UN resolutions.
- 23. To reaffirm the obligation of all States to ensure the security and safety of the members and premises of diplomatic and consular missions, as well as their inviolability, in accordance with international law, the provisions of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations as well as relevant UN General Assembly resolutions.
- 24. To reaffirm their commitment to taking all necessary measures to prevent the use of new platforms, including the internet, digital social networking and mass media, in spreading extremist religious thoughts and ideas, which eventually undermine the culture of peace and religious diversity.
- 25. To reaffirm the need for States to cooperate resolutely against international terrorism by taking speedy and effective measures to eliminate this scourge, and, in this regard, urge all States, in accordance with their obligations under applicable international law and the UN Charter, to deny safe haven and bring to justice or, where appropriate, extradite, on the basis of the principle of extradite or prosecute, the perpetrators of terrorist acts or any person who supports, facilitates or participates or attempts to participate in the financing, planning or preparation of terrorist acts.
- 26. To reaffirm their resolve to take speedy and effective measures to eliminate international terrorism, and in this context, urge all States, consistent with the UN Charter, to fulfill their obligations under international law and international humanitarian law combating terrorism, including by prosecuting or, where appropriate, extraditing the perpetrators of terrorist acts; by preventing the organization, instigation or financing of terrorist acts against other States from within or outside their territories or by organizations based in their territories; by refraining from organizing, instigating, assisting, financing or participating in terrorist acts in the territories of other States; by refraining from encouraging activities within their territories directed towards the commission of such acts; by refraining from allowing the use of their territories for planning, training or financing for such acts; or by refraining from supplying arms or other weapons that could be used for terrorist acts in other States.

New York, 20 September 2017

Annex 195 Group of 77 and China, 41st Annual Meeting of Ministers for Foreign Affairs, Ministerial Declaration (22 Sept. 2017)

EXTRACT

FORTY-FIRST ANNUAL MEETING OF MINISTERS FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE GROUP OF 77 AND CHINA New York, 22 September 2017

MINISTERIAL DECLARATION

- 200. The Ministers recalled that the Chagos Archipelago, including Diego Garcia, was unlawfully excised by the United Kingdom from the territory of Mauritius, prior to independence, in violation of international law and UN General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2066 (XX) of 16 December 1965 and that all inhabitants of the Chagos Archipelago were forcibly evicted. In this regard, the Ministers took note of the adoption by the UN General Assembly on 22 June 2017 of resolution 71/292 requesting an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the legal consequences of the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965. The Ministers encouraged members to make written submissions in support of the completion of the decolonization of Mauritius to the Court within the prescribed time frame of 30 January 2018.
- 201. The Ministers also took note of the concern expressed by the Republic of Maldives regarding the legal and technical issues arising from the United Kingdom's illegal decision in 2010 to declare a "marine protected area" in the Chagos Archipelago which overlaps the exclusive economic zone of the Republic of Maldives as declared in its Constitution without prejudice to future resolution of maritime delimitations.

Annex 196

"Chagos Islands (BIOT) All-Party Parliamentary Group", "Statement issued at its 65th meeting on 6 December 2017 by the Chagos Islands (BIOT) All-Party Parliamentary Group on the legal consequences of the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965 to be considered by the International Court of Justice" (6 Dec. 2017)

Chagos Islands (BIOT) All-Party Parliamentary Group

Hon. President: Jeremy Corbyn MP Chairman: Andrew Rosindell MP Vice Chairs: Lord Steel, Baroness Whitaker, Lord Ramsbotham, Henry Smith MP, Patrick Grady MP Secretary: Alan Brown MP Co-ordinator: David Snoxell

House of Commons, London, SW1A OAA

Statement issued at its 65th meeting on 6 December 2017 by the Chagos Islands (BIOT) All- Party Parliamentary Group on the legal consequences of the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965 to be considered by the International Court of Justice.

On 22 June 2017 The UN General Assembly adopted resolution 71/292 requesting the ICJ to render an advisory opinion on the legal consequences of the separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965. The resolution asked the ICJ to address the question:

"What are the consequences under international law, including obligations reflected in the above mentioned resolutions, arising from the continued administration by the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland of the Chagos Archipelago, including with respect to the inability of Mauritius to implement a programme for the resettlement on the Chagos Archipelago of its nationals, in particular those of Chagossian origin?"

The most pressing issue for the APPG is the continuing exile of the Chagossian people, a shameful blot on the UK's human rights record. The Group has urged successive governments to restore the right of abode and the right of return to their homeland for all those wishing to do so, whether for resettlement, work or visits and to establish a pilot resettlement on Diego Garcia, as recommended by KPMG in 2015. There is no need for the UK to postpone a pilot resettlement any longer. The ICJ proceedings, which can take several years, must not be used as an excuse for delaying the restoration on moral, ethical and political grounds, of the right of abode. It is noted that the Government of Mauritius strongly supports the right of return and resettlement.

The Group believes that an overall settlement with Mauritius and the Chagos Islanders is long overdue. For the UK to continue to argue against an ICI Advisory Opinion would have consequences for the UK's reputation in the UN. An Advisory Opinion, which addresses the question put by the General Assembly, would provide a way forward and a solid basis for settling these issues, thus contributing to a resolution of an urgent human rights tragedy that has endured for over 50 years. Members hope that the ICJ will expedite its work and that its forthcoming Advisory Opinion will inspire the United Nations General Assembly to work with the parties directly concerned to bring an end to the exile of the Chagossian people and contribute to the process of decolonisation.

The APPG has been persistent in analysing the fluctuating arguments deployed by governments against resettlement such as cost, infeasibility, defence, security, treaty obligations to the US, child safeguarding, climate change, erosion, rising sea levels and conservation. The Group continues to believe that with political will these issues can be addressed and resolved. Indeed the Group understands that the US has no objection to a pilot resettlement on Diego Garcia.

The APPG was established in December 2008 and has held 65 meetings. For nine years the Group has considered the many aspects of BIOT – human rights, humanitarian, defence, security, sovereignty, legal, nature conservation, environmental factors, Freedom of Information, bilateral concerns with the US and Mauritius, and multilateral involvement of the United Nations, the Commonwealth, African Union, European Union and the European Parliament. There has been a regular flow of correspondence with Ministers who have from time to time attended meetings with the Group and frequent Parliamentary Questions, interventions and debates.

Terrestrial Protected Areas | British Indian Ocean Territory

Home > Environment > Terrestrial Protected Areas

Marine Protected Area

Terrestrial Protected Areas

Plantation Trail Boards

Science in BIOT

Terrestrial Protected Areas

In recognition of the unique terrestrial habitats and species in BIOT and to provide protection to internationally important breeding seabird populations, there are a number of Terrestrial Protected Area designations across the British Indian Ocean Territory.

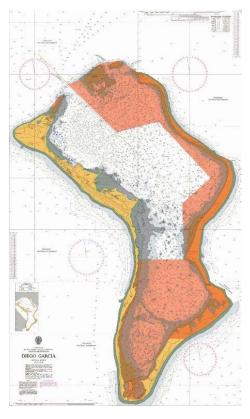

Diego Garcia Restricted Area

To protect the biodiversity of Diego Garcia effectively, the Diego Garcia Conservation (Restricted Area) Ordinance 1994 prohibits entry to all environmentally sensitive areas, unless a permit to undertake a specific activity has been granted. Recreational fishing and other potentially damaging activities are not permitted in the Restricted Area. Any infringement may carry a maximum fine of £500.

Map of the Restricted Area (shaded red)

Annex 197

Terrestrial Protected Areas | British Indian Ocean Territory

Ramsar site

In 2001, the provisions of the Ramsar Convention were extended to a large part of the island of Diego Garcia, in recognition of the international importance of the wetland habitats on and around the atoll. The Diego Garcia Ramsar site provides a habitat for marine flora and fauna at a critical stage of their biological cycle including the endemic coral Ctenella chagius and the threatened Hawksbill and Green Turtles, Eretmochelys imbricata and Chelonia mydas. The site is also important for some of the 18 species of seabirds which breed in BIOT in internationally important numbers.

RAMSAR map (PDF document)

Important Bird Areas and Strict Nature

Terrestrial Protected Areas | British Indian Ocean Territory

Reserves

BIOT has 10 Important Bird Areas (IBAs), identified due to the presence of globally significant breeding concentrations of seabirds. The IBAs cover approximately 15% of the land area of the Chagos Archipelago and are also designated as Strict Nature Reserves to prevent any human disturbance. IBAs are designated on each of the Three Brothers Islands, Danger Island, Cow Island, Nelson Island, Petite Ile Bois Mangue, Ile Parasol, Ile Longue and at Barton Point on Diego Garcia.

Strict Nature Reserves

The Strict Nature Reserve Regulations 1998 provide the IBAs with legal protection. Under these Regulations, it is an offence for anyone to enter any of the Reserves, or to carry out particular activities there, without the written permission of the BIOT Administration.

Governance | British Indian Ocean Territory

Home > Governance

Governance

The British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT) was formed on 8th November 1965. It is one of 14 British Overseas Territories. There is no permanent population in BIOT, but Diego Garcia, the largest of the 58 islands hosts a joint UK-US military facility.

The Territory is currently administered from London, with a Commissioner appointed by the Queen, who is assisted by a Deputy Commissioner and Administrator. The key posts are currently held by:

Commissioner: Ben Merrick

Deputy Commissioner: Bryony Mathew

Administrator: Linsey Billing

In the Territory itself, the civilian Administration is represented by a Royal Navy Commander, who is appointed as the Commissioner's Representative (known locally as "BritRep"). As well as being the highest civilian authority in the Territory, this person is also the Officer commanding the British Forces in Diego Garcia. The post is currently held by Commander Karen Cahill.

Constitutional Status

The constitutional arrangements for BIOT are set out in the British Indian Ocean Territory (Constitution) Order 2004 and related instruments. The 2004 Order gives the Commissioner power to make laws for the peace, order and good government of the territory. As with any other

Annex 198

Governance | British Indian Ocean Territory

British Overseas Territory, BIOT is constitutionally distinct and separate from the UK, with its own laws and Administration.

A series of UK/US agreements set out in Exchanges of Notes regulate matters relating to the use of the Territory for defence purposes, such as jurisdiction over military and other personnel. These originate in 1966 and provide for an initial 50 year period of US use of the Territory, plus a further 20 years. The agreement was "rolled over" in 2016 and will now expire in 2036.

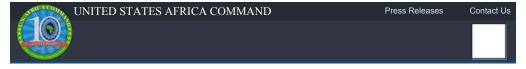

The BIOT Gazette is an official document published by the Government of the BIOT to chronicle the appointments of BIOT officials, note the legislation extended to BIOT and publicise Ordinances signed by the Commissioner.

The BIOT Coat of Arms

"In tutela nostra Limuria" (Limuria is in our trust).

About the Command

United States Africa Command, (U.S. AFRICOM) is one of six of the U.S. Defense Department's geographic combatant commands and is responsible to the Secretary of Defense for military relations with African nations, the African Union, and African regional security organizations.

United States Africa Command, (U.S. AFRICOM) is one of six of the U.S. Defense Department's geographic combatant commands and is responsible to the Secretary of Defense for military relations with African nations, the African Union, and African regional security organizations. A full-spectrum combatant command, U.S. AFRICOM is responsible for all U.S. Department of Defense operations, exercises, and security cooperation on the African continent, its island nations, and surrounding waters. AFRICOM began initial operations on Oct. 1, 2007, and officially became fully operational capable on Oct. 1, 2008.

Leadership

Commander: General Thomas D. Waldhauser, U.S. Marine Corps

Command Senior Enlisted Leader: Chief Master Sergeant Ramon "CZ" Colon-Lopez, U.S. Air Force

Deputy to the Commander for Military Operations: Lt. Gen. James C. Vechery, U.S. Air Force

Deputy to the Commander for Civil-Military Engagement: Ambassador Alexander M. Laskaris, U.S. Department of State

Headquarters Chief of Staff: Major General Roger L. Cloutier, Jr., U.S. Army

Mission

U.S. Africa Command, with partners, disrupts and neutralizes transnational threats, protects U.S. personnel and facilities, prevents and mitigates conflict, and builds African partner defense capability

Annex 199

United States Africa Command

and capacity in order to promote regional security, stability and prosperity.

Personnel

U.S. Africa Command has approximately 2,000 assigned personnel, including military, U.S. federal civilian employees, and U.S. contractor employees. About 1,500 work at the command's headquarters in Stuttgart, Germany. Others are assigned to AFRICOM units at MacDill Air Force Base, Florida, and RAF Molesworth, United Kingdom. The command's programs in Africa are coordinated through Offices of Security Cooperation and Defense Attaché Offices in approximately 38 nations. The command also has liaison officers at key African posts, including the African Union, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), and the Kofi Annan International Peacekeeping and Training Centre in Ghana.

AFRICOM is part of a diverse interagency team that reflects the talents, expertise, and capabilities within the entire U.S. government. The command has four Senior Foreign Service (SFS) officers in key positions as well as more than 30 personnel from more than 10 U.S. government departments and agencies, including the Departments of State and Homeland Security, and the U.S. Agency for International Development. The most senior is a career State Department official who serves as the deputy to the commander for civil-military engagement. Our interagency partners bring invaluable expertise to help the command ensure its plans and activities complement those of other U.S. government programs and fit within the context of U.S. foreign policy.

Location

U.S. Africa Command is located at Kelley Barracks in Stuttgart-Moehringen, Germany.

Our Team

AFRICOM's team sets the conditions for success of our security cooperation programs and activities on the continent. They perform detailed planning, provide essential command and control, establish and sustain relationships with our partners, and provide timely assessments. They are:

U.S. Army Africa (USARAF) - Operating from Vicenza, Italy, USARAF conducts sustained security engagement with African land forces to promote security, stability, and peace.

U.S. Naval Forces Africa (NAVAF) - Headquartered in Naples, Italy, NAVAF's primary mission is to improve the maritime security capability and capacity of African partners. Personnel are shared with

United States Africa Command

U.S. Naval Forces Europe.

- U.S. Air Forces Africa (AFAFRICA) As the air component of USAFRICOM, AFAFRICA conducts sustained security engagement and operations to promote air safety, security, and development in Africa.
- U.S. Marine Corps Forces Africa (MARFORAF) Located in Stuttgart, Germany, MARFORAF conducts operations, exercises, training, and security cooperation activities throughout the African continent. Its staff is shared U.S. Marine Corps Forces Europe.

Combined Joint Task Force-Horn of Africa (CJTF-HOA) - In the Horn of Africa, CJTF-HOA is the U.S. Africa Command organization that conducts operations in the region to enhance partner nation capacity, promote regional security and stability, dissuade conflict, and protect U.S. and coalition interests. CJTF-HOA is critical to U.S. AFRICOM's efforts to build partner capacity to counter violent extremists and address other regional security partnerships. CJTF-HOA, with approximately 2,000 personnel assigned, is headquartered at Camp Lemonnier in Djibouti.

U.S. Special Operations Command Africa (SOCAFRICA) - SOCAFRICA, co-located with U.S. Africa Command at Kelley Barracks in Stuttgart, aims to build operational capacity, strengthen regional security and capacity initiatives, implement effective communication strategies in support of strategic objectives, and eradicate violent extremist organizations.

Annex 200 U.S. Africa Command, Republic of Mauritius, available at http://www.africom.mil/area-of-responsibility/southern-africa/mauritius (last accessed 5 Jan. 2018)

United States Africa Command

AREA OF RESPONSIBILITY

SOUTHERN AFRICA

Republic of Mauritius

Capital	Area	Languages	Population	Currency
Port Louis	2,040.0 km²	en-MU,bho,fr	1,294,104	MUR

The United States established diplomatic relations with Mauritius in 1968, following its independence from the United Kingdom. In the years following independence, Mauritius became one of Africa's most stable and developed economies, as a result of its multi-party democracy and free market orientation. Relations between the United States and Mauritius are cordial, and we collaborate closely on bilateral, regional, and multilateral issues. Mauritius is a leading beneficiary of the African Growth and Opportunity Act and a U.S. partner in combating maritime piracy in the Indian Ocean.